

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

TO BE CITED L.R.A. 1917B

THE LAWYERS REPORTS ANNOTATED

1917B

BURDETT A. RICH, HENRY P. FARNHAM, AND GEORGE H. PARMELE, EDITORS,

ASSISTED BY THE PUBLISHERS' EDITORIAL STAFF.

---

THE LAWYERS CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

1917

121979

JUL 29 1942

Copyright 1917

by

THE LAWYERS CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

TABLE

OF ### CASES REPORTED

A.

Ætna Ins. Co. v. Heidelberg .. (Miss.)	253
Alexander v. Wilkes-Barre Anthracite Coal Co. .... (Pa.)	310
American Express Co., Clark Distilling Co. v. (U. S. Sup. Ct.)	1218
American National Bank v. Douglas ..... (Ark.)	588
American Suburban Corp., McMillan v. .... (Tenn.)	401
Ancient Order of United Workmen, Sharpless v. (Minn.)	670
Andre v. Murray ..... (Ind.)	667
Ardmore Brick &amp; Tile Co., Bucy v. .... (Okla.)	1073
Assessment of First Nat. Bank, Re ..... (Okla.)	204

B.

Baer v. Gore ..... (W. Va.)	723
Bailey, Dulin v. .... (N. C.)	556
v. Long ..... (N. C.)	708
Bank, American Nat., v. Douglas ..... (Ark.)	588
Mangold &amp; Glandt, v. Uterback ..... (Okla.)	364
National of Barnesville, Newbern v. .... (C. C. A.)	1019
Savings, Loewe v. .... (C. C. A.)	938
Barnes, State ex rel. v. Garrett (Tenn.)	567
Belfast v. Belfast Water Co. .. (Me.)	908
Belfast Water Co., Belfast v. .. (Me.)	908
Bennett v. Thompson ..... (Ark.)	919
Biograph Co., Staats v. .... (C. C. A.)	728
Blake v. State .... (Okla. Crim. App.)	1261
Boggs v. Commonwealth ..... (Ky.)	605
Bolster v. Lawrence ..... (Mass.)	1285
Bonicamp v. Starbuck ..... (Okla.)	141
Boston Music Co., Norris v. .... (Minn.)	615
Bosworth v. State University.. (Ky.)	808
Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Holcomb v. .... (Ky.)	107

Brown v. Wilson ..... (Okla.)	1184
Buey v. Ardmore Brick &amp; Tile Co. .... (Okla.)	1073
Burnes International Detective Agency, Lilligren v. (Minn.)	670

C.

Calkins v. Hart ..... (N. Y.)	783
Calumet &amp; Chicago Canal &amp; D. Co. v. Conkling ..... (Ill.)	814
Caples v. Morgan ..... (Or.)	760
Carolina, C. &amp; O. R. Co., Garland v. .... (N. C.)	706
Carr Coal Mining &amp; Mfg. Co., Sedlock v. .... (Kan.)	372
Carter, Frank v. .... (N. Y.)	1288
Catani v. Swift &amp; Co. .... (Pa.)	1272
Central Trust Co. v. Chicago Auditorium Asso. (U. S. Sup. Ct.)	580
Chicago Auditorium Asso. v. .... (U. S. Sup. Ct.)	580
Charleston &amp; W. C. R. Co. v. Gosnell ..... (S. C.)	216
Chicago, Galpin v. .... (Ill.)	176
Chicago Auditorium Asso. v. Central Trust Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.)	580
Central Trust Co. v. .... (U. S. Sup. Ct.)	580
Chivers v. Johnston County .. (Okla.)	1296
Chrest v. Louisville R. Co. .... (Ky.)	1123
Clark v. Osage County ..... (Okla.)	1269
Clark Distilling Co. v. American Express Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.)	1218
v. Western Maryland R. Co. .... (U. S. Sup. Ct.)	1218
Coffman v. Malone ..... (Neb.)	258
Cokely, Cunningham v. .... (W. Va.)	718
Commonwealth, Boggs v. .... (Ky.)	605
Gray v. .... (Ky.)	93
use of Ledford v. Hinson (Ky.)	139
Lenihan v. .... (Ky.)	1132

Commonwealth, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. .... (Ky.)	544	Garrett, State ex rel. Barnes v. (Tenn.)	567
v. Ritchey ..... (Ky.)	697	Gore, Baer v. .... (W. Va.)	723
Teague v. .... (Ky.)	738	Gosnell, Charleston & W. C. R. Co. v. .... (S. C.)	215
Conkling, Calumet & Chicago Canal & D. Co. v. . (Ill.)	814	Graham v. Graham ..... (Wash.)	405
Continental Ins. Co., Murphy v. (Iowa)	934	Gray v. Commonwealth ..... (Ky.)	93
Cook County, Wayman v. .... (Ill.)	176	Great Northern R. Co., Eisen- trager v. .... (Iowa)	1245
Copeland v. Copeland ..... (Okla.)	287	Johnston v. .... (Minn.)	1140
Cox, Wallace v. .... (Tenn.)	690	Greenwald, Mobile & O. R. Co. v. (Miss.)	924
Cullens v. Cullens ..... (N. C.)	74	Gresby, Hagen v. .... (N. D.)	281
Cunningham v. Cokely ..... (W. Va.)	718	Griffin, St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. (Tex.)	1108
v. Shelby ..... (Tenn.)	572	Grinnell v. Wilkinson ..... (R. I.)	767
D.		Guthrie Gas, L. F. & I. Co., Waugh v. .... (Okla.)	1253
Davies v. Thompson ..... (Okla.)	395	H.
Day, Strong v. .... (Okla.)	369	Hagen v. Gresby ..... (N. D.)	281
Dayton v. Speers Hospital .... (Ky.)	779	Hall, Ferry & Co. v. .... (Ala.)	620
Dibbens, Waugh v. .... (Okla.)	360	Hardman Estate, Le Vette v. (Wash.)	222
Dittmer, Prentiss v. .... (Ohio St.)	191	Hart, Calkins v. .... (N. Y.)	783
Donohue, Herlihy v. .... (Mont.)	702	Heidelberg, Aetna Ins. Co. v. (Miss.)	253
Douglas, American National Bank v. .... (Ark.)	588	Hemrich, State v. .... (Wash.)	962
Dulin v. Bailey ..... (N. C.)	556	Herlihy v. Donohue ..... (Mont.)	702
Durham Traction Co., Ferrell v. (N. C.)	1291	Hewitt, Employee ..... (Mass.)	249
Dustin v. Interstate Business Men's Accident Asso. (S. D.)	319	Hill v. Poindexter ..... (Ky.)	699
E.		Hills, State ex rel. Lattanner v. (Ohio St.)	684
Eisentrager v. Great Northern R. Co. .... (Iowa)	1245	Hillstrom v. St. Paul ..... (Minn.)	548
Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Weightman ..... (Okla.)	1210	Hines v. New England Casualty Co. .... (N. C.)	744
Erie R. Co. v. Steinberg .... (Ohio St.)	787	Hinson, Commonwealth use of Ledford v. .... (Ky.)	139
F.		Hockett v. State Liquor Licens- ing Board ..... (Ohio St.)	7
Farmers' Exchange, Ford v. . (Tenn.)	1106	Holcomb v. Brotherhood of Rail- road Trainmen .... (Ky.)	107
Ferrell v. Durham Traction Co. (N. C.)	1291	Howland v. Morris ..... (Ga.)	513
Ferry & Co. v. Hall ..... (Ala.)	620	Hudson Boxing Club, Moha v. (Wis.)	1238
Fidelity & D. Co. v. Sarbach . (Kan.)	1043	Hughes v. McEwen ..... (Miss.)	1048
Fishback, Robison v. .... (Ind.)	1179	Humes v. Schaller ..... (R. I.)	316
Fitzpatrick v. Owens ..... (Ark.)	774	Hutchinson Ice Cream Co., State v. .... (Iowa)	198
Flores v. State ..... (Fla.)	1143	Hyman v. Parkerson ..... (La.)	694
Ford v. Farmers' Exchange (Tenn.)	1106	I.
Forest Home Cemetery Co., Peo- ple ex rel. Gaskill v. (Ill.)	946	Industrial Accident Commission, Kimbol v. .... (Cal.)	595
Fox, Moroder v. .... (Wis.)	238	Ocean Accident & G. Co. v. (Cal.)	336
Frank v. Carter ..... (N. Y.)	1288	Insurance Co., Aetna, v. Heidel- berg ..... (Miss.)	253
Friend v. Southern States Life Ins. Co. .... (Okla.)	208	Continental, Murphy v. (Iowa)	934
G.		Meridian Life, v. Milam (Ky.)	103
Galpin v. Chicago ..... (Ill.)	176	Reliable Mut. Hail, v. Rogers ..... (Okla.)	350
Garland v. Carolina, C. & O. R. Co. .... (N. C.)	706	Southern States Life, Friend v. .... (Okla.)	208
L.R.A.1917B.		Western & S. Life, v. Webster ..... (Ky.)	375

Insurance Co., Western C. & G., v. Muskogee County (Okla.)	977	McDole v. Thurm ..... (Ill.)	1150
Interstate Business Men's Acci- dent Asso., Dustin v. (S. D.)	319	McEwen, Hughes v. .... (Miss.)	1048
J.		McMillan v. American Suburban Corp. .... (Tenn.)	401
Jacobs v. Seattle ..... (Wash.)	320	McWilliams, Mississippi Central R. Co. v. .... (Miss.)	915
Jerome v. Shaw ..... (N. C.)	749	Malone, Coffman v. .... (Neb.)	258
Johnson City Lumber & M. Co., Wallin v. .... (Tenn.)	323	Mangold & Glandt Bank v. Ut- terback ..... (Okla.)	364
Johnston v. Great Northern R. Co. .... (Minn.)	1140	Marron, Re ..... (N. M.)	378
Johnston County, Chivers v. .... (Okla.)	1296	Matthews v. Mires ..... (Minn.)	676
K.		Melville v. Rollwage ..... (Ky.)	133
Kane v. State... (N. J. Err. & App.)	553	Meridian Life Ins. Co. v. Milam (Ky.)	103
Kansas City v. Pengilley .... (Mo.)	551	Milam, Meridian Life Ins. Co. v. (Ky.)	103
v. Seaman ..... (Kan.)	341	Milwaukee Electric R. & L. Co., Lipps v. .... (Wis.)	334
Kansas City W. R. Co., Mc- Adow v. .... (Kan.)	1158	Mires, Re ..... (Minn.)	676
Kimball Co. v. Shawnee County (Kan.)	1282	Matthews v. .... (Minn.)	676
Kimbol v. Industrial Accident Commission ..... (Cal.)	595	Mishawaka Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Stanton ..... (Mich.)	651
Klette, Rice v. .... (Ky.)	45	Mississippi Central R. Co. v. Mc- Williams ..... (Miss.)	915
Knights and Ladies of Security, O'Connor v. .... (Iowa)	897	Mobile & Ohio R. Co. v. Green- wald ..... (Miss.)	924
L.		Moha v. Hudson Boxing Club (Wis.)	1238
Larsen, Loose v. .... (Nev.)	1166	Monfort, State ex rel. Willis v. (Wash.)	801
Lawrence, Bolster v. .... (Mass.)	1285	Morgan, Caples v. .... (Or.)	760
Lawson, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. .... (Ky.)	1161	Moroder v. Fox ..... (Wis.)	238
Lay, People v. .... (Mich.)	608	Morris, Howland v. .... (Ga.)	513
Lenihan v. Commonwealth .... (Ky.)	1132	Moulden, Parlin & O. Implement Co. v. .... (C. C. A.)	130
Le Vette v. Hardman Estate (Wash.)	222	Mountain Railway Constr. Co., Pointer v. .... (Mo.)	1001
Levine v. McClenathan ..... (Pa.)	235	Municipal Excavator Co., South- ern Surety Co. v. (Okla.)	558
Levy v. Nevada-California-Ore- gon R. Co. .... (Or.)	564	Murdoch, Locke v. .... (N. M.)	267
Lillard, Render v. .... (Okla.)	1061	Murphy v. Continental Ins. Co. (Iowa)	934
Lilligren v. Burnes International Detective Agency (Minn.)	679	Murray, Andre v. .... (Ind.)	667
Lipps v. Milwaukee Electric R. & L. Co. .... (Wis.)	334	v. Thompson ..... (Tenn.)	1172
Locke v. Murdoch ..... (N. M.)	267	Muskogee County, Western C. & G. Ins. Co. v. .... (Okla.)	977
Loewe v. Savings Bank ... (C. C. A.)	938	N.
Long, Bailey v. .... (N. C.)	708	National Bank of Barnesville, Newbern v. .... (C. C. A.)	1019
Loose v. Larsen ..... (Nev.)	1166	Nevada-California-Oregon R. Co., Levy v. .... (Or.)	564
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com- monwealth ..... (Ky.)	544	Newbern v. National Bank of Barnesville .... (C. C. A.)	1019
v. Lawson ..... (Ky.)	1161	New England Casualty Co., Hines v. .... (N. C.)	744
Louisville R. Co., Chreste v. ... (Ky.)	1123	New Haven, Pope v. .... (Conn.)	1239
M.		Nordby v. Sorlie ..... (N. D.)	753
McAdow v. Kansas City W. R. Co. .... (Kan.)	1158	Norris v. Boston Music Co. .. (Minn.)	615
McClenathan, Levine v. .... (Pa.)	235	O.
McCutchen, Yunker v. .... (Iowa)	949	Ocean Accident & G. Co. v. In- dustrial Accident Com- mission ..... (Cal.)	336

McAdow v. Kansas City W. R.
Co. .... (Kan.) 1158
McClenathan, Levine v. .... (Pa.) 235
McCutchen, Yunker v. .... (Iowa) 949
L.R.A.1917B.

O'Connor v. Knights & Ladies of Security .....	(Iowa)	897
Opinion of Justices, Re .....	(Mass.)	1119
Osage County, Clark v. ....	(Okla.)	1269
Osborne, Rawleigh Medical Co. v. ....	(Iowa)	803
Owens, Fitzpatrick v. ....	(Ark.)	774

P.

Packard, State ex rel. Linde v. (N. D.)	710
Parker, Polk County v. ....	(Iowa) 1176
Parkerson, Hyman v. ....	(La.) 694
Parlin & O. Implement Co. v. Moulden .....	(C. C. A.) 130
Paul v. Stuckey .....	(Ark.) 888
Pengilley, Kansas City v. ....	(Mo.) 551
People ex rel. Gaskill v. Forest Home Cemetery Co. (Ill.)	946
v. Lay .....	(Mich.) 608
ex rel. Thrasher v. Smith (Ill.)	1075
Perkins v. Perkins .....	(Mass.) 1028
Perry v. Rochester Lime Co. (N. Y.)	1058
v. Young .....	(Tenn.) 385
Poetker, United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. ....	(Ind.) 984
Poindexter, Hill v. ....	(Ky.) 699
Pointer v. Mountain Railway Constr. Co. ....	(Mo.) 1091
Polk County v. Parker .....	(Iowa) 1176
Pope v. New Haven .....	(Conn.) 1239
Port of Seattle, State ex rel. v. Superior Court ..	(Wash.) 354
Prentiss v. Dittmer .....	(Ohio St.) 191
Public Service Gas Co. v. Public Utility Commission (N. J. Err. & App.)	930
Public Utility Commission, Public Service Gas Co. v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	930

R.

Ragan, Sanders v. ....	(N. C.) 681
Railroad Co., Erie, v. Steinberg (Ohio St.)	787
Louisville & N., v. Commonwealth .....	(Ky.) 544
Louisville & N., Lawson v. (Ky.)	1161
Mississippi Central, v. McWilliams .....	(Miss.) 915
Mobile & Ohio, v. Greenwald .....	(Miss.) 924
Railway Co., Carolina, C. & O., Garland v. ....	(N. C.) 706
Charleston & W. C., Gosnell v. ....	(S. C.) 215
Great Northern, Eisentrager v. ....	(Iowa) 1245
Great Northern, Johnston v. ....	(Minn.) 1140

Railway Co., Kansas City W., McAdow v. ....	(Kan.) 1158
Louisville, Chreste v. ....	(Ky.) 1123
Nevada-California-Oregon, Levy v. ....	(Or.) 564
St. Louis S. W., v. Griffin (Tex.)	1108
Western Maryland, Clark Distilling Co. v. (U. S. Sup. Ct.)	1218
Randall, Turner v. ....	(Minn.) 250
Rawleigh Medical Co. v. Osborne (Iowa)	803
Re Assessment of First Nat. Bank .....	(Okla.) 294
Marron .....	(N. M.) 378
Mires .....	(Minn.) 676
Opinion of Justices ..	(Mass.) 1119
Reliable Mut. Hail Ins. Co. v. Rogers .....	(Okla.) 350
Render v. Lillard .....	(Okla.) 1061
Rice v. Klette .....	(Ky.) 45
Ritchey, Commonwealth v. ....	(Ky.) 697
Robison v. Fishback .....	(Ind.) 1179
Rochester Lime Co., Perry v. (N. Y.)	1058
Rogers, Reliable Mut. Hail Ins. Co. v. ....	(Okla.) 350
Rollwage, Melville v. ....	(Ky.) 133
Rossman, State v. ....	(Wash.) 1276

S.

St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Griffin (Tex.)	1108
St. Paul, Hillstrom v. ....	(Minn.) 548
Sanders v. Ragan .....	(N. C.) 681
Sanders Ice Cream Co., State v. (Iowa)	198
Sarbach, Fidelity & D. Co. v. (Kan.)	1043
Savings Bank, Loewe v. ....	(C. C. A.) 938
Schaller, Humes v. ....	(R. I.) 316
Seaman, Kansas City v. ....	(Kan.) 341
Seattle, Jacobs v. ....	(Wash.) 329
Sedlock v. Carr Coal Mining & Mfg. Co. ....	(Kan.) 372
Sharpless v. Ancient Order of United Workmen (Minn.)	670
Shaw, Jerome v. ....	(N. C.) 749
Shawnee County, Kimball Co. v. (Kan.)	1282
Shelby, Cunningham v. ....	(Tenn.) 572
Smith, People ex rel. Thrasher v. ....	(Ill.) 1075
Sorlie, Nordby v. ....	(N. D.) 753
Southern States Life Ins. Co., Friend v. ....	(Okla.) 208
Southern Surety Co. v. Municipal Excavator Co. ....	(Okla.) 558
South Jersey Realty Co., Staley v. ....	(N. J. Err. & App.) 113
Speers Hospital, Dayton v. ....	(Ky.) 779
Staats v. Biograph Co. ....	(C. C. A.) 728
Staley v. South Jersey Realty Co. ..	(N. J. Err. & App.) 113

CASES REPORTED.

ix

Stanton, Mishawaka Woolen Mfg. Co. v. .... (Mich.)	651
Starbuck, Bonicamp v. .... (Okla.)	141
State, Blake v. ... (Okla. Crim. App.)	1261
Flores v. .... (Fla.)	1143
ex rel. Barnes v. Garrett (Tenn.)	567
v. Hemrich .... (Wash.)	962
ex rel. Lattanner v. Hills (Ohio St.)	684
v. Hutchinson Ice Cream Co. .... (Iowa)	198
Kane v. ... (N. J. Err. & App.)	553
ex rel. Willis v. Monfort (Wash.)	801
ex rel. Linde v. Packard (N. D.)	710
v. Rossman .... (Wash.)	1276
v. Sanders Ice Cream Co. (Iowa)	198
Sturgeon v. .... (Ariz.)	1230
ex rel. Port of Seattle v. Superior Court .. (Wash.)	354
ex rel. Richards v. Whis- man .... (S. D.)	1
Williams v. .... (Ark.)	586
State Liquor Licensing Board, Hockett v. .... (Ohio St.)	7
State University, Bosworth v. (Ky.)	808
Steinberg, Erie R. Co. .... (Ohio St.)	787
Strong v. Day .... (Okla.)	369
Stuckey, Paul v. .... (Ark.)	888
Sturgeon v. State .... (Ariz.)	1230
Superior Court, State ex rel. Port of Seattle v. (Wash.)	354
Swift & Co., Catani v. .... (Pa.)	1272

T.

Teague v. Commonwealth .... (Ky.)	738
Thompson, Bennett v. .... (Ark.)	919
Davies v. .... (Okla.)	395
Murray v. .... (Tenn.)	1172
Thrasher, People ex rel., v. Smith (Ill.)	1075
Thurm, McDole v. .... (Ill.)	1150
Tupelo, Woods v. .... (Miss.)	344
Turner v. Randall .... (Minn.)	250

U.

United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Poetker .... (Ind.)	984
Utterback, Mangold & Glandt Bank v. .... (Okla.)	364

W.

Wallace v. Cox .... (Tenn.)	690
Wallin v. Johnson City Lumber & M. Co. .... (Tenn.)	323
Waugh v. Dibbens .... (Okla.)	360
v. Guthrie Gas, L. F. & I. Co. .... (Okla.)	1253
Wayman v. Cook County .... (Ill.)	176
Webster, Western & S. Life Ins. Co. .... (Ky.)	375
Weightman, Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. .... (Okla.)	1210
Western & S. Life Ins. Co. v. Webster .... (Ky.)	375
Western Casualty & G. Ins. Co. v. Muskogee County (Okla.)	977
Western Maryland R. Co., Clark Distilling Co. v. (U. S. Sup. Ct.)	1218
Whisman, State ex rel. Richards v. .... (S. D.)	1
Wilkes-Barre Anthracite Coal Co., Alexander v. ... (Pa.)	310
Wilkinson, Grinnell v. .... (R. I.)	767
Williams v. State .... (Ark.)	586
Willis, State ex rel., v. Monfort (Wash.)	801
Wilson, Brown v. .... (Okla.)	1184
Woods v. Tupelo .... (Miss.)	344
Wyman, York v. .... (Me.)	246

Y.

York v. Wyman .... (Me.)	246
Young, Perry v. .... (Tenn.)	385
Yunker v. McCutchen .... (Iowa)	949

LAWYERS REPORTS

ANNOTATED

NEW SERIES.

SOUTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA EX REL. R.
O. RICHARDS et al., Appts.,
v.

M. D. WHISMAN, as County Auditor of Beadle County, Resp't.

(36 S. D. 260, 154 N. W. 707.)

Statute — failure to petition for referendum — effect.

1. Voters who fail to file the proper referendum petition for the submission to the electors of a proposed statute with an emergency clause cannot attack the validity of the statute on account of such clause in the courts, although they proceed before the time when the statute would take effect in the absence of the emergency clause.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — taking effect — attack in court.

2. The mere institution of a suit to determine the validity of a statute will not prevent its going into effect at the prescribed time.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Initiative and referendum — power of legislature to repeal initiated statute.

3. The reservation by the people in the constitutional provision vesting the legislative power in the legislature, of the right to propose measures which the legislature must pass and submit to the people for ratification, does not deprive the legislature of power to repeal a law enacted upon the people's initiative, where the right to require any law enacted by the legislature to be referred to the people for ratification is also reserved.

For other cases, see Statutes, III. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Statutes — emergency clause — right to referendum.

4. Statutes which are the subject of referendum cannot, by means of an emergency clause, be put into effect as soon as signed by the executive.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 4, 1915.)

APPEAL by relators from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Beadle County in defendant's favor, and from an order denying a new trial, in a proceeding to restrain defendant, as county auditor, from complying with the requirements of the Primary Election Law of 1915, which was alleged to be unconstitutional and void. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gardner & Churchill and Null & Royhl, for appellants:

The law is unconstitutional in that, by its terms and provisions, it was to take immediate effect, and thereby deprived the people of the expressly reserved right of having the law submitted to the voters.

Ex parte Pfahler, 150 Cal. 71, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1092, 88 Pac. 270, 11 Ann. Cas. 911; Ex parte Anderson, 134 Cal. 69, 86 Am. St. Rep. 236, 66 Pac. 194; Stetson v. Seattle, 74 Wash. 606, 134 Pac. 494.

The power to govern rests primarily in the people, and not in the legislature.

Vanhome v. Dorrance, 2 Dall. 304, 1 L. ed. 391, Fed. Cas. No. 16,857; Atty. Gen. ex rel. Barbour v. Lindsay, 178 Mich. 524, 145 N. W. 98.

By amendment of their Constitution, the people reserved the power of direct legislation and of direct veto.

Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 455, 1 L. ed. 455.

A law enacted by the people of the state cannot be repealed by the legislature of the state.

State ex rel. Reedsburg Bank v. Hastings, 12 Wis. 47; Van Steenwyck v. Sackett, 17 Wis. 646; Brewer v. Haight, 18 Wis. 102; Rusk Bank v. Van Norstrand, 21 Wis. 160;

Note. — As to initiative and referendum, see annotation following HOCKETT v. STATE LIQUOR LICENSING BOARD, post, 15. L.R.A.1917B.

Porter v. State, 46 Wis. 375, 1 N. W. 78; State ex rel. Wagner v. Summers, 33 S. D. 40, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 206, 144 N. W. 730, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 860; Stetson v. Seattle, 74 Wash. 606, 134 Pac. 494; Hopkins v. Duluth, 81 Minn. 189, 83 N. W. 536.

Mr. W. A. Lynch, amicus curiæ:

Any measure proposed or any law referred will take effect only when ratified by a majority of the electors of the state; otherwise it cannot become a law.

Williamson v. Aldrich, 21 S. D. 13, 108 N. W. 1063; State ex rel. Clark v. Stakke, 22 S. D. 228, 117 N. W. 129; Southerland v. Goldsboro, 96 N. O. 49, 1 S. E. 760; People ex rel. Chicago & I. R. Co. v. Chapman, 66 Ill. 137; State ex rel. Quincy, M. & P. R. Co. v. Harris, 96 Mo. 29, 8 S. W. 794; Re Denny, 156 Ind. 104, 51 L.R.A. 722, 59 N. E. 359.

Messrs. Clarence C. Caldwell, Attorney General, and T. F. Auldridge, for respondent:

The question relative to the authority of the legislature to declare an emergency and place the 1915 Act into immediate operation is not within the issues of this case nor material thereto.

McIntosh v. State, 56 Tex. Crim. Rep. 134, 120 S. W. 455.

The emergency clause is contained in § 97 of said chapter 258, and a holding that this section is void would certainly not entitle the appellants to a decree that the entire act is void, and that its execution should be forever enjoined.

Riley v. Carico, 27 Okla. 33, 110 Pac. 738.

The legislature, in its wisdom, has declared an emergency in the 1915 Act, and there is no appeal to the courts therefrom.

State ex rel. Lavin v. Bacon, 14 S. D. 394, 85 N. W. 605; Kadderly v. Portland, 44 Or. 118, 74 Pac. 710, 75 Pac. 222.

Chapter 258 of the 1915 Primary Election Law is constitutional.

Re Watson, 17 S. D. 486, 97 N. W. 463, 2 Ann. Cas. 321; State v. Summers, 33 S. D. 40, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 206, 144 N. W. 730, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 860; State ex rel. Halliburton v. Roach, 230 Mo. 408, 139 Am. St. Rep. 639, 130 S. W. 689; Re Senate Resolution, 54 Colo. 262, 130 Pac. 333; People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 Pac. 129; Hall v. Dunn, 52 Or. 475, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 193, 97 Pac. 811; Waugh v. Glos, 246 Ill. 604, 138 Am. St. Rep. 259, 92 N. E. 974; State v. Schluer, 59 Or. 18, 115 Pac. 1057.

The legislative power is vested in the legislature.

Kadderly v. Portland, 44 Or. 118, 74 Pac. 710, 75 Pac. 222; Straw v. Harris, 54 Or. 424, 103 Pac. 780; People ex rel. Tate v. L.R.A.1917B.

Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 Pac. 130; Ellingham v. Dye, 178 Ind. 336, 99 N. E. 18; People ex rel. Mattison v. Nye, 9 Cal. App. 148, 98 Pac. 241.

Messrs. Byron S. Payne, Assistant Attorney General, and A. A. Chamberlain also for respondent.

McCoy, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was instituted by plaintiffs, R. O. Richards and others, to restrain defendant, as county auditor of Beadle county, from complying with the requirements of chapter 258, Laws of 1915, upon the ground that said legislative enactment is unconstitutional and void: (1) In that it contains an emergency clause making it take immediate effect, thereby, as it is alleged, "depriving the people of the expressly reserved right of having the law submitted to the voters;" (2) in that the legislature was without the power to repeal chapter 201, Laws of 1911, commonly known as the "Richards Primary Law," the same, as it is alleged, "being a law enacted by a direct vote of the people under the initiative and referendum." Findings and judgment were in favor of defendant, and plaintiffs' appeal.

At the 1915 session of the legislature there was passed and enacted, with an emergency clause, chapter 258; the same being a general primary election law. In many material particulars, although not in all, this chapter 258 inherently conflicts with certain provisions of chapter 201, Laws of 1911. By the express provision of chapter 258, chapter 201 and all acts and parts of acts in conflict with chapter 258 were repealed. We will first consider the question of the emergency clause contained in chapter 258, as we view it in connection with the record in this case. Every law which the legislature has power to enact, where there is no emergency clause embodied therein, goes into effect on the next succeeding 1st day of July, unless vetoed by the governor, or unless a referendum petition referring the same to a vote is filed as required by law. If, as contended by appellants, the emergency clause to chapter 258 was void and of no effect (a question not necessary to be decided in this case under the record herein), then the said chapter 258 is, in legal effect, the same as if no emergency was therein contained. Chapter 258 was not vetoed by the governor, and it stands as one of the conceded facts in this case that no referendum petition of any kind was ever filed requiring chapter 258 to be submitted to a vote of the people for approval. There is no provision in the Constitution that will permit or authorize the exercise of the referendum vote in the absence of the filing of a proper petition therefor. Not having filed a proper referendum petition requiring a vote on said chapter 258, the plaintiffs are not in a position to complain of the invalidity of chapter 258 on account of the emergency clause therein contained. The mere fact that this suit was commenced before July 1st will not change the situation. The only thing that will prevent such an enactment, if otherwise valid, from going into effect on the 1st day of July, is the exercise of the veto or the referendum.

The mere commencement of a suit to determine the constitutionality of an enactment, either with or without the emergency clause, will not prevent such an enactment from going into effect at the legally specified time; otherwise many salutary laws might be in this manner indefinitely postponed from going into effect at the times specified by the Constitution, and thereby placing in the hands of litigants and courts the power of regulating or varying the time fixed by the Constitution in which legislative acts shall go into effect. The attachment of an unwarranted and void emergency clause to an enactment could in no manner prevent the filing of a proper referendum petition. In order to have kept alive the question of the validity of the emergency clause contained in chapter 258, as a question for determination in this court, or the court below, a proper referendum petition should have been filed prior to the 1st day of July last. Therefore, if the legislature had the power to repeal chapter 201, and enact in place thereof chapter 258, then, on and after the 1st day of July, 1915, chapter 258 was a valid and existing law of this state, whether the same became such with or without an emergency clause. In Riley v. Carico, 27 Okla. 33, 110 Pac. 738, and in McIntosh v. State, 56 Tex. Crim. Rep. 134, 120 S. W. 455, it is held that the fact that the action of the legislature in declaring an emergency to exist was void did not invalidate the act or relieve the necessity of filing a referendum petition, but resulted in the act taking effect ninety days after the adjournment of the legislature. It is therefore clear that the first ground of unconstitutionality of chapter 258, urged by appellants, is now merely a moot question. 3 C. J. pp. 358-360.

As we view the record in this case, there is but one question before this court for determination, and that is: Had the legislature power to repeal chapter 201, Laws of 1911, and enact in place thereof the general primary law embodied in chapter 258, Laws of 1915? No rule of law is better settled throughout the United States than that a state legislature has absolute power to enact, that is, pass, amend, or repeal, any law whatsoever it pleases, unless it is prohibited from so doing by either the state or Federal Constitutions; that the courts can only restrain the execution of a statute when it conflicts with either one or the other of said Constitutions. In determining the constitutionality of a statute as is well said in one of the cited cases, we peruse the statute, then examine the Constitution, and ascertain if this instrument says, "Thou shalt not;" and, if we find no inhibition, then the statute is the law. The inhibition of a Constitution may be either express or implied; that is, the Constitution may expressly prohibit any specified act of the legislature, or the Constitution by its inherent terms may of necessity prohibit certain acts of a legislature by reason of the inherent conflict that would arise between the terms of the Constitution and the power claimed in favor of the legislature. Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 126, 236, 245, 252, 255; 36 Cyc. 944; Chamberlain v. Wood, 15 S. D. 216, 56 L.R.A. 187, 91 Am. St. Rep. 674, 88 N. W. 109; Bon Homme County v. Berndt, 15 S. D. 494, 90 N. W. 147; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Com. ex rel. McCormick v. Reeder, 171 Pa. 505, 33 L.R.A. 141, 33 Atl. 67.

With these rules in view we will examine the question presented. Section 1, art. 3, state Constitution, as it originally existed, read as follows: "The legislative power shall be vested in the legislature which shall consist of a senate and house of representatives."

That was a grant of general plenary power conferred upon the legislature by the people to enact, amend, or repeal any statute law, excepting only in those instances where prohibited by such Constitution itself, or by the Federal Constitution. In 1898 said § 1, art. 3, was amended to read as follows:

"The legislative power [of the state] shall be vested in a legislature which shall consist of a senate and house of representatives except that the people expressly reserve to themselves the right to propose measures, which measures the legislature shall enact and submit to a vote of the electors of the state, and also the right to require that any laws which the legislature may have enacted shall be submitted to a vote of the electors of the state before going into effect, (except such laws as may be necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, support of the state government and its existing public institutions.) Provided, that not more than 5 per centum of the qualified electors of the state shall be required to invoke either the initiative or the referendum.

"This section shall not be construed so as to deprive the legislature or any member thereof of the right to propose any measure. The veto power of the executive shall not be exercised as to measures referred to a vote of the people. This section shall apply to municipalities. The enacting clause of all laws approved by a vote of the electors of the state shall be: 'Be it enacted by the people of South Dakota.' The legislature shall make suitable provisions for carrying into effect the provisions of this section."

As we view this constitutional amendment, there is nothing therein contained which, either expressly or impliedly, in any degree, conflicts with, inhibits, limits, abridges, or prohibits any part of the legislative power originally granted to it to enact, amend, or repeal any law which it might have enacted before the adoption of this amendment. The fact that the people themselves may propose or enact laws in connection with the legislature in no manner conflicts with or prohibits the legislature from itself also enacting the same law that might be desired by the people. If the legislature of its own volition should enact the same law desired by the people, the initiative would then become unnecessary and useless as to such law. The evident purpose of this constitutional amendment was not to curtail or limit the powers of the legislature to enact laws, but the purpose was to compel enactment by the legislature of measures desired by the people, and, if the legislature neglected to act as so desired by the people, that then the people, by means of the initiative, might enact such measures into laws themselves. And, recognizing the right of the legislature to enact laws as it pleased, within all its constitutional powers, the referendum was designed as a check upon all legislative enactments not favored by the people. The only prohibition or inhibition or limitation in relation to legislative power appearing in the initiative portion of the amendment is that which relates to the veto power, and which reads: "The veto power of the executive shall not be exercised as to measures referred to a vote of the people."

If the framers of this constitutional amendment had placed therein language something like the following: "No legislature shall have power to repeal any initiative measure referred to a vote of the people,"—then the Constitution would have expressly prohibited the legislature from amending or repealing initiated laws; or, if they had placed something like this in the constitutional amendment: "Initiated laws can be amended or repealed only by a vote of the people,"—then this constitutional amendment would, by necessary implication, L.R.A.1917B.

have prohibited the legislature from repealing initiated laws. But no such limitation of the legislative power appears in such amendment or elsewhere in the Constitution. Appellants are, in effect, now asking this court to read into the Constitution something that is not, either expressly or by implication, therein. In some of our sister states the initiative and referendum constitutional amendment prohibits the repeal by the legislature of initiated laws. Section 1, art. 2, Wash. Const. as amended in 1912, provides that "the veto power of the governor shall not extend to measures initiated by or referred to the people."

And that "no act, law or bill approved by" the people can "be amended or repealed by the legislature within a period of two years following such enactment."

Section 1, art. 4, of the California initiative and referendum constitutional amendment, provides that measures initiated or adopted by the people are not subject to the veto power of the governor; and no measure adopted by the people under the initiative can be amended or repealed except by a vote of the electors. By the Washington Constitution the legislature is for a time expressly prohibited from amending or repealing any initiated law. While in the California Constitution the legislature is not expressly mentioned, still the power of the legislature to amend or repeal an initiated law submitted to the people is effectually prohibited by the inherent terms of such Constitution by necessary implication. In the states of Arkansas, Colorado, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Oregon, Ohio and some others, the initiative and referendum constitutional provisions are similar to that in this state, and contain a prohibition against the veto power of the state executive, but make no mention of any prohibition as against the power of the legislature to amend or repeal initiated laws. Why the Constitution builders of Washington and California put such a prohibition as to legislative repeal of initiated laws in their state Constitutions, or why the Constitution builders of this state, and all these others, left such prohibition out of their Constitutions, is not for us to inquire. It is enough for us to know that it was left out of our Constitution. It is a matter of common knowledge that an ill-advised and burdensome law might be placed upon our statute books by means of the initiative, as well as by an enactment of the legislature. Such a law so placed upon the statute books by the initiative would almost invariably remain a law at least four years, if the only method of repeal or amendment was by means of the initiative and vote of the people. It may have been that a majority of those drafting and proposing the initiative and referendum amendment to the Constitutions such as exists in this state were of the view that four years was too long a time to leave such an unwise law in force, and therefore purposely and intentionally left the repealing power as to all initiated laws in the hands of the legislature. It is not to be presumed that the Constitution builders of California and Washington possessed all the wisdom upon this subject, and that all the Constitution makers in all these ten or a dozen other states blundered by leaving the repealing power as to initiated laws in the hands of the legislature. Even in the state of Washington, after the lapse of two years, the legislature is permitted to repeal an initiated law, thus recognizing that for some reason the legislature should have repealing power, and also recognizing that the legislature would have such repealing power unless so taken away. There are many suggestive reasons which might have influenced the Constitution makers of this and other states in leaving with the legislature the power to repeal or amend an initiated law. If, in the course of time, we should have placed upon our statutes various initiated laws upon various general subjects, such as elections, banking, corporations, court procedure, assessment and taxation, schools, public officers; and if the legislature possessed no power to repeal or amend such initiated laws, then the legislature would be powerless to pass any law in conflict with any part of such initiated laws. A Constitution is to be tested not by what has been or is being done thereunder, but by what may be done under its authority. Sterritt v. Young, 14 Wyo. 146, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 160, 116 Am. St. Rep. 994, 82 Pac. 946. Under such conditions the constitutional functions of the legislature would thereby become so handicapped, curtailed, and limited as to be of but little value. We are of the view that the Constitution of the state cannot be so amended or nullified by means of initiated legislative enactments. We are of the view that the initiative and referendum amendment was never intended as a means of so curtailing and limiting the constitutional power of the state legislature, but was intended to preserve to the people a greater share of, and control over, the legislative power, but without taking away from any other constitutional department any of its powers, excepting the veto power of the state executive. Kadderly v. Portland, 44 Or. 118, 74 Pac. 710, 75 Pac. 222; Straw v. Harris, 54 Or. 424, 103 Pac. 777; Kiernan v. Portland, 57 Or. 454, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 339, 111 Pac. 379, 112 Pac. 402; People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 Pac. L.R.A.1917B.

129; State ex rel. Smith v. District Ct. 50 Mont. 134, 145 Pac. 721. The supreme court of every state having an initiative and referendum constitutional provision similar to that of this state, which has been called upon to determine the question, has held that the legislature has the power to repeal or amend an initiated law. The supreme court of the state of Oregon, in Kadderly v. Portland, 44 Or. 118, 74 Pac. 710, among other things, said: "Now, the initiative and referendum amendment does not abolish or destroy the republican form of government, or substitute another in its place. The representative character of the government still remains. The people have simply reserved to themselves a larger share of legislative power, but they have not overthrown the republican form of the government or substituted another in its place. The government is still divided into the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, the duties of which are discharged by representatives selected by the people. Under this amendment, it is true, the people may exercise a legislative power, and may, in effect, veto or defeat bills passed and approved by the legislature and the governor; but the legislative and executive departments are not destroyed, nor are their powers or authority materially curtailed. Laws proposed and enacted by the people under the initiative clause of the amendment are subject to the same constitutional limitations as other statutes, and may be amended or repealed by the legislature at will."

To the same effect are the decisions of the supreme courts of Missouri and Colorado. State ex rel. Halliburton v. Roach, 230 Mo. 408, 139 Am. St. Rep. 639, 130 S. W. 689; Re Senate Resolution, 54 Colo. 262, 130 Pac. 333; People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 Pac. 129. Also see note on initiative and referendum, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) p. 195.

It is urged by appellants that if the legislature has the power to amend or repeal initiated laws, and that if the legislature also has the power to prevent the operation of the referendum as to such an amending or repealing statute by passing the same by a two-thirds majority vote, with an emergency clause embodied therein, then the initiative and referendum amendment to the Constitution becomes a farce and of no practical utility. We are of the view that the premise from which this conclusion is drawn is untrue. This contention with relation to such use by the legislature of the emergency clause requires us to further consider the emergency proposition in connection with appellants' second ground of alleged invalidity of said chapter 258. We are of the view that, where the legislature enacts a law amending or repealing an initiated law, such law may be submitted to referendum vote under the same conditions as may be submitted to vote any and all laws which are the subject of constitutional referendum, and this wholly regardless of whether or not such amending or repealing act contains an emergency clause; in other words, all those enactments by the legislature which are the subject of referendum are not subject to the emergency clause, and, vice versa, all those enactments which are subject to the emergency clause are not subject to the referendum. The only lawful function of the emergency clause is to cause an enactment to go into effect as soon as signed by the executive, instead of waiting until the first day of the next July. It must be observed that the initiative and referendum amendment to the Constitution provides that any laws, which the legislature may have enacted shall, upon a proper referendum petition being filed, be submitted to a vote of the electors of the state before going into effect, except such laws as may be necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety, support of the state government and its existing public institutions. Such laws comprehended within this exception, as their names and nature imply, are emergency measures. As to such emergency measures there can be no exercise of the referendum power, under any circumstances, with or without an emergency clause, and this regardless of the size of the majority vote by which they were passed. Section 22, art. 3, provides that "no act shall take effect until ninety days after the adjournment of the session at which it passed, unless in case of emergency (to be expressed in the preamble or body of the act), the legislature shall by a vote of two thirds of all the members elected of each house otherwise direct."

Sections 1 and 22 of article 3 should be construed and read together as if forming different parts of but one section. State ex rel. Lavin v. Bacon, 14 S. D. 304, 85 N. W. 605. The emergency measures mentioned in § 22 must and can only refer to the same emergency measures mentioned in the referendum clause exception contained in § 1. It therefore follows that the legislature, by necessary implication, is only authorized to declare emergencies in that class of measures specified in the said exception to the referendum clause. As to all emergency measures and acts within the purview of this exception, the legislature may declare an emergency to exist, for the purpose and to the end that such enactment may at once go into effect, and such declaration and finding as to the existence of such emergency is final, and not within the power or province of the courts to question. But as to any measure, law, or enactment clearly not within the class of emergency measures specified within said exception, the legislature has no power or authority to declare an emergency to exist in relation thereto, by any vote, however large the same may be; and the action of the legislature in embodying emergency clauses in measures clearly not comprehended within the said exception is wholly unwarranted and void, and should be so held by the courts. Not that the act itself would be void, but the emergency clause would be void, with the result that the act would not go into effect until the 1st day of the next July, and also with the result that, in the event of a proper referendum petition being filed, as required by law, such enactment would not go into effect until approved by a majority vote of the electors of the state. Riley v. Carico, 27 Okla. 33, 110 Pac. 738; McIntosh v. State, 56 Tex. Crim. Rep. 134, 120 S. W. 455; Sears v. Multnomah County, 49 Or. 42, 88 Pac. 522; McClure v. Nye, 22 Cal. App. 248, 133 Pac. 1145; State ex rel. Brislawn v. Meath, 84 Wash. 302, 147 Pac. 11; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 661, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273, 297. In State ex rel. Brislawn v. Meath the court held that, as, under the Constitution of 1889, the courts had decided they were without authority to review the legislative discretion in declaring an emergency, they should, after the adoption of the initiative and referendum amendment, scrutinize a legislative declaration of an emergency and declare the declaration void in case it is obviously false; for the spirit of a law and the mischief intended to be remedied must be considered. In Mugler v. Kansas it is held that "the courts are not bound by mere forms, nor are they to be misled by mere pretenses. They are at liberty—indeed, are under a solemn duty—to look at the substance of things, whenever they enter upon the inquiry whether the legislature has transcended the limits of its authority. If, therefore, a statute purporting to have been enacted to protect the public health, the public morals, or the public safety has no real or substantial relation to those objects, or is a palpable invasion of rights secured by the fundamental law, it is the duty of the courts to so adjudge, and thereby give effect to the Constitution."

Under this view the initiative and referendum is a workable and efficient law; that whenever the legislature shall have passed an act repealing an initiated law, not comprehended within the emergency exception to the referendum clause, the same may be referred to a referendum vote the same as may any other law which is subject to the referendum. We are of the view that this was the clear intention of the framers of the initiative and referendum amendment to our Constitution as expressed by the plain terms thereof.

We therefore hold that the legislature had the power to repeal chapter 201, Laws of 1911, and to enact in lieu thereof chapter 258; that the only relief the courts might have granted under any circumstances growing out of the enactment of chapter 258, for reasons hereinbefore stated, was to have ordered and required that the enactment or law known as chapter 258 be submitted to a referendum vote of the people, notwithstanding the emergency clause thereto annexed; but that cannot be granted, for the reason that the people have not invoked the referendum or put the same in operation as to said enactment by the filing of a referendum petition signed by at least 5 per cent of the electors of the state.

This being a cause involving a matter of public concern, by written stipulation of counsel for both appellants and respondent, W. A. Lynch, Esq., attorney, as amicus curiæ, has filed a brief contending that chapter 201, Laws of 1911, never became a valid initiated law of this state, in that the same was not approved by a majority vote of all the electors of this state; but we are of the view that this contention is not well grounded, for the reason that neither under the Constitution nor the statute (Pol. Code § 22) under which initiated laws may be voted upon is it required that the same shall receive more than a majority of all the votes cast upon the measure submitted.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Dismissed by the Supreme Court of the United States, March 6, 1916 (241 U. S. 643, 60 L. ed. 1218, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 449).

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

CHARLES S. HOCKETT, Plff. in Err.,
v.
STATE LIQUOR LICENSING BOARD
et al.

(91 Ohio St. 176, 110 N. E. 485.)

Constitutional law — amendment — referendum.

1. The Constitution and the statutes of Ohio provide ample and adequate legal machinery for the initiation, submission, and adoption or rejection of any proposed amendment to the Constitution of Ohio by what is known as a referendum vote.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, I. a, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — intoxicating liquors — adoption.

2. Article 15, § 9a, relating to home rule on the subject of intoxicating liquors, was regularly and legally initiated, submitted, and carried by a majority of the voters of Ohio voting thereon at the regular election held in November, 1914, and thereby became a part of the Constitution of Ohio.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, I. a, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — constitutionality.

3. Said amendment is not in conflict with any provision of the Federal Constitution. For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, I. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 26, 1915.)

Headnotes by the COURT.

Note. — As to initiative and referendum, see annotation following this case, post, 15. L.R.A.1917B.

ERROR to the Court of Appeals for Franklin County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in defendants' favor in an action brought to enjoin them from appointing a licensing board in certain counties. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. Jay Miller, H. B. Emerson, J. A. White, W. B. Wheeler, Howenstine & Huston, John E. West, Miller, Miller, Brady, & Seeley, for plaintiff in error:

No method or means of election machinery was provided for proposed constitutional amendments.

Mason v. State, 58 Ohio St. 30, 41 L.R.A. 291, 50 N. E. 6; Southern Gum Co. v. Laylin, 66 Ohio St. 578, 64 N. E. 564; Oakland Paving Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 479, 11 Pac. 3; Cass v. Dillon, 2 Ohio St. 607; Exchange Bank v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 1; Stevens v. Benson, 50 Or. 269, 91 Pac. 577; Palmer v. Benson, 50 Or. 280, 91 Pac. 579; State ex rel. McClurg v. Powell, 77 Miss. 543, 48 L.R.A. 652, 27 So. 927; State ex rel. Woods v. Tooker, 15 Mont. 8, 25 L.R.A. 560, 37 Pac. 840; State ex rel. Cope v. Foraker, 46 Ohio St. 677, 6 L.R.A. 422, 23 N. E. 491; People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 Pac. 129; State ex rel. Little Rock v. Donaghey, 106 Ark. 56, 152 S. W. 746; State ex rel. Bailey v. Brookhart, 113 Iowa, 250, 84 N. W. 1064; Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 543, 14 N. W. 738, 15 N.

W. 609; State ex rel. Stevenson v. Tuffy, 19 Nev. 391, 3 Am. St. Rep. 895, 12 Pac. 835; Kadderly v. Portland, 44 Or. 118, 74 Pac. 710, 75 Pac. 222.

The Home Rule Amendment violates the Federal compact by an unwarranted limitation on the police power.

Rippey v. Texas, 193 U. S. 504, 48 L. ed. 767, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 516; License Cases, 5 How. 504, 577, 12 L. ed. 255, 289; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 33, 24 L. ed. 989; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Bacon v. Walker, 204 U. S. 311, 51 L. ed. 499, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 650, 29 L. ed. 516, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; State ex rel. George v. Aiken, 42 S. C. 222, 26 L.R.A. 345, 20 S. E. 221; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721; State v. Bixman, 162 Mo. 1, 62 S. W. 828; Beebe v. State, 6 Ind. 542, 63 Am. Dec. 391; State ex rel. Vance v. Crawford, 28 Kan. 726, 42 Am. Rep. 186; Schwuchow v. Chicago, 68 Ill. 444; State v. Durein, 70 Kan. 13, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 908, 78 Pac. 152, 80 Pac. 987; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 34 L. ed. 626, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13; Santo v. State, 2 Iowa, 165, 63 Am. Dec. 487; Adler v. Whitbeck, 44 Ohio St. 539, 9 N. E. 672; Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 129, 21 L. ed. 929; Vance v. W. A. Vandercook Co. 170 U. S. 444, 42 L. ed. 1103, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 674; Cronin v. Adams, 192 U. S. 108, 48 L. ed. 365, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 219; Newburyport Water Co. v. Newburyport, 193 U. S. 561, 48 L. ed. 795, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 553; Ohio ex rel. Lloyd v. Dollison, 194 U. S. 445, 48 L. ed. 1062, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703; Doering v. Cincinnati, 76 Ohio St. 636, 81 N. E. 1184.

The Home Rule Amendment, if valid, must be construed prospectively.

Shreveport v. Cole, 129 U. S. 36-41, 32 L. ed. 589-591, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 210; Scotland County v. Thomas, 94 U. S. 682, 24 L. ed. 219; Schuyler County v. Thomas, 98 U. S. 169-171, 25 L. ed. 88, 89; Minneapolis v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 215 U. S. 417, 54 L. ed. 259, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 118; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 86, 53 L. ed. 417, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 220; New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. United States, 212 U. S. 500, 53 L. ed. 624, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 309; Davidson Bros. Marble Co. v. United States, 213 U. S. 10, 53 L. ed. 675, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324; Johannessen v. United States, 225 U. S. 227, 56 L. ed. 1066, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 613; Re Davis, 4 Ohio N. P. N. S. 417, 52 Ohio L. J. 46; Swift & Co. v. Newport News, 105 Va. 108, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 404, 52 S. E. 821; State ex rel. Evans v. Dudley, 1 Ohio St. L.R.A.1917B.

437; Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 97; Allhyer v. State, 10 Ohio St. 588; Platt v. Craig, 66 Ohio St. 75, 63 N. E. 594.

Messrs. Timothy S. Hogan, Attorney General, P. E. Dempsey, James I. Boulger, and Frank Davis, for defendants in error:

Adequate and proper machinery for the holding of an election on constitutional amendments has been provided.

People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 102 Am. St. Rep. 34, 74 Pac. 167; Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment, 24 Kan. 700; Lovett v. Ferguson, 10 S. D. 44, 71 N. W. 765; Allen v. State, 14 Ariz. 458, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 468, 130 Pac. 1114; Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 543, 14 N. W. 738, 15 N. W. 609; Worman v. Hagan, 78 Md. 152, 21 L.R.A. 716, 27 Atl. 616; State ex rel. Thompson v. Winnett, 78 Neb. 379, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 149, 110 N. W. 1113, 15 Ann. Cas. 781; West v. State, 50 Fla. 154, 39 So. 412; Green v. Weller, 32 Miss. 664.

The Home Rule Amendment needs no additional legislation.

Hodges v. Dawdy, 104 Ark. 583, 149 S. W. 656; Oakland Paving Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 479, 11 Pac. 3; Cass v. Dillon, 2 Ohio St. 608; Re Sweeley, 12 Misc. 174, 33 N. Y. Supp. 369; Diamond Glue Co. v. United States Glue Co. 187 U. S. 611-616, 47 L. ed. 328-333, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206.

The Home Rule Amendment does not violate article 4, § 4, of the United States Constitution.

Pacific States Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Oregon, 223 U. S. 118, 56 L. ed. 377, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; Kadderly v. Portland, 44 Or. 118, 74 Pac. 710, 75 Pac. 222.

It is not a violation of other constitutional amendments.

Barron v. Baltimore, 7 Pet. 243, 8 L. ed. 672; Fox v. Ohio, 5 How. 434, 12 L. ed. 223; Capital City Dairy Co. v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 46 L. ed. 171, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120; Barrington v. Missouri, 205 U. S. 483-486, 51 L. ed. 890-894, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 582; Otis v. Parker, 187 U. S. 606-608, 47 L. ed. 323-327, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 168; Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104-112, 55 L. ed. 112-117, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186; Laderburg v. Miller, 127 C. C. A. 250, 210 Fed. 614; State ex rel. Gongwer v. Graves, 90 Ohio St. 311, 107 N. E. 1018.

Mr. A. J. Freiberg also for defendants in error.

Mr. Judson Harmon, for Home-Rule Association:

The Home Rule Amendment was lawfully submitted and adopted.

Re Assignment of Judges, 34 Ohio St. 431; Hupp v. Hock-Hocking Oil & Natural Gas Co. 88 Ohio St. 61, 101 N. E. 1053, Ann.

Cas. 1914D, 1004; Cass v. Dillon, 2 Ohio St. 607; State ex rel. Sheets v. Laylin, 69 Ohio St. 1, 68 N. E. 574; Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment, 24 Kan. 700; Third Nat. Bank v. Laidlaw, 86 Ohio St. 91, 98 N. E. 1016; Citizens' Bank v. Parker, 192 U. S. 73, 85, 86, 48 L. ed. 346, 356, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 181; Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Detroit, 26 L.R.A. 667, 12 C. C. A. 365, 22 U. S. App. 570, 64 Fed. 628; State ex rel. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Creamer, 83 Ohio St. 412, 94 N. E. 831.

When the Home Rule Amendment took effect the Rose County Option Law and everything arising from or depending on it ceased to exist for all purposes.

State ex rel. Evans v. Dudley, 1 Ohio St. 437; Norton v. Taxing Dist. 129 U. S. 490, 32 L. ed. 774, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 322; Wadsworth v. Eau Claire County, 102 U. S. 537, 26 L. ed. 221.

Wanamaker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is based on what has become politically known as "the Home Rule Amendment," pertaining to intoxicating liquors. The question is not "Should it have passed? That was addressed to the voters of Ohio at the November election. The question is not "What is the meaning and scope of the amendment? That is a moot question here and must be reserved for concrete cases arising under the amendment if it should be a valid amendment. The questions here are (1) Did it carry? Did it become a part of our Ohio Constitution? (2) Is it in conflict with the Federal Constitution?

Plaintiff in error contends that, notwithstanding the official returns made to the secretary of state show a majority prima facie of 12,618 for the amendment, still said amendment did not carry because there was no valid legal machinery provided, either by the Constitution or the statutes, for the submission of such amendment and for the casting, counting, and returning of the votes thereon.

Article 8, § 1, Bill of Rights of the Ohio Constitution of 1802, contained the following provision: ". . . Every free republican government being founded on their sole authority, and organized for the great purpose of protecting their rights and liberties and securing their independence; to effect these ends, they [the people] have at all times a complete power to alter, reform, or abolish their government, whenever they may deem it necessary."

The Constitution of 1851 contains the following provision: "All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for their equal protection and L.R.A.1917B.

benefit, and they have the right to alter, reform, or abolish the same, whenever they may deem it necessary. . . ." Const. 1851 Bill of Rights, Art. 1, § 2.

This provision remains in the Constitution of 1912. Under the amendments proposed and passed in the Constitution of 1912 for the submission of amendments the following provisions are pertinent. Article 2, § 1, of the Constitution of 1912, reads as follows: ". . . But the people reserve to themselves the power to propose to the general assembly laws and amendments to the Constitution, and to adopt or reject the same at the polls on a referendum vote as hereinafter provided. They also reserve the power . . . and independent of the general assembly to propose amendments to the Constitution and to adopt or reject the same at the polls."

Pursuant to this sovereign political power, which is inherent in the people, and their reserved right "to propose amendments to the Constitution and to adopt or reject the same at the polls," a petition was initiated and filed with the secretary of state, calling for the submission of such "Home Rule Amendment" at the next regular or general election.

No complaint is now made, or ever has been, that the petition was not in due form, duly signed and verified, all in accordance with the provisions of law; but the complaint is that there was no legal machinery, constitutional or statutory, for the submission of such amendment to the people for counting, canvassing, and returning the votes thereon and the final determination and proclamation as to the official vote of the people of the state on such amendment. It may also be observed in passing that no claim or contention whatsoever was made prior to the election that such amendment had not been regularly and legally submitted. It is now claimed by the plaintiff in error that the vote on the amendment, therefore, was a mere nullity because the Constitution failed to provide the necessary legal machinery agreeable to the words "as hereinafter provided," as found in said article 2, § 1.

We must remember that we are here construing the Constitution of the state of Ohio, affecting 5,000,000 people scattered over more than 40,000 square miles. We are not to use any millimeter measure of interpretation nor employ that strict construction peculiar to criminal law and procedure, but we are to employ that broad-gauged liberal construction that the general terms of constitutional provisions necessarily require in order to make them effective and carry out the real intention of the people in making the Constitution, through their representatives, and by adopting the Constitution by their own votes. The polestar in the construction of Constitutions, as well as other written instruments, is the intention of the makers and adopters.

Now what was to be "hereinafter provided?" Manifestly the manner and means of proposing amendments to the Constitution and adopting or rejecting the same by a referendum vote. An examination of § 1a, article 2, clearly and conclusively shows that the Constitution makers proceeded forthwith to "hereinafter provide" for the submission of amendments to the Constitution and for a referendum vote thereon. Notice the language of the very next section: "Sec. 1a. The first aforesaid power reserved by the people is designated the initiative, and the signatures of 10 per centum of the electors shall be required upon a petition to propose an amendment to the Constitution. When a petition signed by the aforesaid required number of electors, shall have been filed with the secretary of state, and verified as herein provided, proposing an amendment to the Constitution, the full text of which shall have been set forth in such petition, the secretary of state shall submit for the approval or rejection of the electors, the proposed amendment, in the manner hereinafter provided, at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to ninety days after the filing of such petition. The initiative petitions, above described, shall have printed across the top thereof: 'Amendment to the Constitution Proposed by Initiative Petition to be Submitted Directly to the Electors.'"

In addition to these numerous provisions specifically providing for the submission of constitutional amendments for a referendum vote in § 1a, § 1g includes the further provisions: "A true copy of all . . . proposed amendments to the Constitution, together with an argument or explanation, or both, for, and also an argument or explanation, or both, against the same shall be prepared. . . . The secretary of state shall cause to be printed . . . proposed amendment to the Constitution, together with the arguments and explanations, . . . and shall mail, or otherwise distribute, a copy of such . . . proposed amendment to the Constitution, together with such arguments and explanations for and against the same to each of the electors of the state, as far as may be reasonably possible. Unless otherwise provided by law, the secretary of state shall cause to be placed upon the ballots, the title of any such . . . proposed amendment to the Constitution, to be submitted. He shall also cause the ballots so to be printed as to permit an affirmative or negative vote upon each . . . proposed amendment to the Constitution. The style of all laws . . . shall be . . . and of all constitutional amendments: 'Be it resolved by the people of the state of Ohio.' . . ."

Section 1b provides for the ballots on such proposed amendment; also, if the amendment shall carry by a majority of the electors voting thereon, when such amendment shall go into effect and the publication by the secretary of state: "Ballots shall be so printed as to permit an affirmative or negative vote upon each measure submitted to the electors. Any proposed law or amendment to the Constitution submitted to the electors as provided in § 1a and § 1b, if approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, shall take effect thirty days after the election at which it was approved and shall be published by the secretary of state."

Again, in § 1g we have the following language: "Any initiative, supplementary or referendum petition may be presented in separate parts but each part shall contain a full and correct copy of the title, and text of the law, section or item thereof sought to be referred, or the proposed law or proposed amendment to the Constitution."

This same section goes on to provide who may sign such petitions and how, and then further provides: "No law or amendment to the Constitution submitted to the electors by initiative and supplementary petition and receiving an affirmative majority of the votes cast thereon, shall be held unconstitutional or void on account of the insufficiency of the petitions," etc.

The astonishing thing about these provisions is not their brevity, but the minutia and detail with which the Constitution makers provided for safeguarding the initiative and referendum as to constitutional amendments. But after all this was done, in order to make assurance doubly sure, fearing that they might have omitted some clerical step, the Constitution, at the close of § 1g, provides as follows: "The foregoing provisions of this section shall be self-executing, except as herein otherwise provided. Laws may be passed to facilitate their operation, but in no way limiting or restricting either such provision or the powers herein reserved."

Agreeable to the last three lines of § 1g above quoted, the legislature of Ohio had formerly passed the following section (§ 4785, General Code), which reads: "Except when otherwise provided by law, all public elections in this state shall be conducted according to the provisions of this title."

And § 5019, General Code, provides how constitutional amendments shall be submitted, as follows: " . . . The provisions of this title, so far as practicable, shall apply to the marking of ballots and the counting of votes upon any constitutional amendment so submitted."

This section and other kindred sections are found in part first of the General Code, under the head of "Title XIV. Public Elections," which title provides for the entire election machinery of the state. Again, §§ 5088 and 5089, General Code, under the same title, provide for the tally-sheet entries and the compiling and preparing of the count on the day following the election, and the certification of the result thereof to the secretary of state. But it may be claimed that some of these sections were enacted by the legislature prior to the constitutional amendment on the initiative and referendum, and therefore have no application. This is fully answered by the express provision of the Constitution saving certain statutes, as found in a schedule adopted with the regularly proposed amendments to the Constitution on September 3, 1912. Such schedule reads as follows: "The several amendments passed and submitted by this convention when adopted at the election shall take effect on the 1st day of January, 1913, except as otherwise specifically provided by the schedule attached to any of said amendments. All laws then in force, not inconsistent therewith shall continue in force until amended or repealed."

So that by express provision of the schedule all old statutes not repugnant to or inconsistent with the provisions of the new Constitution are as applicable to the constitutional amendment as those that are passed subsequently to the adoption of the constitutional amendments of 1912. So that throughout the Constitution and the amendments we have abundance of provision for the submission of the amendment at a public election, for the preparation of the ballots, for the casting and counting of them, the certification of the result, and the publication finally by the secretary of state. Indeed, it is difficult to imagine any additional provision that could have been made under this right and power of the people for the amendment of their Constitution by a referendum vote.

Judge Brewer, in the famous Kansas case, goes even further, and holds that "if there were no legal machinery provision the court nevertheless must take judicial notice of the result."

The language of the court on the prohibitory amendment is found in Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment, 24 Kan. 700, and L.R.A.1917B.

is as follows: "Suppose a majority did adopt, but no machinery is provided for ascertaining that fact, no one is authorized to canvass and proclaim the result, and no one in fact does so canvass and proclaim. Must not the court nevertheless take judicial notice of the result? When the Constitution says that upon certain conditions an amendment is adopted, must we not take judicial notice of the happening of those conditions? It is the election, and not the canvass, that works the change; and if we are bound to take notice of everything that is allowed to affect the validity of any law, must we not of everything affecting the fundamental as well as the statute law?"

We hold that this objection to the amendment is not well taken. As a reinforcement of our position on this question we quote liberally from the pertinent parts of the Kansas case, supra, by Judge Brewer:

"And, first, the election itself was authorized by law. It was not a mere voluntary proceeding. The proposition was put by legislative sanction before the people, who were invited to consider and act upon it. 'The following proposition . . . shall be submitted to the electors of the state for adoption or rejection.' Both Constitution and statute name the time and the persons at which and to whom this proposition is submitted. And the statute further provides that the proposition shall be submitted 'at the general election.' This implies something more than the mere matter of time. The Constitution says 'at which time.' But the statute goes further. It does not read, at the time, or on the day of the general election, but at that election itself. For the purpose of voting upon and determining the question submitted, it thus refers to and appropriates the statutory machinery of the general election. Concede that this may technically be limited to the mere proceedings of election day, and that the Constitution and the statute together, prescribing the form of ballots, the parties entitled to vote, the time of election, and the election machinery, have exhausted their force at the close of the polls, and what then? Must not the court take judicial notice of the result? We are bound to know what the Constitution is—what the statutes are. We take judicial notice of them. No proof is required—none is proper. . . . 'Of course, we take judicial notice, without proof, of all the laws of our own state. . . . And in doing this, we take judicial notice of what our books of published law contain, of what the enrolled bills contain, of what the journals of the legislature contain, and, indeed, of everything that is allowed to affect the validity of any law, or that is allowed to affect or modify its meaning in any respect whatever.'

"Now, the Constitution provides that, 'if a majority of the electors voting on said amendments at said election shall adopt the amendments, the same shall become a part of the Constitution.' Suppose a majority did adopt, but no machinery is provided for ascertaining that fact, no one is authorized to canvass and proclaim the result, and no one in fact does so canvass and proclaim; must not the court nevertheless take judicial notice of the result? When the Constitution says that upon certain conditions an amendment is adopted, must we not take judicial notice of the happening of those conditions? It is the election, and not the canvass, that works the change; and if we are bound to take notice 'of everything that is allowed to affect the validity of any law,' must we not of everything affecting the fundamental as well as the statute law? And judicial notice does not depend on the actual knowledge of the judge or the extent of the personal labor and inquiry required. The justice of the peace in the most remote county in the northwest portion of the state, who may never have seen a copy of the journal of either house, takes judicial notice of all things appearing in either journal, so far as they affect the validity of any law. When challenge is made, he must investigate and know. So, although it may seem extravagant, yet if the legislature has failed to make provision for the canvass of any vote on a proposed constitutional amendment, and if in fact none be made, must not the courts take judicial notice of the actual vote and its result? It may be said if we take judicial notice of votes on one question, why not on all, and what need of election contests? Let the court determine on its judicial knowledge. But we do not take judicial notice of votes and elections as such, but we can take notice of them so far, and only so far, as they affect the validity of some public law. . . .

"The courts are to know what is and what is not a public law of the state; what is and what is not a part of the Constitution: and to that end, must take judicial notice of everything, near or remote, that determines such fact. This argument, condensed, is this: The courts take judicial notice of what is public law, statutory or constitutional. When a majority of the electors voting on an amendment at an election properly ordered adopts it, then it becomes a part of the Constitution. So the Constitution itself says. The courts must judicially know whether such amendment has been adopted, and is in fact a part of the Constitution, and to that end, if need be, must take judicial notice of every ballot cast at that election.

"But, second, does not a fair reading, a reasonable construction, of the resolution, make it broad enough to appropriate the entire election machinery, including all relating to canvass as well as to casting votes? It says that the proposition 'shall be submitted to the electors of the state for adoption or rejection, at the general election to be held on the Tuesday succeeding,' etc.; and the second section prescribes the form of the ballot. This, as we have just considered, plainly authorizes the vote. Does it not also appropriate the whole election machinery?

"We have a general election law. It is a single statute, yet it covers all details of ordinary elections, names election boards, prescribes rules of election, provides for returns and canvass of all votes. . . . It is one election law of the state. It is a general election law. Now, when a proposition is submitted to the people at the general election, without further words or designation, does it not mean that the proposition is to be decided in the manner prescribed by that general election law? It is an old and familiar doctrine that that which is within the spirit of the statute, though not within the letter, is a part of it; as well as that which is not within the spirit but within the letter, is not a part of it. . . . If . . . it should be stated that a question had been submitted to the electors at a specific and named election, the universal understanding would be, not only that the votes were to be received, but also that they were to be counted, canvassed, and the result proclaimed; and all this would be implied from the simple statement in reference to the submission. Should not equal extent be given to the language used by the legislature, if, without such extent, its intended action fails? Of course, what the legislature omits, the courts cannot supply. But the largest latitude may, and should, be given to the language used, in order to uphold, rather than defeat, its action. Especially is this true when, otherwise, large interests fully considered, will fail, and more especially is this true, when, upon the faith of such legislative action, the people of the whole state have been stirred up and moved to express their judgment upon a matter understood to be before them for decision. . . . Nearly two years elapsed between the time the proposition passed the legislature and the day of the popular vote. During this time this question was not forgotten. It was discussed in every household and at every meeting. The state was thoroughly canvassed; its merits and demerits were presented and supported by all possible arguments. Pulpit, press, and platform were full of it. It was assumed on all sides that the question was before the people for decision. There was not even a suggestion of any such defect in the form of a submission as would defeat the popular decision. . . . But there was not a suggestion from friend or foe. The contest was warm and active. After the contest was ended and the election over, the claim is for the first time made that after all there was nothing in fact before the people; that this whole canvass, excitement, and struggle was simply a stupendous farce, meaning nothing, accomplishing nothing. This is a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. This court has again and again recognized the doctrine lying at the foundation of popular governments, that in elections the will of the majority controls, and that mere irregularities or informalities in the conduct of an election are impotent to thwart the expressed will of such majority."

The Ohio Home Rule Amendment in question reads as follows:

"No law shall be passed or be in effect prohibiting the sale, furnishing or giving away of intoxicating liquors operative in a subdivision of the state upon the option of the electors thereof, or upon any other contingency which has force within a territory larger than a municipal corporation or a township outside of municipal corporations therein. All laws in contravention of the foregoing are hereby repealed.

"Nor shall any law hereafter be passed prohibiting the sale, furnishing or giving away of intoxicating liquors throughout the state at large."

Now, as to the second contention of plaintiff in error, that said "Home Rule Amendment" is contrary to the Federal Constitution, or, to use the language of plaintiff in error, a violation of the "Federal compact." Plaintiff in error does not attempt to specify any particular article, section, or provision of the Federal Constitution which he claims nullifies this amendment. He contends, however, that it is a violation of the general welfare clause of the preamble of the Federal Constitution. That preamble reads as follows: "We, the people of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

The brief of plaintiff in error exhibits un-L.R.A.1917B.

usual research of cases and authorities to sustain his contention, but we are unable to find a single citation or authority which would authorize any court to declare any statute or provision of any state Constitution invalid because the same was held contrary and repugnant to the preamble of the Federal Constitution. The preamble of the Federal Constitution merely states the great cardinal purposes of government. It has been held again and again that it is not a grant or delegation of power, but merely a generic statement of the great aims and ends of our national government.

Chief Justice Fuller in Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Thomas, 132 U. S. 174, 188, 33 L. ed. 302, 308, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 68, 73, says: "The preamble is no part of the act, and cannot enlarge or confer powers, nor control the words of the act, unless they are doubtful or ambiguous."

Judge Story, in his work on the Constitution, 5th ed. vol. 1, § 462, uses this language: "The preamble never can be resorted to to enlarge the powers confided to the general government or any of its departments. It cannot confer any power per se; it can never amount, by implication, to an enlargement of any power expressly given. . . . Its true office is to expound the nature and extent and application of the powers actually conferred by the Constitution, and not substantively to create them."

Watson, in his excellent work on the Constitution (vol. 1, page 92, and following), exhaustively discusses this phase of the subject, and the authorities are collected to sustain this doctrine. We quote one more (Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 22, 49 L. ed. 643, 648, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358, 359, 3 Ann. Cas. 765): "Although that preamble indicates the general purposes for which the people ordained and established the Constitution, it has never been regarded as the source of any substantive power conferred on the government of the United States or on any of its departments. Such powers embrace only those expressly granted in the body of the Constitution and such as may be implied from these so granted. Although, therefore, one of the declared objects of the Constitution was to secure the blessings of liberty to all under the sovereign jurisdiction and authority of the United States, no power can be exerted to that end by the United States unless, apart from the preamble, it be found in some express delegation of power or in some power to be properly implied therefrom."

Therefore, inasmuch as we have no delegation or denial of power in the preamble, how can it be said that any exercise of governmental power by the state by virtue of its state Constitution can be violative of any grant of power or denial of power in the preamble of the Federal Constitution? But it may be claimed that if a state constitutional provision cannot be held invalid or contrary to the Federal Constitution because of the provisions of the preamble to that Federal Constitution, yet the spirit of that preamble pervades all the provisions of the Federal Constitution, and therefore the proposed Home Rule Amendment" is violative of that spirit, and therefore unconstitutional.

The Federal Constitution is a delegation or denial of powers. This is clear from various provisions, but especially article 10 of the Constitution, which reads: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people."

In substance the same is true of our state Constitution. It is a statement of delegated or denied powers to each branch of the government and to the various departments and subdivisions thereof. This appears in various parts of the Constitution and the various amendments thereto, but is directly specified in § 20 of art. 1, which reads: "This enumeration of rights shall not be construed to impair or deny others retained by the people; and all powers, not herein delegated, remain with the people."

Cooley discusses the doctrine of violating the spirit of the Constitution as follows: "We have elsewhere expressed the opinion that a statute cannot be declared void on the ground solely that it is repugnant to a supposed general intent or spirit which it is thought prevades or lies concealed in the Constitution, but wholly unexpressed, or because, in the opinion of the court, it violates fundamental rights or principles, if it was passed in the exercise of a power which the Constitution confers. Still less will the injustice of a constitutional provision authorize the courts to disregard it, or indirectly to annul it by construing it away. It is quite possible that the people may, under the influence of temporary prejudice, or a mistaken view of public policy, incorporate provisions in their charter of government, infringing upon the proper rights of individual citizens or upon principles which ought ever to be regarded as sacred and fundamental in republican government. . . . The remedy for such injustice must be found in the action of the people themselves, through an amendment of their work when better counsels prevail. Such provisions, when free from doubt, must receive the same construction as any other." Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 108.

To same effect is the following: "Nor are the courts at liberty to declare an act void, L.R.A.1917B.

because, in their opinion, it is opposed to a spirit supposed to pervade the Constitution, but not expressed in words. 'When the fundamental law has not limited, either in terms or by necessary implication, the general powers conferred upon the legislature, we cannot declare a limitation under the notion of having discovered something in the spirit of the Constitution which is not even mentioned in the instrument.'" Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. pp. 239, 240, and a large number of cases there cited.

If it be true that all political power is inherent in the people, and the powers specified in the Constitution are a delegation or denial of power to the legislative branch, judicial branch or executive branch of the government, or any subdivision thereof, then it must follow that such delegation or denial with all their limitations are absolutely obligatory upon the people of the state, no less than upon the officers of the state, so long as such provisions remain a part of the Constitution of the state. The remedy is not to amend or to nullify by legislative act or judicial decree, but by further amendment to the Constitution in the way provided by law.

Numerous cases can be found in which the state has undertaken, through its Constitution and by its legislative acts, to arbitrarily, radically, and drastically exercise its police power, which courts have held again and again to be a violation of the personal rights and property rights guaranteed by the Federal Constitution. But we have been cited to no authority in which the state undertook not to enlarge, but to diminish, the exercise of its police power, in which such action has been held contrary to the provisions of the Federal Constitution. If the state had adopted the prohibition or "dry" amendment, which was submitted on the same day, that would clearly be an enlargement of the police power of the state. Cases in large number are available to show that that enlargement of the police power has been contended as a violation of the Federal Constitution, but both state and Federal courts have uniformly held that it was not such. If that be true as to a dry amendment, which enlarges the police power, it is difficult to comprehend why it is not also true when the state seeks to diminish that police power, as is claimed under the "Home Rule" Amendment. The people are the masters of their legislature and of every other branch of the government. In a matter involving exclusively state functions they may say in their organic law what the legislature may enact and what they may not enact; and a denial to a legislature of such a right, or what otherwise might be such a right, to pass certain laws, cannot be made the basis of a valid claim that such denial is a violation of any right which the people of the state may have under the Federal Constitution. As the Constitution is above the legislature, so the people are above the Constitution, subject to it and all its parts while it is in force, but possessed of the undoubted right to change, alter, or amend it at their own will in any of the regular ways provided by Constitution or laws.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is therefore affirmed.

Nichols, Ch. J., and Johnson, Donahue, Newman, Jones, and Matthias, JJ., concur.

Petition for writ of certiorari denied by Justice of Supreme Court of United States.

Annotation—Initiative and referendum.

I. Scope and definitions, 16.

II. Constitutionality of principle:

- a. In general, 17.*
- b. As applied to municipalities, 17.*

III. Necessity of legislation to carry constitutional provisions into effect:

- a. In general, 18.*
- b. Statutes limiting and defining scope, 19.*

IV. As applied to municipal matters:

- a. In general, 19.*
- b. Power to exercise:*
  - 1. In general, 19.*
  - 2. Under particular constitutional and statutory provisions, 22.*
- c. What acts are subject:*
  - 1. In general, 22.*
  - 2. Administrative matters, 23.*

- d. To what bodies applies, 23.*

V. Application of existing constitutional provisions to initiative and referendum enactments:

- a. In general, 23.*
- b. Constitutional amendments, 23.*
- c. Legislation:*
  - 1. In general, 24.*
  - 2. Carrying into effect initiative and referendum powers, 24.*

VI. Power of governor to veto, 24.

VII. Power of legislature to repeal or amend, 24.

VIII. Matters peculiar to initiative:

- a. In general, 24.*
- b. When bill takes effect, 25.*

IX. Matters peculiar to referendum:

- a. Effect upon legislative enactments:*
  - 1. When takes effect, 25.*
  - 2. Suspension by filing of referendum petition, 25.*

IX. a—continued.

- 8. Power to repeal act on which a referendum has been filed and again legislate subject matter, 26.*

b. Laws excepted from operation of referendum:

- 1. Laws carrying into effect initiative and referendum provisions, 26.*

- 2. Laws necessary for preservation of public peace, health, or safety:*

- (a) Who determines what laws are within exception, 26.*

- (b) Effect of legislative determination, 28.*

- (c) How such laws are passed, 29.*

3. Other laws excepted:

- (a) Who determines, 29.*

- (b) What laws are excepted, 29.*

- 4. Laws subject to a special referendum, 30.*

- 5. Laws which have been excepted by the legislature, 30.*

- 6. Publication, 30.*

- 7. Laws enacted under special statutory provisions, 30.*

X. Remedies:

- a. Who may maintain, 30.*

- b. Injunction, 31.*

- c. Mandamus, 31.*

- d. Jurisdiction of supreme court, 32.*

- e. Time for bringing action, 32.*

- f. Right to appeal, 32.*

X.—continued.*g. Parties, 32.*h. Competency of members of court, 32.*XI. Matters relating to practical exercise of the power:*a. In general, 32.*b. Petition:*1. Form and contents, 33.*2. Conflict between petition and pamphlet, 34.*3. Failure to submit to city attorney, 34.*4. How petition adopted, 34.*5. Right to amend, 34.*6. Separate sheets, 34.*c. Filing:*1. With whom to file, 34.*2. When petitioner's duty ends, 34.*3. What is a filing, 34.*4. Time of filing, 34.*5. Filing in sections, 35.*6. Right of officer to return petition for corrections, 35.*d. Signing:*1. In general, 36.*2. Withdrawal of names, 39.*e. Who determines sufficiency of petition:*1. In general, 39.*2. What is sufficient notice of protest, 40.*3. What objections may be raised, 40.*f. Power of court, 41.*g. Publication of proposed measure, 42.*h. Elections, 44.*i. Insertion of initiative and referendum enacting clause in legislative enactment, 45.*j. Right of electors to have measure submitted, 45.*XII. Construction, 45.*1. Scope and definitions.

The earlier cases on the initiative and referendum are discussed in the note to State ex rel. Davies v. White, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 195. Only the subsequent cases are contained in this note. In the discussion of the initiative and referendum<sup>1</sup> the popular interpretation of those terms has been allowed to define the scope. The initiative is a departure from previously existing forms of government in that the electors may enact or reject legislation independently of the legislative assembly. Previously, while the electors had the right to petition the legislative assembly for desired legislation, in order that it might crystallize into law the legislative assembly must have acted favorably upon it. The referendum, however, is not so novel a theory. It has long been customary for the legislative assembly to provide for a referendum as to some of its acts, so that they do or do not take effect according to the vote of the electors. Local option is a form of referendum. These forms of referendum, however, have been excluded from treatment in the present note. This discussion is confined to the referendum as being the power reserved to the people at their own option to approve or reject at the polls any act of the legislative assembly. As thus defined its exercise is entirely independent of the will of the legislative assembly. As will be afterwards noted, certain acts are excluded from the operation of the referendum, but within the scope of the referendum, the electors may act independently of the legislative assembly.

Although the initiative and referendum serve separate purposes, they are not such separate subjects, looking to the attainment of separate objects, as to require submission as separate amendments to a Constitution under a constitutional provision that if more than one amendment is submitted, they shall be submitted in such manner that the elector may vote for or against each measure separately.<sup>2</sup> Both the initiative and referendum are legislative in character. While the referendum operates as a veto, it is not an invasion of the executive function, but under it the electors proceed towards bills enacted by the legislature in essentially the same manner as the senate upon a bill which has passed the house.<sup>3</sup> It is stated that only one provision of the Constitution is changed; to wit, the provision by which the entire legislative authority of the state is lodged in the legislative assembly, and this, by reserving legislative authority in the people; that such

<sup>1</sup> See note to State ex rel. Davies v. White, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 195, for definitions and authorities.

And see other L.R.A. notes on various related questions referred to in 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) at page 197.
L.R.A. 1917B.

<sup>2</sup> State ex rel. Hay v. Alderson (1914) 40 Mont. 387, 142 Pac. 210, Ann. Cas. 1916B. 39; Gottstein v. Lister (1915) 88 Wash. 462, 163 Pac. 565.

<sup>3</sup> State ex rel. Hay v. Alderson (Mont.) and Gottstein v. Lister (Wash.) supra.

authority could be used in two ways, designated respectively as a power to propose and enact laws and the power to approve or reject laws enacted by the legislative assembly, does not suggest disconnection, but enumeration of the parts as a whole.<sup>4</sup>

Nor does the fact that the proposed amendment, in addition to reserving the initiative and referendum powers to the people, withholds the veto power of the governor from measures initiated by or referred to the people, require the proposed amendment to be submitted as a separate proposition.<sup>5</sup>

It should be remembered that questions relating to the initiative and referendum are governed almost entirely by constitutional and statutory provisions, and these should be first consulted upon the question under investigation.

II. Constitutionality of principle.

a. In general.

It is now well established, so far, at least, as the courts are concerned, that the adoption of the initiative and referendum is not a departure from the republican form of government guaranteed by the Federal Constitution to the several states.<sup>6</sup> The United States Supreme Court has denied writs of error to decisions of the state courts so holding on the theory that whether or not a state has ceased to maintain a republican form of government because of its adoption of the initiative and referendum is a political question, not a judicial one, and is solely for Congress to determine.<sup>7</sup>

The power of a state to apply the referendum to an act redistricting the state for congressional purposes is, so far as the state Constitution is concerned, a question for the state courts; their decision is not reviewable by the Federal Supreme Court.<sup>8</sup> Since the question whether a state has ceased to maintain a republican form of government is solely for Congress to determine, where Congress has recognized<sup>9</sup> the referendum as a part of the state legislative power for the purpose of creating congressional districts, there is no objection to such legislation from the Federal Constitution. The recognition by Congress of the referendum as a part of the legislative power of the state for the purpose of redistricting the state for congressional purposes does not violate art. 1, § 4, of the Federal Constitution, that the "times, places and manner of holding elections for senators and representatives shall be prescribed in each state by the legislature thereof, but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulation."<sup>10</sup>

b. As applied to municipalities.

It has been held that the adoption by a municipality of the initiative and referendum is not inconsistent with a republican form of government,<sup>11</sup> but the usual theory applied in cases involving municipalities is that the guaranty of a republican form of government does not extend to a subdivision of the state.<sup>12</sup>

<sup>4</sup> State ex rel. Hay v. Alderson (Mont.) supra.

<sup>5</sup> Gottstein v. Lister (Wash.) supra.

<sup>6</sup> See authorities in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 197 et seq.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid.; Ohio ex rel. Davis v. Hildebrandt (1916) 241 U. S. 565, 60 L. ed. 1173, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 708.

<sup>8</sup> Ohio ex rel. Davis v. Hildebrandt (U. S.) supra.

<sup>9</sup> It is held in Ohio ex rel. Davis v. Hildebrandt (U. S.) supra, that Congress, by providing in the Apportionment Act of August 8, 1911 (37 Stat. at L. 13, chap. 5, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 15), that the redistricting of a state for congressional purposes should be made by each state "in the manner provided by the laws thereof," manifestly intended that where, by the state Constitution and laws, the referendum is treated as a part of the legislative power, the power thus constituted should be held and treated as the state legislative power for the purpose of creating congressional districts by law.

L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>10</sup> Ohio ex rel. Davis v. Hildebrandt (U. S.) supra.

<sup>11</sup> 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 198, note.

That the initiative and referendum is not repugnant to the constitutional guaranty of a republican form of government is held in State ex rel. Foote v. Hutchinson (1914) 93 Kan. 405, 144 Pac. 241, involving a municipal ordinance.

The initiative and referendum as applied to municipalities is held not invalid as an attempt to regulate the administration of the affairs of the cities and other municipalities, in Enos v. Hanff (1915) 98 Neb. 245, 152 N. W. 397.

Nor does it violate the provision of the Federal Constitution that guarantees to the people a representative form of government, nor does it violate § 2, art. 3, of the Nebraska Constitution. Ibid.

See State ex rel. Foote v. Hutchinson, infra, subd. IV. b. 1.

<sup>12</sup> Note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 198.

III. Necessity of legislation to carry constitutional provisions into effect.

a. In general.

Whether a constitutional provision conferring initiative and referendum powers is self-executing depends upon the form of the provision. In general it may be said that a constitutional provision is self-executing if it enacts a sufficient rule by means of which the rights given may be enjoyed and protected or the duty imposed may be enforced. Again, it has been said that a constitutional provision which is intended to declare personal rights of a citizen needs no legislation to give it force, but if it defines a rule for the government of the legislature, it does.<sup>13</sup>

Adhering to these general rules for determining whether a constitutional provision is self-executing, the North Dakota constitutional provision conferring initiative powers with reference to an amendment to the state Constitution was held not self-executing.<sup>14</sup> The constitutional provision in question declared that an amendment to the Constitution might be proposed by the people by filing, at least six months previous to a general election, an initiative petition containing the signatures of at least 25 per cent of the legal voters; it then provided that when such a petition had been properly filed, the proposed amendment or amendments should be published, as the legislature may provide, for three months previous to the general election, and should be placed upon the ballot, to be voted upon by the people at such election. The court reasons that the reference to publication "as the legislature may provide" refers to future legislative provisions. It is further pointed out that no basis is prescribed for determining the legal voters, whereas in a constitutional amendment conferring initiative and referendum powers as to legislation, the same legislature particularized by inserting a definite basis on which the required percentage of signers should be computed. It is further pointed out that the constitutional provision does not prescribe either the form or substance of the enacting clause for such an amendment, while in the corresponding provi-

<sup>13</sup> The application of these general rules to specific constitutional provisions is discussed in the note to 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 198 et seq.

In holding the provision of the Michigan Constitution relating to the initiative and referendum self-executing, the court, in Thompson v. Vaughan (1916) — Mich. —, 159 N. W. 65, states that the section of the Constitution under consideration is not a mere statement of principles, but, on the contrary, points out in detail the various steps to be taken in referring an act of the legislature to the electors, and undoubtedly intends that the conduct of the election and the canvass and return of votes shall be in accordance with the general laws of the state.

The provision of the Ohio Constitution declares that it is self-executing. Shryock v. Zanesville (1915) 92 Ohio St. 375, 110 N. E. 937; State ex rel. Hunt v. Hildebrand (1915) 93 Ohio St. 1, 112 N. E. 138. Many other constitutional provisions declare that they are self-executing, in which case no judicial question arises as to this point.

The court in HOCKETT v. STATE LIQUOR LICENSING BOARD, ante, 7, after extensively setting forth the provisions of the Ohio Constitution and statutes relating to the initiative and referendum, holds that such provisions authorized the initiating of a home rule amendment as to intoxicating liquors and the submission of the same by referendum to the electors.

A constitutional amendment adopted upon an initiative petition was held self-executing in Ghera v. State (1915) 16 Ariz. 344, 146 Pac. 494, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 94, although it contained a section providing that "the legislature shall, by appropriate legislation, provide for the carrying into effect of this amendment." Another section of the amendment provided that it should take effect and be in force upon a date stated. The general question of what is a self-executing constitutional provision is, of course, merely touched upon in this note, as it relates to the initiative and referendum, and no attempt has been made to discuss any cases passing upon any question relating to this other than those which discuss the question of whether the constitutional provision conferring initiative and referendum powers is self-executing. The case of Ghera v. State is, of course, outside of this question, but deals only with a constitutional amendment adopted under the initiative and referendum powers, and is merely incidentally referred to in this connection.

<sup>14</sup> State ex rel. Linde v. Hall (1916) — N. D. —, 159 N. W. 281. The constitutional amendment, so far as was material to the inquiry, provided that "any amendment or amendments to this Constitution may also be proposed by the people by the filing with the secretary of state at least six months previous to a general election of an initiative petition containing the signatures of at least 25 per cent of the legal voters in each of not less than one half of the counties of the state. When such petition has been properly filed, the proposed amendment or amendments shall be published as the legislature may provide, for three months previous to the general election, and shall be placed upon the ballot to be voted upon by the people at the next general election."

sion relating to the initiation of legislative matters the enacting clause is provided for. The court further points out that the constitutional provision conferring initiative powers as to legislation, as well as a constitutional provision for the recall of officers, each declared expressly that they should be self-executing. Again, it is stated that the constitutional provision merely requires a minimum percentage, leaving it to the legislature to fix the percentage required, which must be "at least 25 per cent." The court also reviews the history of legislation and concludes as above stated, that the constitutional provision in question is not self-executing.

The fact that a constitutional provision which declares that it is self-executing commands a public officer to do a particular thing, without directing the manner in which it shall be done, imposes upon such officer the duty to determine, in the exercise of a fair and impartial official discretion, the manner and method of doing the thing commanded, in the absence of provisions by the legislature defining the methods.<sup>15</sup>

Laws enacted in pursuance of a constitutional provision reserving initiative and referendum powers and making the provision self-executing, but providing that legislation may be enacted especially to facilitate its operation, require liberal construction to the end that the constitutional right of the people may be facilitated and not hampered by either technical statutory provisions or technical construction thereof.<sup>16</sup>

<sup>15</sup> State ex rel. Hunt v. Hildebrandt (1915) 93 Ohio St. 1, 112 N. E. 138. In this case the secretary of state was compelled by mandamus to print and distribute an argument against a proposed constitutional amendment, over his objection that neither the Constitution nor the statutory law provided any method by which he might determine who may prepare and file the argument, or, in case more than one argument is prepared and filed, which one of the arguments shall be printed and distributed.

<sup>16</sup> State ex rel. Case v. Superior Ct. (1914) 81 Wash. 623, 143 Pac. 461, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 838. See infra, note 186.

<sup>17</sup> 60 L.R.A.(N.S.) 200, note. See State ex rel. Fleck v. Dalles City (1914) 72 Or. 337, 143 Pac. 1127, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 855, infra, subd. XI. d. 1, note 140.

<sup>18</sup> Coleman v. La Grande (1914) 73 Or. 521, 144 Pac. 468 (action for injury to employee in waterworks department). It was claimed by counsel for the city that a state statute providing for the manner of maintaining actions against a public cor-

b. Statutes limiting and defining scope.

Notwithstanding a constitutional provision conferring initiative and referendum powers may be self-executing, legislation may be enacted to facilitate the enforcement of the provision, but such legislation cannot limit or restrict the rights conferred by the constitutional provision.<sup>17</sup>

IV. As applied to municipal matters.

a. In general.

The state does not, by conferring in its Constitution initiative and referendum power upon its municipalities, authorizing them to enact and amend their charters, and adopt local or special laws, surrender its sovereignty to the municipalities; they are still subject to the general laws. Consequently, a municipality which has adopted its charter under the initiative and referendum provisions is not relieved from liability to actions for personal injuries, while in the exercise of its private functions, as provided by general law.<sup>18</sup> Nor does a provision in such a charter that the city shall, in its name, contract and be contracted with, sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, defend and be defended, show an intention on the part of the people of the city to render the municipality immune from such an action.<sup>19</sup>

b. Power to exercise.

1. In general.

The right to exercise the initiative and referendum may be conferred upon municipalities by constitutional provision. It was held in State ex rel. Hunt v. Hildebrandt (1915) 93 Ohio St. 1, 112 N. E. 138, that the provision of the Ohio Constitution that the city of Cincinnati should exercise the initiative and referendum powers did not apply to municipalities for the reason that the municipality is not subject to legislative control; in other words, that the city, in so far as it relates to cases of this kind, is an imperium in imperio.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid.

As to the power of a municipal council to question the wisdom of a proposed initiative amendment to its charter, etc., see State ex rel. Fleck v. Dalles City (1914) 72 Or. 337, 143 Pac. 1127, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 855, infra, subd. XI. e. 3.

As to the power to declare when an initiative measure shall take effect, see Minges v. Merced (1915) 27 Cal. App. 15, 148 Pac. 816, infra, subd. VIII. b.

As to the duty of the council to submit the valid part of a petition while not submitting the invalid, see Bennett v. Drullard (1915) 27 Cal. App. 180, 149 Pac. 368, infra, subd. XI. a.

As to notice of election in a municipal referendum, see Reed v. Wing, infra, subd. XI. h.

sion. The interpretation of some such constitutional provisions is discussed in this subdivision, infra.

In the absence of a constitutional provision expressly conferring initiative and referendum powers upon municipalities, the right of a municipality to exercise these powers may depend upon a statute enacted by the legislature, or upon a charter granted by the legislature, or it may depend upon the power of the municipality itself to confer such power upon its electors. The power of the legislature in this regard and the power of the municipality itself will be taken up in their order.

Acts of the legislature conferring initiative or referendum powers, or both, upon municipalities, must be tested by existing constitutional provisions. A statute authorizing a referendum of all resolutions of a county board, whether emergency or otherwise, has been held to conflict with a constitutional provision expressly authorizing the legislature to confer upon the board of supervisors of the several counties powers of a local legislative and administrative character, within the rule "expressio unius est exclusio alterius."<sup>20</sup> On the contrary, a constitutional provision authorizing the legislature to confer upon tribunals transacting the county business of the several counties such powers of local legislation and administration as it shall deem expedient, has been held not exclusive, and not to forbid the conferring of initiative and referendum powers upon the electors of a municipality.<sup>21</sup>

A statute which authorized a referendum of emergency ordinances and resolutions, although such orders or resolutions went into effect immediately, while others did not go into effect until twenty days from the time of their passage, and which provided that if an emergency ordinance or resolution is rejected, it shall stand repealed from and after twenty days after being rejected by the electors, was held to conflict with the legislative power of repeal, and to be forbidden by the Constitution.<sup>22</sup>

As to some other resolutions of the county board, the board was held to act in a judicial capacity, and therefore a referendum upon such resolutions was a delegation of judicial power and likewise forbidden.<sup>23</sup>

The power of a municipality to confer upon the electors thereof the right to legislate by the initiative must likewise be tested by constitutional provisions. It has been held that if it is not prohibited by the language of the Constitution, the power exists, in a state in which there is a constitutional policy that the people of the state at large shall enjoy the right of the initiative and referendum.<sup>24</sup>

It has been urged that a constitutional provision relating to municipalities that there shall be at least one house of legislation, or a legislative body of either one or two houses, prevents the municipality from conferring initiative and referendum powers upon the electors. But this has been denied, and it has been held that a provision in the Constitution relating to the municipal charter, that it "shall provide among other things . . . at least one house of legislation," does not prevent the municipality from conferring upon its electors the right to legislate by ballot if its legislative body fails to act upon the certification to it of a petition showing measures which the people request them to adopt.<sup>25</sup> The court points out in this case that the provision in question does not go to the full extent of legislative powers which were reserved to the people of the state in the Constitution; that it is only in case the legislative body of the municipality fails to act upon proper petition that the right to initiate a law is reserved to the people. It is further stated that the constitutional provision above referred to is complied with by a charter providing for one house of legislation; that it does not prevent further means of legislation, but, after providing for the one house, the municipality is left free to provide without restriction or prohibition any mode of legislation in harmony with the Constitution and laws of the state. Cities having home rule charters are not prohibited from conferring the power to initiate and adopt ordi-

<sup>20</sup> Mead v. Dane County (1914) 155 Wis. 632, 145 N. W. 239. The resolution which was sought to be referred in this case was one of the county board to purchase a farm adjoining the county poor farm, for an addition thereto.

See State ex rel. Walker v. Superior Ct. (1915) 87 Wash. 582, 152 Pac. 11, infra, subd. IV, c, 1, as to power to make franchises subject to referendum.
L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>21</sup> State ex rel. Foote v. Hutchinson (1914) 93 Kan. 405, 144 Pac. 241.

<sup>22</sup> Mead v. Dane County (Wis.) supra.

<sup>23</sup> Ibid.

See Enos v. Hanff, supra, subd. II. b.

<sup>24</sup> Pitman v. Drabelle (1916) 267 Mo. 78, 183 S. W. 1055.

nances upon the electors of the city by a constitutional provision that "it shall be a feature of all such charters that there shall be provided among other things for a mayor or chief magistrate and a legislative body of either one or two houses; if of two houses at least one of them shall be elected by general vote of the electors." Requiring a legislative body to be a feature of all home rule charters does not necessarily mean that no legislative functions can be exercised by any other body.<sup>25</sup>

Where the Constitution expressly confers initiative and referendum powers upon a municipality, questions as to the extent of such power frequently arise. Under constitutional provisions granting the legal voters of every city and town power to enact and amend their municipal charter, subject to the Constitution and criminal laws of the state, and providing further that the manner of exercising the powers shall be prescribed by general laws, except that cities and towns may provide for the manner of exercising the initiative and referendum powers as to their municipal legislation, municipalities have the power to provide the manner of exercising the initiative power in effecting an amendment of their charter.<sup>26</sup> Under these constitutional provisions a municipality has power also to provide the manner of enacting a new charter.<sup>27</sup> Whether the city has provided the manner of enacting a new charter depends upon the construction of the ordinance designed for that effect.<sup>28</sup>

The people of a municipality to whom initiative and referendum powers are reserved, who have power to enact and amend their municipal charter, cannot enact ordinances regardless of whether the charter contains any provision authorizing such legislation. Municipal corporations have no powers except such as are granted in express words by their charters, or such as are necessarily implied from those granted, or such as are essential to the declared object and purposes of the corporation.<sup>29</sup> But where, by the express terms of a commission charter adopted by the people, certain provisions of the old charter are declared to remain in full force and effect as ordinances only, such ordinances furnish authority for the council to act with reference to the subject matter therein contained.<sup>30</sup>

Even if one part of a municipal ordinance providing for the manner of exercising the initiative and referendum powers is void, the remaining sections of the municipal legislation are not vitiated thereby.<sup>31</sup>

A constitutional provision reserving to municipalities initiative and referendum powers as to "all" municipal legislation does not prevent the exercise by the municipality of the right to except emergency ordinances from the operation of

<sup>25</sup> State ex rel. Zien v. Duluth (1916) — Minn. —, 159 N. W. 792.

<sup>26</sup> Note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202.

<sup>27</sup> Duncan v. Dryer (1914) 71 Or. 548, 143 Pac. 644.

Where a new charter for a municipality is petitioned for by initiative petition, and the same is approved by the commissioners of the municipality, which is acting under a commission form of government, it does not become the charter of the city without a vote of the electors, where the power of enactment of a city charter was only extended to the legal voters of the municipality. Birnie v. La Grande (1915) 78 Or. 531, 153 Pac. 415.

<sup>28</sup> Where an ordinance indicated clearly in its title and in the emergency declaration that it was the intention of the council to provide for the exercise by the city of the initiative and referendum powers, including the power to enact and amend charters, and the reason for having the ordinance take effect at once was declared to be to enable the city, at as early a date as possible, to enact a new charter, it was held to provide the manner for exercising the initiative and referendum, although in the various sections of the ordinance the L.R.A.1917B.

power to enact a new charter was omitted, the ordinance referring simply to an amendment of the charter. The court here states that the ordinance will be construed as if the words, "a charter or" had been written in the section before the words "an amendment and amendments," wherever they occur in the section, as, by so doing, the letter of the ordinance will be made to express the manifest intention of the council as shown by the ordinance itself. Duncan v. Dryer (Or.) supra.

<sup>29</sup> Robertson v. Portland (1915) 77 Or. 121, 149 Pac. 545. Although the matter is discussed as one of the power of the people to enact legislation without charter authority, as a matter of fact in this case the act was one by the council of a municipality, acting under a commission charter.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid. The ordinances in question, relating to street improvements and special assessments therefor, were held to authorize the action of the council in providing for a street improvement and special assessments.

<sup>31</sup> State ex rel. Fleck v. Dalles City (1914) 72 Or. 337, 143 Pac. 1127, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 855.

the referendum.<sup>33</sup> In the Oregon<sup>33</sup> case the legislature, in passing an act providing for carrying into effect the referendum powers, provided for the enactment of emergency ordinances by the municipal council, and this was carried into a charter provision. The supreme court points out that for nine years it was understood that municipal councils had power to pass ordinances with emergency clauses appended thereto in like manner as was done by the state legislature. In view of this long acquiescence the court concludes that the power cannot be denied. The constitutional provision involved in the Ohio case,<sup>34</sup> in addition to conferring initiative and referendum powers on the municipalities on all questions of municipal legislation, provided that such powers shall be exercised in the manner now or hereafter provided by law. An act of the legislature provided for the exception from the referendum of emergency measures. It was urged that the language of the constitutional provision could not be interpreted to invest the legislative body of a municipality with the power of declaring any act to be an emergency; further, that the general assembly had no power to invest the municipal legislative body with any such authority. The supreme court points out that, in the general provisions reserving initiative and referendum powers to the electors of the state, the referendum is reserved except as to emergency laws, and that the constitutional provision conferring the initiative and referendum powers upon the people of a municipality must be interpreted in the light of the definition of the referendum as defined in the Constitution generally. As thus defined, emergency measures are expressly reserved. The court therefore concludes that, under the statute in question, the council of the municipality might exercise the power of declaring an emergency.

<sup>33</sup> Shryock v. Zanesville (1915) 92 Ohio St. 375, 110 N. E. 937; Thielke v. Albee (1915) 79 Or. 48, 153 Pac. 793.

<sup>34</sup> Thielke v. Albee (Or.) supra.

<sup>35</sup> Shryock v. Zanesville (Ohio) supra.

<sup>36</sup> State ex rel. Walker v. Superior Ct. (1915) 87 Wash. 582, 152 Pac. 11. The power to make such an ordinance subject to the referendum depends upon whether the power to grant franchises is conferred upon the city in its corporate capacity or upon the city council. If the former, as was held in this case to be the fact, it may be made subject to referendum. L.R.A.1917B.

2. Under particular constitutional and statutory provisions.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202 et seq., for earlier cases on this question.

c. What acts are subject.

1. In general.

An ordinance granting a telephone franchise is subject to the referendum under a charter provision making all franchise ordinances subject to the referendum except as otherwise provided by law.<sup>35</sup>

While, as is shown below, the initiative and referendum applies only to legislative matters as distinguished from administrative or executive, not all legislative matters are within its scope. Thus, although a resolution of the board of trustees of a municipality, establishing the grades of certain streets and avenues thereof, is legislative in character, it has been held not subject to a referendum,<sup>36</sup> on the theory that the inevitable effect of applying the referendum to such a matter would be greatly to impair or wholly destroy the efficacy of the statutes providing for the establishment and improvement of streets, and also upon the theory that such an improvement is of a special and local nature, in which only those interested were intended to have a voice.<sup>37</sup> It is on the latter theory, that is, of special or local matters, that the right to a referendum in case of a resolution to construct a sewer and septic tank, to be paid by special assessment upon the property benefited, was denied.<sup>38</sup> Legislation in regard to special assessments was examined and held to indicate the policy of leaving to those, and those only, who bear the burdens, the right in the first instance to say whether the obligation shall be assumed by the municipality, and of denying, as clearly as it is possible, the right of the general elector to participate in an election involving such a question.

The referendum power applies only to legislative matters, as distinguished from administrative or executive.<sup>38</sup> Consequently it becomes important to determine what are legislative matters. The resolution of a city council accepting the proposition of a land company offering to donate a certain sum to the city towards the erection of a new city hall on a block of ground given by the company to the city for that purpose, on condition that the city appropriate at least an equal amount, and that the construction of a new city hall be commenced without delay, and conditioned further that when the building is completed, it shall be occupied and used as a city hall, is legislative in character and subject to the referendum, since the resolution involves and requires a determination by the council that the public interest of the city requires that it have a city hall, that the same be located on the land offered for that purpose, that said offer be accepted, that a suitable building be erected thereon, that the money of the city be appropriated and used in the construction thereof, and that, when completed, the building be occupied and used by the city officers as a city hall and for municipal purposes.<sup>39</sup> Further resolutions considered and held legislative accepted the deed which was tendered by the land company and an agreement between the land company and the city, whereby the company was immediately to erect a building on the land, upon the completion of which the city was to occupy the same as a city hall and for municipal offices, thereafter paying a stated sum as monthly rental until the total rental should amount to a stated sum, whereupon the building should be conveyed by the land company to the city.<sup>40</sup>

<sup>36</sup> Chase v. Kalber (1915) 28 Cal. App. 561, 153 Pac. 397.

<sup>37</sup> Chase v. Kalber (Cal.) supra. The court here is of the opinion that the right of the property owners to be heard in the matter of a proposed improvement would be cut off if such matters were subject to the referendum, and further, that a statutory provision that, upon protest, such a proceeding should be suspended for a certain period, would be precluded of operation in case of the referendum.

<sup>38</sup> Glove v. Willis (1915) 16 Ariz. 378, 146 Pac. 544.

Likewise a proposed initiative ordinance accepting another but similar offer as to the erection of a city hall was held a valid exercise of legislative power, and within the initiative power.<sup>40</sup>

3. Administrative matters.

The referendum is confined to legislative matters as distinguished from administrative or executive,<sup>41</sup> even though it is exercised by ordinance or resolution, in the absence of a very clear declaration to the contrary.<sup>42</sup> The order of the legislative board of a municipality, granting a license, is not an ordinance which is suspended for thirty days after the passing of same under the initiative and referendum provisions, since it does not have the force and effect of law.<sup>43</sup>

d. To what bodies applies.

See earlier cases in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 204, note.

V. Application of existing constitutional provisions to initiative and referendum enactments.

a. In general.

In operation the initiative and referendum powers are governed by existing constitutional provisions<sup>44</sup> which are appropriate. As to what constitutional provisions are appropriate gives rise to some diversity of holding.<sup>45</sup>

b. Constitutional amendments.

The statement above made as to the general applicability of constitutional restrictions upon the exercise of the initiative and referendum is true in the case of constitutional amendments proposed by the method; that is, existing constitutional amendments govern in so far as they are applicable. The diversity of holding arises in the determination of what constitutional restrictions are applicable.<sup>46</sup>

<sup>38</sup> Hopping v. Richmond (1915) 170 Cal. 605, 150 Pac. 977.

<sup>40</sup> Ibid.

See Reed v. Wing (1914) 168 Cal. 706, 144 Pac. 964, infra, subd. X. g.

See Enos v. Hanff, infra, subd. IV. c, 2, as to an ordinance held not legislative.

<sup>41</sup> See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 204, for earlier cases on this question.

<sup>42</sup> Hopping v. Richmond (Cal.) supra. See case supra as to matters determined to be legislative.

<sup>43</sup> Enos v. Hanff (1915) 98 Neb. 245, 152 N. W. 397. But an ordinance regulating the licensing of the sale of intoxicating liquors is stated to be subject to the initiative and referendum act.

<sup>44</sup> In determining the intent of an act L.R.A.1917B.

initiated by the electors, the court in State ex rel. Taylor v. Duncan (1916) — Mont. —, 155 Pac. 1111, states that "while we are not required to hold that a law passed by the people upon the initiative is subject in all respects to the constitutional provisions and restrictions touching the title to acts passed by the legislative assembly, yet the title may be fairly accepted as a notice to the people of the general contents of a bill presented for their acceptance or rejection, and as some indication of their intent in passing it."

<sup>45</sup> See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 204, for earlier cases on this question.

<sup>46</sup> 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 205, note. See State ex rel. Linde v. Hall (1916) — N. D. —, 159 N. W. 281.

c. Legislation.*1. In general.

Legislation enacted by means of the initiative and referendum is subject to existing constitutional restrictions.<sup>47</sup>

2. Carrying into effect initiative and referendum powers.

In the case of legislation designed to carry into effect initiative and referendum provisions authorized by Constitution, existing constitutional provisions yield where the constitutional amendment reserving initiative and referendum powers in effect provides that the manner of executing the reserve powers shall be prescribed by general laws. In such a case, however, the legislation itself does not alter the existing constitutional provisions, but the constitutional amendment reserving the powers as above stated effects the change, subject only to such provisions of law as shall make it available.<sup>48</sup>

VI. Power of governor to veto.

The power of the governor to veto a measure initiated by the people and passed by the requisite number of electors has been denied.<sup>49</sup> This power is usually the subject of express constitutional provision, in which case the matter is not one for construction by the courts.

VII. Power of legislature to repeal or amend.

The power of the legislature to repeal initiative and referendum legislation has been sustained generally under the various constitutional or statutory provisions that have governed.<sup>50</sup>

As to the power of the legislative body to repeal an act on which a referendum has been asked, and legislate on the subject matter contained in the act, see infra, subd. IX. a, 3.

VIII. Matters peculiar to initiative.*a. In general.

The initiator of a measure is not a legislator. He must proceed in conformity with the rules prescribed for the exercise of the initiative.<sup>51</sup> Accordingly, where a statute enacted in pursuance of constitutional authority, prescribing the method for exercising the initiative, provides that arguments limited in number shall be published with the measure, but the expense of such arguments shall be borne by their proponents, the proponents of a measure cannot insert an argument in a proposed measure under the guise of a preamble.<sup>52</sup> But where the proposed measure extends the policy of the state, more latitude is allowable in the preamble, although even in such a case argumentative matter cannot be inserted.<sup>53</sup>

It is sometimes required that an initiative measure must first be submitted to the lawmaking body for its action thereon, and only in case the lawmaking body rejects the proposed measure is it necessary to submit it to a vote of the electors; under such a provision relating to municipalities the initiative cannot be used for the purpose of petitioning the council to repeal an ordinance annexing land to the municipality, instead of a referendum upon the ordinance, as provided by statute.<sup>54</sup>

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 209, for earlier cases on this question.

<sup>47</sup> 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 206, note.

The writer of the opinion in Pitman v. Drabelle (1916) 267 Mo. 78, 183 S. W. 1055, intimates that initiative legislation is subject to constitutional limitation in the same way that any other legislation is.

The statute enacted by the initiative was tested in the ordinary way as to constitutionality in Gottstein v. Lister (1915) 88 Wash. 462, 153 Pac. 595.

As to the necessity of complying with constitutional and statutory provisions in the proposal of initiative measures, see State ex rel. Berry v. Superior Ct. (1916) — Wash. —, 159 Pac. 92, infra, notes 51, 52.

<sup>48</sup> 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 207, note.

<sup>49</sup> 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 208, note.

<sup>50</sup> STATE EX REL. RICHARDS V. WHISMAN, ante, 1, writ of error dismissed by U. S. Supreme Court for want of jurisdiction, 241 U. S. 643, 60 L. ed. 1218, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 449. See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 208, for earlier cases on this question. L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>51</sup> State ex rel. Berry v. Superior Ct. (Wash.) supra.

<sup>52</sup> Ibid. The measure here proposed was a fisheries code for the state; it was purely an amendatory bill or law upon a subject of legislation long recognized and acted upon in the state, and made no radical change therein. The preamble contained a somewhat extended argument in favor of enacting the bill.

<sup>53</sup> State ex rel. Griffiths v. Superior Ct. (1916) — Wash. —, 159 Pac. 101. The statute here involved related to the Workmen's Compensation Act, and it appeared from an examination of the preamble that there was a declared purpose to extend the policy of the state with reference to workmen's compensation for injuries; some argumentative matter, however, was stricken out of the preamble involved in this case.

<sup>54</sup> Com. ex rel. Heiney v. Marks (1915) 248 Pa. 518, 94 Atl. 191.

See State ex rel. Dawson v. Pratt (1914)

b. When bill takes effect.

The time when an initiated measure takes effect is largely a matter of constitutional or statutory provision.<sup>55</sup> An initiated ordinance does not take effect until thirty days after its adoption by the voters, under a statutory provision contained in the act, providing for the initiative and referendum, that no ordinance for the government of any city, except as hereinafter provided, shall go into effect until thirty days after the passage of the same.<sup>56</sup>

But a statutory provision relating to the operation of the initiative and referendum in cities and towns as to matters not conflicting with existing municipal legislation on the subject, that an initiative measure adopted by the electors shall not go into effect until thirty days thereafter, does not apply where the municipality, under constitutional authority, has provided differently.<sup>57</sup>

The people of a municipality have power to provide in an initiative measure when the same shall take effect,<sup>58</sup> under a constitutional provision in which no time is provided as to when initiative measures proposed by the people of a municipality shall take effect, but requiring the officers, in the submission of such measures, to be guided by the general laws of the state, except as otherwise provided. This is true notwithstanding a statutory provision that an ordinance which has been accepted by the voters shall be a valid and binding ordinance and be considered adopted upon the date that the vote is canvassed and declared by the canvassing board, and go into effect ten days thereafter. This statute is construed by the court as intended to accomplish an object similar to that of a statute relating to bills passed by the legislature, providing for the time of going into effect in the absence of any contrary provision fixed by the legislature in the bill itself; and it is stated that the former statutory provision relates to the time when an ordinance proposed by the electors of a municipality shall go into effect in case the ordinance itself fails to prescribe the time when it is to take effect.<sup>59</sup>

It has been held that a measure initiated by the people becomes a law as provided in the constitutional amendment that such a measure when adopted shall be in operation on and after the thirtieth day after the election at which it is approved, although the act concludes by stating that it shall take effect and be in full force and effect from and after a period beyond the thirty days. As, however, there was no claim in this case that the public officers would seek enforcement of the provisions of the law prior to the time specified in the law for its going into effect, the validity of such a provision is not considered to any extent. It is merely stated that whether the concluding section be unconstitutional or not would not change the date of the coming into existence of the law,<sup>60</sup> although it might be unenforceable until a later date.

IX. Matters peculiar to referendum.

a. Effect upon legislative enactments.

1. When takes effect.

As shown in the earlier note, a legislative act which is subject to the referendum cannot take effect until the time for the filing of referendum petitions has expired, nor thereafter if the referendum is invoked, until approved by the electors.<sup>60</sup> The legislature, however, may provide that the act shall take effect at a date beyond the period for the filing of referendum petitions, under an act which does not fix the date at which the legislation shall become effective, but merely provides that no act shall go into effect until after the expiration of the time limited for filing referendum petitions.<sup>61</sup>

2. Suspension by filing of referendum petition.

Upon the filing of a valid referendum petition to any act of the legislative body subject to the referendum, the going into effect of the same is suspended until the referendum is determined; and if determined adversely, the act, of course, does

<sup>52</sup> Kan. 247, 139 Pac. 1191, infra, subd. XI. j.

<sup>55</sup> 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 209, note.

<sup>56</sup> Eyre v. Doerr (1915) 97 Neb. 562, 150 N. W. 625. It was contended that this provision of the statute applied only to the passage of an ordinance by the mayor and council. The facts, however, that the section was a part of the original act providing for the initiative and referendum, and that, prior to that act, there was no such provision in regard to ordinances enacted L.R.A.1917B.

by the mayor and council, were regarded by the court as making it apply to ordinances initiated by the electors.

<sup>57</sup> State ex rel. Hedges v. Anderson (1915)

75 Or. 509, 147 Pac. 526.

<sup>58</sup> Minges v. Merced (1915) 27 Cal. App. 15, 148 Pac. 816.

<sup>59</sup> Gottstein v. Lister (1915) 88 Wash. 462, 153 Pac. 595.

<sup>60</sup> 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 210.

<sup>61</sup> Leatherock v. Lawter (1915) 45 Okla. 715, 147 Pac. 324.

not go into effect at all.<sup>63</sup> In case of a defective petition, however, the going into effect of the act is not suspended.<sup>63</sup>

It has been held that an act on which a referendum is sought is suspended by the filing of the referendum petition, and remains so although an election is held thereon which proves to be invalid. It is apparently the theory of this case that it remains suspended until a valid election is held thereon.<sup>64</sup>

3. Power to repeal act on which a referendum has been filed and again legislate on subject matter.

An ordinance which has been suspended by a referendum may be repealed by the municipal council.<sup>65</sup> Having repealed the ordinance under such circumstances, the council cannot pass another ordinance in all essential features like the repealed ordinance, but the council may deal with the subject matter of the repealed ordinance, and if, acting in good faith and with no intent to evade the effect of the referendum petition, the council passes an ordinance covering the same subject matter that is essentially different from the ordinance protested against, avoiding, perhaps, the objections made to the first ordinance, the second ordinance cannot be held invalid for this cause.<sup>66</sup>

b. Laws excepted from operation of referendum.

1. Laws carrying into effect initiative and referendum provisions.

Certain laws are excepted from the operation of the referendum by the constitutional provisions conferring initiative and referendum powers. One such constitutional provision had to do with laws carrying into effect initiative and referendum provisions.<sup>67</sup> Under such a constitutional exception a law carrying into effect initiative and referendum provisions is not suspended for filing referendum petitions unless the law has to do with additional matters.<sup>67</sup>

2. Laws necessary for preservation of public peace, health, or safety.

(a) Who determines what laws are within exception.

Some confusion in the use of terms exists in the cases with reference to laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety, which, by most constitutional provisions, are excepted from the operation of the referendum. In some states the legislature, and in municipalities, the legislative body, is given power to declare an emergency in certain cases for the purpose of having an act passed by it take effect at once. This is not confined to the initiative and referendum, but the cases in which the legislative body is given power to declare an emergency usually include and are sometimes limited to laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety. In the initiative and referendum amendments laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety, are usually excepted from the operation of the referendum. This is found in some, but not all, jurisdictions in connection with another provision that no act subject to referendum shall take effect until a stated number of days after adjournment of the legislature. These provisions are considered in some jurisdictions and treated as though requiring an emergency in order to except a law from the operation of the referendum. It is recognized, however, that the emergency

<sup>63</sup> Rigdon v. San Diego (1916) 30 Cal. App. 107, 157 Pac. 513, holding a municipal ordinance repealing another ordinance suspended by a referendum petition, although the repealing ordinance carried a clause making it immediately effective as an urgency measure.

<sup>50</sup> L.R.A.(N.S.) 210, note.

<sup>63</sup> Ibid.

<sup>64</sup> Ex parte Smith (1916) — Okla. —, 154 Pac. 521.

<sup>65</sup> Re Megnella (1916) — Minn. —, 157 N. W. 991.

<sup>66</sup> Re Megnella (Minn.) supra. The ordinance in question dealt with the "jitney" situation in the municipality. The first ordinance required as a condition precedent to the issuance of a permit a liability insurance bond issued by a reliable insurance company which was to cover injuries to persons; the second ordinance permitted a bond of an insurance company or "association" holding a license to do an indemnity insurance business in the state, and provided that it should cover injuries to property as well as to persons. It appeared that there was an association licensed to do business that issued indemnity policies or bonds at premiums much less than the regular company, and further, that the cost of obtaining these bonds under the first ordinance was one of the principal objections to the ordinance, so that the new ordinance was satisfactory in this respect to those who had protested against the old one. There were various other points of difference of varying importance, but the court did not mention them, it being held that the new ordinance, being different from the first one, was valid.

<sup>67</sup> 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 211, note.

clause is not the general emergency clause mentioned above. The only meaning given to the term "emergency" in these cases seems to be that a situation is presented in which the law should be excepted from the referendum. In at least one jurisdiction<sup>68</sup> the court separates the questions and considers the right to declare an emergency a right separate from that to except a law from the operation of the referendum. It is true that the Constitution in this jurisdiction does not, so far as appears from the reported cases, contain a provision that no act subject to the referendum shall take effect until a stated number of days after adjournment of the legislature, but it does except from the operation of the referendum only laws necessary for the "immediate" preservation of the public peace, health, or safety. The emergency provision referred to by this court is the general emergency provision referred to above. In other words, the confusion exists in the use of the term "emergency," some using this to mean a situation calling for the immediate operation of the law; others to mean a situation requiring that the law be excepted from the operation of the referendum. It must also be kept in mind that even the cases that use the term "emergency" in the latter sense may also use it to designate a situation calling for the immediate operation of the law.<sup>69</sup> Perhaps in most instances the law is put into immediate operation.

This difference in the use of terms is not of vital importance in considering the question who determines what laws come within the exception, for whether the court considers that an emergency is necessary to except a law from the operation of the referendum, or considers this right to except a law to be independent of an emergency, the right to except a law from the operation of the referendum is limited to laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety; and it thus becomes a question, when the legislature has declared a law to be of this character, whether the legislative declaration is conclusive. On this question there is a difference of opinions. It is held by one line of authorities that the legislative declaration is conclusive,<sup>70</sup> notwithstanding the legislature may intentionally or through mistake erroneously declare the law to be necessary for the purpose stated.<sup>71</sup>

According to the other line of authorities the legislative determination is not conclusive.<sup>72</sup> The latter conclusion, that

<sup>68</sup> Van Kleeck v. Ramer (1916) — Colo., 156 Pac. 1108; People ex rel. Kiefer v. Ramer (1916) — Colo., 158 Pac. 146.

<sup>69</sup> This note is, of course, not exhaustive of the cases on this question apart from the initiative and referendum.

<sup>70</sup> Van Kleeck v. Ramer (Colo.) supra, followed in People ex rel. Kiefer v. Ramer (Colo.) supra; Thielke v. Albee (1915) 79 Or. 48, 153 Pac. 793, citing Kaddery v. Portland (1903) 44 Or. 118, 74 Pac. 710, 75 Pac. 222, discussed in the earlier note; 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 212.

<sup>71</sup> 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 212, note; Thielke v. Albee (Or.) supra.

<sup>72</sup> State ex rel. Brislawn v. Meath (1915) 84 Wash. 302, 147 Pac. 11; State ex rel. Case v. Howell (1915) 85 Wash. 294, 147 Pac. 1159, Ann. Cas. 1016A, 1231. See also STATE EX REL. RICHARDS v. WHISMAN, ante, 1, as to right to object to an emergency so declared by the legislature where no referendum petition has been filed. And see also discussion in this case on power of legislature to declare an emergency.

In Rigdon v. San Diego (1916) 30 Cal. App. 107, 157 Pac. 513, an action involving a municipal ordinance which carried a clause making it immediately effective as an urgency measure, it was not argued that the mere statement of the council expressed in the ordinance, to the effect that the public health and safety demanded that the ordinance should take immediate effect, was of any force or virtue whatever, and the court states that it has been held otherwise, citing Re Hoffman (1909) 155 Cal. 114, 132 Am. St. Rep. 75, 99 Pac. 517, in which the court expressed an opinion with reference to a municipal ordinance that the mere declaration of the council that the ordinance was passed for the immediate preservation of the public health was neither conclusive nor was it sufficient. This was obiter in the Hoffman Case.
L.R.A.1917B.

Under a constitutional provision that no act shall take effect until a stated time from the end of the session in which it shall be passed, excepting that the legislature may give immediate effect to acts making appropriations and acts immediately necessary for the preservation of the public peace, health, or safety by a two-thirds vote of the members elected to each house, the legislative determination to give effect to a certain act is not final and conclusive upon the courts. Atty. Gen. ex rel. Barbour v. Lindsay (1914) 178 Mich. 524, 145 N. W. 98. It does not appear, however, that this was connected with a referendum provision.

An act, which states in its title that it declares an emergency, and which in a section of the act contains the language: "It is hereby adjudged and declared that existing conditions are such that this is necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety; therefore an emergency is hereby declared to exist and this act shall take effect and be in full force and effect from and after its ap-the legislative determination to declare an emergency is not final, seems to be the correct one. The limitation upon the power of the legislature to declare an emergency that only laws of a certain class shall be so subject, or that all laws except the class shall be subject to the referendum, without expressly vesting in the legislature power to determine what laws come within that class, leaves to the courts the power to determine the question. In other words, a law must be a law belonging to the excepted class before it can be declared free from the referendum. Where the law is of the prescribed character the legislative determination that it shall be free from the referendum is final; but its determination that the law belongs to the excepted class is not. In support of this theory it has been pointed out<sup>73</sup> that the clause excepting the named laws from the referendum is not the usual general emergency provision, but an exception to the otherwise universal application of the reserved power of referendum; that the clear purpose of the exception is to preserve unimpaired the right of the legislature to exercise the police power so far as it may be emergent; that the exception from the referendum includes only those certain, definite, and unquestioned phases of the police power which, in their very nature, may be and usually are emergent. It is further stated that, as the court exercises jurisdiction to determine whether an act of the legislature is a valid exercise of the police power, it must be a judicial question whether the exercise by the legislature of certain phases of that power which are selected and made an exception to the constitutional guaranty of the referendum is a valid exercise of the power.

Under this theory doubt will be resolved in favor of the correctness of the legislative determination.<sup>74</sup> Applying this rule, an act of the legislature prohibiting the transfer or diversion of moneys collected by a municipality by sale of bonds or otherwise for any local improvements to any other fund or use has been held not to be so clearly without the exception as to authorize the court in holding the emergency declared by the legislature void.<sup>75</sup> Likewise, an act of the legislature relating to the jitney situation, and enacting a system of regulation of such common carriers, was sustained as a law necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety, and therefore as within the exception to the referendum.<sup>76</sup> But a law changing the personnel of the board having charge of the public land was held not to be one for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety, etc., and therefore it was beyond the power of the legislature to so declare.<sup>77</sup>

(b) Effect of legislative determination.

The legislature may declare a law to be for the preservation of the public peace, health, or safety for the sole purpose of excepting it from the operation of the referendum. If such is the purpose, the law takes effect at the time provided for acts to take effect; the only effect of the declaration is to except it from the referendum.<sup>78</sup> Even under the theory that an emergency must exist, the proval by the governor," is sufficient to declare an emergency. Bennett Trust Co. v. Sengstacken (1911) 58 Or. 333, 113 Pac. 863.

<sup>73</sup> State ex rel. Case v. Howell (1915) 85 Wash. 281, 147 Pac. 1162.

<sup>74</sup> State ex rel. Brislawn v. Meath (1915) 84 Wash. 302, 147 Pac. 11; State ex rel. Case v. Howell (1915) 85 Wash. 281, 147 Pac. 1162; State ex rel. Case v. Howell (1915) 85 Wash. 294, 147 Pac. 1159, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1231.

<sup>75</sup> State ex rel. Case v. Howell (1915) 85 Wash. 281, 147 Pac. 1162.

<sup>76</sup> State ex rel. Case v. Howell (1915) 85 Wash. 294, 147 Pac. 1159, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1231.

<sup>77</sup> State ex rel. Brislawn v. Meath (Wash.) supra.

<sup>78</sup> People ex rel. Kiefer v. Ramer (1916) — Colo. —, 158 Pac. 146. The general emergency clause required a two-thirds vote, while the safety clause merely required a majority vote. It was apparently urged in this case that the emergency clause might be invoked without the safety clause, in L.R.A.1917B.

which event it would be subject to the referendum, although taking effect at once. The court answered this by stating that "we cannot apprehend for it the illogical results which counsel so earnestly urge. It is impossible to conceive of a case where two thirds of the general assembly can knowingly be secured to pass an emergency clause . . . where a majority could not always be secured to insert the safety clause." Continuing, the court states: "Before the emergency clause is a proper subject for consideration at all the bill must be passed by a majority vote of the house then considering it; and, under our former holding, the safety clause being a part of the bill requiring a majority vote only to pass it, the majority have the right to determine whether it is of the character that should not be referred, the two-thirds vote being required only to put it into effect at once upon its approval, otherwise it becomes effective ninety days after the adjournment of the session passing it."

50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 212, note.

law need not go into effect at once; the only effect of the declaration which appoints some subsequent time for the going into effect of the law is that the law is excepted from the operation of the referendum.<sup>79</sup> It was urged in one such case<sup>80</sup> that the declaration by the legislature of an emergency was a contradiction is deferred for a time to give those the law should not take effect for thirty days after its enactment. The court answered this by stating that the law takes effect immediately, although its operation of terms where it was provided that affected thereby a reasonable period in which to adjust themselves to the changed conditions; and it is stated that the word "immediate," as used in this constitutional amendment, does not necessarily have an arbitrary sense of instantly, forthwith, or without any intervening lapse of time whatever. But if the legislative body declares that the law shall go into effect immediately, that effect is given it.<sup>81</sup>

It seems that a logical treatment of this matter requires a recognition that the legislative declaration that a law is necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety may be for the purpose of excepting it from the operation of the referendum, or for the purpose of having it take effect at once. If the former is the purpose, the only effect of the declaration is to prevent a referendum; but if the latter, it goes into effect at once. In the latter case, however, it must be enacted as general emergency legislation, which usually requires more than a majority vote of the legislature.<sup>82</sup> As to what would be the effect if an emergency were declared without the safety clause, the Colorado court<sup>83</sup> refuses to consider. The South Dakota court<sup>84</sup> points out that the constitutional provision in that state reserves "the right to require that any law . . . shall be submitted to a vote of the electors of the state before going into effect;" and adds that "the right to require any law that has taken effect or is in force to be submitted is not reserved." It has been held that the legislature cannot constitutionally confer upon a county the referendum as to acts that have taken effect, since that involves the power of repeal.<sup>85</sup>

(c) How such laws are passed.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 213, for earlier cases on this question.

3. Other laws excepted.

(a) Who determines.

Acts making appropriations are frequently excepted from the operation of the referendum.<sup>86</sup> Following out the decision of the Washington court in State ex rel. Brislawn v. Meath (1915) 84 Wash. 302, 147 Pac. 11, this court determined whether an act of the legislature came within the exception of the referendum, although the legislature had so declared. Acts making appropriation for the payment of materials furnished to the highway department, to the fisheries department, and to the agricultural department of the state, were held to come within the exception of laws necessary for the support of the state government and its existing public institutions, and therefore not to be subject to the referendum.<sup>87</sup>

(b) What laws are excepted.

Laws providing for tax levies are exempted by the Ohio law. Accordingly the section of a law levying a highway tax was held to go into operation upon its passage, although other sections, which were subject to the referendum, may have been suspended until the time for filing a referendum petition had expired.<sup>88</sup> The provision as to referendum authorized a referendum on any section of a law or any item of a law appropriating money.

<sup>79</sup> Hanson v. Hodges (1913) 100 Ark. 479, 160 S. W. 392 (law did not go into effect for over eleven months after approval by governor).

<sup>80</sup> State ex rel. Case v. Howell (1915) 81 Wash. 204, 147 Pac. 1159, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1231.

<sup>81</sup> Note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 212; Thielke v. Albee (1915) 79 Or. 48, 153 Pac. 793.

<sup>82</sup> State ex rel. Lavin v. Bacon (1901) 14 S. D. 394, 85 N. W. 605.

<sup>83</sup> People ex rel. Kiefer v. Ramer, supra, note 78.

<sup>84</sup> State ex rel. Lavin v. Bacon (S. D.) supra.

<sup>85</sup> Meade v. Dane County (1914) 155 Wis. L.R.A.1917B.

634, 145 N. W. 239. See supra, subd. IV, b, 1.

<sup>86</sup> The Washington constitutional provision excepts from the operation of the referendum laws necessary for the "support of the state government and its existing public institutions." State ex rel. Case v. Howell (1915) 85 Wash. 281, 147 Pac. 1162.

<sup>87</sup> State ex rel. Blakeslee v. Clausen (1915) 85 Wash. 260, 148 Pac. 28, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 810.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 213, for earlier cases on this question.

<sup>88</sup> State ex rel. Donahay v. Roose (1914) 90 Ohio St. 345, 107 N. E. 760.

A bill providing for the erection of an armory for use and occupation as an armory building by the National Guard does not come within the meaning of an act of the legislature "making appropriations for the expenses of the state government and state institutions existing at the time such act is passed," which is excepted from the operation of the referendum. The word "expenses" as used in this section of the Constitution means the ordinary running expenses of the state government and existing state institutions, and does not include money to be paid for the erection of a new and permanent building.<sup>89</sup>

4. Laws subject to a special referendum.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214, for earlier cases on this question.

5. Laws which have been excepted by the legislature.

As stated in the earlier note, the character of the law is immaterial under the theory that the legislative determination of what laws fall within the exception is final. In jurisdictions adhering to this theory a civil service bill has been excepted from the operation of the referendum.<sup>90</sup> An act relating to intoxicating liquors has been excepted,<sup>91</sup> as has also a municipal ordinance relating to jitneys.<sup>92</sup> As to the laws excepted under the opposite theory, see supra.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214, for earlier cases on this question.

6. Publication.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214, for earlier cases on this question.

7. Laws enacted under special statutory provisions.

The referendum provision conferring referendum powers upon the electors of a municipality acting under the commission form of government has been held inapplicable to an ordinance enacted by the council in pursuance of a petition of the electors under a general law with reference to a particular subject.<sup>93</sup>

X. Remedies.

a. Who may maintain.

A citizen and taxpayer may maintain an action to annul an order of the board of trustees of a municipality, declaring that, by a referendum election, an ordinance previously sought to be passed by the trustees, granting a franchise to a railroad company to construct an open track in the municipality, had been rejected by the requisite number of electors.<sup>94</sup>

In a mandamus proceeding the object being to compel action and to secure the enforcement of a public duty, the state is the real party in interest, and the relator need not show that he has any special interest in the result, except as he has a general interest as a citizen and elector.<sup>95</sup>

But an injunction, being to prevent an official from taking action, is the exer-

<sup>89</sup> Bartling v. Wait (1914) 96 Neb. 532, 148 N. W. 507. See Enos v. Hanff (1915) 98 Neb. 245, 152 N. W. 397, supra, subd. IV. c, 2, and State ex rel. Blakeslee v. Clausen, supra, subd. IX. b, 3 (a).

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 213, for earlier cases on this question.

<sup>90</sup> Van Kleeck v. Ramer (1916) — Colo. —, 156 Pac. 1108.

<sup>91</sup> People ex rel. Kiefer v. Ramer (1916) — Colo. —, 158 Pac. 146.

<sup>92</sup> Thielke v. Albee (1915) 79 Or. 48, 153 Pac. 793.

<sup>93</sup> Perrault v. Robinson (1916) — Idaho, —, 158 Pac. 1074. By general law the legislature had made it unlawful to keep open any theater or moving picture show on Sunday, but provided that if a number of qualified electors, equal to a majority of the votes cast at the last general election, should petition the council or board of trustees of a city or village to permit theaters and moving picture shows to keep open on Sunday therein, the council or board of trustees might pass an ordinance granting the desired relief. The procedure provided by this general law had been pursued and such an ordinance enacted in a municipality L.R.A.1917B.

acting under the commission form of government, whereupon a referendum petition was filed according to the initiative and referendum provisions applicable to the commission form of government. The court reviews the legislation in question, and comes to the conclusion, as above stated, that the referendum provisions of the commission form of government law do not apply to such an ordinance.

<sup>94</sup> Reed v. Wing (1914) 168 Cal. 706, 144 Pac. 964. It is stated that if the election had ratified the action of the trustees, and had resulted in voting to the railroad company a valuable franchise, no one would doubt the right of a citizen and taxpayer to attack such disposition of something belonging to the citizens; that is to say, a use of the street different from that common to all. Likewise a citizen who may believe that the city of his residence would be injured by refusal to grant certain privileges to a public utility may attack the methods of the refusal.

<sup>95</sup> Thompson v. Vaughan (1916) — Mich. —, 159 N. W. 65. The right of relators who were electors of the state, interested in the proper administration of the law, to

cise of a sovereignty vested in the state alone, and cannot be invoked by one who is not affected in any other way than as a citizen or elector.<sup>96</sup>

The right of a taxpayer to enjoin the submission of a proposed constitutional amendment has been sustained although his financial hurt will be very small.<sup>97</sup>

b. Injunction.

The courts have not consistently applied any single rule to determine when a court of equity will interfere in initiative and referendum matters by injunction. As shown in the earlier note, the power of a court of equity has been denied on the theory that the court will not interfere in elections nor in cases involving political questions.<sup>98</sup> The right has also been denied on the theory that equity is concerned only with matters of property and the maintenance of civil rights; consequently equity cannot compel the striking out of certain words in the ballot title of an initiated act about to be submitted to the electors.<sup>99</sup> On the contrary, it has been held that a court may interfere and enjoin the preparing or causing to be printed, petitions for a proposed initiative measure, and from circulating or attempting to obtain signatures of legal voters upon such petitions, where the measure evades the plain provisions of a statute regarding the publication of arguments and the payment of the expense thereof, by including an argument for the measure in the preamble thereof, the statute requiring the expense of arguments to be met by the proponents, while the measure itself was published at the expense of the state.<sup>100</sup> This case is distinguished from the earlier case<sup>101</sup> by stating that in the earlier case no statutory regulations were involved nor in fact provided for by the Constitution. The court concludes that the question is not a mere political one nor an exempt legislative process, but is regulated by the law, and is subject to judicial interposition. A court has also been held to have power to interfere by injunction and determine whether any authority exists for holding an election on a constitutional amendment initiated by the electors.<sup>102</sup> This is held not to amount to judicial interference with legislation, since the enacting of a constitutional amendment is not an exercise of a legislative power. In some parts of the opinion the court seems to base the power of the court not alone upon the theory that no legislative matter was involved, but upon the broad ground of the right to interfere generally in such cases. The latter is not made clear, however. The fact that the proposed amendment may be rejected at the polls does not prevent judicial interference in such a case.<sup>103</sup>

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, for earlier cases on this question, and see also subd. XI. f, infra.

c. Mandamus.

Mandamus lies to control the duties of the secretary of state as to filing a referendum petition which are ministerial, and not discretionary. The jurisdiction of the court does not so much depend upon whether the duty is prescribed by the legislature instead of by the Constiinstitute a proceeding in mandamus, was sustained.

50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214, note.

<sup>96</sup> 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, note.

<sup>97</sup> State ex rel. Linde v. Hall (1916) — N. D. —, 159 N. W. 281.

A taxpayer of a city whose only interest appeared to be that he would be called upon to pay taxes to meet the principal and interest upon the bond provided for by an ordinance submitted to a referendum vote was held entitled to maintain an action to determine the validity of the ordinance; but apparently there was no question raised as to the form of the action, the suit being one to enjoin a municipality from entering into the contract provided by the ordinance. Pearce v. Roseburg (1915) 77 Or. 195, 150 Pac. 855.

<sup>98</sup> See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215.

State ex rel. Crawford v. Dunbar (1906) 48 Or. 109, 85 Pac. 337, denying a court of equity the power to strike certain words from the ballot title of an initiated act about to be submitted to the electors. L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>99</sup> Ibid.

<sup>100</sup> State ex rel. Berry v. Superior Ct. (1916) — Wash. —, 159 Pac. 92.

<sup>101</sup> State ex rel. Crawford v. Dunbar (Or.) supra.

It is also a theory of this case that an initiator is not a legislator. See supra, subd. VIII. a.

<sup>102</sup> State ex rel. Linde v. Hall (N. D.) supra. There was held upon investigation to be no authority for initiating a proposed amendment to the Constitution, since the constitutional provision conferring initiative and referendum powers was not self-executing, and no provision had been made by the legislature for initiating an amendment.

There being no authority for the calling of the referendum election, it was held that a writ of prohibition would lie to prevent it, in Perrault v. Robinson (1916) — Idaho, —, 158 Pac. 1074.

<sup>103</sup> State ex rel. Linde v. Hall (N. D.) supra.

tution, as it does upon the nature of the duty imposed.<sup>104</sup>

Mandamus will not issue unless the relator shows a clear right to the writ.<sup>105</sup> In this case mandamus to compel the secretary of state to file referendum petitions was denied where the action therefor was not brought until so short a period before the election as would render it impossible for the court to decide the matter and have the referendum vote at the election should it be decided that the petitions were valid.<sup>106</sup>

See further, subd. XI. f, infra, as to the power of courts.

d. Jurisdiction of supreme court.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 217, for earlier cases on this question.

e. Time for bringing action.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 218, for earlier cases on this question.

Where the decision of the secretary of state is in favor of an initiative petition, and the opponent thereof takes an appeal therefrom to the court within the five days limited by law for such appeal, the advocates of the measure, who are permitted to intervene in the court proceeding, may set up as erroneous the rejection by the secretary of state of certain names on the petition, although this claim is not set up within the five days limited for taking the appeal.<sup>107</sup>

f. Right to appeal.

Appeals being governed by statutes, in the absence of a statute authorizing an appeal the court has no appellate jurisdiction over the judgment of a clerk authorized to pass on the sufficiency of an initiative petition. A municipality cannot, by incorporating in its charter a repealed provision of the state law authorizing appeal, vest a district court with appellate power.<sup>108</sup>

<sup>104</sup> Thompson v. Vaughan (Mich.) supra.

<sup>105</sup> State ex rel. Gongwer v. Graves (1914) 90 Ohio St. 311, 107 N. E. 1018. See State ex rel. Foote v. Hutchinson, infra, subd. XI. e, 3.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, for earlier cases on this question.

<sup>106</sup> State ex rel. Gongwer v. Graves (Ohio) supra.

<sup>107</sup> State ex rel. Case v. Superior Ct. (1914) 81 Wash. 623, 143 Pac. 461, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 838. The rights of the advocates of such measure are in substance those of defendants, and are such as to entitle them to have offset, against any errors which may have been committed by the secretary of state in favor of submitting the measure, any errors which he may have committed tending to defeat the sub-L.R.A.1917B.

In discussing the right to review the action of the secretary of state with reference to an initiative measure, it has been stated that, speaking generally, "it may be said that the legislature might have committed wholly to administrative officers all questions arising under the law incidental to the submission of an initiative measure to the people without any right of review in the court whatever, except, possibly, pure questions of law."<sup>109</sup>

g. Parties.

In an action to annul an order of the board of trustees of a municipality declaring that, by a certain referendum election, an ordinance previously sought to be passed by the trustees granting a railroad company a franchise to build a spur track over a designated route in the municipality had been rejected by the requisite number of voters of the municipality, the railroad company is not a necessary party, especially when the referendum election is held illegal, and therefore results in restoring the rights of the railroad company under the first ordinance.<sup>110</sup>

h. Competency of members of court.

The judges of a court who are residents of a city are incompetent to sit in a case involving the validity of an election held under the initiative and referendum provisions of the city charter, involving the issuance of bonds which can only be paid by taxation of the residents of the city.<sup>111</sup>

XI. Matters relating to practical exercise of the power.

a. In general.

Certain statutory provisions with reference to the manner of exercising the initiative and referendum have been mission of the measure; the fact that the objection on behalf of the advocates of the measure is put forward merely by way of defense renders the five-day limitation prescribed in the statute wholly inapplicable.

<sup>108</sup> Ruth v. Merrill (1914) 43 Okla. 764, 144 Pac. 371.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 218, for earlier cases on this question.

<sup>109</sup> State ex rel. Case v. Superior Ct. (Wash.) supra.

<sup>110</sup> Reed v. Wing (1914) 168 Cal. 706, 144 Pac. 964.

<sup>111</sup> Holland v. Cranfill (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 167 S. W. 308.

As to the competency of the attorney general, see Cress v. Estes (1914) 43 Okla. 213, 142 Pac. 411, infra, subd. XI. b, 1.

held directory merely. It has been so held as to the requirement of initialing in ink;<sup>112</sup> the number of names on each sheet of the petition;<sup>113</sup> and the manner of designating charter amendments.<sup>114</sup>

The purpose of the initiative is to submit legislation proposed by the people to the people for ratification or rejection without interference from any official or set of officials as to the form such legislation is to take. The officers having charge of the machinery for bringing the petition to a vote of the electors cannot alter the petition. Consequently if the petition is void in fact, the officers cannot be compelled to eliminate the void part and submit the balance.<sup>115</sup>

In the absence of testimony it will be presumed in a contest involving the regularity and validity of the adoption of an amendment to a city charter that the recorder, whose duty it is under the law to provide a ballot title for an initiative measure properly filed, regularly performed such duty.<sup>116</sup>

b. Petition.

1. Form and contents.

The forms for initiative and referendum petitions are largely statutory.<sup>117</sup> It is frequently provided in the statute that a substantial compliance is sufficient. Under such statutes a liberal construction is given. Thus, a slight difference between the wording of the ballot title in a petition initiating a proposed constitutional amendment required to be filed in the office of the secretary of state and the original petition signed by the electors, which in no way substantially affects the proposed measure, does not invalidate the petition under a statute making the prescribed procedure not mandatory, but sufficient if substantially followed.<sup>118</sup>

Even in the absence of a constitutional or statutory requirement to such effect, it seems that an initiative petition must set forth the desired legislation, so that the signers may know the contents.<sup>119</sup>

<sup>112</sup> Thus, a statutory provision relating to the certifying of the signers of an initiative or referendum petition by local officials, that the local official shall place his initial "in ink" opposite the signature of those persons who are legal voters, but which contains no provision declaring that the initialing by means other than ink renders a signature upon the petition so initialed invalid, is directory merely; consequently initialing by lead pencil is sufficient. State ex rel. Case v. Superior Ct. (Wash.) supra.

<sup>113</sup> And a provision of the law that a petition shall consist of sheets "with numbered lines of not more than twenty signatures on each sheet" is directory merely, in so far as it may be considered as thus describing the number of signatures that must be upon the petition, so that a petition is not invalidated because a number of sheets in the petition contain more than twenty names on them, resulting in names not being upon the numbered lines. Ibid.

<sup>114</sup> The failure to comply with a provision in an ordinance providing for the manner of exercising initiative and referendum powers, that charter amendments submitted by the city council without initiative petition shall be designated on the ballot as "charter amendments submitted to the voters by the city council," does not invalidate the election where the ballot title furnished the information that the electors were to vote upon an amendment to the city charter, and embodied the main provisions of the act, the purpose and the amount of the issue of the bond authorized by the amendment, and the names of the members of the commission created thereby, and only one measure appears upon the ballot. The theory of this case is that a strict compliance with provisions other than notice of the election is not required. State ex rel. Hedges v. Andresen (1915) 75 Or. 509, 147 Pac. 526.

<sup>115</sup> Bennett v. Drullard (1915) 27 Cal. App. 180, 149 Pac. 369, holding that, under a municipal charter which, in dealing with the initiative, uses the singular "ordinance," and contains nothing to indicate that an initiative petition may contain more than one ordinance, "no duty rests upon a municipal council to submit to an election the valid part of an initiative petition containing a proposed ordinance and two alternative propositions for certain sections of the ordinance, it being admitted that the alternative propositions are void."

See Buohl v. Beverly (1916) — N. J. L. —, 98 Atl. 270.

<sup>116</sup> State ex rel. Fleck v. Dalles City (1914) 72 Or. 337, 143 Pac. 1127, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 855.

<sup>117</sup> See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 218, for earlier cases on this question.

<sup>118</sup> Cress v. Estes (Okla.) supra.

<sup>119</sup> Buohl v. Beverly (N. J.) supra.

In an obiter statement the court observes that a statutory requirement relating to a municipal ordinance that the ordinance petitioned for should either be passed without alteration or submitted to the people without alteration seems to require that the ordinance, without alteration, be recommended by the petitioners, and this can only be done by showing that each petitioner knew the contents of the proposed ordinance, and petitioned for that very ordinance without alteration. It is then stated that a prima facie case would perhaps be made by attaching a copy of the proposed ordinance to each paper.

A statutory provision requiring an initiative petition to set forth a full and correct copy of the title and text of the law or amendment to the Constitution so proposed does not apply in case of a referendum, where the statute with reference to a petition for referendum merely requires setting forth the title of the act sought to be referred, if the petition is against the whole act, and it is only when the petition is against less than the whole act that the part or parts on which referendum is sought are required to be set forth. Consequently the omission of a word in setting forth the act in a referendum petition does not render it defective, the referendum being sought on the entire act.<sup>120</sup>

The enacting clause of the amendment to a city charter in form, "people of . . . city do ordain as follows," is sufficient to effect the amendment of the charter. The term "ordain" is equivalent in potency to "be it enacted" or any like expression. A provision of the state Constitution that the style of all bills shall be, "be it enacted by the people of the state of Oregon," refers only to measures treated by the legislative assembly or the people of the whole state, and not to municipal legislation.<sup>121</sup>

The fact that the attorney general, who is required to prepare a proper ballot title for an initiated measure, is a candidate for re-election does not disqualify him to perform the prescribed duties.<sup>122</sup>

As to the verification of the petition, see subd. XI. d, infra.

2. Conflict between petition and pamphlet.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 219, for earlier cases on this question.

<sup>120</sup> Bartling v. Wait (1914) 96 Neb. 532, 148 N. W. 507. The act sought to be referred provided for the building of an armory "upon the ground originally occupied by old Fort Kearney," while the purported copy omitted the word "originally" from the above clause.

<sup>121</sup> State ex rel. Fleck v. Dalles City (Or.) supra.

<sup>122</sup> Cress v. Estes (1914) 43 Okla. 213, 142 Pac. 411.

As to the competency of members of a court, see Holland v. Cranfill (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 167 S. W. 308, supra, subd. X. h.

<sup>123</sup> State ex rel. Baker v. Hanna (1915) 31 N. D. 570, 154 N. W. 704. It was urged in this case that because a referendum of the entire act necessarily referred the included part, the petition therefore must be held as equivalent to one for the repeal of L.R.A.1917B.

3. Failure to submit to city attorney.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 219, for earlier cases on this question.

4. How petition adopted.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 219, for earlier cases on this question.

5. Right to amend.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 219, for earlier cases on this question.

And see Thompson v. Vaughan, infra, subd. XI. c, 6.

6. Separate sheets.

The signers of a petition for the referendum of an entire act cannot be aggregated with the signers of a petition for only one of the several provisions of such act to make up the required percentage of voters where the result of repealing or adopting the act in question would be entirely different from the repealing or adoption of the provision called for in the other referendum petition.<sup>123</sup>

c. Filing.

1. With whom to file.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 220, for earlier cases on the question.

2. When petitioner's duty ends.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 220, for earlier cases on the question.

3. What is a filing.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 221, for earlier cases on the question.

4. Time of filing.

A referendum petition must be filed within the time prescribed by statute.<sup>124</sup> The time fixed by statute is mandatory and not merely directory.<sup>125</sup> However, the part. and therefore the names should be aggregated. This contention, however, was denied.

And see note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 220, for earlier cases.

And see the general question of signing, infra, subd. XI. d. 1, for verification of separate parts of a petition.

<sup>124</sup> Re Opinion of Justices (1915) — Me. —, 95 Atl. 869.

<sup>125</sup> Kelty v. Flynn (1916) 223 Mass. 369, 111 N. E. 857. Under the statute involved in this case a petition must be filed within thirty days in case of the granting, renewal, or extension of a general franchise or general right to occupy or use the streets of the city; in all other matters the petition must be filed within ten days. The order sought to be referred in this case was one to extend a street and borrow money for the construction and extension thereof.

where a resolution of a city council for a charter amendment is read, adopted, filed, and published a sufficient length of time before the election at which it was submitted, the filing is sufficient, although it came up for second reading and final passage at a special meeting of the city council held thereafter, and not the required number of days before the special election. The provision made when the resolution was adopted for the same to come up for second reading and final passage was treated as simply providing for reconsideration of the matter in case there should be influential objection made after the same was published. It was not absolutely essential that the resolution should be adopted more than once.<sup>126</sup>

5. Filing in sections.

Under a constitutional provision that each section of the petition shall be filed with the clerk or registrar of voters of the county or city and county in which it was circulated, but all said sections circulated in any county or city and county shall be filed "at the same time," a referendum petition is sufficiently filed where, after having filed one section of the same, thereafter, and on the same day, another section of the petition was presented for filing. The court states that such a constitutional provision is to be liberally construed, and adds that "it is certainly a permissible construction to hold that 'at the same time,' as used in the Constitution, does not regard fractions of a day, and that filings of these petitions are good if made upon the same day."<sup>127</sup> But the various sections cannot be filed on different days under such a constitutional provision.<sup>128</sup> It is the duty of the secretary of state, when sections are forwarded him which have been filed on different days, to reject those which appear on their face to have been filed on days subsequent to that on which the first filing took place.<sup>129</sup>

The sections filed upon a subsequent day cannot be treated as supplemental petitions provided for by a constitutional provision that, within a stated time from the transmission of the petition to the secretary of state, a supplemental petition, containing supplemental names, may be filed with the county clerk, the court stating that the evident purpose of the supplemental petition is to supply any deficiency that may have been found in the original petition after it has been transmitted to the secretary of state.<sup>130</sup>

6. Right of officer to return petition for corrections.

After a petition has been filed with the proper officer, it has been held that it cannot be removed from the office and changed.<sup>131</sup> Consequently the sections of a petition for a referendum which have been returned by the officer to its proponents and afterwards brought back, so that the officer does not know what, if any, changes have been made, must be rejected.<sup>132</sup> But sections which have not been filed by a state officer, though received by him from the county clerk, are not subject to this rule; such sections are as if they had not been transmitted.<sup>133</sup> It is possible that con-

This was held not to be the granting, renewal, or extension of a general franchise or general right to occupy or use the streets of the city, and therefore a petition therefor must be filed within ten days.

<sup>126</sup> State ex rel. Hedges v. Andresen (1915) 75 Or. 509, 147 Pac. 528. For earlier cases as to the time of filing, see note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 221.

<sup>127</sup> Perry v. Gross (1916) — Cal. —, 156 Pac. 1031. In an obiter statement the court adds that "it may be said that this construction would not avail in case some ignorant or designing person should file such a petition bearing but a few names some days in advance of the filing of a principal petition. With that question we are not here concerned."

<sup>128</sup> Thompson v. Vaughan (1916) — Mich. —, 159 N. W. 65. In a case in which various sections of a referendum petition coming to the secretary from the various county clerks showed upon their face that some were filed at one time and some at another, it was held the duty of the secretary to reject all subsequent to the first filing. L.R.A.1917B.

It was argued that the secretary of state had nothing to do with the time or manner of filing the sections with the various county clerks, and that his only duty was to count the signatures upon the petition. This is answered by stating that the sections of the petition upon which he is to count the signatures must be valid sections, and must have been first filed with the various county clerks. Sections which show upon their face that they were filed in violation of the Constitution are as ineffectual as if they had never been filed at all.

<sup>129</sup> Thompson v. Vaughan (Mich.) supra. In this case the various sections were filed as a part of the original petition, and before any portion of them had been transmitted to the secretary of state.

<sup>130</sup> Thompson v. Vaughan (Mich.) supra. The sections from a certain county, after being filed, were returned to the clerk of the county; later, these sections were brought back, with a letter from the county clerk, notifying the secretary of the number of changes and corrections that had been made while absent from the office. The secretary stitutional or statutory provisions may govern this, and these should be consulted.

d. Signing.

1. In general.

It is usually required that the signatures of petitioners be verified. Names on one section of a petition to which no proper affidavit has been attached cannot be counted, when the constitutional requirement declares that each section shall have such an affidavit attached.<sup>131</sup>

Under a constitutional provision that, upon written petition of a certain number of electors, a referendum may be had on bills enacted by the legislature, and defining a "written petition" as one or more petitions with the original signatures of the petitioners attached, verified as to authenticity of the signatures by the oath of one of the petitioners certified thereon, and accompanied by the certificate of the clerk of the city, town, or plantation in which the petitioners reside, that their names appear on the voting list of his city, town, or plantation as qualified to vote for governors, both the verification of the authenticity of the signatures and the certificate of the clerk are necessary.<sup>132</sup> Names attached to the petitions and certified by the clerk, but not verified as to authenticity by the oath of any petitioner certified thereon, cannot be counted.<sup>133</sup> Nor can the omission be supplied after the time for the filing of petitions has expired.<sup>132</sup>

Nor can names be counted which are upon sheets pasted together or fastened together with pins or eyelets, after the certificate and affidavit, which refer only to the "foregoing petitions." Only those names preceding the certificate and affidavit can be counted.<sup>133</sup>

In case the certificate of the clerk covers all the names on the petitions thus fastened together, but only the first sheet bears the verification of the petitioner, only those names preceding the verification can be counted.<sup>134</sup>

The succeeding names cannot be properly certified and verified after the time for filing the petition has expired.<sup>134</sup>

If the verifying petitioner signs the verification on each of the several pages of the petition, but executes the jurat only on the first page, only the names on the first page can be counted.<sup>134</sup>

Nor can the omission to fill out the jurat on subsequent sheets be remedied after the expiration of the time for the filing of petitions, nor may the governor receive evidence as to the intention of the verifying petitioner and the magistrate executing the jurat that said jurat was to apply to the several sheets, and that they were to be taken as one petition.<sup>134</sup> The verifying petitioner must be one of the petitioners on that page.

A petition consisting of two or more sheets pasted together or pinned together or fastened together by eyelets is not sufficiently verified where the verification appears on the first sheet only, and is made by a petitioner appearing on a subsequent page. Not even the names upon the first page can be counted under such conditions.<sup>134</sup>

Some constitutional provisions require the petition to be verified by the oath of one of the petitioners. Under such a provision a petition cannot be sufficiently verified by a petitioner who did not sign the petition, but did sign some other petition.<sup>134</sup> And this is true although the petitioner signed a similar petition in the same town or city, which petition is properly certified by the town clerk.<sup>134</sup>

Some statutory provisions are more specific, and require one of the signers to each paper constituting the petition to make oath that each signature to the paper appended is the genuine signature of the person whose name it purports to

of state, in his answer to the mandamus, said in substance that he did not know what changes, if any, were made in the sections. This, the court states, is the same as saying that he cannot make any assured canvass of these sections as they were filed. Under such circumstances the sections cannot be canvassed at all, and must be rejected.

<sup>131</sup> Thompson v. Vaughan (Mich.) supra. The constitutional requirement involved in this case was to the effect that "each section shall have attached thereto the affidavit of the person soliciting signatures to the same stating his own qualifications and that all the signatures to the attached section were made in his presence, that each signature to the section is the genuine signature of the person signing the same and no other affidavit thereto shall be required."
L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>132</sup> Re Opinion of Justices (Me.) supra.

<sup>133</sup> Ibid. On the first sheet of these petitions the forms prepared for the certificate and authentication were filled out; on subsequent sheets they were left blank; and only the names preceding the certificate and affidavit which were filled out were held entitled to be counted. Apparently, though this is not clear, if the verification were on a page other than the first, all names preceding it might be counted, on the theory that the sheets constituted one petition.

<sup>134</sup> Re Opinion of Justices (1915) — Me. —, 95 Atl. 869.

be. A verification by one who did not sign the paper invalidates it.<sup>135</sup>

Other constitutional provisions merely require each section to be verified by the person soliciting the signatures. This, taken in connection with another constitutional provision that any qualified elector of the state is competent to solicit signatures within the county in which he is an elector, is held to preclude him from soliciting signatures in any county other than that in which he is an elector.<sup>136</sup> This qualification must affirmatively appear in the affidavit.<sup>136</sup> It must be made before the section is filed with the county clerk, and cannot be changed after such filing.<sup>136</sup>

A petition composed of four sheets pasted together, the fourth sheet having the certificate of the clerk filled out, but left unsigned, cannot be verified by a petitioner whose name appears on the fourth sheet, since the persons whose names appear on the fourth sheet are not constitutional petitioners.<sup>137</sup>

Nor can this defect be cured by permitting the clerk to sign the certificate on the fourth page thereto after the filing thereof and the expiration of the time limited for the filing of a referendum petition, although the omission to sign on the fourth page was through inadvertence.<sup>137</sup>

A petition cannot be verified by one whose name appears upon the petition, but who is specifically excepted as not being upon the voting list in the clerk's certificate to the petition.<sup>137</sup>

Nor can such a person verify the petition although he gives his voting residence in the petition as from a different town, and is certified to as a qualified voter by the clerk of the town where he resided, after the time for the filing of the petition has expired.<sup>137</sup>

Where the names of the petitioners appear in two columns in the petition, and the clerk certifies only the names in the first column, the other names remain uncertified and cannot be counted.<sup>137</sup>

Nor can such a petition be verified by a petitioner whose name appears only in the second column of the petition; consequently none of the names upon a petition so verified can be counted.<sup>137</sup>

Nor can this omission be corrected after the time for filing the petition has expired.<sup>137</sup>

The names on a petition cannot be counted where the name of the verifying petitioner does not appear on any petition.<sup>137</sup>

Nor can such a petition be verified by a competent petitioner after the time for filing the petition has expired.<sup>137</sup>

This is true although the verifying petitioner failed to sign the petition by inadvertence, but did sign as a verifying petitioner, and his verification was duly taken by the magistrate.<sup>137</sup>

Names cannot be counted as petitioners that are certified as being upon the voting list by a clerk or stenographer of the clerk, who is not a deputy, signing the city clerk's name, with her initials under the same.<sup>137</sup>

Nor can this error be corrected after the expiration of the time for filing referendum petitions.<sup>137</sup>

It is not necessary that the verifying petitioner sign the certificate under the constitutional provision above set out. The authenticity of the signature may be verified in either of two ways: The petitioner may make and sign a certificate, and swear to the truth of his statements, or he may make oath before a magistrate as to the authenticity of the signatures, and the magistrate's jurat or certificate thereof is sufficient evidence of the facts stated in it. The signature of the verifying petitioner is not essential: if it appears that the authenticity of the names is sworn to by one of the petitioners on the petition, the names should be counted.<sup>137</sup>

A verifying petitioner who has properly appeared before the magistrate and certified to the petition, and whose name is entered in the jurat by the magistrate, but who inadvertently failed to sign his name as a verifying petitioner, cannot, after the expiration of the time limited for filing petitions, correct the error and thus enable the names to be counted.<sup>137</sup>

The names upon a petition are entitled to be counted where the blank in the jurat, left for the insertion of the name of the verifying petitioner, is not properly filled, but is filled with the words "town clerk," provided it appears that the verification was actually signed and sworn to by a petitioner.<sup>137</sup> Likewise, is required to be made shall be distinct from the paper forming part of the petition, otherwise the words "paper appended" are without force.

<sup>135</sup> Buohl v. Beverly (1916) — N. J. L. —, 98 Atl. 270. It apparently was urged in this case that the signature of the party verifying the petition, to the verification, was sufficient, but the court states that the language of the statutory requirement can only mean that the affidavit to which oath L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>136</sup> Thompson v. Vaughan (Mich.) supra.

<sup>137</sup> Re Opinion of Justices (Me.) supra.

the names on a petition can be counted where the name of the verifying petitioner is not inserted in the jurat, although the verifying petitioner has signed the certificate, and appeared before the magistrate when the jurat was executed.<sup>137</sup>

Neither certificates nor jurats can be corrected after the expiration of the time limited for the filing of a petition.<sup>137</sup>

Under some Constitutions it is required that the name of the county or city in which each section of the petition has been circulated shall appear upon the section, and also that each signer thereto shall add to his signature his place of residence, street, and number in cities having street numbers, and his election precinct. It is held that these requirements must be strictly observed. It cannot be inferred that a section was circulated in a certain county or city from the fact that a majority or all of the signers gave their residences as in that county or city, nor can it be inferred that the signers resided in a certain county or city from the fact that the section was circulated in such county or city. The place of circulation and the place of residence must each be shown by itself on every section. The signatures cannot be counted on a section which does not thus show where it was thus circulated, nor can a signature be counted on any section unless it is followed by the signer's residence and voting precinct.<sup>138</sup> A signer to a referendum petition, in giving his residence, may use common and well-known abbreviations if there are such, designating his county or city, but his residence must not be left to guesswork or mere inference. Ditto marks may be used.<sup>139</sup>

The fact that there are many names, places of residence, and voting precincts, all apparently in the same handwriting, upon petitions for referendums, is not sufficient to justify the conclusion by the secretary of state that the names were written thereon fraudulently, and that they should therefore be rejected from the canvass.<sup>138</sup>

It has been held that the failure of certain signers of a petition to state the county and state in which they live, in addition to the city or village, is not such a defect as requires the rejection of such names, where, on the opposite side of the petition, the county and state do appear. Even without the proof upon the back of the petition, it is a fact of which the court takes judicial notice that there are in the state cities and villages of the names appended.<sup>139</sup>

A municipality cannot restrict the signers of initiative petitions to registered voters under constitutional provisions awarding that privilege to legal voters, consequently an ordinance attempting to do so is invalid.<sup>140</sup>

When it appears that the person making the affidavit to a petition knew that a person signing the petition did not sign it with knowledge of its contents, yet, notwithstanding such knowledge, wilfully, corruptly, and intentionally made the false, perjured affidavit to the contrary, such affidavit is worthless, and the petition or part of a petition to which it is attached does not fill the requirement of the Constitution, and the genuine signatures thereon cannot be counted, for the reason that the petition lacks the affidavit.<sup>141</sup>

The number of signers required to initiate a measure or bring about a referendum on an act of the lawmaking body is sometimes fixed at a certain percentage of the electors voting "at the last general election." In case of a referendum sought upon a municipal ordinance the meaning of the "last general election" was claimed to be the last general state election, rather than the last general municipal election. But this contention was denied and the number of signers required was fixed upon the basis of the electors voting at the last municipal election.<sup>142</sup>

<sup>138</sup> Thompson v. Vaughan (1916) — Mich. —, 159 N. W. 65.

<sup>139</sup> Bartling v. Wait (1914) 96 Neb. 532, 148 N. W. 507.

<sup>140</sup> State ex rel. Fleck v. Dalles City (1914) 72 Or. 337, 143 Pac. 1127, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 855.

<sup>141</sup> State ex rel. Gongwer v. Graves (1914) 90 Ohio St. 311, 107 N. E. 1018.

See State ex rel. Case v. Superior Ct. infra, subd. XI. e. 1. as to power of secretary of state to determine genuineness of signatures.

See State ex rel. Baker v. Hanna, supra, subd. XI. b. 6.
L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>142</sup> Bakersfield & K. Electric R. Co. v. Hay (1915) 29 Cal. App. 289, 155 Pac. 132. The last election that had been held in the municipality prior to the filing of the referendum petition was a municipal election. It seems that it was the only municipal election held since the adoption by the municipality of the charter containing the initiative and referendum powers. Some objection was made that this had not been a general election; the court states, however, that even if this were conceded, it would not aid the case of the petitioner, since if no general municipal election had been held by the city since the adoption

Under some statutes, the signers of a petition are deemed and held to be qualified electors unless a protest is filed; in which event a hearing is required. Such a protest is required by some statutes to be "in writing, under oath." If the protest is not under oath, it is ineffective.<sup>143</sup>

2. Withdrawal of names.

A petitioner for an initiative ordinance may withdraw his name from such petition before any action has been taken thereon by the clerk whose duty it is to examine the petition, and from the registration books ascertain whether or not the petition is signed by the requisite number of registered electors, and certify the result of his examination to the council.<sup>144</sup>

A sufficient number of names having been withdrawn to reduce the number of signers below the required per cent, the council is not required to submit the ordinance to an election in case of its failure to pass same. It is not sufficient that the petition, at the time it was filed, contained a sufficient number of electors as signers, especially where no time is fixed for the special elections at which the ordinance shall be submitted.<sup>145</sup> of the charter, the test would relate back to the last general municipal election preceding the adoption of the charter. Whether this had occurred since the last general state election or prior thereto is not stated, but, from the date given, it would seem that it had occurred either at the same time or prior to the state election. The charter of the municipality involved in this case was adopted by the municipality under a special act. There was also a general law in effect in the state, providing for direct legislation by cities and towns, including initiative and referendum. It was urged that, although this general act did not apply to the city in question, the referendum provisions of the city charter being modeled upon the terms of that statute, the court should apply the rule that one statute founded upon another is deemed, in so far as it follows the terms of the previous statute, to adopt also its meaning. The general statute having made the basis of computing the required signers the vote cast for governor, it was urged that the court should construe the provision in the municipal charter as making the basis the vote cast at the state election; but this argument was denied also.

<sup>143</sup> Ramer v. Wright (1916) — Colo. —, 150 Pac. 1145. The verification to the protest recited the state and county, and that the persons "each for himself (or herself), and not one for the other, deposes and says . . . that he (or she) knows the contents of said protest, and the statements L.R.A.1917B.

e. Who determines sufficiency of petition.

1. In general.

Under the general election laws, the secretary of state, acting as state supervisor of elections, has been held to have authority to determine the sufficiency and validity of referendum petitions, and his decision is final in the absence of fraud or an abuse of discretion. The statutes with reference to the filing of referendum petitions were examined and shown to leave only twenty-one days in which to make proofs as to the sufficiency or insufficiency of a petition. This was held insufficient time for process, and unless process should be waived, the courts would be powerless to grant any relief within the time limited; consequently it was concluded that, by these constitutional provisions, the sufficiency or validity of referendum petitions was with the secretary of state, as the election official.<sup>146</sup>

Under the Michigan Constitution the duties charged upon the secretary of state were held to be purely ministerial. It was therefore held that his action must be based upon the face of the petition for a referendum, as received at his therein contained are true to the best of his (or her) knowledge, information, and belief." It was signed by the persons making the protest, but the officer's certificate recited merely that it was "subscribed to before me this . . . day of . . ." The court states that the certificate nowhere recites that it was sworn to, and it is the certificate of the officer from which it must be determined whether or not an oath was administered. The fact that in the statement the signers "deposed" and "said" is referred to, and it is stated that if it be assumed that "to depose" means "to swear," the certificate does not show that the signers even "deposed" before the officer; it recites only that they subscribed.

As to right to aggregate signers on petitions for an entire act with those for only part, see supra, State ex rel. Barker v. Hanna (1915) 31 N. D. 570, 154 N. W. 704.

<sup>144</sup> Dagley v. McIndoe (1915) 190 Mo. App. 168, 176 S. W. 243. The court here states that there is no bar on a petitioner who voluntarily signs from voluntarily withdrawing, providing he does so before the council has taken action. The withdrawal in this case, however, occurred before the city clerk had taken any action, so that the statement with reference to the council is obiter.

<sup>145</sup> Ibid. See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 223, for earlier cases on this question.

<sup>146</sup> State ex rel. Gongwer v. Graves (Ohio) supra.

office; that he was not given authority to enter upon an investigation of alleged frauds and irregularities.<sup>147</sup> But the secretary of state must see that the requirements of the Constitution have been met in the petition, as these requirements are mandatory.<sup>147</sup> It is, accordingly, his duty to reject petitions which show on their face that they do not comply with the requirements of the law.<sup>148</sup>

Where the statute requires a local official to examine the petition and certify that the signatures on the petition opposite which he has written his initials are signatures of legal voters of the state or of his precinct, and the secretary of state, by a statute, is required, upon the filing of the petition, to proceed to canvass and count the names of the certified legal voters on such petition, and, if he finds the same name signed to more than one petition, to reject both names from the count, the secretary of state has no authority to reject names for any other reason than that of duplicate signatures. He cannot reject names upon the ground that the names were forged and fraudulent. The special authority given the secretary to reject duplicate signatures upon different petitions is stated to suggest almost conclusively a limitation of power on the part of the secretary to reject names for any other cause when they are determined to be signatures of legal voters by the local certifying officers, and such determination is evident by the proper certificate. Nor does the use of the word "canvass" in the statute prescribing the duties of the secretary of state indicate an intention to broaden his powers to do more than reject the duplicate signatures.<sup>149</sup>

The fact that there is no special provision of the law requiring the local certifying officers to return their certificates to the secretary of state does not change the fact that such local officers' decisions are official, and that their certificates are the prescribed official evidence of their decisions.<sup>149</sup>

Nor does the fact that, in nonregistration precincts, the certificate required of the local officer is that he "is acquainted with the legal voters thereof (a precinct), and that he believes the signatures opposite which he has written his initials are the signatures of legal voters of such precinct," lessen the force and effect of such determination as an official decision.<sup>150</sup>

The certificate of a clerk upon a petition for a proposed initiative ordinance, that he had examined the same, and, from the records of registration, to wit, the great register of the county, had ascertained that the petition is signed by the requisite number of qualified electors, sufficiently shows that the persons signing the petition were at the time registered, qualified electors, so as to comply with a statute prescribing such qualifications.<sup>151</sup> It will be assumed that the great register examined was the register then in force.<sup>151</sup>

2. What is sufficient notice of protest.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 224, for earlier cases on this question.

And see Ramer v. Wright (1916) — Colo. —, 159 Pac. 1145, supra, note 143.

3. What objections may be raised.

In general it may be stated that the constitutionality of a proposed measure cannot be raised to defeat its submission.<sup>152</sup> Thus, the constitutionality of a proposed initiative measure cannot be raised in an action to restrain the secretary of state from certifying the measure and causing it to be printed on the official ballot.<sup>153</sup>

Nor can the constitutionality of a proposed initiative municipal ordinance be raised in an action to compel the com-

<sup>147</sup> Thompson v. Vaughan (1916) — Mich. —, 159 N. W. 65.

<sup>148</sup> Thompson v. Vaughan (Mich.) supra. Under the Michigan law the sections of the petition must come to the secretary of state from the various county clerks of the counties in which the sections were circulated. It is stated that the secretary of state has no authority to receive and act upon a petition received from any other source, nor has he authority to receive sections that have not been filed with the county clerk of the counties in which they were circulated, as required. As to the requirement of being filed at the same time, see supra, subd. XI. c. 5.

<sup>149</sup> State ex rel. Case v. Superior Ct. L.R.A.1917B.

(1914) 81 Wash. 623, 143 Pac. 461, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 838.

<sup>150</sup> In State ex rel. Case v. Superior Ct. (Wash.) supra. It is stated that all that the decision of any court or tribunal amounts to, in the last analysis, is a belief of the official.

<sup>151</sup> Minges v. Merced (1915) 27 Cal. App. 15, 148 Pac. 816.

<sup>152</sup> 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 224, note.

<sup>153</sup> State ex rel. Bullard v. Osborn (1914) 16 Ariz. 247, 143 Pac. 117; Pfeifer v. Graves (1913) 88 Ohio St. 473, 104 N. E. 529.

A court has no concern with the validity of proposed legislation initiated by the people. State ex rel. Griffiths v. Superior Ct. (1916) — Wash. —, 159 Pac. 101.

missioners to submit it to the electors.<sup>154</sup> Nor in an action to enjoin the holding of an election.<sup>155</sup>

Nor can the validity of a proposed constitutional amendment be determined upon an appeal from the decision of the secretary of state that the petition therefor is sufficient.<sup>156</sup> The courts are without power to say what laws shall or shall not be enacted. Their powers are exercised when questions arise and causes are brought before them in the ordinary course of litigation in passing upon the substantial rights of parties thereto. To question the constitutionality of initiative legislation would be to place a restraint over such legislation that does not exist in acts proposed in the legislative body. Such differentiation of power has been expressly prohibited by a constitutional provision that any law which may be enacted by the legislature may be enacted by the people under the initiative.<sup>157</sup>

It has been stated in an action for mandamus that the court will not compel the doing of a vain thing, hence will not compel the submission of an ordinance, "if, beyond dispute, the ordinance, if passed, would be in contravention" of a state law.<sup>158</sup> But where it does not so clearly appear, submission will be enforced.

A statutory provision that, on a showing that any petition is not legally sufficient, the court may enjoin the secretary of state from certifying and printing the measure on the official ballot, does not authorize an injunction where the proposed measure is claimed to be unconstitutional, since the phrase "legally sufficient" requires conformation with the requirements of the law as to form and signature.<sup>159</sup>

A municipal council cannot question the wisdom of a proposed initiative amendment to the charter, nor refuse to perform their duties in regard thereto, on the ground that it would be difficult of execution.<sup>160</sup>

j. Power of court.

The court is not concluded by the decision of an officer which is ministerial, and which is not required to be evidenced by a return or certificate of the official passing upon the question. Thus, in such a case the return of the secretary of state that an appropriation act has been referred is not conclusive upon the court in an action for mandamus to compel action by officials under a statute which is rendered ineffective if the appropriation act has been referred.<sup>161</sup>

Nor is the decision of the secretary of state conclusive on a question of law, although it be conceded that his decision upon a question of fact, in the absence of fraud or bad faith on his part, is conclusive upon the court. Whether or not the initialing of blank lines, on which no petitioner's name appears, by a local official to whom was delegated the duty of so initialing the names of legal voters, is such evidence of fraud on the part of the certifying officer as warrants the rejection of all names upon the petition where the initialing of blank lines occurred, is a question of law. As a matter of law it is not of sufficient weight as evidence to warrant the conclusion that the initialed and certified names upon such petitions were fraudulently or illegally initialed by the local official.<sup>162</sup>

The declaration of the speaker of the house of representatives that a proposed amendment to the Constitution, initiated by the people, has received the requisite number of votes, and is therefore a law, has no binding force when the matter of the adoption of the amendment is considered as a judicial question.<sup>163</sup>

But the court has no power to review a matter which is committed to other officials in other than a ministerial capacity. The fact that the legislature had

<sup>154</sup> State ex rel. Foote v. Hutchinson (1914) 93 Kan. 405, 144 Pac. 241.

<sup>155</sup> A court cannot interfere and determine legislation initiated by the electors of a municipality to be unconstitutional, for the purpose of arresting or controlling the action of the electors and preventing its submission. Pitman v. Drabelle (1916) 267 Mo. 78, 183 S. W. 1055.

<sup>156</sup> Creas v. Estes (1914) 43 Okla. 213, 142 Pac. 411.

<sup>157</sup> State ex rel. Bullard v. Osborn (Ariz.) supra.

<sup>158</sup> State ex rel. Foote v. Hutchinson (Kan.) supra.

<sup>159</sup> State ex rel. Bullard v. Osborn (Ariz.) supra.
L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>160</sup> State ex rel. Fleck v. Dalles City (1914) 72 Or. 337, 143 Pac. 1127.

<sup>161</sup> State ex rel. Baker v. Hanna (N. D.) supra.

<sup>162</sup> State ex rel. Case v. Superior Ct. (Wash.) supra.

<sup>163</sup> Hildreth v. Taylor (1915) 117 Ark. 465, 175 S. W. 40.

In this case the question was whether a majority of the votes cast on the amendment was sufficient to adopt it or whether a majority of the votes cast at the election was necessary, a question that was answered by holding that a majority of votes cast at the election was necessary.

guarded the signing of an initiative or referendum petition by very severe penalty for illegal signing was held to evidence an intention on the part of the legislature that such penalty, so imposed, together with the certification of the local officers, was to be the only safeguard; therefore the court had no power to review the determination of the local certifying officers upon the question of the names upon the petition being the signatures of legal voters.<sup>164</sup>

Upon an appeal from the decision of the secretary of state on an initiative petition under a statute authorizing an appeal to the court for a citation requiring the secretary of state to submit the petition to the court for examination, and for a writ of mandate compelling the certification of the measure and petition, or for an injunction to prevent the certification thereof, as the case may be, the court is limited to a review of the question which the secretary of state was authorized to decide, and his errors in exceeding his authority.<sup>164</sup> The secretary of state, being bound by the decision of local certifying officers on the question of the names upon the petition being the signatures of legal voters, the court is likewise bound.<sup>165</sup>

g. Publication of proposed measure.

It is the doctrine of some cases that the manner of giving notice of initiative and referendum measures prescribed on that subject must be strictly followed, and that a failure to comply with the requirements of the municipal law in that respect is fatal to the legislation attempted. The notice is treated as analogous to the manner in which jurisdiction over the subject matter or parties to a proceeding is acquired by a court; unless it is published by authority and in the manner and at the time required, the proceeding has no more force than the judgment of a court where there was no service of summons and no appearance of the defendant, although he may have read all about the litigation in the newspapers.<sup>166</sup> Consequently a proposed initiative measure which is not published as required by a municipal ordinance providing for the manner of the exercise of the initiative and referendum powers cannot validly be submitted to the electors.<sup>167</sup>

It has been held a strict compliance with a requirement that an ordinance shall be "published . . . in at least ten issues within two weeks prior to said special election," for publication to be made once each day for twelve successive days, the last day of publication being eight days prior to the election, upon the theory that the provisions required the last publication merely to be made within the two weeks prior to the election.<sup>168</sup>

On the contrary, statutes as to publication have been given a liberal construction. Thus, a statutory provision that a proposed law or amendment to the Constitution shall be, by the secretary of state, caused to be published not later than a certain date, in a newspaper in each county, for thirty days, has been held directory, so that a publication of a proposed constitutional amendment, beginning from three to thirteen days after the stated date, is sufficient.<sup>169</sup>

At least, the failure to publish exactly as required will not defeat a submission of the proposed measure, in the absence of a showing that it amounted to such a radical disregard of the legislative requirements as probably affected the result of the election.<sup>169</sup>

Some statutes expressly provide that

<sup>164</sup> State ex rel. Case v. Superior Ct. (Wash.) supra.

<sup>165</sup> Ibid.

See State ex rel. Gongwer v. Graves (1914) 90 Ohio St. 311, 107 N. E. 1018, supra, subd. XI. e, 1, and the discussion of the right to appeal, supra, subd. X. f.

<sup>166</sup> State ex rel. Fleck v. Dalles City (Or.) supra. At the time of starting with the proposed initiative ordinance in this case, the proponents inquired whether the municipality had made any provisions for carrying into effect the initiative and referendum powers, and were informed that none had been made. It was subsequently discovered, however, that such an ordinance had been enacted, whereupon the measure was published, but not in a paper designated by the council, and too late to comply with the provisions of the ordinance as to time. The ordinance, which L.R.A.1917B.

was an amendment to the city charter, was held to be governed by such legislation.

See Reed v. Wing, infra, subd. XI. h.

<sup>167</sup> State ex rel. Fleck v. Dalles City (Or.) supra.

<sup>168</sup> Staples v. Astoria (1916) — Or. —, 158 Pac. 518. A dissenting opinion took the position that the ten publications must all be within a period of two weeks immediately preceding the election.

<sup>169</sup> Hildreth v. Taylor (Ark.) supra. In arriving at this conclusion the courts took into consideration the fact that if the attorney general took the time allowed him for preparing the ballot title after the petition was required to be filed, only seven days would be left before the date of publication, during which time the secretary of state would have to mail out the copy for the printer, and it would have to be set up; the court stating that the fact that a the provisions regulating the procedure in elections under the initiative and referendum are not mandatory, but that a substantial compliance is sufficient. As to what is a substantial compliance depends to a certain extent upon the facts of the individual case.<sup>170</sup>

The proclamation of the governor calling an election upon a referendum petition, duly issued and deposited in the office of the secretary of state, is sufficient without further publication, where the law makes no provision for further publication.<sup>170</sup>

By some constitutional provisions the secretary of state is required to print and distribute arguments for and against a proposed initiative measure. It is the duty of the designated officer to comply with this requirement.<sup>171</sup>

In the absence of a constitutional provision prohibiting it, the legislature may require the proponent of arguments for or against any proposed measure to bear the expense of the increased cost of paper for, and the printing and binding of, such argument, while at the same time requiring the state to pay the expense of publicity required for the measure itself, and of distributing the pamphlet to the voters of the state.<sup>172</sup> The proponents of an initiated measure cannot evade such a statute by producing an argument under the guise of a preamble to the proposed measure.<sup>173</sup>

It is the doctrine of some courts that when a statute adopted by the people at a referendum election has been authenticated, promulgated, and published, the court will not consider whether or not it has received the necessary publicity, when the Constitution provides that any measure shall become law when approved by majority vote and proclaimed as such by the governor.<sup>174</sup> The doctrine of this case was held applicable, and the court refused to inquire as to the publicity of an initiative measure where no provision was made by statute for the preservation of any official record of the facts touching the sufficiency of the publication of initiative and referendum measures, and the Constitution provides that any measure initiated by the people or referred to the people, as herein provided, shall take effect and become a law if it is approved by a majority of the votes cast thereon.<sup>175</sup> condition has been imposed by the legislature, which is, to say the least, difficult of literal performance, affords much reason for holding that it is merely directory, and not mandatory. The further fact is considered that the act of publication would involve not only the conduct of a public official, but that of many others concerned in the publication, who might not always act upon a strict sense of public duty. The further fact is considered that the legislature, in framing this provision, did not impose any requirement for the preservation of the evidences of the notice.

<sup>170</sup> Where barely more than half the required pamphlets containing the text of the measure sought to be referred, ballot title, and argument, are distributed, and it appears from the actual figures that more than 70,000 voters remained away from the polls, and 42,000 participating in the election failed to vote upon the question submitted, and that there were 33,000 less pamphlets distributed than there were voters participating in the election, there is no substantial compliance with a statutory provision that there must be a sufficient number of pamphlets printed and distributed to the various counties to supply each voter of the county, and an additional number equal to 10 per cent of such number of voters. Ex parte Smith (1916) — Okla. —, 154 Pac. 521.

It was further held in this case that the distribution of the pamphlets by the state board to the county election boards, commencing ten days before the election and continuing thereafter until the pamphlets were distributed, and the distribution by the county election board to the various precinct officers at the time of furnishing election supplies, with no general distribution except such as was made on the day of the election, is not a substantial compliance with a statutory requirement that the secretary of the state election board shall, not later than forty days before the election, forward such pamphlets to the county election board, who shall in like manner immediately distribute them to the election inspectors for each election precinct, and that it shall be the duty of such inspectors, not later than five days prior to the election, to convoke a public meeting and distribute or cause to be distributed such pamphlets to the assembled voters, and use all other diligent means of distributing them to the voters of such election precinct. Ibid.

<sup>171</sup> State ex rel. Hunt v. Hildebrand (1915) 93 Ohio St. 1, 112 N. E. 138.

<sup>172</sup> State ex rel. Chamberlain v. Howell (1914) 80 Wash. 692, 142 Pac. 1.

<sup>173</sup> State ex rel. Berry v. Superior Ct. (1916) — Wash. —, 159 Pac. 92, supra.

<sup>174</sup> Allen v. State, 14 Ariz. 458, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 468, 130 Pac. 1114, referred to in earlier note.

<sup>175</sup> Gottstein v. Lister (1915) 88 Wash. 462, 153 Pac. 595. Referring to the case of Allen v. State (Ariz.) supra, the court says that "unless there is a distinction to be drawn between initiative and referendum measures which we are unable to see, that decision seems directly in point so far as the principle here invoked is concerned"

b. Elections.

In the absence of a provision in the amendment reserving initiative and referendum powers, specifying the number of votes necessary to adopt an amendment to the Constitution initiated by the electors, an existing constitutional provision specifying the number with reference to constitutional amendments by the general assembly applies.<sup>176</sup>

A provision in the amendment reserving initiative and referendum powers, contained in the paragraph relating to the referendum, that "any measure referred to the people shall take effect and become a law when it is approved by a majority of the votes cast thereon, and not otherwise," does not apply to proposed amendments to the Constitution, initiated by the people.<sup>178</sup>

The phrase "votes cast at such election" in a constitutional provision that a measure initiated by the people or referred to them shall take effect and become a law if it is approved by a majority of the votes cast thereon, provided that the votes cast upon such question or measure shall equal one third of the total "votes cast at such election," and not otherwise, will be interpreted to mean the "number of voters voting at such election."<sup>177</sup>

When notice of elections is required to be in accordance with an ordinance, a notice provided in an ordinance which was not introduced at a regular adjourned meeting is insufficient, since such an ordinance is void.<sup>179</sup>

The lack of money to defray the expense of an election, or provision therefor, is not a valid excuse for refusing to submit an ordinance proposed by initiative petition.<sup>179</sup>

The question whether or not an election upon a municipal ordinance providing for the construction of a railroad and the issuance of bonds to pay for the same is invalidated by an instruction to the judges and clerks of the election to permit resident taxpayers only to vote is not raised where there is nothing to indicate that any vote was refused by reason of the person offering to vote being a nontaxpayer.<sup>180</sup>

It has been held that there was no irregularity in the canvass of the result of a referendum election where the election boards met, as required by law, canvassed the returns of a primary election held upon the same day, and all the members thereof were present upon different dates during the progress of such canvass, and, while canvassing the returns of the primary, the returns upon the referendum were also canvassed as they came in, but, prior to the final result, one member of the board absented himself on private business, and thereafter the two remaining members continued to canvass and certified the result to the governor, no claim being made that the result as canvassed was incorrect.<sup>181</sup>

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 225, for earlier cases on publication of proposed measure.

<sup>176</sup> Hildreth v. Taylor (1915) 117 Ark. 465, 175 S. W. 40. (The requirement being that a majority of the electors voting at such election adopt the amendment, it is not adopted where those voting for it are less than such majority, although they constitute a majority of the votes cast on the amendment.)

<sup>177</sup> Gottstein v. Lister (Wash.) supra. It was urged in this case that these words meant votes to be counted separately for or against each separate measure to be submitted and voted upon at the election, —a contention which was denied by the court.

As to what is meant by the "last general election" in a municipal charter requiring the referendum to be submitted at such election, see Bakersfield & K. Electric R. Co. v. Hay (1915) 29 Cal. App. 289, 155 Pac. 132, supra, XI. d, 1.

<sup>178</sup> Reed v. Wing (1914) 168 Cal. 706, 144 Pac. 964.

<sup>179</sup> State ex rel. Foote v. Hutchinson (1914) 93 Kan. 405, 144 Pac. 241. It was here urged in defense that the commissioners were controlled by the fact that there was no money in the city treasury which could be lawfully appropriated to the payment of the expense of the election; and further, that levies had already been made by the board of commissioners to the full extent and limit allowed by law, and that they were prohibited by law from issuing any warrants to pay any debt or expense for which no provision had been made when there was not sufficient money on hand to meet the payment. The court states that the holding of elections in a city is the exercise of a local governmental function, and the incurring of expense incident thereto is not the contracting of a debt within the meaning of the Constitution and statutes.

<sup>180</sup> Pearce v. Roseburg (1915) 77 Or. 195, 150 Pac. 855.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 225, for earlier cases dealing with elections.

See also State ex rel. Hedges v. Andersen (1915) 75 Or. 509, 147 Pac. 527, supra, subd. XI, a.

See Eyre v. Doerr (1915) 97 Neb. 562, 150 N. W. 625, infra, subd. XI. j.

<sup>181</sup> Ex parte Smith (1916) — Okla. —, 154 Pac. 521.

4. Insertion of initiative and referendum enacting clause in legislative enactment.

See note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 226, for earlier cases on this question.

5. Right of electors to have measure submitted.

The commissioners of a city must submit to an election an ordinance, initiated by the electors, regular in form and sufficient to comply with the statutes, repealing an ordinance enacted by the commissioners, notwithstanding the failure, because not filed within the required time, of a petition previously filed, seeking to suspend the operation of the same ordinance, under the provisions of a statute that if, during a stated time after the enactment of an ordinance, a petition signed by at least 25 per cent of the votes cast for all candidates at the preceding general municipal election, protesting against the passage of such ordinance, be presented to the commissioners, the ordinance shall be suspended from going into operation, and, if not repealed by the commissioners, shall be submitted to a vote either at a general or special election.<sup>183</sup>

The right to have an ordinance submitted is not defeated by the fact that, at the time the case is heard in the court, should the council refuse to adopt the proposed ordinance, and resort to the alternative of submitting it forthwith to the electors, the result could not be known until after the time fixed in the ordinance for its going into effect. The provision as to its taking effect would, in such case, be inoperative, and the time of taking effect would be fixed by general law.<sup>183</sup>

A proceeding to compel the submission to an election of an initiated ordinance accepting an offer to a municipality with reference to the construction of a city hall has not become a moot case, so that it will be dismissed upon the expiration of the time limited in the offer, where, prior to the expiration of the time limited, the limitation upon the life of the offer was extended.<sup>184</sup>

A clerk of a municipality cannot submit a proposed ordinance to the electors without submitting it to the mayor and council, in disregard of a statutory provision that, if the mayor and city council be convened before an ordinance proposed by initiative can be legally submitted to a direct vote of the voters, the clerk shall forthwith present such body a certified copy of the proposed ordinance and the demand for the submission of the same, on file in his office, and if the proposed ordinance is not made a law by the mayor and council within thirty days from the filing of the same with the clerk, the clerk shall then submit the same to the voters, according to the provisions of the article.<sup>185</sup>

XII. Construction.

See earlier cases in note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 226.

A liberal construction will be given to laws enacted to facilitate the exercise of initiative and referendum powers.<sup>186</sup>

<sup>183</sup> State ex rel. Dawson v. Pratt (1914) 92 Kan. 247, 139 Pac. 1191. See Com. ex rel. Heinly v. Marks (1915) 248 Pa. 518, 94 Atl. 191, supra, subd. VIII. a.

<sup>184</sup> Minges v. Merced (1915) 27 Cal. App. 15, 148 Pac. 816.

<sup>185</sup> Hopping v. Richmond (1915) 170 Cal. 618, 150 Pac. 982.

<sup>186</sup> Eyre v. Doerr (1915) 97 Neb. 562, 150 N. W. 625.

<sup>187</sup> See State ex rel. Case v. Superior Ct. (1914) 81 Wash. 623, 143 Pac. 461, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 838, supra, note 16.

See State ex rel. Taylor v. Duncan (1916) — Mont. —, 155 Pac. 1111, supra, subd. V. a. W. A. E.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

SARAH ANN RICE, Appt.,

v.

JARVIS KLETTE et al.

(140 Ky. 787, 149 S. W. 1019.)

Will — devise to one and his children — interest conferred.

A joint estate in fee is conferred by a clause of a will devising land to testator's son and his children, where life estates are created in the same will by appropriate words, and the bequest to them follows a life estate, and directs that the property be divided so that they will get the property "willed to them."

For other cases, see Wills, III. g, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 10, 1912.)

Note. — For annotation of the question as to when a devise or bequest to one and his children will give the children an estate jointly or in common with the parent, or a L.R.A.1917B.

remainder upon a life estate in the parent, see annotation following this case, post, 49.

For annotation of the question as to when a conveyance to one and his children,

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Kenton County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to determine their respective interests in a tract of land which was part of a tract owned by Asa G. Klette, deceased, and disposed of in the seventh clause of his will. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Robert C. Simmons, for appellant:

A devise to one and his children will be construed so that the parent named as devisee shall take a joint estate in fee simple with his children then born or thereafter to be born.

Turner v. Patterson, 5 Dana, 295; Cessna v. Cessna, 4 Bush, 516; Powell v. Powell, 5 Bush, 620, 96 Am. Dec. 372; Bell v. Kinneer, 101 Ky. 271, 72 Am. St. Rep. 410, 40 S. W. 686; Harkness v. Lisle, 132 Ky. 767, 117 S. W. 284.

Messrs. Stephens L. Blakely and John H. Klette for appellees.

Clay, C., filed the following opinion:

This appeal involves the construction of the seventh clause of the will of Asa G. Klette, who died several years ago, a resident of Kenton county, Kentucky. Some time after the death of Asa G. Klette, George D. Klette, his son, died leaving two children, Jarvis Klette and Fred Klette. By his will, which was duly probated in Kenton county, Kentucky, George D. Klette devised all of his estate to his sister, Sarah Ann Rice, giving as a reason therefor that she had cared for him during his last illness. This action was brought by plaintiffs, Jarvis Klette and Fred Klette, against defendant, Sarah Ann Rice, for the purpose of determining their respective interests in a tract of about 25 acres of land, which was formerly a part of the 50-acre tract of land owned by Asa G. Klette, and disposed of by the following provision of his will:

"7th. I also will and bequeath to my said son George D. Klette and to his children, at the death of my wife Sarah Klette, the one half of the 50 acres herein willed to her during her life, and it is my will that the said 50 acres at the death of my wife, be so divided that George D. Klette and his children will get the 25 acres herein willed to them and I further will and give to my said son George D. Klette in his own right one-third part of a lot which I now own in the town of South Covington, Kenton county, Kentucky. Said lot fronts on Bank will give the children an estate jointly or in common with the parent, and when a remainder upon a life estate in the parent, see annotation to Cullens v. Cullens, post, 74.

L.R.A.1917B.

Lick turnpike road 100 feet and runs back 105 feet, his said third 33½ feet is to front on the pike and joins the lot herein willed to my son Lewis J. Klette. I further will to my said son George D. Klette and to his children fifty shares of my stock in the Independence & Colemansville Turnpike Company."

It is the contention of the plaintiffs that their father took only a life estate in the property in question, and upon his death a fee vested in them. Defendant contends that George D. Klette and his children, the plaintiffs, Jarvis Klette and Fred Klette, took a joint estate in fee simple. The chancellor held that George D. Klette took only a life estate in the property in question, and that defendant, therefore, as a devisee of George D. Klette, acquired no estate therein. Judgment was entered accordingly, and defendant appeals.

In the consideration of the question, we deem it necessary to set out the material parts of Asa G. Klette's will. After providing for the payment of his debts, in the first clause of the will, we have the following:

"2nd. I will and bequeath to my beloved wife, Sarah Klette, for and during her natural life, 16½ acres and 31 poles of land, being that portion of my home farm in Kenton county, Kentucky, and bounded and described as follows: [Here follows description.]

"3rd. I also give and bequeath to my said wife, Sarah Klette, for and during her natural life 50 acres of land in Kenton county, Kentucky, being a portion of my farm lying on the waters of De Coursey creek in said county, said 50 acres is bounded as follows: [Here follows description.]

"4th. I give and bequeath to my son, Lewis J. Klette and to his children the following described real estate lying in Kenton county, Kentucky, being a portion of my home farm and bounded thus: [Here follows description.]

"5th. I also will and bequeath to my said son, Lewis J. Klette, the one-third part of a lot of land which I now own in the town of South Covington, Kenton county, Kentucky. [Here follows description.] This part of my said lot my son can dispose of for his own use and benefit. I also give and devise to my said son, Lewis J. Klette, and his children fifty shares of the stock which I now own in the Independence & Colemansville Turnpike Company.

"6th. I will and devise to my son George D. Klette, and his children the following real estate in Kenton county, Kentucky, viz.: [Here follows description.]

"7th. [Clause in question.] I also will and bequeath to my said son, George D. Klette and to his children at the death of my wife Sarah Klette, the one half of the 50 acres herein willed to her during her life, and it is my will that the said 50 acres, at the death of my wife, be so divided that George D. Klette and his children will get the 25 acres herein willed to them and I further will and give to my said son, George D. Klette in his own right one-third part of a lot which I now own in the town of South Covington, Kenton county, Kentucky. [Here follows description.] I further will to my said son, George D. Klette and to his children fifty shares of my stock in the Independence & Colemansville Turnpike Company.

"8th. I will and bequeath to my daughter, Sarah A. Rice and to her children the following described real estate: [Here follows description.] I further will and bequeath to my said daughter, Sarah A. Rice and to her children to take at the death of my wife, Sarah Klette, the one half of the 50 acres herein willed to her during her life, and it is my will that at the death of my said wife, said 50 acres be so divided that my said daughter, Sarah A. Rice and her children get the half joining the 28½ acres herein willed to them.

"9th. I will and bequeath to my son, Edward B. Klette 100 acres of the land of my farm of 160 acres in the county of Randolph and state of Indiana. I also will and bequeath to my said son, Edward B. Klette one-third part of a lot which I own in South Covington, Kenton county; and his said third of said lot is to front 33½ feet on the pike and to join the lot herein willed to my son George D. Klette. I further will to my said son, Edward B. Klette fifty shares of my stock in the Independence & Colemansville Turnpike Company, and it is further my will that in the event that my said son, Edward B. Klette should die without issue or without lineal descendants and still owning said estate that all of the estate herein willed or bequeathed to him, shall go to, and be equally divided between, his two brothers and sister, Sarah A. Rice, and should either of his said brothers or sister be dead, then their children of such of them as may be dead shall take their father's or mother's part.

"10th. I will and bequeath to my daughter, Mary E. Durr for her life and after her death to her heirs, a house and lot in California, in Kenton county, Kentucky. [Here follows description.] I also will and devise to my said daughter, Mary E. Durr, for her life and at her death to her children a certain tract of land in Kenton county, Kentucky, containing 37 acres adjoining the said California lot. [Here follows description.] And I further will and bequeath to my said daughter, Mary E.

Durr the $700 which is due and owing to me from the estate of her former husband Ezra F. Armstrong, deceased.

"11th. I will and bequeath to my daughter, Udora Klette all of a certain tract or parcel of land in Kenton county, Kentucky, for her life, viz.: [Here follows description.] And it is my will that at the death of my said daughter, Udora Klette, said land shall go to and vest in the heirs of her body and if none such, then said lands to be sold and the proceeds divided according to law and it is my further will that at the death of my wife, the 16 acres and ½ and 31 poles of my home farm given to my wife, shall go and vest in my said daughter Udora Klette in the same way and at her death to be disposed of in the same manner as the other tract herein given to her is to go.

"12th. I will and direct that my executor hereinafter named shall sell the tract of about 17 acres which I now own on De Coursey creek and also sell the two lots I own in Independence and also to sell the 64 acres of my land in Randolph county, Indiana, not herein disposed of, and give to my wife, Sarah Klette, one third of the proceeds of said sales and the other two thirds to be equally divided among all of my children. It is my will and I hereby give to my son, Edward B. Klette, the right to designate off of what part of the Indiana land, the said 64 acres shall be sold.

"13th. It is my will that after all of the legacies are taken as herein set out and given, that the surplus of my estate if any shall go one third to my wife and the remainder be equally divided among all of my children living and if any be dead then their part to their children if any."

It will be observed that by the seventh clause of the will in question the property involved in this controversy is bequeathed "to my said son, George D. Klette and to his children." This language brings the case within the rule laid down in one of three lines of cases. One class of cases is to the effect that the parent takes a joint estate in fee simple with his children then born or thereafter to be born. Turner v. Patterson, 5 Dana, 295; Cessna v. Cessna, 4 Bush, 516; Powell v. Powell, 5 Bush, 620, 96 Am. Dec. 372; Bell v. Kinneer, 101 Ky. 271, 72 Am. St. Rep. 410, 40 S. W. 686. Another class of cases is to the effect that the parent takes merely a life estate, with remainder to his children. Fletcher v. Tyler, 92 Ky. 145, 36 Am. St. Rep. 584, 17 S. W. 282; Smith v. Upton, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 28, 18 S. W. 721; Davis v. Hardin, 80 Ky. 672. The other class of cases is where the word "children" is used in the sense of heirs. This construction is adopted only in those cases where, upon a consideration of the whole will, it is evident that the words were used as words of limitation, and not of purchase. Childers v. Logan, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1239, 65 S. W. 124; Moran v. Dillehay, 8 Bush, 434; Hood v. Dawson, 98 Ky. 285, 33 S. W. 75; Lachland v. Downing, 11 B. Mon. 32; Williams v. Duncan, 92 Ky. 125, 17 S. W. 330. As there is nothing in the language of the will to indicate that the word "children" is used in the sense of heirs, but, on the contrary, the testator plainly indicates what part of his devised estate is given to George D. Klette absolutely, or in his own right, it follows that the estate devised to George D. Klette and his children comes within the first or second class of cases above referred to.

Under the more recent decisions of this court, where there is nothing in a deed or will to show a contrary purpose, the rule is to hold an estate deeded or devised to a man and his children, or to a woman and her children, as a life estate to the first taker, with remainder to the children. Hall v. Wright, 121 Ky. 16, 87 S. W. 1129; Brumley v. Brumley, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 231, 89 S. W. 182. The reason given for this rule of construction is that, if a joint estate is given, the quantity or interest each takes will remain uncertain, and shift upon the birth of each after-born child; and that a testator's intention can be best carried out by giving to the son or daughter a life estate, with remainder to his or her children, thus keeping the estate intact for the benefit of them all. With these principles in view, let us examine the will in question, and to this end consider the entire will, including the other devises.

By the first clause he devises to his wife certain land "for and during her natural life." By the second clause he devises other land to her "for and during her natural life." By the third clause he devises certain other lands to his wife "for and during her natural life." By the fourth clause he devises certain land to Lewis J. Klette and his children. By the fifth clause he devises a certain lot of land to Lewis J. Klette, with the right to dispose of it for his own use and benefit. By the same clause he gives to Lewis J. Klette and his children 50 shares of stock. By the sixth clause he devises to George D. Klette and his children certain real estate. By the seventh clause, the one in question, he devises to George D. Klette and his children one-half of the 50 acres willed to his wife during her life. He further directs that at the death of his wife the land be so divided that George D. Klette and his children will get the 25 acres therein willed to L.R.A.1917B.

them. He further gives to George D. Klette in his own right one third of a certain lot. He also gives to him and to his children 50 shares of stock. In the eighth clause he devises to Sarah A. Rice and her children certain real estate. By the ninth clause he gives to Edward B. Klette certain property, with the provision that, should he die without issue or lineal descendants while still owning said estate, it shall be divided between his two brothers and his sister, etc. In the tenth clause he devises to Mary E. Durr for her life, and after her death to her heirs, certain real estate. Another tract of land in the same clause is devised to Mary E. Durr for her life, and at her death to her children. By the eleventh clause he devises certain property to Udora Klette, with the further provision that at her death it shall vest in the heirs of her body, and if none such, the land shall be sold and the proceeds divided according to law. By the twelfth clause he gives one third of the proceeds of certain lands to his wife absolutely, and directs that the other two thirds be equally divided among all his children. By the thirteenth clause he directs the residue of his estate to be divided, one third to his wife, the remainder equally among all of his children.

It will be observed that in four different instances the testator devises certain property to his wife and daughters for life. He gives to his son Edward a defeasible fee. He also gives to Edward and George certain property absolutely. By the eleventh and twelfth clauses he gives to his wife and all of his children certain property absolutely. It is rare that you see in one will as many different kinds of estates devised. When the testator wanted to give a life estate, he knew exactly what language to employ for that purpose; when he wanted to create a fee, he had no difficulty in selecting appropriate terms; and when he wanted to create a defeasible fee, the language employed is apt and precise. If the testator had not used in the will the precise terms necessary to create the character of estate which he intended to devise, it might be said that some uncertainty existed in the clause under consideration, and it should therefore be construed as intending to bestow a life estate upon George D. Klette. But when the testator, in at least four different paragraphs in the same will, had used just the precise words necessary to create a life estate, it can hardly be said that he abandoned the words, whose meaning he plainly understood, although intending to give a similar estate. It does not appear that he used the proper terms by mere inadvertence. The property in question is a part of the same property which he devised to his wife for and during her life, and it is hardly probable that he would have abandoned the words necessary to create a life estate if he intended, upon the expiration of the first life estate, to create a second life estate, with remainder over, in the same property. This conclusion is strengthened by the devise to Udora Klette of 16½ acres, devised by clause 2 to his wife for life. In that instance he used language plainly creating a life estate in his daughter. Naturally, if he had contemplated giving George D. Klette a mere life estate at the termination of the widow's interest, he would have used language as plainly implying his purpose as that used in disposing of the remainder in the other property devised to his wife for life. Furthermore, the clause in question provides that the 50-acre tract shall be so divided that George D. Klette and his children will get the 25 acres "herein willed to them." This division is to take place at the death of Sarah Klette. The language clearly indicates that the testator intended that George D. Klette and his children should have equal rights in the property in question upon the death of Sarah Klette. We therefore conclude that George D. Klette and his children took a joint estate in fee simple, and Sarah Ann Rice, devisee of George D. Klette, acquired by his will a one-third interest in the property in question.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment in conformity with this opinion.

Annotation—Devise or bequest to one and his children as giving the children an estate jointly or in common with the parent, or a remainder upon a life estate in the parent.

I. Scope, 49.

II. Presumptive meaning of testamentary gift to one and his children, 50.

III. Indicia tending to support or vary the presumption that parents and children take concurrently, 60.

IV. Indicia which vary the presumption arising where there are no children, that the children take in succession, 73.

I. Scope.

This note is addressed to the inquiry as to when, where there is a devise or bequest to one and his or her children (or in terms construed as an equivalent), either directly, as in the phrase just used, or indirectly, as where the gift is in trust for one and his children, or to one for his own benefit and that of his children, the parent and children take concurrently, i. e., as joint tenants or tenants in common, and when they take in succession, i. e., the parent taking as tenant for life and the children as remaindermen. It includes cases in which, while the word "children" was not used, the term actually used ("heirs," "issue," etc.) was held to denote children. Cases in which the children were named instead of simply being described as "children," and in which the question was whether they took in succession to or concurrently with their parent, have also been included.

Its scope does not extend to the question whether, where the children take concurrently with the parent, the parent takes one moiety and the children the other, or whether they share per capita.<sup>1</sup> Nor does it include the question whether or not, under a devise or bequest to "the children of" a certain person (the parent not being included as a beneficiary of the gift), the gift vests in those in being at the time of testator's death, to the exclusion of those born thereafter.<sup>2</sup>

The question with which this note is concerned does not arise until it has been ascertained that the reference to children in the will is not to be taken as merely indicative of the motive for the gift,<sup>3</sup> and that the word "children" is used as a word of purchase, and not of limitation. As to when it will be construed as a word of limitation rather than of purchase, see note to Strawbridge v. Strawbridge, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 948, on Conveyance of fee by devise to one and his or her child or children; the note to Wills v. Foltz, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 283, on "'Children' as a word of purchase or limitation;" and note in 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 963, on the Rule in Shelley's Case, at page 1123.

<sup>1</sup> Among the cases passing upon this question are: Lord v. Moore (1849) 20 Conn. 122; Davis v. Sanders (1905) 123 Ga. 177, 51 S. E. 298; Proctor v. Smith (1871) 8 Bush (Ky.) 81; Seabury v. Brewer (1869) 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 662. Ordinarily, they share per capita.

<sup>2</sup> For an instance of this sort, see Wood v. McGuire (1854) 15 Ga. 202.

<sup>3</sup> In McCroan v. Pope (1850) 17 Ala. 612, where property was devised to a husband in trust to pay over to his wife annually "the net proceeds of the said estate real and personal for the sole and separate use and maintenance of her the said Mary and her children free from the control of her said husband the said George S. Morris during her natural life," it was held that the words "for the sole and separate use and maintenance of her . . . and her children" only showed the reason or motive of the testator in making the bequest, and did not reduce the share or interest of the wife to an equal share or proportion with all her children.

II. Presumptive meaning of testamentary gift to one and his children.

As in every question of testamentary construction, the present inquiry resolves itself into two parts: first, what is the prima facie or presumptive meaning of the phrase to be construed, and second, what other expressions or circumstances tend to support or vary that meaning.

Usually the courts will be found in agreement as to what may be taken as the prima facie meaning of any given phrase; but such is not the case here.

The more generally prevalent view, which is based upon one of the resolutions in Wild's Case,<sup>4</sup> is that where there is a bequest or devise to one and his or her children, and there are children in existence, it will be presumed, in the absence of any contrary indication in the context,<sup>5</sup> that the parent and children were intended to take concurrently.<sup>6</sup> This has been said to be the

<sup>4</sup>In Wild's Case (1599) 6 Coke, 16. b, 77 Eng. Reprint, 277. "this difference was resolved for good law, that if A devises his lands to B and to his children or issues, and he hath not any issue at the time of the devise, that the same is an estate tail; for the intent of the devisor is manifest and certain that his children or issues should take, and as immediate devisees they cannot take, because they are not in rerum natura, and by way of remainder they cannot take, for that was not his intent, for the gift is immediate; therefore there such words shall be taken as words of limitation, scil. as much as children or issues of his body; for every child or issue ought to be of the body, . . . but if a man devise land to A and to his children or issue, and they then have issue of their bodies, there his express intent may take effect, according to the rule of the common law, and no manifest and certain intent appears in the will to the contrary. And therefore in such case, they shall have put but a joint estate for life."

<sup>5</sup>In Byng v. Byng (1862) 10 H. L. Cas. 178, 11 Eng. Reprint, 991, it was said by Lord Cranworth: "It must be taken as established by the rule of construction laid down in Wild's Case that where there is a devise of land to a man and his children, and he has at the time of the devise no child, then prima facie the word 'children' shall be taken to be a word of limitation and the first taker shall have an estate tail; but, on the other hand, if the first taker has children at the time of the devise, then the will shall prima facie be construed as giving a joint estate to the first taker and the children as purchasers. I have qualified the rule as stated by Lord Coke by introducing the words 'prima facie,' because he certainly did not mean to state the rule as one which must take effect where a contrary intention was apparent: and it is clear that in acting on the rule in both its branches the courts have always considered themselves at liberty to disregard it where an adherence to it would defeat the intention of the testator as collected from other passages in the will."

L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>6</sup>See Cook v. Cook (1706) 2 Vern. 545, 23 Eng. Reprint, 952; Buffar v. Bradford (1741) 2 Atk. 220, 26 Eng. Reprint, 537; Oates ex dem. Hatterly v. Jackson (1742) 2 Strange. 1172, 93 Eng. Reprint, 1107; Crone v. Odell (1811) 1 Ball & B. 449 (obiter); Paine v. Wagner (1841) 12 Sim. 184, 59 Eng. Reprint, 1102; Gordon v. Whieldon (1898) 11 Beav. 170, 50 Eng. Reprint, 782, 18 L. J. Ch. N. S. 5, 12 Jur. 988; Mason v. Clarke (1853) 17 Beav. 126, 51 Eng. Reprint, 980, 22 L. J. Ch. N. S. 956, 17 Jur. 479, 1 Week. Rep. 297; Webb v. Byng (1856) 2 Kay & J. 669, 69 Eng. Reprint, 951, 4 Week. Rep. 657; Byng v. Byng (1862) 10 H. L. Cas. 171, 177, 11 Eng. Reprint, 991, 31 L. J. Ch. N. S. 470, 7 Jur. N. S. 1135, 7 L. T. N. S. 1, 10 Week. Rep. 633; Clifford v. Koe (1880) L. R. 5 App. Cas. (Eng.) 447, 43 L. T. N. S. 322, 28 Week. Rep. 633 (obiter); Re Wilmot (1879) 76 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 415, 45 Week. Rep. 492; Nimmo v. Stewart (1852) 21 Ala. 682; Furlow v. Merrell (1853) 23 Ala. 716; Vanzant v. Morris (1854) 25 Ala. 286; Dryer v. Crawford (1890) 90 Ala. 131, 7 So. 445 (obiter); Moore v. Ennis (1913) — Del. —, 87 Atl. 1009; McCord v. Whitehead (1896) 98 Ga. 381, 25 S. E. 767; Holt v. Bowman (1864) 33 Ga. Supp. 129, 133; Biggs v. McCarty (1882) 86 Ind. 352, 44 Am. Rep. 320; Moore v. Gary (1897) 149 Ind. 51, 48 N. E. 630; Noble v. Teeple (1897) 58 Kan. 398, 49 Pac. 598; Gill v. Logan (1850) 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 231; Allen v. Hoygh (1842) 5 Met. (Mass.) 324; Jones v. Jones (1861) 13 N. J. Eq. 236 (obiter); Noe v. Miller (1879) 31 N. J. Eq. 234; Gordon v. Jackson (1899) 58 N. J. Eq. 166, 43 Atl. 98; Kyte v. Kyte (1907) 73 N. J. Eq. 220, 67 Atl. 933; Hannan v. Osborn (1834) 4 Paige (N. Y.) 341; Armstrong v. Moran (1850) 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 314; Moore v. Leach (1857) 50 N. C. (5 Jones, L.) 88; Coakley v. Daniel (1858) 57 N. C. (4 Jones, Eq.) 89 (obiter); Prudren v. Paxton (1878) 79 N. C. 446, 28 Am. Rep. 333; Hunt v. Satterwhite (1881) 85 N. C. 73; Hampton v. Wheeler (1888) 90 N. C. 222, 6 S. E. 236; Silliman v. Whitaker (1896) 119 N. C. 89, 25 S. E. 742; Nou-

natural and ordinary meaning of the words;<sup>7</sup> and it has been remarked that where one means to give the whole to any person for life, and after the death of that person the thing to be divided among his children, it is so natural to say so that where it is not so said the argument is strong that it was not so intended.<sup>8</sup>

The rule, of course, has no application where the gift or devise to the children would, without reference to the rule, be a gift in succession to, and not concurrently with, their parents.<sup>9</sup>

The point of time at which it is to be inquired whether children are in existence is the testator's death, although Wild's Case fixes this point of time at the date of the will.<sup>10</sup> It has, however, been held sufficient to warrant the application of the rule, that there was a known pregnancy at the time the will was made.<sup>11</sup>

Where the devise is to several persons "and their children," and only one of them has children at the time the will takes effect, all will nevertheless take estates jointly with their children, the estates of those then childless opening to vest shares in their children upon birth.<sup>12</sup>

It will also be presumed that existing children are to take, to the exclusion of those born thereafter;<sup>13</sup> but where it appears that after-born children were meant to take, the estate will open to shand v. Rodetsky (1898) 5 Ohio N. P. 256; Johnson v. Johnson (1842) McMull. Eq. (S. C.) 347 (obiter); Coogler v. Crosby (1911) 89 S. C. 508, 72 S. E. 149; Gannaway v. Tarpley (1860) 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 572; Bunch v. Hardy (1879) 3 Lea (Tenn.) 543 (obiter); Cannon v. Apperson (1885) 14 Lea (Tenn.) 553; Merryman v. Merryman (1817) 5 Munf. (Va.) 440 (obiter); Vaughan v. Vaughan (1899) 97 Va. 322, 33 S. E. 603 (obiter); Fitzpatrick v. Fitzpatrick (1902) 100 Va. 552, 93 Am. St. Rep. 976, 42 S. E. 306; Martin v. Martin (1903) 52 W. Va. 381, 44 S. E. 198 (obiter); Bentley v. Ash (1906) 59 W. Va. 641, 53 S. E. 636.

The court will give the parent a life interest only where there is something to be found in the will indicating an intention that the parent and children shall not take jointly. Rose v. Edsall (1872) 19 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 544.

<sup>7</sup> In Sutton v. Torre (1842) 6 Jur. (Eng.) 234, it was said by Wigram, V. C.: "If there be a bequest of personality to a number of persons by name, as to A, B, and C, no doubt they take as joint tenants. So, if there be a bequest to a class, as to children or grandchildren, they take as joint tenants. Or, if, instead of being a simple bequest to a class, a stranger be added, still the legatees take as joint tenants. The question is whether, if one of the class of legatees happens to be a parent, the case is the same? I am of opinion that, upon principle, it is; and the cases seem to warrant the conclusion that it should be the same."

In Moushand v. Rodetsky (1898) 5 Ohio N. P. 256, it is said that when a grant or devise is to A and his or her children, there is no way of torturing the language into meaning that A only takes a life estate, that not being its natural and ordinary signification.

In Moore v. Ennis (1913). — Del. —, 87 Atl. 1009, it is said, with reference to the rule in Wild's Case, that "this is the natural meaning of the words. The gift is to the son as well as to his children; to the children as well as to the son; to all alike. A gift to several persons is a gift to them jointly, and there is no reason to have a different rule where the gift is to a man and his children. To change this primary meaning one must go outside the words, and, in place of the natural and legal import of the words, grope by surmise for some other meaning. For more than three centuries that has been an established rule of law as to real estate. Should another meaning be given to the words because the subject matter of the gift is personal and not real property? No case so holds, and no reason has ever been suggested why there should be a different rule applicable to the two kinds of property."

<sup>8</sup> Graham v. Flower (1826) 13 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 439.

<sup>9</sup> Re Jones [1910] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 167, 79 L. J. Ch. N. S. 34, 101 L. T. N. S. 549.

<sup>10</sup> Wills v. Foltz (1907) 61 W. Va. 262, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 283, 56 S. E. 473; Nimmo v. Stewart (1852) 21 Ala. 682 (obiter).

In 2 Minor, Inst. 3d ed. 84, it is said that what is meant by the time of the devise is not quite settled. "It seems, however, to be the better doctrine that we are to understand by it not the date of the devise, but the period when it is to take effect, whether that be the death of the testator or a time subsequent to that."

<sup>11</sup> In Mason v. Clarke (1853) 17 Beav. 126, 51 Eng. Reprint, 980, 22 L. J. Ch. N. S. 956, 17 Jur. 479, 1 Week. Rep. 297, it was held that, under a bequest to testator's daughter "and her children lawfully begotten," the daughter being then pregnant of a child who was afterwards born alive, but who died in the testator's lifetime, the intention was to give the daughter the property bequeathed jointly with her children, rather than a life interest therein, with remainder over to her children.

<sup>12</sup> Wills v. Foltz (1907) 61 W. Va. 262, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 283, 56 S. E. 473 (obiter).

<sup>13</sup> Where the devise is in terms immediate, and so intended by the testator, and the description of the persons to take is general, there none that do not fall within the description at the time of the tes-admit them,<sup>14</sup> and it is no objection that by this means the several estates may commence at different times.<sup>15</sup>

tator's death can take; therefore the after-born must be excluded. Crone v. Odell (1811) 1 Ball & B. Ir. 449.

See also Alcock v. Ellen (1692) Freem. Ch. 185, 22 Eng. Reprint, 1150, in footnote 66, infra.

<sup>14</sup> Under a devise to one and her children, the gift takes effect immediately, subject to be reopened upon the birth of future children. Jackson v. Coggin (1859) 29 Ga. 403.

In Annable v. Patch (1825) 3 Pick. (Mass.) 360, it was held that under a devise of "all the remainder of my estate both real and personal to my daughter, Sarah Annable and the children born of her body, including all my wife has the improvement of during her life after her decease," the daughter and her children living at the time of testator's decease took an estate as tenants in common, subject to open to let in after-born children. The court said: "As to the question whether the children born after the will was made can come in for their shares, we think that they may. 'The children of her body' meant all the children she might have. This will not appear to be a strained construction of the words when it is observed that as to part of the property the devise was prospective, it being of a remainder after a life estate to the widow. If the deviser had intended to limit his bounty to the children living when he made his will, he would have named them, or used words to show that he meant so to limit it. We are therefore of opinion that it was the intention of the testator that all the children should take under the will in equal shares with the mother. This intention may be carried into effect according to the rules of law. As to that part of the will in which a life estate was given to the widow, Sarah and the four children living at the decease of the testator took a vested remainder, which remainder may open to let in the after-born children, according to the case of Dingley v. Dingley (1809) 5 Mass. 535. As to the residue of the estate, it vested in Sarah and her four children on the death of the testator. But it was a qualified fee, and so limited as to admit the claims of the after-born children, and they may hold by way of executory devise. Fearne, Contingent Remainders, 6th ed. 399."

In Martin v. Martin (1903) 52 W. Va. 381, 44 S. E. 198, it is said the estate will open and let in after-born children.

In Bently v. Ash (1906) 59 W. Va. 641, 53 S. E. 636, where testator devised his real estate share and share alike to his seven children, and, with reference to the share of one of them, provided: "But the share I will and bequeath to my daughter Emmazetta Bently, late Emmazetta Knight, it is my express will and desire, and I hereby give the same to her and her child or

Instances in which the rule has been applied,<sup>16</sup> or in which it has been expressly held that there was nothing in children to be held by them free from the claim or claims of control of her said husband, and the same shall be held and enjoyed—the said Emmazetta Bently and her child or children as her or their separate estate, and that the said Bently shall not have or exercise any control over the same directly or indirectly in any manner whatever," and the daughter had at the date of the will but one child, some five months of age, it was held that as it was clearly testator's intention in using the phrase "child or children" to benefit after-born children, Emmazetta and all her children should receive equal parts or undivided interests in the land devised.

For a further instance in which after-born children were let in, see Lynn v. Hall (1897) 101 Ky. 738, 72 Am. St. Rep. 996, 43 S. W. 402.

<sup>15</sup> Oates ex dem. Hatterley v. Jackson (1742) 2 Strange, 1172, 93 Eng. Reprint, 1107.

<sup>16</sup> In Lenden v. Blackmore (1840) 10 Sim. 626, 59 Eng. Reprint 759, where testatrix bequeathed the residue of her personal estate to certain persons and the survivor of them for life," after both their deaths to be equally divided between Sybilla Lenden and Mary Seyer, daughters of my sister, Elizabeth Seyer, and Elizabeth Blackmore, daughter of my sister, Susannah May, and her children," it was held that Mrs. Blackmore did not take a life estate with remainder to her children, but that she and her children living at the time of distribution took as tenants in common.

In Paine v. Wagner (1841) 12 Sim. 184, 59 Eng. Reprint 1102, where a testator made the following provision: "I recommend the house and premises may be disposed of as soon as possible and after paying all just debts may be equally divided share and share alike . . . Mrs. Mitchell. Mr. and Mrs. Wagner and children likewise Anna Harby," it was held that the natural construction of the words was that all the parties who were either named or described should take as between themselves as tenants in common.

In Beales v. Crisford (1843) 13 Sim. 592, 60 Eng. Reprint 230, where a testatrix used the following expression: "Observing that Francis Beales and his family are my residuary legatees for all but cash or monies so called," the vice chancellor said that when the testatrix observed that Francis Beales and his family were her residuary legatees, she evidently spoke of more persons than Francis Beales; that it was plain from the next passage that she was speaking of persons who were living at the date of her will; and as it appeared that Francis Beales had nine children who were living at that time, there was sufficient to authorize the court to hold that by "Francis Beales and his family" the testator meant Francis Beales and his children who were living at the time when she made her will.

In Wilson v. Maddison (1843) 2 Younge & C. Ch. Cas. 372, 63 Eng. Reprint, 164, 12 L. J. Ch. N. S. 420, a bequest of an annuity "to Anne Wilson together with her little girl, Louisa and two little boys Frederick and Octavius, my adopted children, and for their joint maintenance" was held to be a bequest of the annuity to the persons named for their joint lives and the life of the survivor.

In Re Wilmot (1897) 76 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 415, where testator, after creating certain interests in his property, provided that upon their termination the property should go "to my ward, Mademoiselle Ellen Ellendil, now residing with me, and to any lawful issue she may have, such issue taking a vested interest in my said property upon attaining the age of twenty-one years," it was held that there was nothing in the case to take it out of the ordinary rule that under a gift of personalty to A and his children, the parent and children take prima facie concurrently as joint tenants.

In Shaw v. Thomas (1872) 19 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 489, where testator devised his estate upon trust, inter alia, to "manage the said premises so given, granted, demised and conveyed to the said executors in whatever manner they consider most advantageous for my wife and my issue, who I will and declare to be entitled to receive the benefit of any and every portion of the aforesaid lands, goods," etc., it was held that the widow and children were intended to take equally and concurrently.

In Rose v. Edsall (1872) 19 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 544, where testator willed to his wife, "for the benefit of herself and children jointly," two policies of life insurance, "to have and to hold for their joint and mutual benefit and to be by her spent in the most judicious and beneficial manner for all," it was held that the widow and children took concurrently and equally.

In Donald v. Donald (1884) 7 Ont. Rep. 669, where testator provided: "I give, devise and bequeath to my said executor and executrix all my real and personal property of every kind whatsoever for the benefit of my children, share and share alike, and to my wife while she continues my widow, and I give to my said executor and executrix power to sell any part or the whole of my real property for the support and maintenance of my said children and my wife while she remains my widow," it was held that the widow did not take an immediate estate in the whole, with reversion to her children, but that she and the children took jointly, she during widowhood and they share and share alike absolutely.

A bequest to a married woman and her children born and thereafter to be born gives them a joint interest, which by the statute is turned into a tenancy in common. Duan v. Bank of Mobile (1841) 2 Ala. 152.
L.R.A.1917B.

In Banks v. Jones (1874) 50 Ala. 484, where a testator directed his executors to lay aside $400 annually for ten years, to be managed by them for the sole and special use and benefit of "Sarah A. Sherrod and her children," it was held that the bequest vested on the death of the testator in Mrs. Sherrod and her two children then living.

In Re Utz (1872) 43 Cal. 200, a devise to "Margaret Utz and to her children" was held to give the devisees what at common law would have been a joint estate, but which, under the statute (Acts 1855, 171), was an estate in common.

In Hoyle v. Jones (1866) 35 Ga. 40, 89 Am. Dec. 273, a devise of a negro to testator's daughter "and to the children of her body" was held to give the daughter and her children a joint estate.

In Edwards v. Worley (1883) 70 Ga. 667, where testator bequeathed the whole of his estate to his five children, except his daughter Sarah, as to whom he provided: "My will is that my son John Rich take charge of all the property falling to Sarah A. E. Edwards and manage the same for the benefit of her and her children; and if he should die before she does or before a settlement with the children, that in that case the court of ordinary appoint a successor to settle the same," it was held that the only estate which the children of Mrs. Edwards could take in the property under the will of their grandfather would be as tenants in common with their mother.

In New England Mortg. Secur. Co. v. Gordon (1895) 95 Ga. 781, 22 S. E. 706, where by her will a testatrix devised to her daughters, one of whom had children then in life, certain described property, and also declared that "the property willed to my daughters is to be kept for theirs and their children's own use and benefit, free from the debts and control of any husband or person whatever," it was held that the legal effect of these provisions was to vest in the daughter who then had children, and her children, an estate in common, at least as to the use.

In Whitfield v. Means (1913) 140 Ga. 430, 78 S. E. 1067, a devise to a daughter of certain property, "to have said lot of land No. — to her and her children, and to the exclusion of all other persons whatever, said lot of land in fee, to her and her child and children all rights thereto appertaining," was held to vest title in the daughter and such of her children as were living at the date of the will and at the death of the testator, as tenants in common.

In Lynn v. Hall (1897) 101 Ky. 738, 72 Am. St. Rep. 439, 43 S. W. 402, it was held that under a will by which testator gave "to my daughter-in-law, Polly Jane Lynn and her children," certain property "in consideration of the love and affection and in consideration of her kindness to me here-the context to preclude its application,<sup>17</sup> may be found in the subjoined footnotes. Just what indications in the context tend to support or vary the prima facie meaning of the phrase is considered in subdiv. III. post.

tofore," it was held that the daughter-in-law and her children, as well those born after the death of the testator as those born before, took the land jointly.

In Allen v. Claybrook (1874) 58 Mo. 124, where a will directed that the executor should secure the one half of the residuary estate "by trust or otherwise for the benefit of my niece, Mrs. Jane Allen . . . and her children," and the fund was afterward invested by the trustee in certain lands which were conveyed by him to "said Jane Allen and her children to their own proper use, benefit and behoof forever," it was held that Jane Allen and her children took an estate in common in the property.

In Kyte v. Kyte (1907) 73 N. J. Eq. 220, 67 Atl. 933, it was held that the plain effect of the words used in a will by which testator devised to his wife "for herself and her children any and all real estate that I may die seised of" was to vest a concurrent interest in the wife and her children.

In Gordon v. Jackson (1899) 58 N. J. Eq. 166, 43 Atl. 98, where a testatrix bequeathed the remainder of her estate "to my first husband's stepmother and her children. Her name is Mrs. Rebecca Hand," the court said that if the case had been one of first impression, he should have held that Rebecca Hand took a life interest, with remainder in her children; but that the rule of construction, settled by the overwhelming weight of judicial sentiment, is that a devise or gift in this shape, without more, gives a concurrent estate to the parent and children.

In Davis v. Cain (1840) 36 N. C. (1 Ired. Eq.) 304, where testator bequeathed a sum of money "in trust for the separate and sole use of my daughter Ann Davis and her children," and similarly bequeathed to her a share in his residuary estate, it was held that, as none of the legatees were to wait on or for any particular event, but all took their undivided shares of the trust fund immediately on the death of the testator, the children should be deemed to take an immediate equal interest with their mother in the legacy so bequeathed.

The rule was applied in Hunt v. Satterwhite (1881) 85 N. C. 73, to a devise of lands "in trust to John W. Kelly for the benefit of my daughter, Martha E. Satterwhite and her children."

The rule was applied in Hampton v. Wheeler (1888) 99 N. C. 222, 6 S. E. 236, to a devise of certain realty "to be the property of Alfred Hampton and his wife Jureda Reich and their children."

In Smith v. Smith (1901) 108 Tenn. 21, 64 S. W. 483, where testator, who had given his wife a life estate in all his realty, went L.R.A.1917B.

Opposed to the rule of construction above discussed are the cases in which, as in RICE v. KLETTE, ante, 45, the broad statement is made that where there is nothing to show a contrary purpose, a devise to a man and his children, or to on to provide: "After the death of my wife . . . I will and bequeath to my son Samuel F. Smith and his heirs equal shares in my home farm," it was held (the word "his heirs" being construed as meaning "children") that his son and the son's children, born during the continuance of the widow's life estate, were entitled to equal shares in the property.

In Wills v. Foltz (1907) 61 W. Va. 262, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 283, 56 S. E. 473, a devise to three daughters named "and their children," the daughters having children at the date of testator's death, was held to confer upon the daughters and their children a joint estate in equal portions, and not to vest a fee in the daughters alone.

<sup>17</sup> In Sutton v. Torre (1842) 6 Jur. (Eng.) 234, where a testator directed the residue of his personal property to be divided into three parts, one of which he gave to his daughter "and her younger children," it was held that there was nothing in the will to take it out of the operation of the rule that the parent and children shall be deemed to take as joint tenants.

In Moore v. Leach (1857) 50 N. C. (5 Jones, L.) 88, it was held that there was nothing in a will by which testator devised to his daughter "and her children the lawful heirs of her body" certain described property "to her the said Eliza Ann Leach and her children forever" to prevent the application of the rule, but that, on the contrary, it was manifest from the will that the testator intended that his daughter and her children should take together the house and lots and other land which he devised to them.

In Lewis v. Stancil (1911) 154 N. C. 326, 70 S. E. 621, where testator devised to his grandson certain lands "to him and his children born in wedlock forever," it was held that there was nothing to take the case out of the operation of the rule by which the grandson and his children living at the death of the testator took the land in fee as tenants in common; and, further, that in view of the use of the word "forever," there could be no room to contend that the grandson took a life estate.

In Graham v. Flower (1826) 13 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 439, where testator gave and devised his residuary estate unto his nephew, naming him, and his nieces, naming them, "and the children of my said nieces, their heirs and assigns in severalty; in the following proportions, viz.: two sixths thereof, the whole into six equal parts to be divided, unto William Graham his heirs and assigns forever; one sixth unto Eleanor Hoskins and her children, their heirs and assigns forever; one sixth unto Mary Hoskins and her children, their heirs and a woman and her children, will be held to give the parent an estate for life and the children the remainder. Where this view prevails, it has been held immaterial whether or not there are children in existence at the time the will was made or at testator's decease.<sup>18</sup> This doctrine is based upon cases which embody a much narrower presumption; namely, that where the bequest or devise is to a son and his children, or to a daughter and her children, or to testator's wife and children, the general rule above stated, which would give the parent and children concurrent interests, is displaced by a counter presumption, arising from the relationship of the parties, that testator's intention was to give the parent an estate for life.<sup>19</sup> The reasons assigned for this counter assigns forever; one sixth unto Henrietta Flower and her children, their heirs and assigns forever; and the other sixth unto Catharine Robinson and her child, their heirs and assigns forever. And it is my will that their shares be secured by my executor, to my heirs who have husbands," it was held that there was no such intent so plainly expressed in the will as to counteract the immediate devise to each niece and her children, who accordingly took concurrently.

<sup>18</sup> See Keown's Estate (1913) 238 Pa. 343, 86 Atl. 270, set out in footnote 19, infra; and Chambers v. Union Trust Co. (1912) 235 Pa. 610, 84 Atl. 512, in which the court, after reviewing a number of the earlier Pennsylvania cases, says that it may be taken as established that the second resolution in Wild's Case (1599) 6 Coke, 16b, 77 Eng. Reprint, 277, is not the law in Pennsylvania.

<sup>19</sup> In Wilson v. McMullen (1883) 4 Ky. L. Rep. 895, where a testator directed that the share of one of his daughters should be placed in the hands of a trustee, who should rent out and manage "her interest" for the benefit of her "and children," it was held that the testator's daughter took a life estate and her children the remainder.

In Frank v. Unz (1891) 91 Ky. 621, 16 S. W. 712, a devise to testator's wife "for her own use and the benefit of her children forever" was regarded, in view of the rule existing in the case of devises by a husband to a wife and children, and of the fact that the words used gave the wife only the use, as giving the wife a life estate, with remainder to the children in fee.

In Brand v. Rhodes (1895) 17 Ky. L. Rep. 97, 30 S. W. 597, where testator bequeathed to his wife "the house and lot on which I now live together with household and kitchen furniture as a homestead for her and my children by her," it was held that there was nothing in the will to take the case out of the general rule of construction by which, in such cases, the wife is deemed to take a life estate, that she may thus manage and control the property, and thereby raise and educate the children, and the children the remainder.

In Adams v. Adams (1898) 20 Ky. L. Rep. 655, 47 S. W. 335, a devise of testator's residuary estate to his daughter "and her children in their exclusive right" was regarded as giving the daughter a life estate, with remainder to the children, the court saying that if such a devise should be construed as giving a joint estate, the quantity of interest each would take would remain uncertain and would shift on the birth of each after-born child,—a condition of affairs which the testator would hardly be supposed to have intended to create.

In Kuhn v. Kuhn (1902) 24 Ky. L. Rep. 112, 68 S. W. 16, where testator devised to his daughter a farm, adding: "I give this farm to her and her children, to be theirs with all its appurtenances," it was held that the daughter took a life estate only, with remainder in fee to her children.

In Sims v. Skinner (1904) 118 Ky. 573, 81 S. W. 703, where a testator devised all his property to his daughter "and her children," she having at his death and the probate of his will four living children, it was held that there was nothing in the will to take the case out of the general rule that, in the case of a gift from a father to his daughter and her children, the daughter takes a life estate, with remainder to the children.

In Smith v. Smith (1905) 119 Ky. 899, 85 S. W. 169, a will containing the following provisions: "I also give to my wife 100 shares of bank stock in the Farmer's Nat. Bank of Richmond, Ky. at her death this property goes to my son and his children. I also give to my wife during her life 140 acres of land [describing it] at her death to my son and his children," it was held that aside from the general presumption existing in such a case, as the testator had made a distinct difference in the devises to his son, having devised certain other real estate to him absolutely, the son should be deemed to take a life estate only, with remainder to his children.

In Haydon v. Layton (1910) — Ky. —, 128 S. W. 90, a will by which testator bequeathed "the whole of my estate not hereby specifically devised, to my executors in trust for Ann, Eliza, Ellen and her children. Ann, Jim, Kate and Agnes and such other children as Ellen may hereafter have," was held, in accordance with the established rule, to give Ellen a life estate, with remainder to her children.

The same rule is applied in Burns v. Moseley (1915) 162 Ky. 190, 172 S. W. 521, to a case in which a father devised certain lands to his daughter "and her children if she should have any living, and should she have no bodily heirs living, then it is to go to my legal heirs."

In Duncan v. King (1915) 163 Ky. 577, 174 S. W. 84, where a testator having a daughter, who, at the time of his death, presumption are, in the case of a devise to testator's wife and children, that otherwise, if the wife were to take a part in fee simple, this part of the estate might pass to some stranger in blood to the husband,—a possibility not

was a young, married woman, about twenty years of age, with one living child, after giving his wife all his property during widowhood directed that, at her death or marriage, his estate should "be equally divided between my three children," naming them, adding, "and it is also my will that my daughter, Mary A. Glenn hold the money and property which may be her portion only in trust for her children which she now has or may hereafter have . . . I having only one daughter I feel desirous to provide and secure to her heirs the small pittance I as their grandparent can give or leave them,"—it was held that it was the intention of the testator, as gathered from the language of the instrument and the situation of the parties and their relation to each other, that, after the death of his wife, one third of his property should go to his daughter for her life, and ultimately to her children in fee.

In Brock v. Brock (1916) 168 Ky. 847, 183 S. W. 213, where testator devised certain property "to my daughter Fannie Cromwell Dorsey and children," it was held that as it was clear that the testator intended not only that his daughter should enjoy the estate, but that her children, born and to be born, were to have a beneficial interest therein, such intention should be effectuated by giving a life estate to the daughter and the remainder to her children.

In Lacey v. Lacey (1916) 170 Ky. 166, 185 S. W. 495, where a husband, a short time after his marriage, and before the birth of any children, made a will by which he bequeathed to his wife "everything of every kind and description real and personal I may have or acquire, for her sole use and benefit and to any children which may be born to us," it was held that although it was clearly his purpose that, if no children should be born to them, his wife should have his whole estate, it was equally clear that, in the event that should happen, he intended to provide for both, and that, in the light of the subsequent birth of the children, the testator having such a contingency in view at the time the will was written, there was no reason why the will should not be construed as if the children had been in existence at the time it was made; and therefore that there was no reason why the general rule of interpretation that a devise by a husband and father to his wife and children should be construed to be a devise to his wife for life and to the children in remainder, in the absence of anything in the instrument to show a contrary intent, should not be applied.

In Noe v. Miller (1879) 31 N. J. Eq. 234, the following testamentary provision: "I do give unto my daughter, Elizabeth M. Noe, wife of John Noe, one share in addition to what she has already had, her said husband not to have any control of said legacy but to be hers and her child's or children's forever; but in case she should die leaving no child or children the said legacy may be claimed by my other children according to the tenor of my will," it was held that, although there was no doubt that the testator intended the children of his daughter Elizabeth should, by force of his will, take some interest in the share he gave their mother, he had failed to make clear precisely what he intended to give to them, and that it would be more consonant with his probable intention that the daughter should take an estate for life, with remainder to her children, than that they should share equally with their parent at once. But in Gordon v. Jackson (1899) 58 N. J. Eq. 166, 43 Atl. 98, it is said that the case of Noe v. Miller (N. J.) supra, was taken out of the general rule by the phrase, "her said husband not to have any control of the said legacy." [For discussion of the effect of this phrase, see text and footnotes 60-64, infra.]

In Forest Oil Co. v. Crawford (1896) 23 C. C. A. 55, 37 U. S. App. 408, 77 Fed. 106, it was held that under a devise "to my son Matthew and to his children," provided he should pay certain legacies, the son took a life estate, with remainder to his children. And the Pennsylvania supreme court, in Crawford v. Forest Oil Co. (1904) 208 Pa. 5, 57 Atl. 47, construing the same will, placed upon it the same construction.

In Vaughan's Estate (1911) 230 Pa. 554, 79 Atl. 750, it was held that where the language employed by the testator constitutes the setting aside of a child's share, to be held in trust for him or her and his or her children, the parent takes a life estate, with remainder to the children in fee.

In Elliott v. Diamond Coal & Coke Co. (1911) 230 Pa. 423, 79 Atl. 708, a will by which testator devised to his daughter, naming her, a farm, "to have and to hold unto my said daughter and her children forever," it was held that, under the prevailing rules of construction in Pennsylvania, the gift was one of a life estate to the mother, with remainder in fee to the children as a class.

In Keown's Estate (1913) 238 Pa. 343, 86 Atl. 270, where testator, who had given his daughters shares in the residue of his estate, went on to provide: "The shares bequeathed to my daughters is for their own separate use and that of their children should they have any, and is in nowise to be subject to transfer by other parties," it was held that a daughter took a life estate, with remainder in the children who might be living at her death, the court saying: "The reason of the rule lies in the fact that the devise to children is to them as a class which cannot be ascertained until the death of the parent, when the possibility of issue is extinct, and the parent can therefore, from necessity, take only a life estate. It is immaterial to the application to be supposed consonant to his wishes and intentions.<sup>20</sup> In the case of devises to a son or daughter and his or her children, the reasons given are, that it is not to be supposed that the testator meant to give such an estate that the quantity of interest each takes will remain uncertain and shift at the birth of each after-born child,<sup>21</sup> and that the provision made for the son or daughter will be diminished.<sup>22</sup> The reason given in Keown's Estate (1913) 238 Pa. 343, 86 Atl. 270, "that the devise to children gives to them as a class which cannot be ascertained until the death of the parent, when the possibility of issue is extinct, and the parent can therefore, from necessity, take only a life estate," is pure nonsense, as it assumes the very point to be decided, i. e., that the gift to the children is not immediate.

Opinions have differed as to whether this counter presumption is a proper one.<sup>23</sup> Its insubstantial character is indicated by the fact that so many different reasons have been assigned for it; and it may be urged against it, that if the testator meant the parent to take a life estate, it would be both easy and natural to say so. While the relationship between the testator and the person named as parent may properly be taken into consideration as bearing on the question whether the testator intended such parent to enjoy the whole (from which it follows that the children take, not concurrently, but in succession; see footnote 50, infra), it should not be treated as sufficient in itself to establish that intention. So to hold is to come perilously near to making a will for the testator.

This counter presumption has had its chief recognition in the courts of Kentucky and Pennsylvania; but has made little or no headway in other jurisdictions.<sup>24</sup> Out of it has grown the supposed rule stated in RICE v. KLETTE, ante, 45, and some other cases. It does not, however, seem to have been ap-of the rule that there are no children in existence when the will is made."

In Hall v. Hall (1911) 84 Vt. 259, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 191, 79 Atl. 971, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 490, the court approved of the rule that when a devise is to a wife and her children, and there is nothing in the will to indicate a different intention, it will be inferred that the wife is to take a life estate only, and the children are to take in remainder.

See also, in this connection, cases in footnotes 20-22, infra.

<sup>20</sup> Hood v. Dawson (1895) 98 Ky. 285, 33 S. W. 75; Brand v. Rhodes (1895) 17 Ky. L. Rep. 97, 30 S. W. 597.

<sup>21</sup> In Adams v. Adams (1898) 20 Ky. L. Rep. 655, 47 S. W. 335, it is said that if a joint estate is given, the quantity of interest each takes will remain uncertain and shift on the birth of each after-born child; for confessedly in such cases the devise opens up for the benefit of all the children, whether in existence at the time the will speaks or not; and that it is hardly to be supposed that the testator intended to create such an estate.

The same doctrine was adhered to in Sims v. Skinner (1904) 118 Ky. 573, 81 S. W. 703, the court saying that while ordinarily gifts and conveyances to a mother and her children, or a father and his children, will create a joint tenancy, a different rule of construction should prevail for gifts from a father to his daughter and her children, or to a son and his children, or from a husband to a wife and children, for the reason stated in Adams v. Adams (Ky.) supra.

<sup>22</sup> In Noe v. Miller (1879) 31 N. J. Eq. 234, it is said that it is much more natural and reasonable to conclude, where a father makes a bequest of a particular sum or fund to a child and also the children of L.R.A.1917B.

such child, jointly, without indicating in any way when their enjoyment shall commence, that he intends the parent shall have simply the income or produce during life, and that the principal shall go to the children on the death of their parents, than that he meant that his grandchildren should share equally with their parents at once, and have a right to demand a division of the fund as soon as it is payable.

<sup>23</sup> In Re Jones [1910] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 167, it was said by Joyce, J., that "a priori, it is in the highest degree improbable, if not impossible, that a rational testator should give or devise property to a child and his or her children as a class, or so as to make them take not in succession, but concurrently. In his book on the construction of wills, the late Mr. Vaughan Hawkins says, in Appendix, II., page 316, after discussing the law: 'It is conceded that, notwithstanding these cases, the rule as at present established requires some aid from the context to convert the gift to the children into a gift in remainder, and that without such aid the force of the expressions themselves is to cause the parent and children to take concurrently.' The opposite rule, however, if established, would no doubt be a convenient and probably beneficial rule of construction."

<sup>24</sup> In Newill v. Newill (1872) L. R. 7 Ch. Eng. 252, 41 L. J. Ch. N. S. 432, 26 L. T. N. S. 175, 20 Week. Rep. 308, it was said by Lord Hatherly, L. C., that there is no absolute rule of construction by which, in the case of a gift to a wife in trust for herself and her children, the court will, from some presumed intent on the part of the testator, lay hold of every small circumstance to support the conclusion that the testator intended what the court, upon some presumed rule, conceives to be his most

plied in Kentucky outside of cases in which the testator was the husband or father of the person named as parent; though in Pennsylvania it has been applied where the relation of the testator to the parent was that of brother<sup>25</sup> or uncle.<sup>26</sup> It has no application where it appears that the children are not to take as a class.<sup>27</sup>

According to the doctrine in Wild's Case (1599) 6 Coke, 16b, 77 Eng. Reprint, 277, if one devises land to another and his children or issue, and such other has not any issue at the time of the devise, the word "children" or "issue" shall be taken as a word of limitation, thereby giving the parent an estate tail.<sup>28</sup> This, however, is not a rule of law, but a rule of construction,<sup>29</sup> and accordingly does not apply where the effect of its application will be to defeat rather than to promote the testator's intention to benefit the children; as where estates tail are by statute converted into a fee in the first taker,<sup>30</sup> or where the subject of the gift is personal property, the effect of the application of the rule to which would be to give the parent an absolute interest,<sup>31</sup> or the natural intention a priori, and will modify such a bequest into a bequest to the wife for life, with remainder to the children.

<sup>25</sup> In Fox v. Dunmon (1861) 4 Phila. (Pa.) 323, it was held that under a devise to the testator's sisters and their children, the sisters took an estate for life, with remainder to their children.

<sup>26</sup> In Chambers v. Union Trust Co. (1912) 235 Pa. 610, 84 Atl. 512, where testator devised his farm to his nephew, naming him, "and to his children; but in case he should die without legal issue then it is to go to the heirs of my father as directed by the intestate laws of Pennsylvania," it was held that although the nephew had no children living at the time of testator's decease, the gift was to be construed as one to the nephew for life, with remainder to his children.

<sup>27</sup> In Hazelett v. Farthing (1893) 94 Ky. 421, 42 Am. St. Rep. 365, 22 S. W. 646, where testator devised property "to my beloved wife and children," naming them, but purposely omitting to name one of his children, and naming a stepson, it was held to be plain that the testator intended to give to his wife, not a life estate, with remainder to the others named, but a joint and equal interest in the property with them.

<sup>28</sup> See footnote 4, supra, for statement of the resolutions in Wild's Case.

<sup>29</sup> In Carr v. Estill (1855) 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 309, 63 Am. Dec. 548, it is said that although, where lands are devised to a person and his children, the words abstractly and literally import an immediate gift not only to the devisee in esse, but to his or her children also, yet, if there be no children at the time, it does not necessarily follow, as seems to have been supposed, that it was not the testator's intent that the children should take by way of remainder.

<sup>30</sup> In Turner v. Ivie (1871) 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 222, it is said that, in view of the abolition of estates tail in Tennessee, the rule in Wild's Case should no longer be recognized as a rule of testamentary construction.

And see, to like purport, Carr v. Estill (Ky.) supra.

<sup>31</sup> The question has been raised whether the first branch of the rule in Wild's Case, namely, that where there is a gift to a person and his or her children, and no children are in existence, the word "children" will be regarded as a word of limitation, and not of purchase,—applies in a case of a bequest of personality, for the reason that the words which will raise an estate tail in the case of realty will give the first taker an absolute interest in the case of personality, thereby defeating instead of effectuating testator's intention to benefit the children. The question was discussed in the case of Stokes v. Heron (1845) 12 Clark & F. 183, 8 Eng. Reprint, 1361, 9 Jur. 563, 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 160, where, however, the point was not decided by the House of Lords, although Lord Brougham expressed the opinion that the rule applied equally to gifts of personal as well as of real estate. Sir John Romilly, in Audsley v. Horn (1858) 26 Beav. 195, 53 Eng. Reprint, 872, affirmed in (1859) 1 De G. F. & J. 226, 45 Eng. Reprint, 345, 20 L. J. Ch. N. S. 201, 6 Jur. N. S. 205, 8 Week. Rep. 150, states that the applicability of the rule to bequests of personality has been disputed in a great variety of cases, such as Knigh v. Ellis (1789) 2 Bro. Ch. 570, 29 Eng. Reprint, 312; Buffar v. Bradford (1741) 2 Atk. 220, 26 Eng. Reprint, 537; and Stone v. Maule (1829) 2 Sim. 490, 57 Eng. Reprint, 871, 29 Revised Rep. 150. In discussing the point he further said: "Upon a review of the whole of the cases upon this subject, I think that, setting aside some contradictory decisions, which it is not very easy to reconcile, the tendency of modern decisions has been, in cases like the present, to hold that, in personality, the bequest gives an interest for life to the mother, with an interest in remainder to the children. Thus, in Crawford v. Trotter (1819) 4 Madd. Ch. 361, 20 Revised Rep. 312, 56 Eng. Reprint, 788, a bequest to one and her children was held to give an interest for life to the mother, with remainder to her children; and in Morse v. Morse (1829) 2 Sim. 485, 57 Eng. Reprint, 869, 29 Revised Rep. 147, a bequest of a sum of money to the testator's daughter and her children was held to give an interest for life in the daughter, with remainder to all her children. I certainly cannot say that cases are not to be found in the books which it is not easy entirely to reconcile with this view of the subject; but I think that the context shows that the children are to take as purchasers.<sup>32</sup>

It has been held that the rule in Wild's Case does not apply where the devise is to a trustee for the sole and separate use of a woman, and to her children, and not directly to her and her children, as in such a case there is no necessity for construing the word "children" to be a word of limitation, for the purpose of effectuating the intention of the testator.<sup>33</sup>

Where the rule is held not to apply, the presumption seems to be that the parent takes an estate for life, with remainder to the children. The decisions in which this presumption has been applied, or in which a like result has been reached with the aid of the context, may be found in the subjoined footnote.<sup>34</sup> view I have stated is that which is most consistent with the line of modern cases and their tendency, and generally most in accordance with the spirit and intention of the testator in these cases. I also find that I have, upon two former occasions, adopted the same view; viz., in Dawson v. Bourne (1852) 16 Beav. 29, 51 Eng. Reprint. 686, and in Jeffery v. De Vitre (1857) 24 Beav. 208, 53 Eng. Reprint. 372."

So in Re Willmot (1897) 76 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 415, 45 Week. Rep. 492, it is held that the rule in Wild's Case has no application to personalty; and in Re Jones [1910] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 167, 79 L. J. Ch. N. S. 34, 101 L. T. N. S. 549, it is said to be well settled that, as to personalty, the rule in Wild's Case has no application.

<sup>32</sup> In Buffar v. Bradford (1741) 2 Atk. 220, 26 Eng. Reprint 537, where there was a gift of a share of a residuary estate "to my niece Buffar and children born of her body," and another gift, in an event mentioned, of a further share, by a direction that "such part shall, when the time of possession comes go to Mrs. Buffar and her children, because they will have then four of the eight parts," and Mrs. Buffar had no children at the date of the will, and predeceased the testator, leaving issue, it was held that the words "when the time of possession comes" indicated that the word "children" was not a word of limitation.

<sup>33</sup> Turner v. Ivie (1871) 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 222.

<sup>34</sup> In Paine v. Wagner (1841) 12 Sim. 184, 59 Eng. Reprint, 1102, Vice Chancellor Shadwell said that he understood the law to be that if there is a gift simply to parents and children, and there are children living at the time, the children take with their parents; but that if there are no children, then the parents take for their lives, with remainder to their children.

In Grieve v. Grieve (1867) L. R. 4 Eq. (Eng.) 180, it was held that under the following devise: "To my nieces, Louisa and Emily I leave my house at Clifton after my sister's death, and to their children, and if they have not any to their brother William and his children, always burdened with £10 a year to the Clifton school. The furniture to go with the house, but changed as my sister may like,"—the direction that the furniture should go with the house evinced an intention that the nieces should take, not an estate tail, but an estate for life, with remainder to their children.

In Re Moyles (1878) Ir. L. R. 1 Eq. L.R.A.1917B.

155, where testatrix devised lands to a woman who, at the date of the devise and at the death of the testatrix, had never been married, "and to any child or children she may have by any husband or husbands with whom she may intermarry, in such shares and proportions and subject to such limitations and conditions as she may by deed or will . . . direct, limit or appoint; and in default of appointment, or so far as the same shall not extend or take effect, in equal shares to and amongst such children if more than one," and if only one, then to that one, "and to their respective heirs and assigns" upon attaining twenty-one years, with a limitation over in default of children to attain such age, it was held that, as there was an express limitation to the children and their heirs for a tenancy in common, vesting thus in them together and by themselves at one time the whole estate, and this with a period fixed for vesting, and a limitation over upon these children dying under twenty-one, the mother took only an estate for life; this construction being further supported by the fact that, by a codicil, trustees were appointed to preserve contingent remainders.

A bequest to a woman and her children will, where the woman was then unmarried, create in her a life estate simply, with remainder over to her children. Furrow v. Merrell (1853) 23 Ala. 705.

The refusal of the Kentucky court of appeals to follow the rule in Wild's Case, as not adapted, in view of the statutory conversion of fees tail into fees simple, to promote the intention of the testator, has led to the adoption in that state of the special rule of construction that where there is a devise to one and his children, and such person has at the time no children, the children will be regarded as taking by way of remainder. See Carr v. Estill (1855) 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 309, 63 Am. Dec. 548.

In Righter v. Forrester (1867) 1 Bush (Ky.) 278, it was held, construing a devise to testator's daughter, who was then unmarried, "and her bodily heirs," that the phrase quoted was used to denote children, and that the daughter therefore took for life only, with remainder to her children in fee.

In Chambers v. Union Trust Co. (1912) 235 Pa. 610, 84 Atl. 512, it is held that the same rule of construction applies where there are no children living at the death of the testator as where there are, and that in both cases the parent takes the life estate, with remainder to his or her children.

III. *Indicia tending to support or vary the presumption that parents and children take concurrently.

It has been said that where the construction is doubtful, the courts lean toward giving the parent a life estate,<sup>35</sup> and that a slight indication of an intention that the children shall not take jointly with the parent will give a life estate to the parent, with a remainder to the children.<sup>36</sup> Two reasons are given for this inclination, one being that children born after the death of the testator may otherwise be cut off,<sup>37</sup> and the other being that the children, if tenants in common with the parent, might, on arriving at age, demand a partition, and thus deprive the parent, who in these cases is frequently, if not usually, the primary object of the testator's bounty, of the means of support in old age.<sup>38</sup> The first of these reasons is a valid one only where the subject of the gift is personalty and there is reason to infer that testator meant after-born as well as existing children to benefit there-

In Nix v. Ray (1852) 5 Rich. L. (S. C.) 423, it is held that where a gift of personal property is made to one and his issue, or the heirs of his body, with a limitation over in the event of his dying without leaving issue or heirs of his body living at the time of his death, the first taker has an estate for life only, and his issue or heirs of his body living at the time of his death take in remainder as purchasers.

In Turner v. Ivie (1871) 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 222, where testator gave certain property to his son "in trust for the sole use and benefit of my daughter, Sarah E. and to her children if she should have any, . . . and should my daughter, the said Sarah E., die without any child or children, then the above specified property to return to my children and be equally divided among them," and at the death of the testator Sarah was unmarried and without children, being only eleven years of age, it was held that, giving to each word the proper meaning, it was apparent that the testator intended to give the land to the trustee for the sole use and benefit of his daughter, and if she should marry and have children, he then intended to give the land to them at her death.

The fact that there were no children at the death of the testator is a sufficient circumstance to support the inference of an intention to give the mother a life estate, with a remainder to the children. Cannon v. Apperson (1885) 14 Lea (Tenn.) 553.

In Scruggs v. Mayberry (1916) — Tenn. —, 188 S. W. 207, where testator devised certain lands to one, "and the heirs of his body and if he should die without heirs then the land I have given him to go to his sister Lucinda and her heirs, that is, the heirs of her body," it was held (the word "heirs" being construed as meaning children) that the devisee named would take an estate for life, with remainder to his children, although they were not yet in being at the time of testator's decease.

In Sisson v. Seabury (1832) 1 Sumn. 235, Fed. Cas. No. 12,913, where testator devised to his grandson, who, at the time of testator's death, was a minor without children, not then having been married, a certain farm "to him my said grandson Philip Sisson and to his male children lawfully begotten of his body and their heirs forever to be equally divided amongst them and their L.R.A.1917B.

heirs forever," it was held that, in order to give effect to the provision that all the male children of Philip shall have equal shares in the devised premises in fee simple, the devise ought to be construed as an estate to Philip Sisson for life only, with a contingent remainder in fee to his male children.

<sup>35</sup> Goss v. Eberhart (1850) 29 Ga. 545.

<sup>36</sup> In Crockett v. Crockett (1848) 2 Phill. Ch. 553, 41 Eng. Reprint 1057, 17 L. J. Ch. N. S. 230, 12 Jur. 234, it is said that even where a gift is simply to a mother and her children, a very slight indication of intention that the children shall not take jointly with the mother has been thought sufficient to enable the court to decree a life estate to the mother, with remainder to her children.

Other provisions of the will, indicating an intention that the parent and children should not take jointly, even though such indications may be very slight, or be founded upon small circumstances, will induce the court to interpret a bequest as a gift of the life estate to the parent, with remainder to the children. Mill v. Mill (1875) Ir. Rep. 9 Eq. 104.

Under a gift of personalty to A and his children, the parent and children take prima facie concurrently as joint tenants; but slight circumstances have been laid hold of by the courts as enabling them to come to the conclusion that a gift for life to A, with remainder to his children, was intended. Re Wilmot (1897) 76 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 415, 45 Week. Rep. 492.

See also, to the same effect, Williams v. McConico (1860) 36 Ala. 22; Gordon v. Jackson (1899) 58 N. J. Eq. 166, 43 Atl. 98; Cannon v. Apperson (1875) 14 Lea (Tenn.) 553; Bunch v. Hardy (1879) 3 Lea (Tenn.) 543.

<sup>37</sup> Bunch v. Hardy, supra; Williams v. McConico infra.

<sup>38</sup> In Williams v. McConico (1860) 36 Ala. 22, it is said that slight indications in the context of such an intention on the part of the testator have frequently been thought sufficient to justify courts in holding, especially in bequests of personalty, that the parent shall take for life, with remainder to his children, including all the children that may be born before the termination of the parent's life estate. "The chief reason for such an inclination on the part of the courts where the gift is to one by, and executory gifts of personality are regarded as inadmissible,<sup>39</sup> since, as has hereinbefore been pointed out, where the subject of the gift is real estate, after-born children may take by executory devise, the estate taken by the parent and existing children opening to admit them.<sup>40</sup> The reason does not apply where the bequest is to the widow and children of the testator himself, as in such case there is no presumption of an intention to benefit after-born children.<sup>41</sup> The second reason involves the assumption that the person named as parent is the primary object of the testator's bounty,—an assumption which cannot be universally made without discrediting the presumptive meaning which concededly attaches to a bequest to one and his children.

It is difficult to say just what will amount to a sufficient indication of a contrary intention to overcome the presumption that the parent and children are to take concurrently; and the want of harmony among the decisions on the question has more than once been the subject of judicial comment.

It has been held that the court will not strain the natural and plain meaning of words to give the parent a life estate, with remainder to the children, rather than a joint estate, where the statute of distributions puts the parent and children upon the same footing.<sup>42</sup>

The presumption that the parent and children are to take concurrently is clearly overcome where it is inferable that the parent was contemplated by the testator as taking an estate for life,<sup>43</sup> as where the parent is spoken of as taking the property "as a loan,"<sup>44</sup> or as and his children, there being children in case at the time, is that the other construction resulting from the application of the first branch of the rule in Wild's Case (1599) 6 Coke, 17, 77 Eng. Reprint, 277, 10 Eng. Rul. Cas. 773, by confining the gift to those children who are living at the testator's death, excludes entirely all those born after that event. Another reason which has been suggested is that the children, if tenants in common with the parent, might, on arriving at age, demand a partition, and thus deprive the parent, who in these cases is frequently, if not usually, the primary object of the testator's bounty, of the means of support in old age."

<sup>39</sup> Where there is a bequest to a man and his children of personal estate, a child born after the death of the testator shall not take, for being vested upon the death of the testator, it shall not be divested. Cook v. Cook (1706) 2 Vern. 545, 23 Eng. Reprint, 952.

<sup>40</sup> See footnote 14, supra.

<sup>41</sup> Newsom's Trusts (1878) Ir. L. R. 1 Eq. 373.

<sup>42</sup> Jackson v. Coggin (1859) 29 Ga. 403.

<sup>43</sup> In Jones v. Jones (1849) 7 Ga. 76, where testator devised his residuary property to his son and daughters, adding: "And as respects my said daughters I give the same to them and to them only, personally, individually and exclusively, and to their children, and not to their husbands . . . but as before mentioned is hereby willed and devised bona fide in right and use to the said [names] my daughters and their children respectively and to them only so long as they or either of them shall live," it was held that it was manifestly the intention of the testator that each of his daughters named should take a separate estate for life in a share of the property, with remainder in fee to their children respectively, born and to be born, and that there was nothing in the technical terms of the instrument necessarily to contravene this purpose.

L.R.A.1917B.

Jones v. Jones (Ga.) supra, was followed in the case of a will containing an identical provision in Jennings v. Parker (1858) 24 Ga. 621.

In Bowers v. Bowers (1871) 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 293, where testator bequeathed "to my daughter," naming her, certain described property, "to have and to hold the same to her and her children, to their special use and benefit forever," it was held that the daughter had the legal title to the whole property, and an equal equitable interest therein with each of her children; that the use of the word "forever" indicated that the testator intended that there should be no limitation as to the time during which the beneficiaries were to have the use and benefit of the property, nor any restriction of the devise to the children then living of his daughter, but that he intended that his daughter and all of her children should enjoy the use and benefit of the property until her death, when the legal and equitable title should be vested in the children.

<sup>44</sup> In Coakley v. Daniel (1858) 57 N. C. (4 Jones, Eq.) 89, where testator, who, by the context of his will, evinced an intention to give what he called the balance of his property, to be equally divided between his two sons and his daughter and her children, the two sons taking a third part each, and the daughter and her children taking the remaining third, gave the residue of his estate "to be equally divided between the three, to Henderson and Thomas as gifts and to Sarah as a loan," and in another clause, where he provided for a division after the death of his wife, expressed himself thus: "All the property to be divided between Sarah B. Coakley, Henderson L. Daniel and Thomas P. Daniel share and share alike to Henderson and Thomas and their heirs and assigns as gifts, to Sarah B. Coakley as a loan for the benefit of her and her children," it was held that an intention to give the daughter an estate for life was evinced by the enjoying the property as a whole,<sup>45</sup> or as taking "for herself and her children," indicating that the testator had in mind that there was to be a difference between mother and children in respect to the title or interest which they were respectively to take.<sup>46</sup> So, where the gift is like of the word "loan," and that her children accordingly took a remainder interest.

<sup>45</sup> In Parsons v. Coke (1858) 4 Drew. 290, 62 Eng. Reprint, 114, where testator provided that if any of certain legatees should die without issue, "then the legacy of him or her so dying to go to and be equally divided between the survivors of them and the issue of such survivor; such issue to take the parents' share only and to be paid at the age of twenty-one years," it was held that, as the issue were intended to take something, and were not to take with their parents, but to take their share, the parents took for life, with remainder to their children.

In Turner v. Patterson (1837) 5 Dana (Ky.) 295, a devise as follows: "Item, to my daughter, Catharine Patterson, I give her and her children, the 50 acres of land they now live on, to each an equal part," which, had it stood alone, would have been taken to import that the mother and her children should hold the land as tenants in common, was, in view of another clause in the will in which testator said: "Catharine Patterson is to have no more than the 50 acres of land above stated," to give her the whole of the land during her life, with remainder to her children, "each an equal part."

In Mefford v. Dougherty (1889) 89 Ky. 58, 25 Am. St. Rep. 251, 11 S. W. 716, it was held that, under a devise to a son "and to his children, the heirs of his body," of a tract of land to which the testator referred in a subsequent part of the will as the land "I have given my son," the son took a life estate, with remainder to his children.

In Ponton v. McEmore (1839) 22 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. Eq.) 285, where testator, who had devised and bequeathed certain property in trust for the support and maintenance of his daughter, further declared: "The property I hereby leave in trust for the benefit of my daughter, Mary E. Avent is to be applied at the discretion of the trustee for the support and maintenance of Mary E. Avent and her children and no part or parcel thereof to be subject to the debts of her husband," it was held that—taking into consideration the declaration of the testator that the property should not be subject to the debts of his daughter's husband, that the bequest thereof was made to a trustee, that the trusts are to be collected from intimations as to the object of his bounty in different parts of his will, that in the first part his daughter is solely named as that object, and in the latter part his daughter and her children are all named as such objects—the testator's purpose would be most effectually promoted by holding that the bequest was made in trust for his daughter, to her sole and exclusive use for life, and after her death, then in trust for her children,—especially as such construction would not limit the benefit of the bequest to children in being at the death of the testator, which evidently was not his intention.

Where the object of the testator, either

ing that the bequest was made in trust for his daughter, to her sole and exclusive use for life, and after her death, then in trust for her children,—especially as such construction would not limit the benefit of the bequest to children in being at the death of the testator, which evidently was not his intention.

<sup>46</sup> In Desmond v. MacNeill (1916) 90 Conn. 142, 96 Atl. 924, where testator, after giving the use of certain real estate to his wife and a sister for and during their lives, gave the remainder over upon their decease "to my cousin Mrs. Lizzie MacNeil for herself and children," it was held that as the gift was not made to Mrs. MacNeill and her children, but to Mrs. MacNeill for herself and children, indicating that the testator had in mind that there was to be a difference between mother and children in respect to the title or interest which they were respectively to take, the devise should not be regarded as one to Mrs. MacNeill and her children as tenants in common, but as giving the property to her for her life, with remainder over to her children.

In Hannan v. Osborn (1834) 4 Paige (N. Y.) 336, where testator devised and bequeathed to his sister "all the remainder of my estate both real and personal to have and to hold the same to her and her children forever," it was held that as the devise was not to the mother and her children immediately, but to her, to have and to hold the same to her and to her children, it was evident that the intention of the testator was that the children were not to take immediately, but only by way of remainder after the death of the mother; and this construction was strengthened by the circumstance that the testator used the term "children" in the plural when there was but one child in existence at the time of making the will.

<sup>47</sup> In Re McVicker (1890) Ir. L. R. 25 Eq. 307, where testator bequeathed all his property "for the absolute use and benefit of my said wife Margaret and my infant daughter Nelly, or any other of my lawful issue living at my decease; and if no child shall be living at my decease, then my said property shall become vested in my said wife Margaret so long as she remains my widow . . . and in case of her death or marriage my wish is that my executors (in case I leave lawful issue surviving) shall use and exercise a discretionary power over my aforesaid property for the absolute use and benefit of my said lawful issue," it was held that the wife took an estate for widowhood only, with remainder to the children, and not jointly with them.

<sup>48</sup> In Izod v. Izod (1863) 11 Week. Rep.

er expressed<sup>49</sup> or inferable from the relation of the parties,<sup>50</sup> is to provide a support and maintenance for the parent, the parent will be regarded as taking an estate for life in order to avoid a construction which, by making the children tenants in common with her, would enable them, when they came of age, to demand a partition, and thus leave their mother destitute in her old age. It has been held, however, that the mere fact that the quantity of land devised is small cannot reasonably be allowed to so affect and change the plain meaning of the words employed as to make them imply that the testator intended to give the parent a life estate and the children the remainder.<sup>51</sup>

The presumption that the parent and children are to take concurrently is equally repelled where there are indications that testator did not contemplate the parent as taking any absolute interest,<sup>52</sup> as where the parent is given a (Eng.) 452, where money was bequeathed to trustees to invest and pay the annual income, "and also all or any portion of the principal thereof, to or for the benefit of Mrs. Sarah Izod, the widow of my son, Joseph Izod, and of his three children [naming them], in such manner, shares and proportions, at such time or times, under such conditions and for such purposes, as they, . . . shall in their or his absolute or uncontrolled discretion think proper; but if the said Sarah Izod shall marry again, then I direct that her interest under this my will shall cease and determine." the master of the rolls said that though he was puzzled by the direction as to cesser of Mrs. Izod's interest, yet, as the trustees might have appointed the capital to her, she would (the power not being exercisable, in consequence of the refusal of the trustees to accept the trust) take jointly with the children.

<sup>49</sup> Chestnut v. Meares (1857) 56 N. C. (3 Jones, Eq.) 416.

<sup>50</sup> Where a testator devised his property for the benefit of his wife and children, the court will anxiously lay hold of any slight circumstance which will enable it to construe the gift as an estate for life to the wife, remainder to the children, and not as creating a joint tenancy. Re McVicker (Ir.) supra.

In Salmon v. Tidmarsh (1859) 5 Jur. N. S. (Eng.) 1380, it is said that under a gift to a wife and her children, if there is nothing to denote the proportions in which the wife and children are respectively to take, then the court is called upon to determine the proportions, and that the most natural disposition is to give the property to the wife for her life and afterwards to her children.

In Faribault v. Taylor (1850) 58 N. C. (5 Jones, Eq.) 219, where testator gave the share of his estate to which his oldest daughter might be entitled to trustees in trust "for the benefit of her and her children free and exclusive from any control of her present or any other husband she may have," and at the time of the testator's death the daughter had three children, it was held that the manifest intent of the testator would be much more effectually carried out by giving to the daughter a life estate, with remainder to all the children which she might have, rather than an absolute estate as tenant in common with her children living at the time of the testator's L.R.A.1917B.

death, as the latter construction might, by diminishing the present and immediate interest in the daughter, render it an inadequate support for her during her life, and because it would exclude from the benefit of the fund any after-born children.

<sup>51</sup> Hampton v. Wheeler (1888) 99 N. C. 222, 6 S. E. 236; but compare Bunch v. Hardy (1879) 3 Lea. (Tenn.) 543, set out in footnote 55, infra, where the amount of property devised seems to have been taken into consideration.

<sup>52</sup> In Hatfield v. Sohler (1873) 114 Mass. 48, where a testatrix devised real estate to a married daughter "to her sole and separate use free from the interference and control of her said husband or of any other person . . . to have and to hold the said estates, with all the privileges and appurtenances to the same belonging to her the said Ann Louisa Hatfield to her sole and separate use as aforesaid free from the interference or control of her said husband or of any other person whatsoever, and to the children or child of the said Louisa or the issue of any deceased child in equal proportions," it was held that as the devise to the daughter was not in the terms commonly used to create a fee, and as it contained no words extending her interest beyond her life, or indicating an intention to give her the power of disposal during her life, the intention of the testatrix was to give her an estate for life and the remainder to her children or the issue of any deceased child, in equal proportions.

In Re Jones [1910] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 167, where testator, upon his wife's decease, devised and bequeathed his estate "to my dear children in the following proportion, namely two fifths of the whole of my estate to my son Mordecai John Morgan Jones and the other three fifths to my daughters Mary Margaret and Ellen Elizabeth in two equal shares, share and share alike, and to the child or children of the three said children. In case any of my children dying and leaving no legal issue, the share or shares of those dying to be given to the surviving child or children of such as will be dead. My daughters' and granddaughters' shares to be independent and free from all husbands,"—it was held that there was sufficient to warrant the assumption that the children of the testatrix' children should not take concurrently with, but in succession to, their parents.

limited power of disposal inconsistent with a taking in fee,<sup>53</sup> or where the gift is in trust for the parent's support and maintenance, evincing no intention to give a greater interest,<sup>54</sup> or where the children are referred to as taking the whole, showing that the parent is to take no part absolutely.<sup>55</sup>

<sup>53</sup> In Koenig v. Kraft (1888) 87 Ky. 95, 12 Am. St. Rep. 463, 7 S. W. 622, where testator gave and bequeathed to his wife all his estate "for her and her child, Emma Kraft's sole use and benefit, and give my beloved wife full power and authority to sell my real estate what I now hold on Walnut near Clay street but no other," it was held, in view of the limitation of the power of the wife as to the disposition of the realty, which was inconsistent with a grant of the fee, that she took a life estate for the use and benefit of herself and child, with remainder in fee to the child at her death.

In Mitchell v. Simpson (1889) 88 Ky. 125, 10 S. W. 372, where the testator, after devising certain lands to his daughter, went on to say: "The said land is willed to my daughter and her bodily heirs except the 200 acres in Scott county, Kentucky, which she is to have the right to dispose of as she wishes," it was held that the words "bodily heirs" were used as synonymous with "children," and therefore that the daughter took a life estate and her children a remainder.

<sup>54</sup> In Belote v. White (1859) 2 Head (Tenn.) 703, it was held that under a bequest in trust "for the use and annual support of my daughter, Elizabeth B. Belote and her children . . . to be applied to the support and maintenance of my said daughter Elizabeth and her present and future children and to their education," it was held that at the testator's death the daughter and her then children took an equitable estate as tenants in common in the property, in equal shares; her interest being for life only, with remainder, as to that, to them, and their estates in fee; and that the estate was subject to open for after-born children.

<sup>55</sup> In Garden v. Pulteney (1765) 1 Amb. 499, 27 Eng. Reprint, 324, 2 Eden, 323, 28 Eng. Reprint, 922, where testator bequeathed certain securities to his nephew in trust for his son William Pulteney "now an infant; and for such younger son and sons as the said William Pulteney now an infant shall or may have to be equally divided between them share and share alike and in case there shall be but one younger son then I give the whole to that younger son," it was held to be very clear that William Pulteney was intended to take only an estate for life, with remainder to his younger sons, as otherwise the latter words, which give the whole to a younger son in case there shall be but one, cannot have effect.

In Newman v. Nightingale (1787) 1 Cox. Ch. Cas. 341, 29 Eng. Reprint, 1194, where testator bequeathed a sum of money "to the sole use of Mrs. Eliz. Newman or of her children forever," it was held that Mrs. Newman did not take a share equally with her children, but that the true construction of the words was to give Mrs. Newman an L.R.A.1917B.

interest for life, with remainder to her children after her death.

In Hill v. Thomas (1878) 11 S. C. 346, which involved the following provision: "I give and bequeath to my son G. W. Hill . . . the land whereon I now live. . . . Now the condition of the above gift is that the property, including that given off before . . . is to remain the property of the said G. W. Hill and his child or children, and in case the said G. W. Hill should die and not leave any living child or children why then the said property" should go to others, it was held that, as the case was not one of a direct devise to parent and children, but as the gift to G. W. Hill was separate and distinct, and at the same time the gift to the children was of the whole property, just as it had been to G. W. Hill, and as there was no evidence that the "child or children" should take less than the whole, the only mode by which the testator's intention to give both G. W. Hill and his children the whole property was for them to take it successively. The fact that although, at the time of the making of the will, there was but one child of G. W. Hill in esse, the testator used the word "children," thereby indicating an intention to include after-born children, who could not take immediately, was also adverted to as supporting this construction.

The context was held to take the case out of the operation of the rule, in Bunch v. Hardy (1879) 3 Lea (Tenn.) 543, where testator had directed his lands to be divided into ten shares "so that all my children or their representatives hereafter named shall share and share alike in value as follows: Mary A. C. Rutledge, wife of Dr. J. B. Rutledge, deceased and her children shall have one share," and similarly disposed of other shares to his sons and daughters and to the children of a deceased son and a deceased daughter, in connection with the gift to the last-named of whom, however, children were not mentioned. The court said: "In the will before us, the testator starts out with saying that 'having been prospered and blessed by a kind Providence with a family of children and worldly means and property of value,' he wishes to secure to 'all my children' an equitable division, and directs a division of his lands into ten shares, as nearly equal in value as possible, 'so that all my children or their representatives hereafter named' shall share and share alike. The children are afterward named, and the two grandchildren, the representatives of their parents, showing definitely to whom this clause refers. So when he comes to speak of the division of the surplus personality, he directs it to be paid equally 'to each legatee or legally authorized representative.' These provisions of the will leave no doubt that the testator's children, and his two grandchildren as representing their parents, were the primary objects of his bounty. The children of the living sons and daughters are not mentioned in these clauses. They are only connected with their parents in the specification of the shares into which the land is to be divided. The exclusion of the marital right in the case of the daughters and their children contemplates a separate estate in the daughters of the entire share devised to each daughter. There is a provision for the wives of the testator's sons, if they survive their husbands, that they shall have a right to remain on the land allotted to the husband until the youngest child comes of age, which seems to contemplate the ownership of the entire lands by the children upon the death of the father,—a result not attainable except by giving to the parent only a life estate. And lastly, the interstitial manner in which the whole will is drafted does not allow us to give the words on which the claim of the children rests for a present division their technical sense. The general scope of the will, with the situation and pecuniary condition of the sons-in-law, and the modest share of land allotted to each child, lead to the conclusion, as strongly as in any of the cases cited, that the intention of the testator was to give his daughter, Nancy E. Hardy, and his son, George A. Wood, the only two shares now in controversy, a life estate in the land devised to each, subject to a trust for the maintenance of their children while members of the family, with remainder to their children respectively living at the death of the testator, or born during the continuance of the life estate."

But a direction for an equal division of the property among the children after the death of the parent does not necessarily exclude the children from participation during the life estate of the parent.<sup>56</sup>

An expression of the desire that the property be kept in the family has been held to indicate that the parent is to take an estate for life, with remainder to the children.<sup>57</sup>

<sup>56</sup> In Nimmo v. Stewart (1852) 21 Ala. 682, where a testator bequeathed certain property to trustees for his daughter and her children during the daughter's natural life, the profits arising therefrom to be applied to the benefit of the said daughter "and her children," and after the decease of said daughter that the property should "be equally divided between the heirs of her body share and share alike," it was held that there was nothing in the will to show that the daughter should take an exclusive life estate, with remainder to her children, rather than a life estate jointly with them.

<sup>57</sup> An intention to give, by devise of a share of testator's property to a son "and his children," an estate to the son for life, with remainder to the children, was held to be deducible from a restriction of the right to sell such interest and an expression of a de-

It has been held that if, in addition to the bequest, there are any superadded words which import a desire that the property shall be settled, the court will lay hold of the words and will infer a gift to the parent for life, with remainder to the children.<sup>58</sup> An intention to settle the property is inferable where an intention to create a trust for the benefit of the parent and children is exsire that such lands be kept for homes for testator's sons and their children after them, in Fieldon v. Ballenger (1895) — Tenn. —, 35 S. W. 758.

<sup>58</sup> Mason v. Clarke (1853) 17 Beav. 126, 51 Eng. Reprint, 980, 22 L. J. Ch. N. S. 956, 17 Jur. 479, 1 Week. Rep. 297.

In Vaughan v. Headfort (1840) 10 Sim. 639, 59 Eng. Reprint, 764, 9 L. J. Ch. N. S. 271, 4 Jur. 649, where testatrix bequeathed a sum of money "to the Marquis of Headfort and his children to be secured for their use," it was held that the words "to be secured for their use" evinced an intention that the father should take for his life, and his children after his decease, since it would be absurd to hold that those words applied to the Marquis, as he might have taken his own share and either secured it for himself or spent it.

In Combe v. Hughes (1872) L. R. 14 Eq. (Eng.) 415, 41 L. J. Ch. N. S. 693, 27 L. T. N. S. 366, 20 Week. Rep. 793, where testator directed that the share of his estate given to a daughter should be retained and accumulated in the hands of trustees during the lifetime of her husband, "and upon the death of her said husband, should there be any child or children living, then the property should be secured for their benefit and for that of their mother," but should there be no child or children living, then the testator directed that the said share should be paid to her for her own use and benefit, it was held that the share should be settled upon trust for the daughter for her life, with remainder to her children.

In Holt v. Bowman (1864) 33 Ga. Supp. 129, where testator, after specifying certain property, went on to say: "All which said property herein given I will and direct to be vested and given in proper and legal manner to my said daughter and to her children free from the debts or disposition of her present or any future husband," and in a subsequent item of the will, after mentioning the property theretofore given to each of his daughters, and therein given to make their shares equal, without mentioning their children, the testator concluded: "The shares coming to my several daughters and their children to be secured to them in legal manner and form as heretofore directed and specified in this will," —it was held that the will contained indications of intention sufficient to take the case out of the ordinary rule that where there is a devise or bequest to a mother and her children, the mother and children take a joint estate, and that the direction that pressed, but not given legal form;<sup>50</sup> as in the case of a memorandum of instructions for a will or some such informal instrument operating as a will where no will has been formally drawn.<sup>501</sup> The words must, however, import that the whole fund, and not merely the share taken by the parent, is to be settled or secured.

As to whether a direction, in a gift to a mother and children, that the interest given to the parent shall be for her separate use, so as not to be subject to the property be given "in proper and legal form" imported a settlement of the property upon the mother for life, remainder to her children, born or to be born.

<sup>50</sup> In Re Bellasis (1871) L. R. 12 Eq. (Eng.) 218, 24 L. T. N. S. 466, 19 Week. Rep. 699, an informal instrument creating a trust "for my niece, Mrs. Chas. Milford and her children," was held to create a trust for Mrs. Milford for life, with remainder to her children as joint tenants.

<sup>501</sup> Compare Cator v. Cator (1851) 14 Beav. 463, 51 Eng. Reprint, 364, set out in footnote 84, infra.

<sup>60</sup> In Re Seyton (1887) L. R. 34 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 511, North, J., said that he had been unable to find any case in which the mere direction, in a gift to a parent and children, that the interest to the parent should be for her separate use, has been held sufficient in itself, without more, to warrant the construction that the parent takes for life, with remainder to the children. Continuing, he said: "In the cases of De Witte v. De Witte (1840) 11 Sim. 41, 59 Eng. Reprint, 788, 9 L. J. Ch. N. S. 270, 4 Jur. 625; Bustard v. Saunders (1853) 7 Beav. 92, 49 Eng. Reprint, 998, 7 Jur. 986, and Fisher v. Webster (1872) L. R. 14 Eq. (Eng.) 283, 42 L. J. Ch. N. S. 156, 26 L. T. N. S. 765, it was held that the mother and children took as joint tenants, although the mother took for her separate use. In the cases of Froggatt v. Wardell (1850) 3 De G. & S. 685, 64 Eng. Reprint, 651, 14 Jur. 1101; French v. French (1840) 11 Sim. 257, 59 Eng. Reprint, 872, and Jeffery v. De Vitre (1857) 24 Beav. 296, 53 Eng. Reprint 372, there was a trust for the separate use of the parent, and she was held to take for life, with remainder to her children. But the reason in each case obviously was because the testator intended all the children of the parent to take,—an intention which would have failed if the parent and children living at the testator's death had taken immediate vested interests as joint tenants, and other children had been subsequently born. In Bain v. Lescher (1840) 11 Sim. 397, 59 Eng. Reprint, 926, the reason for the judgment is not given; but the form of the gift quite explains the conclusion that a settlement was meant, without supposing that the Vice Chancellor intended to depart from the view he expressed in De Witte v. De Witte a few months before." L.R.A.1917B.

to the debts, acts, and control of her husband, imports a desire that the property shall be settled, and so negatives the presumption that the mother and children are to take concurrently, the cases are not altogether harmonious.<sup>60</sup> It may be said, however, to be the prevailing opinion that where the words creating the separate use apply to the whole fund or legacy, they will be construed as giving the mother a life interest,<sup>61</sup> provided they indicate an in-

In Neweom's Trusts (1878) Ir. L. R. 1 Eq. 373, it was said: "It has been held that small expressions of an intention to make the gift one to the parent for life, with remainder to the children, are sufficient to lead the court to give that construction to such gifts. Amongst other expressions, words giving a separate use in the fund to a mother have been construed as sufficiently showing an intention to make her tenant for life of the whole fund, though the decisions on this point have not been uniform."

<sup>61</sup> Where a fund is given to a wife and her children, coupled with words creating a separate use in the mother of the whole fund, it is a sufficient indication to overthrow the presumption of an intent to give a concurrent interest. Gordon v. Jackson (1899) 58 N. J. Eq. 166, 43 Atl. 98.

See also in this connection, Bunch v. Hardy (1879) 3 Lea (Tenn.) 543, set out in footnote 55, supra.

A gift to the separate use of a married woman is conclusive against the children's participating with the mother during her lifetime. Ogle v. Corthorn (1844) 9 Jur. (Eng.) 325, 14 L. J. Ch. N. S. 337.

In French v. French (1840) 11 Sim. 257, 59 Eng. Reprint, 872, where testator, after giving a legacy of £5,000 to his son, in trust for his daughter Mrs. W., so as not to be subject to the debts, acts, or control of her husband, gave a legacy of the same amount to his daughter Mrs. A., "in trust as aforesaid for the use of herself and children," it was held that the words "in trust as aforesaid" clearly meant that the income of the fund should be paid to her for her separate use, showing that the testator did not mean that the children should be let in to participate with their mother, but that she should take an interest in the fund for her separate use for her life, with remainder to her children. In Neweom's Trusts (Ir.) supra, it is said that it is not easy to reconcile French v. French (1840) 11 Sim. 257, 59 Eng. Reprint, 872, with De Witte v. De Witte (1840) 11 Sim. 41, 59 Eng. Reprint, 788, 9 L. J. Ch. N. S. 270, 4 Jur. 625, unless there were in the context of the will in the later case expressions leading to the conclusion that the testator intended to make a difference between the interests given to Mrs. De Witte and her children in the bequest under consideration, tention that the mother shall take a different interest from that given to the children;<sup>62</sup> but that if they are equally applicable to the interest of the children as to that of the mother,<sup>63</sup> or if they apply simply to the mother's interest, whatever that may be,<sup>64</sup> the reason fails, and the ordinary rule that all take concurrently must prevail.

and those given to daughters of the testator in other bequests expressly given for life, with remainders to their respective children.

It has sometimes been held that the presumption that parent and children are to take concurrently is displaced where it appears that testator meant future as well as existing children to ing that the words should be restricted, contrary to their ordinary meaning, to the interest of the mother, or that they give her an interest in the whole fund.

In the case last above cited, where testator directed the payment of a share of his residuary estate to the widow of his nephew "for the sole and separate use of herself and her family by my said late nephew," it was held that she and her children took as joint tenants.

In Jackson v. Coggin (1859) 29 Ga. 403, a will by which testator gave to his daughter "and her children free from the disposition of any future husband" certain property was construed as giving the daughter, not a life estate in the property bequeathed, but an estate in fee jointly with her children, notwithstanding the use of the words "free from the disposition of any future husband;" since if the object of the testator was to protect the property given to his daughter from the marital rights of any future husband, these words would be just as necessary whether she took one share in fee or an estate for life in the whole.

In Dawson v. Bourne (1852) 16 Beav. 29, 51 Eng. Reprint, 686, where testator gave his residuary estate "to be equally divided between my nieces, Jane Dawson and Mary Dawson, and I confine my said legacies hereinbefore mentioned to be given to my nieces Jane Dawson and Mary Dawson and their children without comprehending their husbands, unless they, my said last mentioned nieces or either of them should die without issue," it was held that the only way to give effect to the words was to give the residue between the nieces equally for their separate use for life, and after their death to their children, and if they should have no children, then to the nieces absolutely.

<sup>62</sup> Newsom's Trusts (Ir.) supra.

<sup>63</sup> Ibid.

<sup>64</sup> In Newsom's Trusts (Ir.) supra, it was said, after a review of the decisions, that the result of all the cases is that where there are words giving the mother a separate estate in the entire fund, the fund must be settled to the separate use of the mother for life, with remainder to the children at her death as joint tenants; but that where the separate use is not attached to the entire fund, but to the interest of the mother, whatever it may be, or to the interests of all alike, it has no such operation, and they all take together as joint tenants; and that although it is informal and untechnical to direct the shares of children generally, male and female, to be in trust for their separate use, this consideration will not warrant the court in holding that the words should be restricted, contrary to their ordinary meaning, to the interest of the mother, or that they give her an interest in the whole fund.

In the case last above cited, where testator directed the payment of a share of his residuary estate to the widow of his nephew "for the sole and separate use of herself and her family by my said late nephew," it was held that she and her children took as joint tenants.

In Jackson v. Coggin (1859) 29 Ga. 403, a will by which testator gave to his daughter "and her children free from the disposition of any future husband" certain property was construed as giving the daughter, not a life estate in the property bequeathed, but an estate in fee jointly with her children, notwithstanding the use of the words "free from the disposition of any future husband;" since if the object of the testator was to protect the property given to his daughter from the marital rights of any future husband, these words would be just as necessary whether she took one share in fee or an estate for life in the whole.

In De Witte v. De Witte (Eng.) supra, where testator bequeathed his residuary estate in trust for the sole, exclusive, and peculiar use and benefit of his daughter Sarah and her children, independent of her husband, it was held that, as there was no reason apparent on the face of the instrument why the words used by the testator should not be taken in their plain and ordinary sense, the daughter did not take merely a life estate, with remainder to her children, but jointly with them.

A similar conclusion was reached upon the authority of the foregoing case in Bustard v. Saunders (1853) 7 Beav. 92, 49 Eng. Reprint, 998, 7 Jur. 986, construing an executory agreement for the settlement of a sum of money to be secured for the benefit of a sister "and her children so that the same might not come to the hands or power of her husband."

In Fisher v. Webster (1872) L. R. 14 Eq. (Eng.) 283, 42 L. J. Ch. N. S. 156, 26 L. T. N. S. 765, it was held that neither a provision that "all that is willed unto my daughter [naming her] to be under her own care and for her own benefit," nor a declaration that it shall not "be subject to the debts, engagements, control or disposition of any husband," sufficiently indicated an intention that, under a residuary bequest to the daughter "for her own benefit and her children, or only one child if she should have any," the daughter should take a life interest, with remainder to her children, rather than jointly with them.

take.<sup>65</sup> While this may be a valid presumption where the bequest is of personal property, which will vest absolutely at the testator's decease, it has not always been recognized;<sup>66</sup> and properly does not apply where real property is the subject of the gift, in which case the estate taken by the parent and existing children may open to admit after-born children, who take by executory devise.<sup>67</sup> It has, however, been applied in the case of real property,<sup>68</sup> the reason given being that "it is a singular intention to impute to the testator that the parent's interest in the estate should continually diminish on the birth of a new child."<sup>69</sup> But inasmuch as this is an inevitable result of the form in which the gift is made, it is hard to see where there is anything "singular" in the intention. Any incongruity in the result is not attributable to the fact that the gift is to future as well as existing children, but to the assumption that the parent was the primary object of the testator's solicitude.

It has been held that the fact that the testator uses the term "children" in the plural, when there was but one child in existence at the time of making the will, shows that it was not his intention that the children should take immediately.<sup>70</sup>

An intention that the children are to take in succession to, rather than concurrently with, the parent, has been in-

See also in this connection, New England Mortg. Secur. Co. v. Gordon (1895) 95 Ga. 781, 22 S. E. 706, set out in footnote 16, supra; Bently v. Ash (1906) 59 W. Va. 641, 53 S. E. 636, in footnote 14, supra.

<sup>65</sup> In Jeffery v. De Vitre (1857) 24 Beav. 296, 53 Eng. Reprint, 372, where there was a bequest to a married woman "for the benefit of herself and such children as she then had or might thereafter have by her then husband, free from the control of her husband," it was held that the only way in which the testator's intention that all the children should take might be effected was by giving a life interest to the mother and the fund afterwards to the children.

In Bridges v. Wilkins (1857) 56 N. C. (3 Jones, Eq.) 342, where testator provided: "I give and bequeath the balance of my property to my sisters that may be living at the time of my death and their lawful issues except the slaves. . . . The slaves of which I am now seised and possessed I give to my mother during her natural life and after her death to go to my sisters and their children as above mentioned with the express condition that no property of which I am now possessed or may hereafter fall heir to shall go to any but my sisters directly and their progeny and not their husbands," and left surviving him six sisters, only one of whom was married and had children at the time when his will was made and at his death, it was held that as he certainly did not intend to exclude the children which his unmarried sisters might have, it was necessary to adopt the construction that the sisters should take estates for life in the slaves and other property, with remainders to their children.

<sup>66</sup> In Alcock v. Ellen (1692) Freem. Ch. 185, 22 Eng. Reprint, 1150, where a man devised a term for years to his daughter and her children, she then having three children, and also to such other children as she should have, it was held that the woman and her three children took jointly each a fourth part, and that the after-born children took nothing.

See also Dunn v. Bank of Mobile (1841) 2 Ala. 152, and Lynn v. Hall (1897) 101 L.R.A.1917B.

Ky. 738, 72 Am. St. Rep. 439, 43 S. W. 402,—set out in footnote 16, supra.

<sup>67</sup> See footnote 14, supra.

<sup>68</sup> In Downes v. Long (1894) 79 Md. 382, 29 Atl. 827, where testator devised certain land "to the wife and children of my son William Thomas Long, now living and to any other legitimate child or children which may be hereafter born to him," it was held that though a gift to "children" simpliciter, without additional description, means a gift to the children in existence at the death of the testator, provided there are children then in existence to take, this rule can have no application where, as in the present case, there are words showing the testator's desire that all the children of his son shall have an equal interest in the estate; and that to effectuate this intention the wife will be regarded as having an estate for life, with remainder to her children by her then husband.

In Jeffery v. Honeywood (1819) 4 Madd. Ch. 398, 56 Eng. Reprint, 752, where testator gave certain estates to his daughter Mary and to all and every the child and children, whether male or female, of her body lawfully issuing, and unto his, her and their heirs and assigns forever, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, it was held that as it was plain that after-born children would be included in this devise, and as it would be a singular intention to impute to a father that his daughter's interest in the estate should continually diminish upon the birth of a new child, the devise should be considered as containing two gifts: one to the mother without words of limitation superadded, and another to her children, their heirs and assigns; and that these two gifts could only be rendered sensible by construing, as the words import, a life estate to the mother, and a remainder in fee to the children.

<sup>69</sup> See Jeffery v. Honeywood (Eng.) supra.

<sup>70</sup> Hannan v. Osborn (1834) 4 Paige (N. Y.) 336; Hill v. Thomas (1878) 11 S. C. 346; but compare Bently v. Ash (1906) 59 W. Va. 641, 53 S. E. 636, set out in footnote 14, supra.

ferred where they are referred to as "heirs,"<sup>71</sup> or as taking "after" their parent,<sup>72</sup> or according to the parent's will.<sup>73</sup> The same inference has been drawn from a limitation over should the parent "leave no issue."<sup>74</sup>

<sup>71</sup>In Goss v. Eberhart (1859) 29 Ga. 545, where testator, having previously disposed of his property to his wife and children, went on to provide: "My will and desire is and I do hereby give and bequeath all of the property of every description that I have given or may hereafter give to each of my daughters I give to them and their children heirs of their body and not subject to be sold by their respective husbands or liable for their debts in any manner whatever," it was held that the employment of the word "heirs" indicated that the children were not to take a present estate, but one that should come to them after the death of their mother; and therefore that they took by way of remainder rather than a present estate jointly with their mother.

In Woodruff v. Woodruff (1861) 32 Ga. 358, where testator bequeathed certain property "in trust for my daughter Frances Woodruff and her heirs born and to be born," it was held that, as the class of persons to take after Frances Woodruff must be postponed until her death, the bequest should be construed as vesting in her a life estate, with remainder to her children whensoever born.

In Schaefer v. Schaefer (1892) 141 Ill. 337, 31 N. E. 136, where a testatrix bequeathed to a daughter certain property "in trust for her sole use and benefit and of her children and their children thereafter. But in the event that my daughter . . . should die and leave no children as heirs to the within mentioned property, then it is my will and desire that all of said property shall go to my brother," it was held to be plain that under the will the daughter took only a life estate, and that her children took a remainder in fee, which opened up to let in after-born children.

In Chadwick v. Wilson (1893) 73 Hun, 485, 26 N. Y. Supp. 394, where a testator provided: "As I know nothing of the whereabouts of my son Melville E. Wilson whether he is dead or alive I know not and as I have given him much more than any of the others of my children I give and bequeath to him the 12 acres known as the 'Carr lot' or its equivalent provided I sell my farm in trust for his heirs," and it appeared that the testator was uninformed as to whether Melville had children, it was held that it was not unreasonable to infer from the language used and from the circumstances disclosed that the intention of the testator was to devise to Melville a life estate in the property in question, with remainder to his children.

In Wilson v. Vansittart (1770) 2 Amb. 562, 27 Eng. Reprint, 360, where testator devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to his brother "and to his heirs male to be divided among them share and share alike, reserving out of the whole residue and remainder aforesaid the sum of £100 which I give unto my nephew John Wilson and the sum of £100 which I give unto my nephew W. Stephenson, and the further sum of £800 which I desire may be equally divided amongst the other grandchildren of my father's first marriage," it was held, on grounds which are not stated in the report, that the brother took an estate for life, with remainder to his children equally.

In Crawford v. Trotter (1819) 4 Madd. Ch. 361, 56 Eng. Reprint, 738, 20 Revised Rep. 312, a legacy "to Lady Scott and to her heirs (say children)," she having children living, was held to give the legatee named a life interest, with remainder to her children; the word "heirs," which was used as synonymous with "children," importing that they were to take after her death.

But compare Moore v. Leach (1857) 50 N. C. (5 Jones, L.) 88, set out in footnote 17, supra, where the phrase used was "her children, the lawful heirs of her body," and it was held that the rule applied.

<sup>72</sup>In Cooper v. Mitchell Invest. Co. (1910) 133 Ga. 769, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 291, 66 S. E. 1090, a will by which testator devised and bequeathed certain land and personalty "to my children by my first wife and their children after them" was construed, as giving a daughter a life estate with remainder over to her children, born and to be born.

<sup>73</sup>In Re Buckmaster (1882) 47 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 514, where testator devised to his two sons the whole of his freehold property "as tenants in common, share and share alike, and in their respective proportions to their children or according to their wills," and at the date of the will one of the sons had children and the other had none, it was held that the words "according to their wills," which, of course, could only take effect at the death of the respective parents, showed that the children were not to take together with their parent; and, accordingly, that the devise was a gift in fee simple to the testator's two sons as tenants in common, with a superadded executory devise at the death of each of them of his share to his children or his devisees.

<sup>74</sup>In Lampley v. Blower (1746) 3 Atk. 96, 26 Eng. Reprint, 1023, where testatrix devised to her two nieces "each one half of the produce of bank stock and to their issue and if either of them should happen to die before the legacy becomes due to her, and leaves no issue, the share of her so dying shall go to the survivor," it was held that the phrase "leave no issue" showed that the issue should take after the death of their mother, rather than in joint tenancy with her.

In Shepard v. Shepard (1887) 60 Vt. 109, 14 Atl. 536, where testator gave his residuary estate "in equal shares" to his four sisters, "to them and their children forever, with this condition, that if either of my said sisters should die, leaving no children, then her share as aforesaid to the other

The presumption of an intention that the parent and children shall take concurrently has been held to be negatived where the parent is given a power to determine the portions to be taken by the children.<sup>75</sup> sisters living, in equal shares," it was held that, in order to give full force to every clause and every word of the bequest, it must be construed as giving a life estate to the sisters, with remainder to their children surviving. The court said: "The language of the bequest is not that of an unqualified gift to the four sisters. First, their children are to take in same manner with them. Then the condition shows, whatever estate they severally take, is liable to be defeated on the contingency, if any of them die, leaving no children. The language of the entire bequest impresses us that it was the testator's intention, as natural affection would prompt, to provide primarily for his sisters. When we look at the condition, we find that they were not to take in fee, for the share thus taken was to be kept intact so it could, on the contingency there named, pass to the surviving sisters. Then their children were to take forever, or absolutely."

<sup>76</sup> In Re Byrne (1892) Ir. L. R. 29 Eq. 250, involving the construction of the following devise: "I bequeath to my wife [certain lands] to be held by her for her own and all my children's use and benefit. But I leave it entirely in her power to fix the portion that each of my children is to get out of my property," it was held that the power to determine the children's shares negatived the idea of a joint tenancy, and that the wife was a trustee of the property for herself and her children, with large discretionary power of determining what should be the children's interest when their shares should come to be allotted.

In Mill v. Mill (1875) Ir. Rep. 9 Eq. 104, affirmed in (1877) Ir. Rep. 11 Eq. 158, where testator bequeathed to his wife, should she continue unmarried, all his property, for the benefit of herself and her family; with the further provision that if she married, she should get £100 and the remainder of his property should be divided share and share alike among his children and the survivors of them; and the testator nominated and appointed the wife to execute the will "according to the real meaning and spirit of what is specified above," and recommended her to be guided by the advice of a certain person in all matters relating to the disposal of his property and the education of his children and the advancement of their well-being in society,—it was held that, considering the will in its entirety, it would be impossible to reconcile or account for its language on the basis of a merely joint tenancy being thereby given to the wife and children, but that the widow during widowhood took a life estate, with a power of appointment among her children, and that, in default of appointment, L.R.A.1917B.

Where a legacy is payable in part at once and in part at a future period, the parent will take for life, as otherwise different classes of children might take the two portions.<sup>76</sup>

Where the words of distribution are the children would take as tenants in common.

In Crockett v. Crockett (1848) 2 Phill. Ch. 553, 41 Eng. Reprint, 1057, 17 L. J. Ch. N. S. 230, 12 Jur. 234, where a testator directed that all his property should be "at the disposal of his wife for herself and children," it was held to be absolutely inconsistent with the provisions of the will to hold that the children would take jointly with their mother, but that, as between herself and her children, the mother was either a trustee, with a large discretion as to the application of the fund, or having a power in favor of the children, subject to a life estate in herself.

In Ward v. Grey (1859) 26 Beav. 485, 53 Eng. Reprint, 986, where a bequest was made "to Mrs. Horatia Ward and her children," which the testator thereafter referred to as a legacy to her "and her family," Sir John Romilly said that, although he could not find any distinct authority on the subject, he was of opinion that the legatee and her children did not take as joint tenants, but that she took an estate for life in the fund, with a power of appointment amongst her children, and, in default of appointment, and subject to her life estate, the children would take the bequest equally among them. This case is cited in Theobald on Wills as "going beyond the present tendency of the court."

<sup>76</sup> In Morse v. Morse (1829) 2 Sim. 485, 57 Eng. Reprint, 869, where testator bequeathed to his daughter, Anne Morse, "and her children for their sole use and benefit £5000; £3000 thereof to be paid within one year after my decease and the other £2000 within one year after the decease of my wife; and I do appoint [certain persons named] trustees for the said sums of money for my daughter Anne Morse and her children," it was held that, as it was clear that the testator did not intend an immediate payment of the two legacies, and there would be an inconsistency with respect to them if the mother did not take a life interest, since then different classes of children would become interested in the two portions of the legacy, such a construction should be put upon the bequest as would make all the children participants; namely, that the mother should take a life interest, with remainder at her decease to all her children.

In Scott v. Scott (1860) 11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 114, where a sum of money of which another person had the use for life, and certain other personal property, was bequeathed in trust for the use, benefit, and behoof of a niece "and her children, without the control or intermeddling of her husband, and to be paid at such times and in used as applying to the children only, as in the case of a gift to one and his children "as tenants in common if more than one," the parent takes a life estate only.<sup>77</sup> But the presumption that the parent and children are to take concurrently is, of course, not repelled, but, on the contrary, is confirmed, where the words of distribution include the parent and children alike.<sup>78</sup>

The fact that the fund is given to the wife in trust for herself and her children,<sup>79</sup> or "for the benefit of" herself and children,<sup>80</sup> has been held not to such manner as my said trustees shall in their discretion think fit," it was held that, as children born to the niece during the continuance of the life interest would, according to the ordinary rules of construction, be entitled to share in the money, the will should be given a construction which would admit them to participate in the other property as well; and therefore that the niece should be regarded as taking an estate for life, with remainder to her children.

<sup>77</sup>In Burnsall v. Davy (1798) 1 Bos. & P. 215, 126 Eng. Reprint, 867, where testator devised his residuary estate to his niece "and the issue of her body lawfully to be begotten as tenants in common (if more than one), but in default of such issue or being such if they shall all die under the age of twenty-one years and without leaving lawful issue of any of their bodies then I devise the same unto my cousin," it was held that as the words "tenants in common" could only apply to the issue, since the niece and one of the issue could never take as tenants in common, the niece took an estate for life only, with remainder to her issue after her death.

In Doe ex dem. Gilman v. Elvey (1803) 4 East, 313, 102 Eng. Reprint, 851, it was suggested, though not decided, that a devise to one and to the issue of his body, his, her, or their heirs, equally to be divided if more than one, should be held to be a devise for life to the person named, with remainder in fee to his issue, if he had any.

<sup>78</sup>In Eccard v. Brooke (1790) 2 Cox, Ch. Cas. 213, 30 Eng. Reprint, 99, 2 Revised Rep. 31, where testatrix bequeathed stock to trustees in trust after the death of A, to transfer the same "unto and amongst all and every the nephews and nieces that shall be then living as well on the side of my late husband as of mine to wit, the said Jane Lundy or her children," etc., "to be equally divided between them share and share alike," it was held that, in view of the directions that they should take equally, share and share alike, the children of the nephews and nieces took concurrently with their parents.

In Salmon v. Tidmarsh (1859) 5 Jur. N. S. (Eng.) 1380, where testator directed all his real and personal estate to be sold and the proceeds held by trustees "for the use and benefit of my wife Diana and our nine children and any after-born child in such manner as my said trustees may from time to time think proper, during the widowhood of my said wife and at the full discretion of my said trustees nevertheless it is my desire that they first set apart thereout for the separate use and benefit of my daughter, L.R.A.1917B.

ter, Susannah the sum of £300 and all the rest to be equally divided between my said wife and children (inclusive of Susannah) on their severally attaining twenty-one and my said wife continuing my widow and unmarried," it was held that though the first part of the will would give an estate to the wife for her life or until her second marriage, and upon her death or marriage the property would go to the children, the words "equally to be divided between them" showed that the widow and children were to take jointly.

In Bradley v. Wilson (1867) 13 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 642, where testator bequeathed certain personal estate to his two sisters "and to their children, all to share alike if living," it was held that the sisters did not take life interests, but that the direction "all to share alike" showed that they took with their children as tenants in common.

In Mason v. Methodist Episcopal Church (1876) 27 N. J. Eq. 47, a bequest to testator's sister and her children of "$1,000 to be invested on bond and mortgage of real estate and the interest to be collected and paid over to them annually and equally divided between them," was held, in view of the context, to be an immediate gift to the mother and her children who were living at the death of the testator, as tenants in common in equal shares.

<sup>79</sup>Newell v. Newell (1872) L. R. 7 Ch. (Eng.) 263, where the Lord Chancellor said: "I cannot find that the authorities bear out the proposition that a simple gift to the wife in trust for herself and her children will warrant the court in presuming that the fund was intended to be settled. Many reasons may be suggested for the fund being given in that form. The testator associates his executors, in whom he reposed confidence, with his wife in the executorship, and wishes them to assist her in getting in the estate, paying his debts, and attending to those duties which his wife alone might not be competent to discharge; and then he might very well say that, as soon as his estate was got in, he wished the executors to part altogether from the management of his affairs, and the whole to be handed over to his wife, the most natural person whom he could select; and what is there in the joint tenancy between her and her children more inconsistent with her having the management of the whole fund, than there is in a tenancy for life, with remainder to her children?"

<sup>80</sup>In Jubber v. Jubber (1839) 9 Sim. 503, 59 Eng. Reprint, 452, where testator bequeathed to his wife the use of all his property "for the benefit of herself and un-

be sufficient to indicate any intention that the wife should take an estate for life, with remainder to the children, rather than that the wife and children should take as joint tenants; though a different conclusion has been reached in a case in which the legacy was given to a third person, in trust, for the benefit of the parent and her children.<sup>81</sup>

It has been held that no implication that the parent is to take a life estate only can be drawn from the fact that the parent, a married woman, is given power to dispose of the property by will if there are no children.<sup>82</sup>

The presumption arising from the form of gift, that the parent and children are to take concurrently, is not repelled by a "name and arms" clause.<sup>83</sup>

The solution of the question which forms the subject of this note may be assisted by reference to other gifts,<sup>84</sup> or married children, that they may be comfortably provided for as long as my wife, Martha may remain in this life." it was held that the widow and the children who were unmarried at the testator's death were entitled equally to the income of the residuary fund during the life of the widow.

In Curtis v. Graham (1864) 12 Week. Rep. (Eng.) 998, where testator gave to his wife "all my copy-hold, freehold and personal estate whatsoever, to and for her absolute fee and dominion in fee simple forever and ever, and to her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns; also all my personal, leasehold and general possession to and for her use and for the use of my dear children. I hereby authorize her to appropriate any part thereof for her immediate use, and for that of her children,"—it was held that as there was nothing in the context showing a succession, and no words importing an absolute interest in the wife, with a trust to dispose of it, the only conclusion that could be arrived at was that it was a gift to the wife and children as a class, to take together, not as tenants in common, but as joint tenants.

<sup>81</sup> In Rich v. Rogers (1859) 14 Gray (Mass.) 174, where a testator, who had made one specific provision for his sisters in the gift of annuities without any reference whatever to their children, subsequently bequeathed to one of them "for the benefit of herself and her own children the sum of $25,000 in trust," and made a similar provision for another sister, it was held that, as the legacies were given to be held by a trustee, and, being so held, were not directly appropriated to the sister and her children, but to her, "for the benefit of herself and her children," the true construction of the bequest was that each of the married sisters should take the income of the sum bequeathed in trust for the benefit of herself and her children for her life, and that the principal, after her death, should be divided among her children.

<sup>82</sup> In McCord v. Whitehead (1896) 98 Ga. 381, 25 S. E. 767, where testatrix devised and bequeathed her entire estate to her executors in trust, "that that part or portion that may be set apart for each of my daughters may be made over to trustee or trustees for each of them and their children and not subject to the debts or contracts of said trustee or any husband with which any of them now have or may hereafter intermarry, and in the event of having no children such as have none are authorized to devise it in any manner they think proper," it was held that, notwithstanding the superadded words defining what was to become of the property if there were no children, such children did not take by way of remainder, but concurrently with their mother, the court saying: "At the time the will now before us was executed, it was quite common, in view of the restrictions which the law then placed upon married women, to annex to the devise of an estate in fee to a woman, the power to dispose of it by will; and, so far from operating as a limitation, this was not only consistent with, but was regarded as indicative of, an intention to create an estate in fee. . . . Nor can any implication that less than a fee is given to the daughters having children be drawn from the fact that the power to devise is given only to such as have no children. The reason for this omission in the case of such as have children is explained by the fact that in the part or portion set apart to such a daughter and her children, the children had an interest which their mother could not devise."

<sup>83</sup> In Byng v. Byng (1862) 10 H. L. Cas. 171, 11 Eng. Reprint, 991, where testatrix gave "in trust to my executors for my niece Mary Ann Byng and her children all my Quendon Hall estate in Essex, provided she takes the name of Cranmer and arms, and her children, with my mansion house," and various articles enumerated "as heirlooms with my estate," it was held that there was nothing in the will to restrict a mother to an estate for life, or to indicate that the children were to take in succession.

<sup>84</sup> In Cator v. Cator (1851) 14 Beav. 463, 51 Eng. Reprint, 364, where testator, who, by his will, had given a life estate to his daughter for her separate use, with remainder to her children, by a codicil headed "instructions to my solicitors," gave another legacy to the daughter "and children for their sole use and benefit," it was held that an intention might be inferred to settle the bequest made by the codicil in the same manner and on the same trusts as the bequest by the will, and therefore that the daughter took a life interest only.

In Re Owen (1871) L. R. 12 Eq. (Eng.) 316, 25 L. T. N. S. 489, where a testatrix gave £1,400 to trustees, in trust, to pay the interest thereof to M. for life for her separate use, and the capital to her children (exclusive of her two eldest sons thereafter named and provided for) who should survive her and attain twenty-one, and be-by allusions made by the testator to the provision made for the parent,<sup>85</sup> or by reference made to other instruments<sup>86</sup> more particularly demonstrating the intention of the testator towards the objects of his bounty.

IV. Indicia which vary the presumption arising where there are no children, that the children take in succession.

Where the gift is of personal property, and there are no children at the time the gift takes effect, the parent necessarily takes absolutely.<sup>87</sup> [This, of course, is not necessarily true in jurisdictions in which the doctrine of executory devises is deemed applicable in the case of personal property.] So, where the gift to the children is contingent upon their being in existence at the testator's decease, the parent will take absolutely, and not merely an estate for life, with remainder to the children.<sup>88</sup> queathed to the two elder children of the said M. the sum of £1,500 each when and if they should respectively live to attain the age of twenty-one years, and the residue to M. and such of her children, including the two eldest sons, as should attain twenty-one, it was held that the gift of the £1,400 to the younger children, to the exclusion of the two elder sons, who were included in the gift of the residue, and the reference to this in the latter gift, justified the conclusion that the mother took a life interest in the residue.

<sup>85</sup> In Caffary v. Caffary (1844) 8 Jur. (Eng.) 329, where a testator declared that a sum of money invested in government securities should, at his wife's death, become "the property of my son Patrick John Caffary and his children," and in the subsequent part of the will referred to such sum as going at his wife's death to his son, it was held that the testator himself had showed that the son should take absolutely, and not jointly with his children.

<sup>86</sup> In Fesler v. Simpson (1877) 58 Ind. 83, where testator devised "to my son Walter Simpson and his children . . . the tract of land described in a deed to him made by me and my wife July 7, 1856, to be held as therein provided," and such deed, which had been made but never delivered, was to Walter Simpson and his children, habendum to the said Walter Simpson during his natural life, and at his death to his children in fee simple, it was held that reading the habendum of the deed in connection with the will, and as a part thereof, it was clear that Walter Simpson took only a life estate in the premises.

In Kidd v. Borum (1913) 181 Ala. 144, 61 So. 100, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1226, where testator directed that certain property should be conveyed and delivered to trustees "for the use of my beloved wife Mary Georgiana and her children, William Douglas, James White and Anna Philida, during the natural life of my said beloved wife and at her death to our children forever," it was held that although the provisions of the will, standing alone, are to some extent contradictory and of doubtful import in respect to the estate conferred upon the widow, yet, when considered in connection with a deed of trust by which the testator had conveyed certain property "in trust for the use, support and maintenance of said beloved wife, Mary Georgiana and [her] children, William Douglas, James White and Anna L.R.A.1917B.

Philida, during the natural life of my said wife, remainder after her death in absolute right to my said children above named," and authorizing the trustees "to demand and recover of my executors any legacy or bequest which I may give to my beloved wife and children above named in my last will and testament, and, when received of my executors or administrators, to be held by said trustees for my said wife in the same manner and under the same trust as above provided,"—it made the widow and her children at the time of testator's death tenants in common of an estate for her life, with the remainder of the fee of the whole estate to all her children.

<sup>87</sup> In Pyne v. Franklin (1832) 5 Sim. 458, 58 Eng. Reprint, 410, 2 L. J. Ch. N. S. 41, where testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his widow, subject to the payment of two legacies of £200 each to his nieces, Agnes and Frances and their children, to be paid in nine months after the death of his wife, in such shares, proportions, manner, and form as his wife should, by her will, appoint, amongst his nieces and their children, and neither of his nieces had a child at the time of payment, it was held that, as there were no persons to whom the legacies could be paid except the nieces, they therefore must, of necessity, take the whole.

In Cape v. Cape (1837) 2 Younge & C. Exch. (Eng.) 543, where testator directed that a legacy "be applied to the support and maintenance of the wife of my said son Henry, and for the support and education of his children born in wedlock," and there were no children at the death of the testator, Alderson, J., said that his impression was that the testator merely intended to give the legacy to the separate use of the wife, and if there had been children born at the time of the death of the testator, it would have been a question whether or not they took an interest under the will; but as there were no children at that time, the wife took it absolutely to her separate use.

<sup>88</sup> In Gillespie v. Schuman (1879) 62 Ga. 262, a devise of certain property "to my daughter Malinda P. Collier, and her children if any living" was held not to create a life estate only in the property in the daughter, with remainder to her children, but an absolute estate, where she had no children at the time the testator died.

Where the children are to take only during the parent's life, the construction by which the parent is given a life estate and the children the remainder is necessarily excluded, and the parent's estate opens upon the birth of a child to let in such child.<sup>89</sup>

<sup>89</sup> In Gaboury v. McGovern (1884) 74 Ga. 133, where testator gave the residue of his estate in trust for the benefit and support of his daughter, who was then an infant and unmarried, and her child or children during her life, it was held that the equitable life estate taken by her was subject to open upon the birth of a child to her to let in such child for a use, enjoyment, maintenance, and support with its mother during her life.

In Mitchell v. Long (1877) 80 Pa. 516, s. c. sub nom. Mitchell v. McConahey, 34 Phila. Leg. Int. 48, where testator devised to his son certain lands "to him, his wife and children during their natural lives, if he ever should have any, if not, he shall have it all himself," the son being unmarried at the making of the will and the death of the testator, it was held that as the land was not given to John and his wife during their natural lives, and after their death to their children for life, but to John, his wife and children during their natural lives, the son, his wife and his children, took concurrent, and not successive, life estates. E. S. O.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

NATHAN L. CULLENS, JR., et al.,
v.

WILLIAM E. CULLENS et al., Appts.

(161 N. C. 344, 77 S. E. 228.)

Deed — conveyance to woman and her children — estate.

A conveyance of a remainder to a woman and her children forever vests in her and her children living at the time, a life estate in common.

For other cases, see Deeds, II. c. 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 19, 1913.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for Hertford County in plaintiffs' favor in an action for partition of certain land. Reversed.

Statement by Brown, J.:

The plaintiffs allege that Sarah A. Cullens died seised in fee of said lands, and at her death they descended to her children the plaintiffs and defendant Wm. E. Cullens. The defendant Wm. E. Cullens answers that he denies § 2, and alleges that Sarah A. Cullens died seised in fee of only an undivided one-fourth interest in the land therein described, and that he (defendant) was a tenant owning an undivided one-fourth interest in fee in said land. He further says that upon the death of Sarah A. Cullens one-eighth of her one-fourth interest descended to him, and that he is now the owner in fee of — part of the land aforesaid. The defendant Perry makes the same answer as his codefendant and claims to be the owner of his interest in the lands, which have been sold by agreement pending this proceeding, and the litigation is over the proceeds. His Honor gave judgment that plaintiffs are tenants in common in fee with defendant Wm. E. Cullens, each of an undivided one-eighth interest, as heirs at law of Sarah A. Cullens. The defendants Cullens and J. W. Perry appealed.

Messrs. Winborne & Winborne, for appellants:

Where land is conveyed to a woman and her children, they take as tenants in common, and only those born at the date of the deed take, unless there is one in ventre sa mère, and then such child will also take.

Dupree v. Dupree, 45 N. C. (Busbee, Eq.) 164, 59 Am. Dec. 590; Gay v. Baker, 58 N. C. (5 Jones, Eq.) 344, 78 Am. Dec. 229; Heath v. Heath, 114 N. C. 547, 19 S. E. 155; Campbell v. Everhart, 139 N. C. 511, 52 S. E. 201.

Prior to Act of 1784, the courts, in construing wills where the word "heirs" was omitted, but the word "forever" was used, held that a fee passed. The word "forever" showed the purpose of the devisor.

Vickers v. Leigh, 104 N. C. 257, 10 S. E. 308; Cooper v. Mitchell Invest. Co. 133 Ga. 769, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 291, 66 S. E. 1090; Dillard v. Yarboro, 77 S. C. 227, 57 S. E. 841.

Mr. Murray Allen also for appellants. Messrs. Pruden & Pruden and S. Brown Shepherd, for appellees:

The deed to Sarah A. Cullens and her children conveyed only a life estate, on as-

Note. — For annotation of the question as to when a conveyance to one and his children will give the children an estate jointly or in common with the parent, and when a remainder upon a life estate in the parent, see annotation following this case, post, 76.

For discussion of the same question where it arises out of testamentary dispositions, see note to Rice v. Klette, ante, 45. L.R.A.1917B.

count of the absence of the word "heirs" in connection with the name of the grantee, and all of her children took equally an undivided one-eighth interest.

Boggan v. Somers, 152 N. C. 390, 67 S. E. 965; Triplett v. Williams, 149 N. C. 394, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 514, 63 S. E. 79; Bryan v. Eason, 147 N. C. 284, 61 S. E. 71; Allen v. Baskerville, 123 N. C. 126, 31 S. E. 383; Smith v. Proctor, 139 N. C. 314, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 172, 51 S. E. 889; Tucker v. Williams, 117 N. C. 119, 23 S. E. 90; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 108 N. C. 542, 13 S. E. 187; Ray v. Durham County, 110 N. C. 169, 14 S. E. 646; Anderson v. Logan, 105 N. C. 266, 11 S. E. 361; Stell v. Barham, 87 N. C. 62; Helms v. Austin, 116 N. C. 751, 21 S. E. 556.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question presented on this appeal is: What interest has the defendant Wm. E. Cullens in the land sold for partition? It is admitted that Wm. Lassiter owned the land in controversy, and on August 16, 1865, conveyed the same by deed to his daughter, Sarah A. Cullens, and her children, reserving a life estate to himself and his wife, Parthenia. The language of the deed in the premises is "unto Sarah A. Cullens and her children;" and in the habendum, "unto her the said Sarah A. Cullens and her children forever." There is a clause of warranty in these words: "And I, the said William Lassiter, for myself, my heirs and assigns, do and will warrant and defend the right and title of the above-described tract of lands unto the said Sarah A. Cullens and her children forever against the lawful claim or claims of all persons whomsoever." The plaintiffs contend that the deed to Sarah A. Cullens and her children conveyed only a life estate, on account of the absence of the word "heirs" in connection with the name of the grantee, and that all her children took equally an undivided one-eighth interest. The defendants claim that, under said deed, Sarah A. Cullens and her three children living at the date of the deed became owners of the land in fee simple, subject to the life estate of the Lassiters. At the date of the deed Sarah had three children; the defendant W. E. Cullens being one of the three. One of the three children died young, prior to the death of Parthenia, who survived her husband. After the death of Parthenia, Sarah had born unto her several other children, all of whom survived their mother, who died in 1911.

We think it well settled that where land is conveyed, as in this case, to a woman and her children, they take as tenants in common, and only those born at the date of the deed take unless there is one in ventre sa mère, and then such child would also take; but that fact did not exist in this case. Dupree v. Dupree, 45 N. C. (Busbee, Eq.) 164, 59 Am. Dec. 590; Gay v. Baker, 58 N. C. (5 Jones, Eq.) 344, 78 Am. Dec. 229; Heath v. Heath, 114 N. C. 547, 10 S. E. 155; Campbell v. Everhart, 130 N. C. 511, 52 S. E. 201.

The next question is: What estate did Sarah and her children (living at date of the deed) take under it? The plaintiffs contend that only a life estate passed under the deed, while the defendants contend a fee simple passed.

As the word "heirs" nowhere appears in the deed in connection with the grantees, Sarah Cullens and her children, we are of opinion that the said grantees each took only an estate for his or her life. In the recent case of Boggan v. Somers, 152 N. C. 390, 67 S. E. 965, it is held that deeds to land made prior to 1879 will not be construed as in fee in the absence of the word "heirs" in the conveyance, connected with the name of the grantee, and descriptive in some way of the estate he is to take; and a fee will not pass when it appears only in connection with the name of the grantor. In a well-considered opinion reviewing the precedents, Mr. Justice Hoke says: "While our court has long shown a disposition to interpret deeds as conveying a fee simple where such a construction would manifestly best effectuate the intent of the parties, in deeds bearing date prior to the statute of 1879, they have always required, for the creation of such an estate, that, as a mere construction of the legal title on the face of the instrument, the word 'heirs' should appear in the deed as connected with the name of the grantee, and descriptive in some way of his estate, and that such a construction was not permissible when it only appeared in connection with the name of the grantor." See also California Real Estate Co. v. Bland, 152 N. C. 225, 67 S. E. 483, and Anderson v. Logan, 105 N. C. 266, 11 S. E. 361. In this last case it is expressly held that "where there are no words of conveyance in the instrument, or where the word 'heirs' does not appear in any part of the deed except in connection with the name of the bargainor, or with some expression, such as 'party of the first part,' used in the clause of warranty, or elsewhere, to designate the grantor, the deed, if executed before the act of 1879 was passed, will be construed as vesting only a life estate in the bargainee." Stell v. Barham, 87 N. C. 62.

We are advertent to a line of cases which hold that where the word "heirs" does not appear anywhere in the deed, upon an allegation in the pleadings of mistake, etc., a court of equity will construe the deed as passing a fee simple, when upon the instrument itself such intention plainly appears. Vickers v. Leigh, 104 N. C. 248, 10 S. E. 308; Real Estate Co. v. Bland, supra. The pleadings in this case fail to present such question. The answers of the defendants contain no allegation that the word "heirs" was omitted by mistake, and that it was the plain intention of the grantor, Wm. Lassiter, to convey the land to his daughter Sarah and her then living children in fee. The defendant asks for no equitable relief. But we are not prepared to say that upon the face of this deed it was the manifest intention of Wm. Lassiter to give the land to Sarah Cullens and her then living children in fee, to the exclusion of those after-born. It was more likely his intention to convey it to Sarah herself in fee, and after her death to her children, using the word "children" in the sense of heirs of her body. But, under the settled decisions of this court, the instrument fails to effectuate such purpose, and, in our opinion, conveys to Sarah and her children living at date of the deed an estate for life as tenants in common. It therefore follows that the defendant Wm. E. Cullens is the owner for his life of one-fourth interest in the land, and is entitled to the same life interest in one fourth of the proceeds of sale.

It may be that when Wm. Lassiter died the fee descended to Sarah, his daughter, if she was his only heir, and, if so, the defendant Wm. E. Cullens would inherit along with the other heirs at law of Sarah. That will be inquired into on next trial.

The effect of the special proceeding for partition in 1865 between the heirs at law of Wm. Lassiter was not passed on by the judge below and is not presented on this appeal by any assignment of error, and the same is true as to evidence which the court declined to hear, that Sarah Cullens had been in the adverse possession of the land from 1867 to her death in 1911. As Sarah was a life tenant, and, as such, in possession, we fail to see how she acquired title to the fee by adverse possession; but that matter may also be gone into on the next trial.

New trial.

Annotation—Conveyance to one and his children as giving the children an estate jointly or in common with the parent, or a remainder upon a life estate in the parent.

I. In general, 76.

II. Instances in which parent and children have been held to take concurrently, 81.

III. Instances in which the parent has been held to take a life estate, with remainder to his children, 86.

I. In general.

In order that the question discussed in this note may arise it must first be assumed or decided that the word "children" is used as a word of purchase, and not of limitation. As to when it is used as a word of purchase and when of limitation, see note on the Rule in Shelley's Case, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) at page 1123.

The cases collated in this note are not merely those in which the term "children" is used in naming the parties to the deed or in the granting clause, but include as well cases in which it is omitted from the granting clause, but is used in the habendum or other parts of the deed. Cases in which the children have been named, as well as those in which they are merely described as "children," have been taken; as have cases where the conveyance, instead of being direct to the parent and children, was to a third person in trust for a person named and his or her children.

The scope of the note, of course, does not include cases in which the parent is expressly given an estate for life, with remainder to the children; nor does it extend to the question whether, where the children are held to take immediately, the parent takes a one-half interest and the children the other, or whether they share per capita.

While the same question as forms the subject of this note may arise in the case of a gift by will to one "and his children," and although decisions on the construction of deeds and wills containing such a provision are often cited interchangeably, certain differences in the rules of construction applicable to the two classes of instruments<sup>1</sup> have seemed not only to justify, but to require, their separate treatment.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> "We cannot safely apply, without much care, the rule of construction applicable to wills to the construction of deeds of conveyance. In construing wills, the intention of the testator is the sole guide, and words must be held to mean what he intended they should mean if it can be done without a clear perversion of their known and plain import. The intention of the devisee is not to be considered; he has no right to make

The decisions collected in this note fall into two classes: those which bring to the construction of conveyances certain technical rules; and those which attempt to ascertain and give effect to the intention of the parties without employing such rules, and with the aid of certain rules of construction evolved by themselves.<sup>3</sup> It is, therefore, impossible to frame general statements which will harmonize with all the cases.

According to what may be termed the primary rule of construction, where the conveyance is expressed to be to one "and his children," or to one and his children, naming them, and there are children living, the parent and the children then in being will, in the absence of anything to warrant a different construction, take concurrently, either as joint tenants or (where the deed expressly creates a cotenancy, or where what would otherwise be a joint tenancy is declared by statute to be presumptively a cotenancy) as tenants in common.<sup>4</sup> This result follows whether the rule applied is the technical one that persons named as grantees take (unless the habendum shows otherwise)<sup>5</sup> terms with the deviser; besides, a will can be made, altered by codicil or revoked at the pleasure of the deviser. Not so with a deed of conveyance. To it there must be two parties, each having a right in settling its terms, and in its construction the intention of both parties must be considered. It cannot be altered or abrogated by either party, but only by the act of both. This difference between the rules of construction which govern these two classes of instruments is plainly founded in reason and justice." King v. Rea (1877) 56 Ind. 1.

That no construction more favorable to the interests of children ought to be allowed in the case of a deed than in the case of a will is held in Baird v. Brookin (1890) 86 Ga. 709, 12 L.R.A. 157, 12 S. E. 981, the court saying: "Children and grandchildren being the natural objects of a testator's affections, it is to be supposed that in the making of his will he usually bears them in mind, and desires them to share in and enjoy his bounty. This is manifest from the large number of wills providing, in one way or another, for the testator's descendants. Deeds are contracts, in the making of which both contracting parties are supposed to take care of themselves; and where a grantee intends to contract for the benefit of his children, as well as of himself, having the same natural desire in their behalf as in the case of a testator making a will, and being a party to the instrument, he has the opportunity to secure the end desired by having the deed speak its real purpose plainly and unmistakably. It would seem, then, that no rule more favorable to the interests of children ought to be allowed in the one case than in the other. We have seen what construction has been uniformly put upon wills containing language like that in the deed before us; and, on general principles, we can see no good reason why such deeds should not be similarly treated."

<sup>2</sup>For discussion of the question as one of testamentary construction, see annotation to Rice v. Klette, ante, 46.

<sup>3</sup>Under the old system of conveyancing, the office of the premises of a deed was rightly to name the feoffer and feoffee, and to describe the land to be conveyed; and the office of the habendum was to name again the feoffee, and to limit the certainty of the L.R.A.1917B.

estate. If the habendum was repugnant to the premises, either in the quantity of the thing conveyed, the estate, or the grantee, it was void. But the habendum might determine the estate granted, enlarge, explain, or qualify the premises, and might name a new grantee if the estate given was not immediate, but by way of remainder. In modern times, the inclination of the courts is to look to the whole of the instrument, without reference to formal divisions, in order to ascertain the intention of the parties, and not to allow technical rules to override the intent. Beecher v. Hicks (1881) 7 Lea (Tenn.) 207.

<sup>4</sup>Cases stating this rule are: Plant v. Plant (1905) 122 Ga. 763, 50 S. E. 961; Faloon v. Simshauser (1889) 130 Ill. 649, 22 N. E. 835; King v. Rea (1877) 56 Ind. 1; McFarland v. Hatchett (1904) 118 Ky. 423, 80 S. W. 1185; Brabham v. Day (1898) 75 Miss. 923, 23 So. 578; Hamilton v. Pitcher (1873) 53 Mo. 334; Dupree v. Dupree (1853) 45 N. C. (Busbee Eq.) 164, 59 Am. Dec. 590; Gay v. Baker (1859) 58 N. C. (5 Jones, Eq.) 344, 78 Am. Dec. 229; Heath v. Heath (1894) 114 N. C. 547, 19 S. E. 155; Helms v. Austin (1895) 116 N. C. 751, 21 S. E. 556; King v. Stokes (1899) 125 N. C. 514, 34 S. E. 641; Darden v. Timberlake (1905) 139 N. C. 181, 51 S. E. 895; Fales v. Currier (1875) 55 N. H. 392; Sease v. Sease (1902) 64 S. C. 216, 41 S. E. 898; Porter v. Lancaster (1912) 91 S. C. 300, 74 S. E. 374; Arrington v. Roper (1876) 3 Tenn. Ch. 572; Beecher v. Hicks (1881) 7 Lea (Tenn.) 207; Norton v. Reed (1897) — Tenn. —, 42 S. W. 688.

For instances in which the rule has been applied, see cases set out in II. infra.

<sup>5</sup>The reference to "children" as grantees may be so explained by the habendum as to give the children an interest in succession to, rather than concurrently with, the parent. See Doty v. Wray (1880) 66 Ga. 153; Wager v. Wager (1815) 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 374, set out in infra III.

The effect of other language in a deed to cut down the estate conveyed by the granting clause is discussed in the note to Carl-Lee v. Ellsberry, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 956, where it is said that the rule that the granting clause of a deed will prevail over subsequent clauses which would have the effect an immediate estate, or the independent rule of construction by which it is presumed that the parents and children were intended to take concurrently; the practical difference between the two rules being that under the first the construction is varied only where the grantor has proceeded in due form to define the extent of the separate estate to be enjoyed by the grantees,<sup>6</sup> while, under the second, the construction may be varied by implications of a different intention found in other parts of the instrument, or in the relationship of the parties thereto. Since at common law a grantee must be a person in being, after-born children can take no interest under the conveyance,<sup>7</sup> unless en ventre sa mère at the time of conveyance,<sup>8</sup> and provided the conveyance is one operating under the statute of uses.<sup>9</sup> That where a present estate is granted, only existing children are to take, is also presumed to be the intention of the grantor.<sup>10</sup>

But even where technical rules of construction prevail, it has been held that where it is clearly the intention of the parties that future as well as existing to abridge the estate conveyed stands unquestioned, the differences of opinion concerning it being in regard to its application: that while it has sometimes been given effect as a rule of property, the consensus of modern decision is that it is a rule of last resort, applicable only where there is an irreconcilable repugnance between the clauses, so that it is impossible to discover with anything like certainty the intention of the parties; but that the intention, wherever discoverable, must be given effect, and that in seeking such intention the formal divisions of the deed are to be disregarded, and the deed is to be considered as a whole, and not in separate and distinct parts, as was formerly done.

A supplemental note on the same question may be found in 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 514.

<sup>6</sup>Cf. Wallace v. Craig (1887) 27 S. C. 524. 4 S. E. 74, set out in infra II.; also King v. Rea (1877) 56 Ind. 1, where it is said that in the construction of deeds of trust the expressed trusts will always govern the words in the habendum; but this is not so in a deed of conveyance merely between the vendor and vendee. In such cases the distinction between words of limitation and words of purchase must be preserved, and the rights of the parties maintained accordingly.

<sup>7</sup>The rule of law is that under a conveyance to A and his children, if A have children at the time of the conveyance, the children take jointly with the parent, and after-born children are excluded. Moore v. Lee (1894) 105 Ala. 435, 17 So. 15.

Only such children as are alive at the time of the conveyance take thereunder. Loyless v. Blackshear (1871) 43 Ga. 327.

In Glass v. Glass (1880) 71 Ind. 392, it was held, construing a conveyance by way of advancement from a father to his son "and to the children of the said James C. Glass and assigns forever," that although it was the manifest intention of the grantor to convey an interest in the land to the children of James C. Glass who might thereafter be born to him, as well as the one then in being, effect could not be given thereto by reason of the well-settled rule that there must be a person in existence to receive as well as to give a conveyance of an immediate estate.

In Blackburn v. Blackburn (1902) 109 L.R.A.1917B.

Tenn. 674, 73 S. W. 109, it is said that in the cases in which it has been held that a conveyance to a mother and her children, without qualifying words, vests title in the then living children and the mother as tenants in common, to the exclusion of children coming into being thereafter, this rule is vested either upon the idea that a freehold could not be created to take effect in futuro, as at common law livery of seisin was essential to such estate, or else upon an implication from the instrument of an intention upon the part of the grantor that the title should pass to the living children as if they had been named therein.

Other cases supporting the position that after-born children are to be excluded from participation are: Varner v. Young (1876) 56 Ala. 260; Burnett v. Sumerlin (1900) 110 Ga. 349, 35 S. E. 655; Plant v. Plant (1905) 122 Ga. 763, 50 S. E. 961; Beauchamp v. Fitzpatrick (1909) 133 Ga. 412, 65 S. E. 884; Powell v. James (1914) 141 Ga. 793, 82 S. E. 232; Faloon v. Simshauser (1889) 130 Ill. 649, 22 N. E. 835; King v. Rea (1877) 56 Ind. 1; Gay v. Baker (1860) 58 N. C. (5 Jones, Eq.) 344, 78 Am. Dec. 229; Heath v. Heath (1894) 114 N. C. 547, 19 S. E. 155; Porter v. Lancaster (1911) 91 S. C. 300, 74 S. E. 374; Beecher v. Hicks (1881) 7 Lea (Tenn.) 207; Livingston v. Livingston (1886) 16 Lea (Tenn.) 448.

<sup>8</sup>King v. Rea (1877) 56 Ind. 1; Powell v. Powell (1869) 5 Bush (Ky.) 619, 96 Am. Dec. 372.

On right of infant en ventre sa mère to take as grantee in deed, see note in 44 L.R.A. 489.

<sup>9</sup>See, as holding that a child en ventre sa mère cannot take as grantee by a common-law conveyance, Dupree v. Dupree (1853) 45 N. C. (Busbee, Eq.) 164, 59 Am. Dec. 590.

It is otherwise, however, where the conveyance is to uses, for then, the legal estate vesting in the trustee, the rule of the common law is supposed to be satisfied, and the use is allowed to shift so as to include an unborn child. Gay v. Baker (1860) 58 N. C. (5 Jones, Eq.) 344, 78 Am. Dec. 229.

<sup>10</sup>See Blackburn v. Blackburn (1902) 109 Tenn. 674, 73 S. W. 109, in footnote 7, supra.

In Plant v. Plant (1905) 122 Ga. 763, 50 S. E. 961, it was held that there was noth-children shall take an interest under the deed, and the conveyance is one operating under the statute of uses,<sup>11</sup> after-born children may take as beneficiaries of a shifting or springing use.<sup>12</sup>

Where the conveyance is not directly to one and his children, but is in trust for them, the difficulty occasioned by the rule that only persons in being can take as grantees disappears, and the question whether after-born children may take will depend solely upon whether the terms of the trust include them.<sup>13</sup> In such a case also there is a stronger presumption that after-born as well as existing children were intended to take.<sup>14</sup>

Under the technical rule of construction that those who are not parties to a deed can take no present interest under it, where "children" are not mentioned as parties to the deed, but are introduced by a subsequent clause, they cannot take except as remaindermen; and such conveyances are accordingly construed as giving the parents a life estate, with remainder to the children,<sup>15</sup> unless the reference in the habendum to the children of the grantee is held merely indicative of the motive for the conveyance, rather than as creating any estate in the children.<sup>16</sup>

In cases which proceed independently of the technical rules of construction, however, children have been held to take jointly with the parent, although mentioned in the habendum only.<sup>17</sup>

The two presumptions, that where a conveyance is to one and his children the parent and children were intended to take concurrently, and that only existing children were intended to take, will yield to indications of a contrary intention.<sup>18</sup>

Thus, the fact that the conveyance is

ing in a deed to the party of the second part as "trustee of his wife [name] and their children," which deed conferred upon the trustee a power to sell and reinvest and to mortgage the trust property during his lifetime, to use, control, and dispose of the rents, issues, and profits as he might see fit, without accountability to the cestuis que trust, or either of them, or to any successor in the trust, to indicate an intention on the part of the maker of the deed that after-born children should be entitled to participate.

<sup>11</sup> As to the extent to which the statute of uses is in force in the United States, see note to Blake v. O'Neal, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1148.

<sup>12</sup> In Mellichamp v. Mellichamp (1888) 28 S. C. 125, 5 S. E. 333, it was held, construing a deed conveying land to a woman "and the children she already has and may hereafter bear by her husband," that the intent of the grantor to include after-born children might be given effect (there being persons in existence then competent to take the estate conveyed) by regarding such persons as trustees of a shifting or springing use, first for themselves, and second for themselves and the after-born children as they should respectively come into being.

So also, in Reeves v. Cook (1905) 71 S. C. 275, 51 S. E. 93, a deed granting property to a woman "and the heirs of her body which she has or may have by" her husband was construed as conveying to the woman and her children, including those born after the conveyance, as tenants in common.

For other instances in which children born after the conveyance took effect were held to be entitled upon their birth to an equal share with their parent and the other children, see Dunn v. Bank of Mobile (1841) 2 Ala. 152; Southern R. Co. v. Hays (1907) 150 Ala. 212, 43 So. 487; Cessna v. L.R.A. 1917B.

Cessna (1868) 4 Bush (Ky.) 516; Powell v. Powell (1869) 5 Bush (Ky.) 619, 96 Am. Dec. 372,—set out in II. infra.

<sup>13</sup> Although no title in law will vest in children thereafter born, notwithstanding a clear declaration of the grantor's intent that the after-born children shall take, they will take as beneficiaries under a trust by deed, and the living grantees under a direct deed will hold the legal title in trust for themselves and the after-born children. Arrington v. Roper (1876) 3 Tenn. Ch. 572.

<sup>14</sup> In Ragedale v. Mabry (1874) 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 300, where a husband purchased certain real estate and caused it to be conveyed to a trustee for his wife "and her children," it was held, judging from the most obvious import of the words, that this being a continuing trust, the words "her children" referred to all persons who might answer the description of the children of that marriage during the existence of the trust, including those born subsequent to as well as those born before the date of the conveyance.

<sup>15</sup> See Foster v. Shreve (1869) 6 Bush (Ky.) 519; Blair v. Osborne (1881) 81 N. C. 417; Beacroft v. Strawn (1873) 67 Ill. 28; Moreland v. Hunley (1867) 37 Ga. 342,—set out in III. infra.

<sup>16</sup> For an instance of this, see Mauzy v. Mauzy (1884) 79 Va. 537.

<sup>17</sup> See Henderson v. Sawyer (1896) 99 Ga. 234, 25 S. E. 312; Huie v. McDaniel (1898) 105 Ga. 319, 31 S. E. 189; Brasington v. Hanson (1892) 149 Pa. 289, 24 Atl. 344; Chandler v. Jost (1886) 81 Ala. 412, 2 So. 82,—set forth in II. infra.

<sup>18</sup> A very slight indication of an intention that the children should not take jointly with the mother will suffice to give the estate to the mother for life, with remainder to her children. Beecher v. Hicks (1881) 7 Lea (Tenn.) 207.

A slight indication of intention will induce the courts to give the deed a construc-in the nature of a family settlement will raise a counter presumption that after-born as well as existing children are to take thereunder. And where it may be inferred that the parent is intended to have the enjoyment of the whole, or that the parent is not to take an estate of inheritance in any part of the property, the children necessarily take by way of remainder; though in some instances conveyances in the nature of family settlements have been held to give the children an interest jointly with the parent during the lifetime of the parent, as well as the remainder after the parent's decease.<sup>19</sup> So, in Kentucky, it is held that if a husband makes provision for his wife and children, an intention should be presumed upon his part to give the whole of it to her for life, remainder to the children, unless the contrary purpose appears from the terms of the provision or the circumstances attending it.<sup>20</sup> tion which will permit after-born children to participate in the benefit of the conveyance. Blackburn v. Blackburn (1902) 109 Tenn. 674, 73 S. W. 109.

<sup>19</sup> See Davis v. Hunter (1857) 23 Ga. 172; Luquire v. Lee (1905) 121 Ga. 624, 49 S. E. 834; Jarvis v. Quigley (1849) 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 104; Hallam v. Ashford (1902) 24 Ky. L. Rep. 870, 70 S. W. 197; Williams v. Williams (1885) 16 Lea (Tenn.) 164,—set out in II. infra.

<sup>20</sup> Smith v. Upton (1890) 12 Ky. L. Rep. 27, 13 S. W. 721.

While gifts and conveyances to a wife and her children under the ordinary rule would create a joint tenancy, the courts in the construction of instruments executed by a husband to his wife and children are always inclined to construe the instrument as creating an estate for life in the wife, with remainder to the children. Koenig v. Kraft (1888) 87 Ky. 95, 12 Am. St. Rep. 463, 7 S. W. 622.

<sup>21</sup> A father making provision for his child and that child's children may well be supposed to have intended them to take jointly. They are all of his blood and are the natural objects of his bounty; but when a husband makes a conveyance to his wife and their children there is less reason to suppose that he intended they should take as joint tenants, whereby his bounty may, by her death, pass into the hands of a stranger, even as against himself. Davis v. Hardin (1880) 80 Ky. 672.

<sup>22</sup> In Bullock v. Caldwell (1884) 81 Ky. 566, it was said: "In Davis v. Hardin (1880) 80 Ky. 672, this court said: 'A father making provision for his child and that child's children may well be supposed to have intended them to take jointly. They are all of his blood and the natural objects of his bounty.' If others were named in such a grant than the children, there would then be no room for a conten-

Two reasons have been given for this rule: first, that the provision for the wife may not be diminished during her lifetime, and second, that if she takes jointly with her children, the husband's bounty may by her death pass into the hands of a stranger, even as against himself.<sup>21</sup> This presumption has been held not to apply where a father makes provision for his child and that child's children;<sup>22</sup> though the broad rule stated in some of the later Kentucky cases makes no account of this distinction.<sup>23</sup>

In some states, notably Kentucky, Pennsylvania, and Tennessee, it has been thought necessarily to follow from the fact that after-born children are intended to take that they must take as remaindermen, and consequently that where an intention to benefit after-born children is indicated, the parent takes an estate for life.<sup>24</sup> This overlooks the possibility of such children taking through tion, and because the word 'children' is used affords no reason for inferring an intention on the part of the grantor to make a different disposition of the estates than the plain language of the instrument indicated, and then to reverse the rule when applied to strangers, for the reason that such a conveyance is susceptible of but one construction. Nor is there any reason to suppose that the draftsman would employ such language in a conveyance when the grantor's purpose is to give or grant the estate to the daughter for life and the remainder to her children."

<sup>23</sup> See, for example, Hall v. Wright (1905) 121 Ky. 6, 87 S. W. 1129.

<sup>24</sup> In Blackburn v. Blackburn (1902) 109 Tenn. 674, 73 S. W. 109, it is said that if the deed, when taken all together, discloses a purpose upon the grantor's part that all the children of the mother, without regard to the time of their birth, shall become beneficiaries of the property conveyed, then, to effectuate this purpose, the mother will be converted into a tenant for life and the children into remaindermen, the remainder vesting in those living at the date of the instrument, and the estate opening upon the subsequent birth of children so as to embrace them; or else a mother will be held to be trustee for herself and her then living as well as her after-born children.

In Hall v. Wright (Ky.) supra, it is said that the application of the joint-tenancy rule should only be made, if at all, in cases where it clearly and affirmatively appears that at the time the donor acted he knew there could be no after-born children. "We cannot believe, unless the contrary intent clearly appears, that the donor ordinarily, in the use of language granting or devising property to his child and his child's children, intends that his own child having one child shall first own one half in fee, and a shifting use. It has led to its being stated in some cases as an absolute rule that a deed to a man and his children, or to a woman and her children, will be presumed to convey a life estate to the parent, with remainder to the children. In view of the fact that if it is intended that the parent shall take a life estate, with remainder to the children, it is both natural and easy to say so, this rule seems rather far-fetched. The flounderings through which the Kentucky courts have come to face in a direction opposite from that in which they started may be traced through their decisions.

Where, at the time of the conveyance, the grantee named has no children, the presumption is that the term "children" is a word of limitation rather than of purchase, giving such grantee an estate tail; but this presumption may be rebutted, and in such case the grantee named is usually held to have an estate for life, with remainder to the children;<sup>28</sup> though this does not necessarily follow, since, where the conveyance is one operating under the statute of uses, or is in trust for the parent and children, the estate of the parent will open to admit his children as they come into being.<sup>29</sup>

II. Instances in which parent and children have been held to take concurrently.

"B having divers sonnes and daughters, A giveth lands to B et liberis suis, et a lour heires, the father and all his children do take a fee simple joyntly by force of these words (their heires); but if he had no childe at the time of the feoffment, the childe borne afterwards shall not take." 1 Co. Litt. 9a.

Dunn v. Bank of Mobile (1841) 2 Ala. 152, a deed of gift by which the donor declared the intention that the donee and her children then in life, who were designated by name, and those thereafter to be born, should enjoy the property conveyed immediately after the donor's death, it was held that the mother did not take an estate for life, to the exclusion of her children during that period, but that those in life obtained a present interest immediately upon the donor's death as tenants in common with their mother, and that the children born after that event became, upon their birth, entitled to an equal share with their mother and elder brothers and sisters.

In Chandler v. Jost (1886) 81 Ala. 412, 2 So. 82, a conveyance to a married woman, habendum "to her for the joint use of herself and her children, Bella and Francis, and such other children as shall be born to her of her present marriage," was held to give her only a partial interest in the property as tenant in common with her children.

In Sullivan v. McLaughlin (1891) 99 Ala. 60, 11 So. 447, it was held that there was nothing in a deed whereby the husband conveyed to his wife "and the heirs of her body by myself as husband" certain described lands "to have and to hold to the said [wife] and the heirs of her body by myself as husband and to her assigns in the right and for the interest of her said heirs as aforesaid," from which it could be inferred that the grantor intended to postpone the interest of his children, who accordingly took jointly with their mother.

In Varner v. Young (1876) 56 Ala. 260, it was held that, under a deed conveying certain property, in consideration of natural love and affection for the grantor's wife and children, to a trustee as trustee of the wife "and her children, to her and their proper use and exclusive benefit and behoof forever," the wife and her then only child took an equal undivided interest, and that after-born children took no interest whatever.

In Moore v. Lee (1894) 105 Ala. 435, 17 So. 15, it was held that under a deed whereby the grantor, in consideration of love and affection for his daughter, conveyed certain land to "the said Ida B. Lee and her children forever," "and for her own benefit and behoof forever," the daughter did not take a life estate with then, on the birth of another child, own one third in fee, and then one fourth, and so on, until in his old age only he may finally come to know what land he really does own."

<sup>28</sup>In New Hampshire, the rule has been laid down that where there is a grant to a woman and her children, and there is nothing to show that the term "children" is used in the sense of "heirs of the body," and there are children living at the time of the grant, they will take as tenants in common with their mother; but that where there are no children, the woman takes an estate for L.R.A.1917B.

life, with remainder to the children. See Fales v. Currier (1875) 55 N. H. 302.

In Hall v. Wright (Ky.) supra, it is said that the same construction must obtain whether there are any children in being at the time of the deed or not, for the donor is in the same state of ignorance as to future children in the one case as in the other. The unborn children, when there are already children and when there may be more, and the unborn children when there are as yet none, are presumably alike the subject of the donor's thoughts.

<sup>29</sup>See footnotes 12 and 13, supra.

remainder to her children, but jointly with her children then in esse.

In Southern R. Co. v. Hays (1907) 150 Ala. 212, 43 So. 487, a deed to "Fannie Hayes and her two children, Bessie, Thomas (Hayes) and Clifton Hayes and any succeeding heirs of her body," "to have and to hold to Fannie Hayes and her children and their heirs and assigns forever," was held to give the property conveyed to Fannie and her children then living, and to those who might be born to her after its execution.

In Brenham v. Davidson (1876) 51 Cal. 352, a deed by which the grantor conveyed certain property to his wife and to his son Peter, and to such other heirs as his wife might have during the marriage, and after her decease to the children of the marriage, their heirs and assigns forever, was held, without discussion of the question, to vest the estate in the wife and son, in equal moieties as tenants in common, in fee simple.

In Davis v. Hunter (1857) 23 Ga. 172, it was held that the proper interpretation of a deed of gift to the grantor's daughter and her then husband and her children then or afterward born, for their support and maintenance during the natural lives of said daughter and her husband, remainder to the children, —was to give the title to the property conveyed to the grandchildren and a joint estate in the usufruct during the daughter's life to the daughter, her husband and her children.

In Loyless v. Blackshear (1871) 43 Ga. 327, it was held that under a conveyance to a trustee for M. "and her children," M. and her children then in life took what at common law would have been a joint estate, but which, under the statute, was an estate in common in fee simple, and not a life estate to M., with remainder to her children.

Under a deed granting property in trust "for the sole and separate use and benefit of the said Frances Catharine Bridges and any children she may have, free from the control or contracts of any husband the said Frances may hereafter marry," the grantee takes as tenant in common with her children. Pierce v. Brooks (1874) 52 Ga. 425.

In Chess-Carley Co. v. Purtell (1885) 74 Ga. 467, it was held that under a conveyance made to one as trustee for his wife and her "present heirs," his wife and her children which she then had took the property as tenants in common.

In Henderson v. Sawyer (1896) 99 Ga. 234, 25 S. E. 312, it was held that where premises described in a deed were thereby granted, bargained, and sold to a named person "to have and to hold unto her . . . and the heirs she may have by" her husband, "to them and their own proper use, benefit and behoof forever, in fee simple," the effect of such deed was to convey the title to the grantee named and her three children in life when it was executed, as tenants in common.

In Huie v. McDaniel (1898) 105 Ga. 319, 31 S. E. 189, where a father in the granting clause of a deed conveyed to his daughter, "her heirs and assigns," a certain tract of land, the habendum clause, however, being "to have and to hold said land and its appurtenances unto" the daughter and her two children, naming them, "made equal as heirs," it was held that the conveyance should be construed, to effectuate the real intention of the parties, as passing an estate in common to the daughter and her two children.

Under a grant to one and his children the title will vest in such one and his children then living as tenants in common, to the exclusion of after-born children, in the absence of anything further to show the intention of the grantor. Burnett v. Summerlin (1900) 110 Ga. 349, 35 S. E. 655.

In Luquire v. Lee (1905) 121 Ga. 624, 49 S. E. 834, it was held that the estate created by a deed conveying land to a trustee "to have and to hold the said tract or parcel of land to the said (trustee) his heirs and assigns forever, upon the special confidence and trust nevertheless, for the sole and separate use of Nancy R. Lee and her children during the natural life of or widowhood of said Nancy R. Lee; and at her death or marriage this trust to cease and the property to be equally divided between the children of said Nancy R. Lee living at her death share and share alike,"—was a joint life estate in Mrs. Lee and her children during her life, with a fee-simple estate in remainder to the children who should survive her.

In Beauchamp v. Fitzpatrick (1909) 133 Ga. 412, 65 S. E. 884, it was held that under a deed whereby the grantor, in consideration of love and affection, conveyed certain land to a trustee for his daughter and the children of her body, "for the sole and separate use of the said [daughter] and her children as aforesaid, their heirs and assigns," the daughter and her children in being at the time of the conveyance took as tenants in common.

In Walker v. Walker (1913) 139 Ga. 547, 77 S. E. 795, it was held that a deed whereby the grantor, in consideration of love and affection, conveyed to his wife and their four children, naming them, certain property, "to have and to hold the said tract of land under them the said [names] their heirs and assigns, together with all and singular the rights members and appurtenances thereof to the same belonging, to their own proper use and benefit forever in fee simple, provided nevertheless that such tract of land herein granted shall not be sold unless for the purpose of division of same, as hereinafter specified, by said parties of the second part except upon application to the superior court of said county by the said [wife] if in life and all such children who shall be living and shall have attained their majority at the time of such application, and upon leave granted by the judge of said court for such sale and provision made by said judge by the reinvestment of the proceeds of said sale in an estate of like nature with the one herein created and provided further that the corpus of the estate granted by this deed or arising from reinvestment above mentioned shall not be encroached upon nor shall division of the same be made until the said [wife] shall have died and all of said children who may live for so long have attained their majority; and provided further that if at the time of the said division any of the parties of the second part shall have died leaving no children or descendants of children then the share of said party or parties shall be divided among those of said parties of the second part living at said time share and share alike; but if said deceased party shall have left a child or children or descendant of children, then said child or children or descendant of children to take the share of their deceased ancestor,"—did not create a life estate in the wife with remainder over to the children, but conveyed the land in fee to the wife and children named, with a provision that no division of the property should be made until after the death of the wife and the majority of the children who might live to reach majority; the fee conveyed, however, being subject to the divested as to any grantee who might die before the time for division.

Under a deed conveying an immediate estate, with present enjoyment, to a woman and her children, the title vests in the woman and such children as are living at the time of the conveyance as tenants in common, and children thereafter born to her take no interest under such L.R.A.1917B.

deed. Powell v. James (1914) 141 Ga. 793, 32 S. E. 232.

In Jarvis v. Quigley (1849) 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 104, where a conveyance of slaves in the nature of a marriage settlement, was in trust for the use and benefit of the wife of a certain person "and the heirs of her body begotten by" such person and contained the recital: "It being the distinct understanding of the parties hereto that the aforesaid slaves and each of them are in no event to become liable to or for the debts of the aforesaid [husband] but said slaves and each of them and their increase are to be held, kept and used by the aforesaid trustee for the sole and exclusive use and benefit of the aforesaid Eleanor and the heirs of her body by the aforesaid [husband]," it was held that although the conveyance for the sole use of the wife and her children in being and in expectancy might be understood as giving to the wife an interest in common with her children, which might go to her husband on her death, yet as this was not the necessary construction of such conveyance, and as it was expelled by the provision that in no event should the property become liable for the husband's debts, it would best comport, with such provision and with the obvious intent of the grant to construe it as giving to the wife no interest beyond her own life, and vesting in the children, at her death, whatever interest she had.

In Cessna v. Cessna (1868) 4 Bush. (Ky.) 516, it was held, construing a contract whereby the vendor, for a valuable consideration, bound himself to convey a tract of land to his son "and his lawful children," that the children took as purchasers, and that the estate would open up to children born after the date of such contract. In Hall v. Wright (1905) 121 Ky. 16, 87 S. W. 1129, the case of Cessna v. Cessna (Ky.) supra, is explained by saying that no contention was made by the parties or considered by the court involving the suggestion of giving the first taker a life estate with remainder to the children.

In Powell v. Powell (1869) 5 Bush (Ky.) 619, 96 Am. Dec. 372, where a husband conveyed certain property through an intermediary to his wife and her child or children begotten by him, it was held that a child born shortly after the date of the conveyance eo instanti became a joint tenant with her mother by the legal effect of the deed. But in Davis v. Hardin (1880) 80 Ky. 672, it was said with reference to the foregoing case that it would no doubt have been held that the wife took only a life estate if the question had been raised and the attention of the court had been called to Webb v. Holmes (1843) 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 404; but that the child claimed only one half of the estate, and the case of Webb v. Holmes does not appear to have been cited. And in Hall v. Wright (Ky.) supra, it is said that the case of Powell v. Powell (Ky.) supra, is not in accord with the established rule in Kentucky.

In Tucker v. Tucker (1880) 78 Ky. 504, a deed without formal caption, reading "Know all men that William Hunt . . . in consideration of [the payment of a specified amount of money] paid by John C. Tucker, doth hereby bargain, sell and convey to Martha Ann Tucker and the heirs of John C. Tucker their heirs and assigns forever the following real estate," was held to vest an absolute estate in præsent in Martha Ann Tucker and her two children then living as joint tenants. The court further said: "The fact that John C. Tucker paid a portion of the purchase money cannot alter the construction. His intention does not enter as an element into the construction of the deed from Hunt; but if it did, the will of John C. Tucker clearly manifests that he understood that the deed from Hunt vested the land in his children, Foster and Rachel. He wills the bulk of his estate to his last wife and to his daughter Virginia, and assigns as a reason that Foster and Rachel are the owners of the home place (the land in controversy) and that the disposition made by him will equalize the children." This provision of the will is said, in Hall v. Wright (Ky.) supra, apparently to have constrained the court to effectuate the manifest intention of the father.

In Bullock v. Caldwell (1884) 81 Ky. 566, it was held that under a conveyance from a father to his daughter "and her children, of the second part, to have and to hold said tract of land to the parties of the second part, their heirs and assigns forever," the children living at the time of the conveyance took a present interest in the property conveyed, although their names were not inserted in the deed.

In Hallam v. Ashford (1902) 24 Ky. L. Rep. 870, 70 S. W. 197, a deed made by a father to a daughter and her children, the granting clause of which was: "This deed of conveyance made and entered into this the 13th day of April, 1897 between George Davis of Mercer County, Kentucky, of the first part and Melinda Ashford and her children she now has and any other she may hereafter have of the second part witnesseth: The said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of $1 cash in hand paid and natural love and affection I have for my said daughter, Melinda Ashford, wife of Levy Ashford, and her living children, and any other that she may hereafter have, do hereby sell and convey to said Melinda Ashford and her children during the life of said Melinda Ashford, and at her death to go directly to her then living children or heirs of any dead ones, the following described property,"—was construed as giving Melinda Ashford and her children a joint tenancy in the land during her life, and the fee simple at her death to her then living children or the heirs of any who should fail to survive her, leaving issue.

In Brabham v. Day (1898) 75 Miss. 923, 23 So. 578, it was held that a conveyance "to Eliza Day and her children" gave to her child then living an estate as tenant in common with the mother.

In Tyler v. Lilly (1902) 81 Miss. 606, 33 So. 445, a deed, made by filling in a printed form, and bearing marks of haste, carelessness and inattention, expressed to have been made between the party of the first part and "C. J. Bolen and children, parties of the second part," and witnessing, "that the said party of the first part in consideration of the sum of $500 to him paid by the said party of the second part, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, do by these presents, grant, bargain and sell convey and convey and confirm unto the party of the second part his heirs and assigns the following described lots . . . unto the said party of the second part and unto theirs heirs, executors and administrators and the said party of the first part for his heirs, executors and administrators do hereby covenant and agree with the said party of the second part theirs heirs and assigns and the said party of the first part will warrant and defend the title to the said premises unto the said party of the second part and to theirs heirs and assigns forever,"—was construed to give a child of C. J. Bolen living at the time of the conveyance a one-half interest in the land as tenant in common, notwithstanding the use of the word "his" in the phrase "his heirs and assigns" in the granting clause.

In Gay v. Baker (1860) 58 N. C. (5 Jones Eq.) 344, 78 Am. Dec. 229, it was held that a deed reciting as a consideration the love and affection which the donor had for Elizabeth Gay and her children, and conveying negroes to a trustee "for the proper use, behoof and advantage of my daughter aforesaid, together with her children aforesaid," and which did not disclose any intention to give in succession to the daughter the use for life and then to her children, but, on the contrary, declared that the daughter should have the use together with the children, and that the whole equitable interest should belong to the daughter and her children in common, vested an estate in the mother and the children then born and one in ventre sa mère, as tenants in common, to the exclusion of after-born children.

In Shirlock v. Shirlock (1847) 5 Pa. 367, a deed naming as party of the second part "Mary Shirlock in trust for herself and her children," and granting "unto the said Mary in trust for herself and her children and unto their heirs and assigns [certain property] to have and to hold unto the said Mary Shirlock for herself and her children their heirs and assigns,"—was construed as giving Mary Shirlock and her children an estate in common in fee simple; the court below (the judgment of which was affirmed per curiam) saying that the plaintiff's claim founded on the construction giving a trust to Mary Shirlock and a fee to the children could not be supported, for if they claimed as cestuis que trust merely, their estate would determine with that of the trustee, for in deeds special words of limitation are always essential; but that all difficulty on the point might be obviated by considering the words "their heirs" to refer to both Mary Shirlock and her children, and treating them all as grantees in the deed. This construction was, however, repudiated in Coursey v. Davis (1863) 46 Pa. 25, 84 Am. Dec. 519; and in Hague v. Hague (1894) 161 Pa. 643, 41 Am. St. Rep. 900, 29 Atl. 261, it is said that Shirlock v. Shirlock has never been followed and has been several times questioned and departed from in subsequent cases, and cannot now be regarded as authority.

In Brasington v. Hanson (1892) 149 Pa. 289, 24 Atl. 344, it was held that under a deed granting lands to Sally Brasington "for the only use and behoof of the said Brasington and her heirs, viz: Samuel, Milton, Oscar and Albert H. Brasington," Sally Brasington took as a tenant in common with her four children L.R.A.1917B.

named, rather than a life estate, with remainder to such children.

In Wallace v. Craig (1887) 27 S. O. 524, 4 S. E. 74, construing a deed of gift from a daughter to her mother, whereby the donor conveyed certain lands to a trustee "to hold for the sole and separate use, benefit and behoof of Mrs. Laura S. Craig and her children," it was held that although it was obvious that the donor intended to convey the land to her mother primarily for her benefit, and incidentally for that of her children, and that the mother should take a life estate for the use of herself and children, and the children the remainder, such intention could not be given effect; and that, under the rule in Wild's Case, the mother and her children took as tenants in common.

In Foster v. Glover (1895) 46 S. C. 522, 24 S. E. 370, it was held that under a conveyance which, for and in consideration of natural love and affection for the grantor's son and his family, and for the sum of $50 paid by the trustee, conveyed property to such trustee in trust for the sole and separate use of Mrs. Sarah A. Foster and her children, Mrs. Foster and each of her children living at the time of the execution of the deed took concurrently.

In Porter v. Lancaster (1911) 91 S. C. 300, 74 S. E. 374, a deed whereby a husband, for a valuable consideration, conveyed lands to his wife "and the issue of her body by me, Charles Smith begotten . . . to have and to hold all and singular the premises before mentioned unto the said Priscilla Smith and the issue of her body as aforesaid their heirs and assigns forever," was held to vest the property in the wife and the issue of her body by the grantor living at the time of the execution of the deed, as tenants in common.

In Gray v. Hays (1847) 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 588, a deed made in consideration of natural love and affection of the grantor for his daughter, to a trustee for such daughter and her child and such other children as she might have, was held to vest the property jointly in the daughter and her children.

In Barnes v. Vickers (1874) 3 Baxt. (Tenn.) 370, a deed to a woman and her five children was held to have vested them with title as tenants in common.

In Williams v. Williams (1885) 16 Lea (Tenn.) 164, it was held that the mere construction of the language of a deed whereby a husband conveyed land to his wife "for her sole and separate use and benefit, together with her children; she to have control of the property and in the event of her death before his [the husband's] the property to revert to him in trust for his children," was that the wife took a life estate for herself, with a trust in favor of the children jointly with her during life, with remainder to the children after her death, the husband, if surviving, taking the legal estate for the benefit of the children of the marriage.

In Livingston v. Livingston (1886) 16 Lea (Tenn.) 448, a conveyance starting out with a recital that it is made between the first party "and his wife Mary W. Livingston and his children" of the other part, and undertaking, for the nominal consideration of $1 "and the love and affection he bears his said wife and children" to convey "unto the said Mary W. Livingston and his children their heirs and assigns forever" certain lands, to have and to hold "to the said Mary W. Livingston and his children their heirs and assigns forever," with the usual covenant of warranty "to his wife Mary W. Livingston and his children as aforesaid"—was held to be plainly in present to the grantor's wife and his then children; and that after-born children could claim no interest thereunder.

In Yarbrough v. Whitman (1908) 50 Tex. Civ. App. 391, 110 S. W. 471, a deed "to Lucy Ann Haile and to her children, jointly," was held to convey an equal share to the person named and each of her children then living.

III. Instances in which the parent has been held to take a life estate, with remainder to his children.

In Elmore v. Mustin (1856) 28 Ala. 309, a deed by which the grantor, in consideration of natural love and affection, granted to his daughter "the following named property and to her children the natural heirs of her body at her death,—namely [describing the property], to have and to hold all and singular the above named property hereby given and granted unto the said Sarah Elmore, my daughter, her executors and administrators forever, as her and her children's property,"—was construed as giving the daughter a life estate, with remainder to such of her children as might be living at her death.

In May v. Ritchie (1880) 65 Ala. 602, a deed by which the grantor conveyed certain property in trust "for my said daughter, Christiana and the heirs of her body," following the description of the property with the words, "which said property I give in trust to Samuel Jordan, for the use of my said daughter, Christiana and the heirs of her body for their support and the support of her children; and at the lawful age of her youngest child after her death then the above property to be divided among her children," was held (the words "heirs of her body" being construed as synonymous with "children") to give the daughter an equitable estate for life with remainder to her children.

In Moreland v. Hunley (1867) 37 Ga. 342, a deed the words of conveyance in which were "do give and grant unto my said daughter a negro woman and her children to have said negroes and their increase unto my said daughter and her children free from the control of her husband" was construed, in view of the absence of words of inheritance, to give the daughter only a life estate in the slaves, with remainder to her children.

In Doty v. Wray (1880) 66 Ga. 153, it was held that a deed whereby the grantor granted to A "and her three children," to have and to hold for and during her natural lifetime for her own sole and proper use and benefit, stipulating that after her death, at such time as her youngest child should come of lawful age, the property should be divided to the children named, and should either die before arriving at lawful age, leaving no lawful issue of their bodies, then among the survivors, A took a life estate, with remainder to those of her three children named in the deed who should be in life when the youngest attained his majority.

In Burnett v. Summerlin (1900) 110 Ga. 349, 35 S. E. 655, it was held that a voluntary deed from a father to his son "and his children" and their heirs and assigns, conveying a tract of land "for the use and benefit of [the son] during his natural lifetime and to his children at his death, but in no event to be subject to the debts, contracts or liabilities of" the son, with habendum clause to the son "and his children, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns in fee simple," conveyed to the son a life estate, with remainder to his children.

In Beacroft v. Strawn (1873) 67 Ill. 28, it was held that under a deed conveying land to Nancy L. Beacroft with habendum as follows: "The said land hereby conveyed to be held and used by the said Nancy L. Beacroft during her natural life, free from the debts, contracts and liabilities of the husband of said Nancy L. Beacroft, and at her death to go to the children of her body . . . to have and to hold as aforesaid the land, premises and appurtenances aforesaid unto the party of the second part their heirs and assigns forever." Nancy took a life estate, with remainder to her children.

In Webb v. Holmes (1843) 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 404, a conveyance containing the following recitals and terms: "This indenture, made and entered into this 25th day of July, 1812, between Henry Crist and Rachael his wife, . . . of the one part, and Francis and Sarah Thomas . . . of the other part, witnesseth, that for the love and good will for them and their children, that intending to convey to Sarah Thomas a certain dower in lands, for the entire benefit of her and his children, do hereby and by these presents, transfer, set over, and convey to her and her children forever, [certain described lands] which said tract of land, with all and singular its appurtenances thereunto belonging, we do hereby transfer and convey to said Sarah Thomas and her children forever, as above mentioned, clear and free from encumbrances,"—was held to give Sarah Thomas an estate for life, with a remainder in fee to all her children, those born subsequently to the date of the deed as well as those born previously thereto. The court said: "This is a deed, inter partes, in which Crist and wife are named parties on the one side, and Sarah Thomas and her husband on the other; the children are no parties, nor are they named as such in the caption of the deed, which, by the designation of the parties, is intended to confine the deed to those who are named, in exclusion of all others as contracting parties. And as a stranger, who is not party to a deed, can derive no legal interest under it, or maintain covenant on it, so it is well established that those who are not parties to a deed can take no present interest under it; but those who are not parties may take by way of remainder (Co. Litt. 231, a; Doe ex dem. Wells v. Scott (1814) 3 Maule & S. 308, 105 Eng. Reprint, 624; Lowther v. Kelly (1722) 8 Mod. 116, 88 Eng. Reprint, 91; 4 Comyns's Dig. title 'Fait,' D. 2 and the notes seq., Principal and Agent, 243). So to give to the deed operation at all, as to the children, they must be construed to take in remainder only, as they cannot take a present joint interest with the mother. And surely such construction should be given to the deed as to give some beneficial interest to the children, as they were clearly intended to be provided for. By giving to them an estate in remainder in fee, to take effect after the life estate of their mother, they all may be provided for, not only those who were born before, but those who were born after, the date of the deed, for in that case there is a freehold to support the remainder, until all the children are born. And it may be fairly presumed that it was as much the object of the donor to provide for after-born children as those that were born before the date of the deed. Besides, the use of the term 'dower' in the caption, which the donor says he intended to convey to Sarah Thomas, which term, in common parlance, means a life estate, strengthens the conclusion that a life estate to her and remainder to her children was intended."

In Rogers v. Payne (1853) 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 167, it was held that a conveyance in trust for the separate use of the wife of the grantor and such children as she then had or might have, and to the survivors or survivor of them, did not give the wife any joint interest with the children then in existence, because the unborn children, if there should be any, would also be entitled to an interest in the estate; but that she took an estate for life, with remainder to her children surviving her. The court said: "This disposition of the estate is such as would naturally have suggested itself to the mind of the donor as reasonable and proper; and the conclusion that such was his object is strongly fortified by that clause in the conveyance which authorized the trustees, on the request of the mother alone, to sell any part of the estate, holding the proceeds, for the same uses and trusts that the estate before the sale was subject to. A construction of the instrument that would apply the words referred to, to the children alone, or to the mother and children jointly, and make the estate conveyed merely a life interest in the children, until it passed to the survivor of the whole of them, although barely allowable according to a mere literal interpretation of the language used, would be so unnatural in its consequences, and so repugnant to the presumed intention of the donor, who was the father of the children, as to be wholly inadmissible. By such a construction, the interest of one of the children in the estate, instead of passing to his children upon his death, would pass to his surviving brothers and sisters, and so on, until the whole of the estate would vest in the last and sole survivor. Such a disposition of the estate could not have been contemplated by the donor when he executed the deed, and would be utterly repugnant to his feelings as a father."

In Foster v. Shreve (1869) 6 Bush (Ky.) 519, it was held, in view of the rule that those who are not parties to a deed can take no present interest under it, but may take by way of remainder, that, in order to give any operation to the words "the present heirs" in a deed expressed as having been made between Weathers Smith, of the one part, and Susanna Rogers, of the other part, and granting unto the said Susanna Rogers "and her present heirs" certain lands, "to have and to hold all and singular the improvements and appurtenances thereto belonging unto the said Susanna Rogers and her present heirs forever," and concluding with a covenant of warranty of title to Susanna Rogers "and her present heirs," the persons designated therein as "the present heirs" of Susanna Rogers must be held to take in remainder only.

In Davis v. Hardin (1880) 80 Ky. 672, a conveyance which recited that it was "between David W. Jones of the first part and Mary E. Jones and William B. Jones, infant child of Mary E. Jones, of the second part," whereby a husband conveyed certain property in trust for "the said Mary E. Jones and William B. Jones and any other child or children of her begotten by the said David W. Jones," was construed, in the light of the attendant circumstances and the relation of the parties, and the further circumstance that the deed provided for the enjoyment of the use of the property by the grantor and his wife unless the trustee should take possession of it, and in that case that he should pay the entire rents and profits to the wife, thus showing that it was not the grantor's purpose to make a present provision for the child then in being or those that should be thereafter born, and the fact that his only child was then an infant of tender years,—as giving his wife a life estate with remainder to their children, rather than a joint interest with the children, as the result of such construction would be that the bounty of the grantor might be entirely diverted from his family and blood.

In McGinnis v. Banta (1882) 4 Ky. L. Rep. 256, a conveyance in trust for the grantor's wife and "her children by her present marriage," in consideration of love and affection, was held, in order to give effect to the purpose of the grantor, to secure the land to the exclusive use of his wife and his children by their marriage, to vest the wife with an estate for life, remainder to the children.

In Meriwether v. Meriwether (1888) 10 Ky. L. Rep. 669, 10 S. W. 272, a conveyance made by one who had purchased the estate of a husband at a sheriff's sale, in pursuance of an agreement whereby he recited that he had made such purchase in trust for the wife and her children, and promised to convey to her and her children as soon as the rents and profits of the land should have reimbursed him for his outlay, was held to create a life estate in the wife, with remainder to her children, rather than a joint tenancy with them.

In Smith v. Upton (1890) 12 Ky. L. Rep. 27, 13 S. W. 721, it was held that under a conveyance made at the instance of a husband who was the equitable owner of the land, to his wife "and her children," the wife took, not a half interest therein, but a life estate, with remainder to the children, upon the ground that, in view of the relation of the parties, such was presumably the husband's intention.

In Bodine v. Arthur (1890) 91 Ky. 53, 34 Am. St. Rep. 162, 14 S. W. 904, a deed the conveyancing clause of which was "have this day, given, granted bargained and sold to Hettie Bodine," and the habendum clause of which was "to have and to hold unto the said Hettie E. Bodine, wife of the said B. W. Bodine, and to her children by him begotten, forever," was held to limit the estate conveyed to Mrs. Bodine to a life estate with remainder to her children begotten by R. W. Bodine, the court saying: "According to the uniform decision of this state, such conveyances give to the named vendee a life estate, remainder to the children. This construction grows out of the fact that, as there must be parties, vendors and vendees, in order to make a valid conveyance, none but parties vendees can take a present estate. Such parties may be designated by their proper names, or by such other designation as will identify the particular persons meant as vendees. In this case the expression 'her children by R. W. Bodine, begotten' does not identify the particular individuals who are to take, because they, or some of them, may hereafter be born. Hence, they cannot be deemed parties vendees in the sense of taking an immediate estate; but they can take an estate in remainder. See Foster v. Shreve (1869) 6 Bush (Ky.) 522. Such conveyances, thus construed, are effective, otherwise not; and as it must be presumed that the grantor intended all the parts of the deed to have the effect that the law gives to the language used, consequently it must also be presumed that he intended to grant a life estate, with remainder, unless, as intimated, the contrary intention appears."

In Goodridge v. Goodridge (1891) 91 Ky. 507, 16 S. W. 270, a deed by which a husband, in consideration of "the love and affection which the party of the first part has to his wife, Margaret and the children of the party of the first part now born and those hereafter to be born of the said parents," granted and conveyed to the party of the second part "and said children" certain described property, was held, in order to effectuate the evident intention of the grantor to provide for future children, and having regard to the natural and usual feelings and motives by which a person is shown to be influenced in disposing of his property, to give the wife a life estate in the whole, with remainder to the children, rather than a fee jointly with the children.

In Fletcher v. Tyler (1891) 92 Ky. 145, 36 Am. St. Rep. 584, 17 S. W. 282, a deed made upon consideration furnished by Woodson Fletcher, husband of Chloe Ann Fletcher, and the father of the then-born children of her body, reading: "This indenture made and entered into this the 28th day of May, 1861 by and between O. F. Stirman of one part and Chloe Ann Fletcher and the heirs of her body by Woodson Fletcher upon her begetting, for and in the consideration," etc. . . . "Do hereby sell and convey to Chloe Ann Fletcher and the heirs of her body aforesaid,"—was held, in order to give effect to the husband's evident intention to provide for future as well as for existing children, to give the wife a life estate, with remainder to their children, rather than a joint present interest in fee with those then living.

In Baskett v. Sellers (1892) 93 Ky. 2, 19 S. W. 9, a deed the granting clause of which was "for and in consideration of natural love and affection the said party of the first part has for his daughter, . . . the said A. B. H. Farley, and his son, T. L. Farley, parties of the second part, the party of the first part has this day sold and by these presents doth grant, bargain, sell and convey to the parties of the second part the following described land," with habendum "to them my said daughter and son and their children forever," it was held that as the word "children" was evidently used in its popular sense and as indicating the desire of the grantor to provide for his two children and their children, should they have any, the grantees should be regarded as taking a life estate only, with remainder to their children.

In Barth v. Barth (1901) 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1246, 64 S. W. 993, a conveyance by which a father, in consideration of love and affection for his daughter, conveyed to her husband "in trust for the said [daughter] and such child or children as she may have, and in case any of said children shall die leaving issue then the said issue shall take the share which the parent would have taken if living, and the said George W. Barth with the said Sarah Ann, his wife, during her life may occupy the premises aforesaid as they may choose, or if the said Sarah Ann shall consider it best during her life he shall rent the said premises and apply the said rent aforesaid to the maintenance of himself and the said Sarah Ann and her children, and in case of her death then the rent thereof shall be applied to the support and maintenance of the said children,"—was construed, in order to effectuate the intent of the grantor as disclosed by the entire conveyance, construed in the light of the relationship of the parties and the attendant circumstances, as giving the daughter, not a joint interest with her children, but an estate in the whole property for life, with remainder at her death to her children.

In McFarland v. Hatchett (1904) 118 Ky. 423, 80 S. W. 1185, it was held that under a deed the caption whereof named as party of the second part Sarah Hatchett, reciting that "the party of the first part sells and hereby conveys to said Sarah Hatchett and her children a certain lot of ground . . . to have and to hold to her and the said Sarah Hatchett and her children," Sarah Hatchett (who apparently had no children at the time of the conveyance) took only a life estate, with remainder to her children.

In Hall v. Wright (1905) 121 Ky. 16, 87 S. W. 1129, a deed the caption of which recited that it was made between the grantors and the grantee named (who was a son of the grantors, and who had at that time several children living and others afterward born) "and his children," the granting clause of which recited a conveyance to the grantee, without any words of inheritance or mention of his children, and the habendum dum of which recited that the grantors would warrant and defend the title unto the grantee named "and his children forever," was held, in order to effectuate the presumable intention of the grantors to give after-born as well as existing children an interest, to give the son an estate for life, with remainder to his children.

In Brumley v. Brumley (1905) 28 Ky. L. Rep. 231, 89 S. W. 182, a deed the granting clause of which was to the parent, without mention of his children, with habendum to him and his children, was held, notwithstanding a provision therein that "the said party of the second part shall not sell any portion of said lands without the express consent of the party of the first part, but after the decease of the party of the first part then said party of the second part may sell any portion of said land," to give the grantee named a life estate with remainder in fee to all of his children, whether in being at the date of the conveyance or born afterwards.

In McCready v. Morris (1906) 29 Ky. L. Rep. 588, 94 S. W. 24, it was held that a deed made by a husband to his wife, the caption of which named only the wife as the party of the second part, but which in the granting clause purported to convey "to the party of the second part and to such child or children as she may have by her husband, George W. McCready at the time of her death or to the descendants of any such if any such descendants there should be, the said first party has as before stated conveyed to the second party and to her such children, if any and their descendants, if any, the following tract or parcel of land," etc., the wife took an estate for life, with remainder to her children, subject to be defeated by their death in their mother's lifetime.

In Salzer v. Johnson (1908) 32 Ky. L. Rep. 709, 107 S. W. 210 (in which the deed was made for a valuable consideration), it is said to be well settled in Kentucky that a conveyance to a woman and her children creates a life estate in the mother, with remainder to her children.

In Bowe v. Richmond (1908) 33 Ky. L. Rep. 173, 109 S. W. 359, where a deed which, though from one unrelated to the grantees, was made as directed by the husband and father, who furnished the consideration therefor, and which was accordingly regarded as if made by himself, named in its caption the purchaser's wife and her children by him as the parties of the second part, and in its granting clause recited that the conveyance was "to the party of the second part and heirs," habendum "to the second party and her heirs and assigns forever," it was held, in view of the purchaser's evident purpose of providing for his wife and children, that the wife took a life estate, with remainder to her children by him, including such of them as were born after the execution of the deed.

In Hall v. Wright (1910) 137 Ky. 39, 127 S. W. 516, it was held that though the words "and his children" did not appear after the parent's name in the caption or in the granting clause, but only in the habendum, the parent nevertheless took a life estate, with remainder to his children.

In American Nat. Bank v. Madison (1911) 144 Ky. 152, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 597, 137 S. W. 1076, it was held that a deed by which a father and mother in consideration of the love and affection which they bore to their daughter and her children, the children being then alive, granted property to the parties of the second part, who were described as the daughter and "her bodily heirs," conveyed a life estate to her and the remainder to her children; the court saying: "The intention is gathered from the language or words of the writing, and this language should always be read in the light of attending circumstances and the relation of the parties to the contract. When thus considered it is apparent that the grantors in the case under consideration were wanting to provide for their daughter and her children a home which she should enjoy to the fullest extent during her life, and they likewise desire to make provision for her children. This purpose can only be effectuated by construing the language used to create an estate for life in the wife, with remainder to her children. To hold that the language used created a joint tenancy or joint ownership among their daughter and her children would be to defeat the evident aim and intent of the grantors."

In Virginia Iron, Coal, & Coke Co. v. Dye (1912) 146 Ky. 519, 142 S. W. 1057, where the deed in question was made upon a consideration furnished by the husband, it was said to be a well-settled rule of construction that a conveyance to a woman and her children creates a life estate in the mother, with remainder to her children.

In Ewing v. Milliken (1912) 148 Ky. 837, 147 S. W. 770, a deed made upon a consideration furnished by the parent named therein as grantee, conveying the property to "Laura H. Ewing, Alice, Virginia, and M. M. Ewing and such other children as may be hereafter born to the said Laura H. Ewing and C. S. Ewing; and in the event of the death of any of them the interest of the one dying to go to and be held by the survivors equally," was held to give Laura H. a life estate in the land, with remainder to her children.

In Rice v. Klette (Ky.) ante, 45, it is said that where there is nothing in a deed or will to show a contrary purpose, the rule is to hold an estate deeded or devised to a man and his children, or to a woman and her children, as a life estate to the first taker, with remainder to the children.

In Duncan v. Medley (1914) 160 Ky. 684, 170 S. W. 31, a deed reading, "I do give to Hattie E. Duncan our daughter, her children the heirs of her body and W. T. Duncan her husband his lifetime interest in 168 3-4 of land by his compliance with the following payment . . . We do hereby give to our beloved daughter and the heirs of her body and her husband W. T. Duncan his lifetime interest by complying with the above named conditions," was held to give W. T. Duncan and Hattie E. Duncan a life estate, with remainder to their children.

In Downing v. Birney (1897) 112 Mich. 474, 70 N. W. 1006, a deed naming as party of the second part "Lorainie Spicer wife of Ezekiel Spicer," and witnessing "that in consideration of $100 paid by the said Ezekiel Spicer to the parties of the first part they have bargained and sold, and do hereby convey to the said Lorainie Spicer [certain property], to have and to hold the said lots to the said Lorainie, to the children of her body begotten by the said Ezekiel, to her heirs, executors and to the assigns of the said Lorainie and Ezekiel, forever," with a covenant of warranty of "the lawful title hereby conveyed, to the said lots, of the said Lorainie, to the children of her body begotten by the said Ezekiel, to her heirs, executors, and to the assigns of the said Lorainie and Ezekiel," it was held, in view of the fact that in its premises the deed made Lorainie Spicer the only grantee, and as his children were introduced only by the habendum, and as the party thus introduced cannot take as grantee, being a stranger to the premises, but may take by way of remainder, the children did not take jointly with their mother but as remaindermen; the court saying: "We have no doubt that it was designed that Lorainie should have a life estate, at least, in the entire premises. Everything indicates it. First, we have the grant, which, standing alone, is clearly that; second, the clause in the habendum mentioning the children contains no words of inheritance, which would be necessary to give them a fee simple; and, third, it seems to have been contemplated that Lorainie and her husband might, in some contingency not clearly indicated, dispose of the premises, while such a provision as to the right of the children is significantly wanting."

In Kinney v. Mathews (1879) 69 Mo. 520, a conveyance to a woman "and all her children she now has or ever will have," was construed, in order to give effect to the intention of the grantor to benefit after-born as well as existing children, as vesting a life estate in the mother, with remainder to the children.

In Chesnut v. Mears (1857) 56 N. C. (3 Jones, Eq.) 416, where a husband, in consideration of love and affection for his wife, "as well as for her better maintenance and support," conveyed to a trustee "in trust for my said wife, Polly," certain negroes "for the said Polly Meares and her children which she has, or may have, by me; . . . the conveyance and warranty as aforesaid subject to the following restrictions: that the said trustee nor none who succeeds him ever dispossess my said wife, Polly and my children which I have or may have by her, of the said property and shall suffer her to enjoy together with the children the benefit, use and profits of the said negroes forever," it was held that, in order to effectuate the express object of the grantor to provide a support and maintenance for his wife, the deed should be construed as giving her an estate for life, with a remainder to all her children as a class, since a construction which would enable the children to take as tenants in common with her would enable them, when they became of age, to demand a partition, and thus leave their mother destitute in her old age.

In Blair v. Osborne (1881) 84 N. C. 417, a deed in the premises of which a mother alone was mentioned as the party of the second part, but with habendum to her and her children, was held, in order to avoid repugnancy between the premises and the habendum, and having regard to the rule that the habendum shall never introduce one who is a stranger to the premises to take as grantee, but he may take by way of remainder,—to give an estate for life to the mother and an estate for life in joint tenancy to her children in remainder.

In Wager v. Wager (1815) 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 374, where the deed under construction was made, in consideration of natural love and of a sum of money, to the grantor's son-in-law and his wife, "and to the children and heirs of the said" daughter and "the heirs and assigns of such children," habendum to the said son-in-law and his wife and to the children and heirs of the said wife, to and for the proper use, benefit, and behoof of the son-in-law and his wife during the term of their joint lives and of the life of the survivor of them, and from and immediately after the decease of the survivor of them to and for the use, benefit, and behoof of the children and heirs of the body of the said wife, lawfully begotten, their heirs and assigns forever, in equal shares as tenants in common, it was held that the explanation of the general terms of the premises afforded by the habendum showed the grantor's intention to be that the son-in-law and his wife should take estates for life, with remainder to their children; that the estate taken by the children being a remainder, and there being nothing to indicate an intent to confine the gift to the children in existence at the date of the will, but, on the contrary, the inference being that he intended to provide for all the daughter's children, the remainder taken by such children opened to let in after-born children.

In White v. Williamson (1858) 2 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 249, a declaration of trust for the use of a woman and her children, reciting as its consideration that the father of the woman had deposited with the declarant a sum of money to be laid out in land for the use of the woman and her children, it was held that, it being a gift by a father for the benefit of his descendants, the woman should be regarded as taking a life estate, with remainder to her children, rather than a tenancy in common with those then in being.

In Coursey v. Davis (1863) 46 Pa. 25, 84 Am. Dec. 519, a deed to a married woman, by whom the consideration was said to have been paid, stated in the premises to be unto the said woman "and her children exclusively and their heirs and assigns," habendum unto her "and her children exclusively and their heirs and assigns forever, to them and their only proper use, benefit and behoof and to and for no other use, intent, meaning or purpose whatsoever," and L.R.A.1917B.

with special warranty "to and with the said [woman] and her children and their heirs and assigns,"—was construed as giving the woman a life estate, with remainder to her children, including those born after the date of the conveyance.

In Hague v. Hague (1894) 161 Pa. 643, 41 Am. St. Rep. 900, 29 Atl. 261, a deed made by a father to a daughter by way of gift, and naming as grantees "Sarah Jane Hague and her children," was held, in order to effectuate the presumable intention of the grantor to provide for all his daughter's children, to vest in the daughter an estate for life, with remainder to her children, as well those born after as those born before the date of the conveyance.

In Wolford v. Morgenthal (1879) 91 Pa. 30, a deed whereby, in consideration of a sum of money paid by F, certain land was conveyed to trustees in trust for the use and benefit of the wife of F "and her heirs forever, that is, the children, if any begotten by" F, "and her daughter Elizabeth Wire (who was a daughter by a former marriage) is to be made equal, to be for them and their heirs forever after the decease of" F, habendum "for the use and benefit of the said [wife] and her daughter Elizabeth Wire and the children begotten by [F], if any, upon the body of the said [wife]," was construed as giving the wife a life estate, with remainder in fee to her children as a class, such remainder vesting in Elizabeth, who was living at the time of the execution of the deed, and opening to let in the after-born children as their births respectively took place.

In Moore v. Simmons (1859) 2 Head (Tenn.) 546, where property was conveyed by deed to trustees to be sold and divided in equal shares between certain persons named, among whom was Sally Simmons, "that portion that may belong to Sally Simmons . . . to be held by said trustees in trust for the only proper use, benefit and behoof of the said Sally Simmons and her children . . . the same being intended to be held in trust by said trustees for the use and benefit of the said last-named children of the said Simpson Shaw and their heirs," it was held that the reference to children did not give them a joint interest with their mother, but that, taking the whole instrument together, and in view of the consideration by which it was prompted, the intention was to give the entire estate to the daughter to her separate use, by which she would be enabled to support herself and children as a family, and, that if this was not so, but a joint interest was vested in the children, the object intended could be defeated by any creditor of the children.

In Beecher v. Hicks (1881) 7 Lea (Tenn.) 207, a conveyance reciting that it was entered into by and between the grantor and Sarah Catharine Hicks, wife of James Franklin Hicks, of the second part, and conveying "to the said Sarah Catharine Hicks wife of James Franklin Hicks the following described lot," "to have and to hold the above-mentioned lot and bargained premises, together with all the improvements etc., unto her the said Sarah Catharine Hicks, wife of James Franklin Hicks, for her sole and separate use and benefit," with a covenant of warranty of title made by the grantor with "the said party of the second part her heirs and assigns," was held, in order to effectuate the evident intention of the parties to confer a benefit upon any future as well as existing children, that the wife should be considered as taking only an estate for life, with remainder to her children.

In Blackburn v. Blackburn (1902) 109 Tenn. 674, 73 S. W. 109, construing a deed reciting that the grantor, for the love and affection he bore his daughter, and for a nominal money consideration, did "give, transfer and convey to the said Mary McMillion Blackburn, wife of Jas. K. Polk Blackburn and her children forever" certain lands, with covenant of warranty "to the said Mary McMillion Blackburn and her children," and with the further provision "that in the event of the death of Mary McMillion Blackburn, wife of James K. Polk Blackburn, before her said husband, then . . . he, the said James, . . . shall have by three disinterested landowners in said county . . . set apart for him 400 acres of the above-described lands: . . . to have and to hold and use and occupy during his lifetime, and at his death to go to the said children, bodily heirs of said Mary McMillion Blackburn; and further, the said Blackburn and his said wife are hereby put in possession of all of said lands and improvements . . . to their own use, said Blackburn having control . . . of the said place with all the proceeds thereof during the lifetime of his said wife and then to the said 400 acres herein provided for . . . during his lifetime," it was held that as there was nothing to show why the grantor should have preferred the living to the exclusion of the after-born children of his daughter, and as, if his purpose was to make the then-living children of his daughter the special object of his bounty, it would have been both easy and natural to have named them, and, further, as an intention to restrict the daughter to a life estate was evidenced by the paragraph where it is provided that "the said Blackburn and his said wife are hereby put in possession of all said lands . . . and every part thereof to their own use, said Blackburn having control and management . . . during the lifetime of his wife," the wife took a life interest in the whole, and the husband a life interest in the 400 acres contingently provided for him, and the children living at the date of the deed a vested remainder which opened up to admit after-born children.

In Hubbird v. Goin (1905) 70 C. C. A. 320, 137 Fed. 822, where a grantor, in consideration of love and affection and a substantial money consideration, conveyed "to Elmira Hubbard and children" certain described real estate, with the provision, "it is expressly agreed by the grantee in accepting this deed that she shall not sell, convey or encumber or in any manner dispose of the same but to retain the same for the use of herself and her children forever," it was held that although, if the deed had stopped with the granting clause to Elmira Hubbard and the children, it might with plausibility be said that the mother and two children in being took the whole fee as tenants in common, yet, taking the deed as a whole, it manifested a purpose on the part of the grantor to vest in his daughter a life estate and to secure the remainder in her children, including those born after as well as before the date of the conveyance.

E. S. O.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

J. H. GRAY, Appt.

v.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY.

(171 Ky. 269, 188 S. W. 354.)

Sunday — barber shop — work of necessity.

The operation of a barber shop on Sunday for the service of all applicants, for the customary fee, is not a work of necessity within the exception of the Sunday law. For other cases, see Sunday, III. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — For barbering on Sunday as a work of necessity, see annotation following this case, post, 97.

(September 29, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Criminal Branch, of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County convicting him of violating the Sunday law. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry J. Tilford for appellant.

Messrs. M. M. Logan, Attorney General, and D. O. Myatt, Assistant Attorney General, for the Commonwealth.

Hurt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, J. H. Gray, by means of a warrant charging him with a violation of § 1321, Ky. Stat., was brought before the police court for the city of Louisville. He was adjudged to be guilty of the offense denounced by the statute, and a fine of $50 and the costs of the prosecution imposed upon him. He appealed from the judgment of the police court to the circuit court. A trial by jury was duly waived, and the judge of the circuit court heard and determined both the facts and law of the case. A trial resulted in appellant being found guilty as charged in the warrant, and the same penalty for his offense was imposed by the circuit court as was imposed by the police court. His motion for a new trial being overruled, he has appealed to this court.

The ground relied upon in the circuit court for a new trial, and in this court for a reversal of the judgment, is that the judgment is contrary to law and the evidence. The facts of the case are as follows: The appellant was a barber who conducted the business of a barber in his shop, which was located at 418 West Walnut street, in the city of Louisville, and the conduct of the business was his regular trade and calling, and that on the 2d day of April, 1916, which was Sunday, or the Sabbath, the appellant opened his shop as usual, and there shaved and trimmed the hair of several persons, in fact, all the persons who entered the shop on that day and requested that such services be rendered them, and he also employed another barber in shaving persons and trimming their hair in his shop on the same day, and for all the services rendered the persons for whom barbering was done the appellant charged the customary sums, which they paid.

There being no dispute as to the facts, the only question for determination is whether the facts above stated constituted L.R.A.1917B.

a violation of § 1321, Ky. Stat. and whether the circuit court erred in construing the proven facts to be a violation of the statute and imposing the penalty for its violation. The statute is as follows: "No work or business shall be done on the Sabbath day, except the ordinary household offices, or other work of necessity or charity, or work required in the maintenance or operation of a ferry, skiff or steamboat, or steam or street railroads. If any person on the Sabbath day shall himself be found at his own, or at any other trade or calling, or shall employ his apprentices, or other person, in labor or other business, whether the same be for profit or amusement, unless such as is permitted above, he shall be fined not less than two nor more than fifty dollars for each offense. Every person or apprentice so employed shall be deemed a separate offense. Persons who are members of a religious society, who observe as a Sabbath any other day in the week than Sunday, shall not be liable to the penalty prescribed in this section, if they observe as a Sabbath one day in each seven, as herein provided."

The appellant does not contend that he was not engaged in working at his own trade or calling, or that he did not have other persons employed in the work of barbering for profit on the Sabbath; neither does he contend that barbering is not a work or business; but his sole contention is that the business of shaving persons and trimming their hair and performing the other services usually rendered by a barber for his patrons is a work of necessity, within the meaning of the statute, and that the performance of such work is within the exception in the statute and therefore lawful. It will be observed that the law-making department of the government has not declared any works or business to be works of necessity, except the ordinary household offices, or work required in the maintenance or operation of a ferry, skiff, or steamboat, or steam or street railroads. As to what other works or business are works of necessity, and when any particular work or business is a work of necessity, and lies within the exception in the statute, is left to be determined by the courts upon the facts and under the circumstances of each particular instance.

It is apparent that the changing conditions of civilization, the improvements in the methods of transportation to meet the demands of increasing commercial relations, the demand of social relations, which did not formerly exist, have made works which were once not regarded by the common sense of the country as works of necessity to be regarded and held by that same common sense as works of necessity. It is also apparent that ordinary avocations, which are not ordinarily works of necessity, may by the exigencies of occasions become works of necessity. The harvesting of a tobacco crop is not commonly or ordinarily a work of necessity, but if the chill of the atmosphere portends a destructive frost upon the night following the Sabbath Day, the common sense of the country declares the immediate cutting of the crop to be a work of necessity. Exigencies may arise in almost every trade or calling, which is not ordinarily a work of necessity, which will make upon the occasion the work of the trade or calling a necessity. A new condition may arise in the manner of doing business, and may become the ordinary way of doing business, and thus make work, which theretofore was not a work of necessity, become one. Hence no hard and fast rule can be adopted which should be applied to all works and at all times and under all circumstances for determining what are works of necessity within the meaning of the statute.

All the states have statute laws which make it unlawful to do the work of one's calling, or the trade of another, upon the Sabbath Day; but all of them make an exception of works of necessity and charity. Under these statutes many adjudications have been made by the courts touching what are works of necessity within the meaning of the statutes; but many of them are based upon statutes which are different in their terms to our statute, and which cause the adjudications to be valueless in determining the question of what is a work of necessity within the exception of our statute. The state of Massachusetts has a statute which declares that: "Whoever on the Lord's Day keeps open his shop, warehouse or workhouse, or does any manner of labor, business or work, except works of necessity or charity, shall be punished," etc.

The supreme judicial court of the state, in Com. v. Dextra, 143 Mass. 28, 8 N. E. 756, while declining to decide whether it was a work of necessity to cut hair and shave beards on the Lord's Day, held that Dextra, a barber, was amenable to the penalty prescribed by the statute for keeping open his barber shop upon that day for the purpose of following his trade as a barber. In State v. Kuehner, — Mo. App. —, 110 S. W. 606, the Missouri supreme court held that it was not a work of necessity, within the exceptions to the Sunday law in force in that state, for a barber to ply his usual avocation on that day by cutting the hair and shaving a customer. The same court held to the same view in State v. Schatt, 128 Mo. App. 622, 107 S. W. 10. In State v. Frederick, 45 Ark. 347, 55 Am. Rep. 555, L.R.A.1917B.

the court held that judicial notice would be taken that the shaving of his customers by a barber is a work done by him in the course of his ordinary calling, and is not a work of necessity within the exception of the statute. In McCain v. State, 2 Ga. App. 389, 58 S. E. 550, the supreme court of the state of Georgia referred to and approved the conclusion of the court in State v. Frederick, supra. In Petit v. Minnesota, 177 U. S. 164, 44 L. ed. 716, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 666, the court held that, while the bare fact of shaving some particular individual under exceptional circumstances might be upheld as a work of necessity, the public exercise of the occupation of shaving and hair cutting could not be justified as a work of necessity.

It should be borne in mind that the enactment of the statute prohibiting work and labor upon the Sabbath Day was not an attempt to enforce any religious duties, but is a civil regulation, authorized by the legislature in the exercise of the police power of the state, and that the necessity which must exist to bring the doing of any work within the exception of the statute is not an absolute, unavoidable, physical necessity, but as defined by the court in Lane v. State, 68 Tex. Crim. Rep. 4, 150 S. W. 637, and by this court in Com. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 80 Ky. 291, 44 Am. Rep. 475: "The law regards that as necessary which the common sense of the country, in its ordinary modes of doing its business, regards as necessary."

The fact that in a great many of the states the legislatures have adopted statutes making it unlawful to engage in the business of barbering on the Sabbath Day, and that in this state a statute having that end in view was enacted by the general assembly, would indicate conclusively that the common sense of the country, in its ordinary modes of doing business, does not regard the business and work of barbering as a necessity which would justify engaging in it upon the Sabbath. The statute referred to as having been adopted in this state was held to be unconstitutional, because its enactment was contrary to the provisions of § 59, subsections 4 and 29, of the Constitution. Stratman v. Com. 137 Ky. 500, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 949, 136 Am. St. Rep. 299, 125 S. W. 1094. In Flagg v. Millbury, 4 Cush. 243, another definition for the necessity, which brings a work within the exception of the statute, was announced, and the courts of several states have adopted the definition. It is: "That the necessity meant is not 'a physical and absolute necessity, but a moral fitness or propriety of the work and labor done, under the circumstances of any particular case.'"

If this definition should be accepted, it might then be asked: What is the moral fitness and propriety of following the avocation of a barber on Sunday? It certainly cannot be said that it is a work of necessity upon the part of the barber.

It is argued by some that barbering is a work of necessity, because it is not convenient for some persons to have themselves shaved on Saturday, or else they are too much engaged upon other days to have the services of a tonsorial artist upon any day except Sunday. It has been said that the best thought and ablest writers of modern times agree, and human experience has demonstrated, that it is to the best interest of the human family that the members of it have days of rest, and that such days are essential to the moral and physical well-being of society. The Sunday statute was adopted as an assistance to the conservation of the lives and health of all the citizens of the country, to promote their morality and love of family and home. It enables the people who toil daily to be in the society of their wives and children, and to have the benefit of religious worship, upon one day out of seven. As said by Justice Field in Ex parte Newman, 9 Cal. 502, in reference to the Sunday statute in force in the state of California: "Its requirement is a cessation from labor. In its enactment the legislature has given the sanction of law to a rule of conduct which the entire civilized world recognizes as essential to the physical and moral well-being of society. Upon no subject is there such a concurrence of opinion, among philosophers, moralists, and statesmen of all nations, as on the necessity of periodical cessations from labor. One day in seven is the rule, founded in experience, and sustained by science. . . . The prohibition of secular business on Sunday is advocated on the ground that by it the general welfare is advanced, labor protected, and the moral and physical well-being of society promoted."

The barbers and their associates should be permitted to have the benefits of cessation from labor one day in seven, as other citizens. Those who desire the services of a barber have six whole days in which to secure them. In Ex parte Kennedy, 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 148, 51 L.R.A. 270, 58 S.W. 129, the court of criminal appeals of Texas, adopting the definition of a work of necessity as defined in Flagg v. Millbury, supra, said: "The necessity must be a real, and not a fancied, one; there must not be merely an honest belief on the part of the defendant that the necessity exists, but the actual existence of the necessity must be shown. Nor does the exception embrace work which is merely convenient, but not necessary."

This view was approved in Hennersdorf v. State, 25 Tex. App. 597, 8 Am. St. Rep. 448, 8 S.W. 926. In Com. v. Waldman, 140 Pa. 89, 11 L.R.A. 563, 21 Atl. 248, the court, referring to the contention in that case that the work of the barber in shaving persons on Sunday was a necessity, said: "While we concede that it may be a great convenience to many persons, we are not prepared to say, as a question of law, that it is a work of necessity."

In McCain v. State, 2 Ga. App. 389, 58 S.E. 550, work done by McCain, who was a barber, in that case, was the shaving of certain members of a club upon Sunday, who contended that the work was one of necessity, because they were so engaged in their own affairs upon Saturday that they had not time to secure a shave, except upon Sunday. The supreme court of Georgia said: "While shaving may be regarded as an act of personal cleanliness, desirable to be performed upon the first day as well as upon other days of the week, still this fact does not make shaving necessary or the work of the barber one of necessity."

In 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 544, the text is as follows: "The business of a barber in shaving his customers is a matter of convenience, and not a work of necessity or charity, and therefore it does not come within the exception."

In 37 Cyc. 553, the text states: "It is well settled that the fact that it is convenient and profitable to perform certain labor or transact certain business on Sunday does not render it a necessity."

Referring particularly to the work of barbering, it is said in 37 Cyc. 545: "Barbering is laboring, within the meaning of general statutes prohibiting labor or 'worldly employment' on Sunday, and is not generally considered a work of necessity."

In the light of the foregoing authorities, while the shaving of a particular person by a barber under exceptional circumstances upon the Sabbath may be a work of necessity, yet, where a barber is simply doing his work of shaving and cutting the hair of his customers and doing for them the regular services of a barber on the Sabbath, it is not a work of necessity, and does not lie within the exception of the statute; and hence the appellant was guilty of the offense of which he was convicted, and the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Annotation—Sunday: barbering as a work of necessity.

This note does not include cases involving statutes that in express terms forbid barbering on Sunday or the keeping of barber shops open on Sunday. The only question that can arise directly under such statutes is one involving the power of the legislature to prohibit one particular class of persons working on Sunday without prohibiting other classes in the same way. On this phase of the question, see Stratman v. Com. 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 949; also see notes in 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1259, and 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 646.

Practically all the states have general statutes which in effect prohibit Sunday labor, except work of necessity and charity. The wording of these statutes is not uniform, but the question here considered presupposes that barbering on Sunday falls within the prohibited kinds of labor unless it can be classed as a work of necessity. Cases like Palmer v. Snow, explained in next to the last paragraph of this note, holding that barbering is not within the general prohibiting clause, are in general excluded.

The decisions are practically in harmony on the general proposition that a barber who opens his shop on Sunday and serves the general public or his customers generally is not engaging in work of necessity within the meaning of the exception. They are not in harmony as to the necessity of barbering under circumstances other than those just stated. Of course, the circumstances and facts are never the same in the different cases, but the language used by the courts indicates that some courts are much more inclined to require a higher standard of necessity than others are.

Who should make the classification—
—in general.

Some courts have held, and perhaps all could be reconciled to the proposition, that the court should decide as a matter of law that a barber who keeps his shop open on Sunday and serves the general public or his customers generally is not performing labor of necessity within the meaning of the exception, but that it should permit the jury to decide in each case whether the work was a necessity under the special circumstances of the case, where there are special circumstances that might take the case out of the general rule, even though the facts are not controverted. The Pennsylvania cases cited infra appear to go upon the theory that the question is entirely for the court; but it should be observed that the question in all those cases was the legality of a summary conviction, in which the court decides the questions of fact as well as the law, so that the holdings are not what they at first might appear to be. On the other hand, the Indiana court appears to hold that the whole question is one for the jury, but it will be observed that the jury had found correctly, under the instruction of the court.

—the legislature.

As already stated the question of constitutionality of the statute is the only one raised where the statute directly and in express terms prohibits barbering on Sunday, and that question is not within the scope of this note.

There are two cases (State v. Petit (1898) 74 Minn. 376, 77 N. W. 225, affirmed in (1899) 177 U. S. 164, 44 L. ed. 716, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 666, and Stark v. Backus (1909) 140 Wis. 557, 123 N. W. 98) in which the court construed a general statute to which there had been added an amendment providing that barbering shall not be considered a work of necessity or charity within the meaning of the exception. In both cases the court took the position that, before the amendment, barbering was not a necessity, so that the amendment really added nothing. See quotation from the Petit Case under next heading.

—by the jury.

The position taken by the court in State v. Schatt (1907) 128 Mo. App. 622, 107 S. W. 10, is probably the correct position so far as permitting the jury to decide is concerned, and perhaps all the other cases could be reconciled with this position. In this case the court said: "If the proposition be clear that the particular act of labor performed is one of necessity, that is to say, if the labor is so clearly a work of necessity that no two reasonable minds would differ thereabout, the court may treat it as a matter of law, identically as in other cases, and, under such circumstances, no doubt would be justified in so declaring. Second, on the other hand, if the question is one about which reasonable minds might well differ, it is then essentially one of fact, and, as such, within the province of the jury. And third, if the proof is so clear that no two reasonable minds could differ on the proposition, that no possible element of necessity whatever entered into the particular act of labor performed, then the court may, as a matter of law, treat the case as falling within the penalties, and not within the exception to the statute as one of necessity or charity. We are fully persuaded that the propositions stated are sustained by the supreme court in State v. Granneman (1896) 132 Mo. 331, 33 S. W. 784. [See also State v. Frederick (1885) 45 Ark. 347, 55 Am. Rep. 555.] In the Arkansas case last cited, the court there held that the labor of a barber in shaving his customers is so clearly a worldly labor or work as to render it entirely unnecessary for the indictment to negative the act as one of either necessity or charity. In State v. Granneman (Mo.) supra, our supreme court cited the Arkansas case to the proposition that it was a question about which reasonable minds could not differ, and therefore essentially a question of law when nothing more appeared than that the barber prosecuted his calling on a Sabbath day, as in the case at bar. See also State v. Wellott (1893) 54 Mo. App. 310, which bears the same construction, to say the least." This idea probably explains the apparent inconsistency between the holdings in Spaith v. State (1889) 10 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 639, 22 Ohio L. J. 329, and State v. Schuler (1890) 10 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 806, 23 Ohio L. J. 450. In the former case, which was a case in which the facts were not disclosed by the record, the court took the position that it could not decide as a matter of law that shaving persons on Sunday was not a necessity, while in the latter case it was held that keeping open a barber shop on Sunday and shaving all who come is, as a matter of law, not necessary.

It has been directly held that the question is one of fact for the jury to decide under proper instruction. Ungericht v. State (1889) 119 Ind. 379, 12 Am. St. Rep. 419, 21 N. E. 1082. But the jury had convicted the defendant under instructions that left practically no discretion except as to facts. In result, the decision is not opposed to the principle announced by the Missouri court.

In State v. Petit (Minn.) supra, the court takes the position that, under a statute which provided that "all labor on Sunday is prohibited excepting the works of necessity or charity. In works of necessity or charity is included whatever is needful during the day for good order, health or comfort of the community,"—the question of whether or not a particular work is one of necessity.

is in many cases a question for the jury; but, after the legislature had added a clause by amendment, "provided, however, that keeping open a barber shop on Sunday for the purpose of cutting hair and shaving beards shall not be deemed a work of necessity or charity," the question so far as barbering is concerned had become one of law, and that the legislature had power to classify works of necessity in this way. The court said: "If keeping a barber shop open on Sunday for the purposes of shaving and hair cutting was not a work of necessity or charity, within the meaning of the original statute, the amendment has not changed the law, and the statute, as it now stands, is not open to the objection of being class legislation. Under the original statute, what were works of necessity or charity was largely left to be decided as a question of fact, which would often be a question for the jury. The effect of the amendment was to make this a question of law, instead of fact, as to keeping a barber shop open. In the exercise of the police power in establishing a day of rest, a very large discretion must be allowed to the legislature in determining what kinds of labor or business should be prohibited, and what are and what are not works of necessity or charity; and unless their classification is manifestly purely arbitrary, and not founded upon any substantial distinction or apparent natural reason which suggests the necessity or propriety of different legislation, the courts have no right to interfere with the exercise of legislative discretion. Courts will take judicial notice of the fact that, in view of the custom to keep barber shops open in the evening as well as in the day, the employees in them work more, and during later hours than those engaged in most other occupations, and that this is especially true on Saturday afternoons and evenings; also that, owing to the habit of so many men to postpone getting shaved until Sunday if such shops were to be permitted to be kept open on Sunday, the employees would ordinarily be deprived of rest during half of that day."

— the court.

In State v. Frederick (1885) 45 Ark. 347, 55 Am. Rep. 555, it was held that the court will take judicial notice that the shaving of his customers by a barber is a "worldly labor" or work done by him in the course of his ordinary calling, and not a labor of necessity or charity within the exception to the statute.

ute, so that a demurrer to an indictment will not be sustained for the omission of an allegation that the acts charged were not a work of necessity or charity. The statute is not quoted, but the language used by the court indicates that it was a general statute forbidding all regular labor on Sunday except labor of necessity and charity. See quotation from State v. Schatt (1907) 128 Mo. App. 622, 107 S. W. 10, supra, for a reasonable interpretation of this decision, in respect to the duty to submit the question to the jury.

In Com. v. Waldman (1891) 140 Pa. 89, 11 L.R.A. 563, 21 Atl. 248, affirming (1890) 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 449, the court, in an appeal from a summary conviction, said: "It is contended now, however, that the defendant was entitled to a jury trial, and that it is for a jury to say whether shaving a man's face and cutting his hair are works of necessity. If such questions were submitted to a jury we would have no rule at all. One jury would find one way and another jury would decide the other way; so that the practical result would be that one barber would be compelled to close his shop on Sunday while that of his rival would be open. The practical difficulty of the case cannot be met in this way; nor has any authority been shown for the claim to trial by jury. When the legislature shall decide that in every case of a petty summary conviction the defendant shall have the right to a jury trial, they will probably say so in language too clear to be misunderstood." It must be observed that the court in this case was passing upon the power of the legislature to provide for a summary conviction and upon the question whether or not it had done so, rather than on the province of the jury under general Sunday statutes.

And in all of the cases cited to the general proposition under the last heading, infra, the courts either hold or assume that, at least under the circumstances of the particular case, the question was one of law for the court to decide.

The substantive question.

It seems quite clear that the question of what is a work of necessity within the meaning of these clauses excepting works of necessity from the effect of the Sunday statutes, cannot be settled by definition. In Ungericht v. State (1889) 119 Ind. 379, 12 Am. St. Rep. 419, 21 N. E. 1082, the court said: "Many legal definitions of the word 'necessity' are to be found in the authorities, but the following from the Chicago Legal News (vol. 12, p. 44) seems to give the result of all the authorities upon the subject: 'The law contemplates that the community has a general need that all should rest on Sunday; most of the affairs and doings of week day are less important than this need of a rest day; but some few are superior. To keep the body physically sustained by food; to provide the facilities for worship during some hours of the day, and for restful mental occupation during others; to nurse and heal the sick; to provide prompt burial of the dead—these and some other objects are superior to the need of general repose. Necessary work includes all that is indispensable to be done on Sunday in order to secure attainment of whatever is more important to the community than its day of rest.' It is perfectly clear, however, that the word 'necessity' as used in the statute, is incapable of an accurate and comprehensive definition. Any attempt by the courts to frame a definition of general application would be more likely to produce confusion than certainty. The question in each case must be decided according to circumstances, and is, therefore, more a question of fact than of law. Mueller v. State (1881) 76 Ind. 310, 40 Am. Rep. 245. In this case it is said: 'What does necessity, as used in this law, mean? It may be said, as has been said before, that it does not mean an absolute or physical necessity, but a moral fitness or propriety of the work or labor done, under the circumstances of any particular case. Morris v. State (1869) 31 Ind. 189. Generally speaking, it ought to be an unforeseen necessity, or, if foreseen, such as could not reasonably have been provided against,' and this court held that the question should be decided by the jury. In State v. Wellott (1893) 54 Mo. App. 310, the court said: "It is hardly possible to give such a definition of necessary work as will meet the requirements of different cases. The futility of the effort to gather this from adjudicated cases will be readily seen by a reference to the decisions. Ringgold, Law of Sunday, pp. 230, et seq. and cases cited. It is not enough that it shall be more convenient to do the work on Sunday than on other days of the week. Phillips v. Innes (1837) 4 Clark & F. 234, 7 Eng. Reprint, 90. Generally speaking it ought to be an unforeseen necessity, or, if foreseen, such as could not reasonably have been provided against. State v. Ohmer (1889) 34 Mo.

App. 115; Ungericht v. State (1880) 119 Ind. 381, 12 Am. St. Rep. 419, 21 N. E. 1082. Neither must the necessity be of the party's own creation. Bucher v. Fitchburg R. Co. (1881) 131 Mass. 156, 41 Am. Rep. 216. Now as to the act of shaving the two witnesses, Smith and Cox, the defendant was little more than serving the mere convenience of his customers; it would seem to have been a necessity of their own creation. But, however this may be, the evidence shows that the defendant on the Sunday in question was engaged in barber's work for various other people. Indeed defendant was prosecuting his trade and performing his customary work for all who applied at his place of business. The test of necessity in individual cases was not considered. The state's case was made prima facie by proof that defendant was then and there prosecuting his work, not apparently a work of necessity; if it was work of necessity, such as comes within the exception to the statute, the burden to show it was cast on the defendant. Troewert v. Decker (1881) 51 Wis. 46, 37 Am. Rep. 808, 8 N. W. 26; Fleming v. People (1863) 27 N. Y. 329; Bosworth v. Swansey (1845) 10 Met. (Mass.) 363, 43 Am. Dec. 441; State v. Frederick (1885) 45 Ark. 347, 55 Am. Rep. 555; Cleary v. State, 56 Ark. 124, 19 S. W. 313; State v. Elam (1886) 21 Mo. App. 290; State v. O'Brien (1881) 74 Mo. 549."

A barber is, when shaving his customers or cutting their hair in his shop on Sunday, engaged in work that is not a work of necessity or charity within the meaning of a clause in a Sunday statute excepting works of necessity and charity from its operation. State v. Frederick (1885) 45 Ark. 347, 55 Am. Rep. 555; McClelland v. Denver (1906) 36 Colo. 486, 86 Pac. 126, 10 Ann. Cas. 1014 (statement by way of argument); McCain v. State (1907) 2 Ga. App. 389, 58 S. E. 550; State v. Linsig (1916) — Iowa, —, 159 N. W. 995; GRAY v. COM. ante, 93; State v. Wellott (1893) 54 Mo. App. 310; State v. Schatt (1907) 128 Mo. App. 622, 107 S. W. 10; State v. Kuehner (1908) — Mo. App. —, 110 S. W. 605; Com. v. Waldman (1891) 140 Pa. 89, 11 L.R.A. 563, 21 Atl. 248, affirming (1890) 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 449; Com. v. Williams (1853) 1 Pearson (Pa.) 61; Com. v. Jacobus (1870) 1 Campb. (Pa.) 491; Stout's Case (1886) 2 Legal Rec. Rep. (Pa.) 311, as cited in Brightly's Dig. 1877-1889, p. 4836; Com. v. Stodler (1882) 15 Phila. (Pa.) 418 (not a direct holding on the point); Paizer v. L.R.A. 1917B.

Com. (1886) 4 Kulp (Pa.) 286 (but justice's record held defective on certiorari); State v. Lorry (1874) 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 95, 32 Am. Rep. 555 (see comment on this case, infra); Ex parte Kennedy (1900) 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 148, 51 L.R.A. 270, 58 S. W. 129; State v. Sopher (1903) 25 Utah, 318, 60 L.R.A. 469, 95 Am. St. Rep. 845, 71 Pac. 482; Stark v. Backus (1909) 140 Wis. 557, 123 N. W. 98 (see comment on this case, infra); Phillips v. Innes (1837) 4 Clark & F. 234, 7 Eng. Reprint, 90; Reg. v. Taylor (1882) 19 Oan. L. J. 362.

In Com. v. Dextra (1886) 143 Mass. 28, 8 N. E. 756, the court so construed the statute that it was unnecessary to decide whether barbering was a work of necessity or not, as keeping the shop open for any kind of work was held to be a violation of the statute.

In Stone v. Graves (1887) 145 Mass. 353, 13 N. E. 906, the court refused to hold as a matter of law that shaving an aged and infirm person in his own home by one who was not a barber by trade on Sunday is not a work of necessity, and it sustained a finding that the work was necessary.

But in State v. Linsig (1916) — Iowa, —, 159 N. W. 995, where the statute provided that "if any person be found on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, engaged in carrying firearms, dancing, hunting, shooting, horse racing, or in any manner disturbing a worshiping assembly or private family, or in buying or selling property of any kind, or in any labor except that of necessity or charity, he shall be fined not more than five nor less than one dollar," the court said: "The exception provided by the statute for works of necessity and charity is made in somewhat general terms without specifying what works are of that character. It could not be otherwise, for the demands of necessity and charity are ever varying, and the same act which may be a work of necessity or charity on one occasion may not be properly so-called on another occasion; its character in that respect depends upon the peculiar circumstances in each case. If the accused person makes the point that the work done by him was an act of charity or necessity, the record may or may not be such as to carry the question to the jury. It has been held as a matter of law that the ordinary work or employment of a barber is not a work of charity or necessity within the meaning of the Sunday law (State v. Frederick (1885) 45 Ark. 347, 55 Am. Rep. 555;

Com. v. Waldman (1891) 140 Pa. 98, 11 L.R.A. 563, 21 Atl. 248; State v. Granneman (1896) 132 Mo. 326, 33 S. W. 784; and we think the rule so established is too clearly right to call for argument."

In Com. v. Waldman (1891) 140 Pa. 98, 11 L.R.A. 563, 21 Atl. 248, the court said: "We are now asked to say that shaving is a work of 'necessity' and therefore within the exceptions of the Act of 1794. It is perhaps as much a necessity as washing the face, taking a bath, or performing any other act of personal cleanliness. A man may shave himself, or have his servant or valet shave him, on the Lord's Day without a violation of the Act of 1794. But the keeping open of his place of business on that day by a barber, and following his worldly employment of shaving his customers, is quite another matter; and, while we concede that it may be a great convenience to many persons, we are not prepared to say, as a question of law, that it is a work of necessity within the meaning of the Act of 1794. We do not make the law; our duties are limited to interpreting it, and we feel ourselves bound by the construction which our predecessors have placed upon the act for nearly a century."

In Com. v. Williams (1853) 1 Pearson (Pa.) 61, the court of quarter sessions of Dauphin county, after holding that barbering is not generally a work of necessity within the meaning of a statute which provides that if any person shall do or perform any worldly employment or business whatsoever on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, works of necessity and charity only excepted, etc., they shall forfeit and pay $4, etc., said; "It is said that the evidence makes out a case of necessity in this instance; that the persons shaved were sick the night before and unable to remain at the shop; that they were shaved in the morning as a mere matter of accommodation without charge, and the shop was not opened. If it had been made to appear that the men were sick for want of shaving, or that, being sick, they or their physician considered that it would add to their health, or was essential to their comfort, to be shaved that day, it would present a case of necessity justified by law; but no such proof was made. The work being done gratuitously makes it no less within the inhibition of the act; if it did, a man's neighbors might justify laboring on Sunday to assist him in raising a house or a barn, as a matter of friendly accommodation; and the shop being open, or otherwise, cannot make the act more legal. Men are as much prohibited from carrying on their daily avocations secretly as openly on that day." The court was here reviewing the record of a summary conviction before a justice of the peace, most likely on certiorari, so that the question of submitting the issue to the jury could not arise. The ruling is, on the general principle, in harmony with the great weight of authority, but is much too harsh in the application of the principle to the particular facts.

In McCain v. State (1907) 2 Ga. App. 389, 58 S. E. 550, where the statute provided that "no tradesman, artificer, workman, laborer, or other person whatsoever shall do or exercise any worldly labor, business, or work of their ordinary callings on the Lord's Day or any part thereof (works of necessity or charity only excepted);" and it was shown that the defendant "was a barber, pursuing his business and work of his ordinary calling during the week in a shop in the city of Rome. On Sundays he went to the house occupied by the Elks Club and in a room set apart for the purpose he shaved members of the club, receiving therefor whatever the members saw fit to give him. No other persons except members were shaved, and no compulsory charge was made, but the amount paid by the members was 25 cents a shave. It was also shown that some of these members, on account of being engaged all day Saturday, could not conveniently get a shave on said day, and, in order to present a decent appearance in attendance at church, they thought it necessary to get a shave on Sundays," the court said: "The contention of the plaintiff in error, that the work of shaving the members of the club was a work of necessity, because such members, by reason of their occupation on Saturdays, could not get a shave, and cleanliness demanded a daily shave, cannot be reasonably upheld. While shaving may be regarded as an act of personal cleanliness, desirable to be performed upon the first day as well as upon other days of the week, still this fact does not make shaving necessary or the work of the barber one of necessity. The statute makes no exception in favor of a man who cannot shave himself, or who cannot conveniently procure someone to shave him on a week day. Many states have statutes expressly prohibiting the opening, of barber shops on Sundays, and expressly declaring that shaving is not an act of necessity. But it needs no decision of the courts or the declaration of the statute to convince men of ordinary intelligence and experience that shaving is not a work of necessity within the meaning of that term, as constituting the exception in the statute now under consideration."

Ip. State v. Lorry (1874) 7 Bax. Tenn., 35, 32 Am. Rep. 555, the barber seems to have been incorrectly indicted and the judgment was quashed, but the court clearly indicated that it considered barbering on Sunday a violation of a statute that prohibits Sunday labor generally and excepts works of necessity and charity.

In Ex parte Kennedy (1900) 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 148, 51 L.R.A. 270, 58 S. W. 129, the court said: "We may concede that there may be isolated cases which should suggest a necessity for a tonsorial artist, and the statutes of some of the states make an exception in favor of shaving a corpse. But we do not understand that to be the case here presented; the insistence being that a barber can ply his vocation on Sunday for the benefit of all customers; that it is necessary for their convenience; and that it is a work of necessity, so far as he is concerned. We might concede it would be a matter of convenience to many of his customers, but it would by no means follow that it would be a work of necessity as to the barber. We believe that our statutes, in authorizing a work of necessity on Sunday, meant something more than mere convenience. It apprehended that there must be some peculiar exigency which would authorize Sunday labor. It might be more convenient to a number of citizens to buy their groceries or dry goods on Sunday, but this would not render it necessary for them to do so, when there are six days in the week in which they could provide these wants. It might be more convenient to the farmer in harvesting season to utilize all seven days of the week, but this would not make it necessary. Still there might be some occasions when the merchant would be authorized to sell some article of merchandise on account of necessity; and there might be an exigency for the farmer to harvest his grain on Sunday. And so it is with the trade of the barber. There are six full days in which the citizen can apply to the barber to have his hair cut or shampooed, or his beard shaved; but this would not imply that there might not be an exigency in which the barber might use his tonsorial art for the benefit of someone who required his labor as a necessity. But unless there should occur some peculiar reason showing that, under the circumstances in the particular case the attendance of a barber was a work of necessity, he would not be relieved from the operation of the statute."

In Stark v. Backus (1909) 140 Wis. 557, 123 N. W. 98, the legislature had amended the general statute by providing that barbering shall not be considered a work of necessity or charity, and it was held that inasmuch as barbering was not a work of necessity before the amendment was passed, the statute was not an unconstitutional discrimination against barbers. This point is not, as a distinct question, within the scope of the note. See notes referred to, supra, on this question.

In Phillips v. Innes (1837) 4 Clark & F. 234, 7 Eng. Reprint, 90, the question arose in connection with an attempt to enforce a contract of apprenticeship. The apprentice was to work as a barber on "holidays" as well as other days, and he refused to work on Sundays, and defended upon the ground that, if the contract required him to work on Sundays, it was illegal under a Scottish statute which prohibited a work of all trades and callings except of "necessity or mercy." The defense was sustained by the House of Lords on the ground that keeping a barber shop open on Sunday for the public was not a work of necessity. Lord Brougham, in the course of his opinion said: "The cases of accident mentioned in the court below, such as the case of a person falling down or receiving a contusion or other wound in the head, on Sunday, or the seizing of a madman after breaking loose from the asylum, did not apply here; for the taking the one to the apothecary's shop, and the other back to the asylum, would not be illegal, but would come within the exception in the statutes, both of Scotland and England. Would such acts be at all similar to the keeping open shop for all who would choose to come on the Sunday, whether the operation might or might not admit of delay till Monday, or might or might not have been performed on the Saturday evening? Such an operation, and the cases referred to, were by no means similar. Gain, in fact, was the object of the master; and such work, being for hire merely, could not come within the description of 'duties of necessity or mercy.'” The court in Palmer v. Snow [1900] 1 Q. B. (Eng.) 725, 64 J. P. 342, 69 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 356, 82 L. T. N. S. 199, 16 Times L. R. 168, 48 Week. Rep. 351, distinguished the statute in the case before it from the one in the Phillips Case, and held that a barber who shaves his customer on Sunday is not a “tradesman or laborer,” within the meaning of the statute, and thus avoided the necessity of passing upon the question as to whether it is a work of necessity.

In Reg. v. Taylor (1882) 19 Can. L. J. 362, the court followed the Phillips Case and held that barbering is in general not a work of necessity within the exception to the Sunday statute. Wilson, Ch. J., who wrote the opinion, said: “I do not say that a barber connected with an hotel or boarding house may not, by arrangement with the hotel or boarding-house keeper, follow his ordinary calling on Sunday in such hotel or boarding house, and be considered in the light of a servant kept in a private family to do the family work of a barber on Sunday as well as upon other days.” And Osler, J., in concurring, said: “I feel bound by the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Phillips v. Innes (Eng.) supra. In my judgment the cases of a baker and a barber are not distinguishable. I question very much the expediency of prohibiting barbers from carrying on their business on the first day of the week.”

J. W. M.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

MERIDIAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
MARY C. MILAM.

(172 Ky. 75, 188 S. W. 879.)

Insurance — time of incontestability — how reckoned.

1. The period after the expiration of which a policy of life insurance is incontestable is calculated from its date, and not from the day on which it was delivered to the insured.

For other cases, see Insurance, III. e, 2, f; Time, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Time — reckoning — when insurance policy becomes incontestable.

2. The day on which a policy of life insurance bears date is included in reckoning the period after which it is incontestable.

For other cases, see Insurance, III. e, 2, f; Time, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Insurance — time for paying premium.

3. The fact that a life insurance premium was not paid before the death of the insured on the day on which it was due does not avoid the policy, since he had the whole of that day in which to pay it.

For other cases, see Insurance, III. f, 2; Time, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 2, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Logan County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a life insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — As to date from which the period to which a defense is limited in life insurance policy is to be computed, see annotation following this case, post, 105.
L.R.A.1917B.

Messrs. Browder & Browder and John Weaver, for appellant:

Defendant is not cut off from any defense it may have to this policy on the ground that it agreed with the insured that if death should ensue at any time after one year from the date of the policy, the contract should become incontestable.

Frankfort v. Farmers' Bank, 105 Ky. 811, 49 S. W. 811; Smith v. Cassity, 9 B. Mon. 192, 48 Am. Dec. 420; Moor v. Covington City Nat. Bank, 80 Ky. 305; Chiles v. Smith, 13 B. Mon. 461; Handley v. Cunningham, 12 Bush, 401; Wood v. Com. 11 Bush, 220; Louisville R. Co. v. Wellington, 137 Ky. 719, 126 S. W. 370, 128 S. W. 1077.

Delivery is essential to the validity of any written contract. It is the final act which consummates the agreement, and is as necessary as the signature of the maker, and without it all other formalities are ineffectual; and without it a deed or insurance policy is void ab initio.

Gore v. Dickinson, 98 Ala. 363, 30 Am. St. Rep. 67, 11 So. 743; Ward v. Dougherty, 75 Cal. 240, 7 Am. St. Rep. 151, 17 Pac. 193; Merrills v. Swift, 18 Conn. 257, 46 Am. Dec. 315; Doe ex dem. Herbert v. Herbert, Breese (Ill.) 278, 12 Am. Dec. 192; Sims v. Smith, 99 Ind. 469, 50 Am. Rep. 99; Furenes v. Eide, 109 Iowa, 511, 77 Am. St. Rep. 545, 80 N. W. 539; Hughes v. Easten, 4 J. J. Marsh. 572, 20 Am. Dec. 239; Samson v. Thornton, 3 Met. 275, 37 Am. Dec. 135; Hatch v. Hatch, 9 Mass. 307, 6 Am. Dec. 67; Manufacturers' L. Ins. Co. v. Anctil, 28 Can. S. C. 103.

Mr. S. R. Crewdson for appellee.

Miller, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On June 8, 1914, the appellant, the Meridian Life Insurance Company, of Indianapolis, Indiana, issued its policy contract to James W. Milam, whereby, in consideration of a promise of $49.18 then paid, and the agreement of Milam to pay a like sum annually on June 8th for eight years thereafter, and after the expiration of the nine years to pay an annual premium of $98.36, it insured the life of James W. Milam for $2,500. Mary C. Milam, the wife of James W. Milam, was named as the beneficiary in the policy. James W. Milam died on June 8, 1915; and, proofs of death having been made, and the company having declined to pay the policy, Mary C. Milam filed this action on September 2, 1915, to recover the amount named in the policy.

There is no dispute about the facts of this case; the controverted questions relate solely to the law of the case. The policy contains this provision: "This policy shall not be in force until the first premium has been paid thereon, and the policy duly delivered during the lifetime and good health of the insured."

It also contained this further provision: "In case of death after one year from the date hereof this policy shall be incontestable, except for nonpayment of premiums, provided the covenant for military and naval service in time of war, as provided in the application, shall have been complied with."

By his application, which is made a part of the contract of insurance, Milam agreed: "That death by my own hands, or occasioned by my own act, whether voluntary or involuntary, whether I be sane or insane, or whether death be intended or anticipated as the result of such act, or in consequence of the actual or attempted violation of the law, within one year from the date of any policy issued hereunder, shall invalidate the insurance and forfeit the payment of the company."

By way of defense the answer alleged:

(1) That, while the policy bears date June 8, 1914, it was not actually delivered until June 13, 1914; (2) that Milam, the insured, committed suicide on June 8, 1915, which was within one year from the date of the policy, and that, by the terms of the application above set forth, all liability under the policy was thereby annulled; and (3) that the policy was procured by fraud in this respect, that at the time of and before the date of the policy, Milam was affected with gallstones and that he fraudulently concealed that fact, and represented that he had never suffered from that disease.

The circuit court sustained a general demurrer to the answer; and, the defendant having declined to further plead, judgment L.R.A.1917B.

went for the plaintiff for the amount of the policy. The company appeals.

The governing point upon which the whole case hinges is this: Did Milam die after one year from the date of the policy? If he did, the policy, by its terms, is incontestable, and the judgment of the circuit court was right.

1. In order to avoid the effect of the one-year clause after which the policy could not be contested, the company alleged, and now contends, that while the policy bears date June 8, 1914, yet, as a matter of fact, the policy was not delivered, or the first premium paid, until June 13, 1914; and that, Milam having died on June 8, 1915, he died within a year "from the date" of the policy.

We see no merit in this contention. While it is true that insurance companies frequently, and we believe usually, do not deliver a policy upon the day of its date, nevertheless all the provisions of the policy as to payments of future premiums, its maturity if it runs for a term, and similar provisions, are calculated from the day of its date. Of course, the insured can contract for a policy to be dated on any date after the date of his application; but, as a matter of routine business, policies are usually dated either according to the date of the application, or of its execution, and are subsequently delivered without any question being made upon that subject. But the rights of the parties to the contract are determined by the date, and all future premiums are to be paid accordingly.

If Milam had died on June 12, 1915, without having paid his second premium due on June 8, 1915, could it be said that his policy had not lapsed for failure to pay the premium when due, according to the terms of the contract? Under such a state of case would the company concede that his policy was in force on June 12, 1915, and that Milam had until that day to pay the premium? We think not. Furthermore, the policy, by its terms, provides that the period of incontestability shall be calculated "from the date" of the policy, not from the date of its delivery. So by the very terms of the policy the one-year period of incontestability began to run on June 8, 1914.

2. The company further insists, however, that if June 8th is to control as the date of the policy, then Milam died within one year from that date, and the policy is contestable under the provisions avoiding it for suicide and fraud, and that the demurrer to the answer relying upon those defenses was improperly sustained.

So, speaking concretely, the case resolves itself to this: Was June 8, 1915, the day of Milam's death, within or after one year from June 8, 1914?

The rule in regard to the computation of time is well settled, and is this: When the computation is to be made from the act done, the day on which the act is done must be included; but, when the computation is to be made from the day itself, and not from the act done, then the day on which the act is done must be excluded from the computation. Handley v. Cunningham, 12 Bush, 401; Moor v. Covington City Nat. Bank, 80 Ky. 307; Frankfort v. Farmers' Bank, 105 Ky. 811, 49 S. W. 811; Erwin v. Benton, 120 Ky. 548, 87 S. W. 291, 9 Ann. Cas. 264; Geneva Cooperage Co. v. Brown, 124 Ky. 16, 124 Am. St. Rep. 388, 98 S. W. 279; Newton v. Ogden, 126 Ky. 101, 102 S. W. 865; Louisville R. Co. v. Wellington, 137 Ky. 728, 126 S. W. 370, 128 S. W. 1077; and the cases there cited; and Lowry v. Stotts, 138 Ky. 251, 127 S. W. 789. The working of the rule may be illustrated by reciting the facts and the conclusions reached in two of the cases cited.

In Handley v. Cunningham, supra, the question was whether the act of 1871 reducing the legal rate of interest from 10 per cent to 8 per cent was in force on September 1st of that year, the date of the notes in question. The statute provided that it should "take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of September, 1871." The court applied the rule that, when the time is counted from a day, the day was not to be included, and held that the act of 1871, was not in force on September 1, 1871. East Tennessee Teleph. Co. v. Frankfort, 142 Ky. 408, 134 S. W. 475, is also a good illustration of this application of the rule. But in Frankfort v. Farmers' Bank, 105 Ky. 811, 49 S. W. 811, the statute required that an appeal should not be granted except within two years next after the right of appeal accrued. In that case the judgment was rendered on January 21, 1896; the appeal was granted on January 21, 1898. It was held that the appeal had not been granted within two years next after the judgment had been rendered, because the two years expired on January 20, 1898, the day before the appeal was granted.

In the case at bar, therefore, the year of incontestability must be computed from the dating of the policy, which was an act done on June 8, 1914. Manifestly, therefore, June 8, 1914, must be included in the computation, and the first year of the policy expired on June 7, 1915. Otherwise the year would have contained 366 days, instead of 365 days. But by the terms of the policy the insured was not required to pay the second premium until the first day of the second year, and, as there are no parts of days to be considered, he had all of June 8, 1915, in which to pay the second premium; and consequently the policy remained in force throughout that day. Milam having died on June 8, 1915, while the policy was in force, and not contestable, it became a charge against the company. The fact that he had not paid the premium for the second year when he died cannot affect the appellee's rights under the policy, since Milam was not then in default in the payment of any premium. Indeed, the company does not claim that the policy lapsed for failure to pay the second premium.

It follows, therefore, that since Milam did not die within one year from the date of the policy, it was incontestable upon either ground relied upon, and that the Circuit Court properly sustained the demurrer to the answer.

Judgment affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied December 15, 1916.

Annotation—Insurance; date from which the period to which a defense is limited in life insurance policy is to be computed.

The above question is covered in the annotation to Gans v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915F, 703 to which this is supplementary.

It will be noticed that the court decided in MERIDIAN L. INS. CO. v. MILAM, ante, 103, that, under the provisions of the policy there involved, the period after the expiration of which the policy was to be incontestable was to be calculated from the date of the policy, and not from the date of its delivery to the insured; and also that the day on which the policy was dated should be included in reckoning the period after which it was to be incontestable.

L.R.A.1917B.

The question involved in Anderson v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1913) 164 Cal. 712, 130 Pac. 726, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 903, is somewhat similar to the first question in MERIDIAN L. INS. CO. v. MILAM. In the Anderson Case a policy was "caused to be executed and issued" which bore the date of May 22, 1908, and referred to an application made May 21st, to which a medical examiner's report was attached, and the policy recited that it was issued in consideration of a stated sum and the payment of a like sum upon May 22d in succeeding years. It appeared that one application had been returned by the insurer June 24, 1908, and a second one signed, but that no medical report was attached to the second, and that a copy of the first application was attached to the policy. Both applications provided that the insured would not die by his own hand "during the period of one year next following the date of issue," and the policy provided that the insurer should not be liable in case the insured committed suicide "during the period of one year after the issuance of this policy as set forth in the provisions of the applications indorsed hereon." The first premium was paid May 21, 1908, and the second a year later; the insured committed suicide June 12, 1909, so that his death resulted from his own act less than a year after the date when the policy was signed by the officers of the insurer, but more than a year from the date designated in the policy as its date. It was held that the date of the policy determined its issuance, and that the insurer was liable, as the insured had not committed suicide within one year from that date.

The court said: "It must, of course, be admitted, in accordance with the respondent's claims, that the expressions 'date of this policy,' and 'issuance of this policy' are not, according to the ordinary acceptance of the terms, synonymous. The word 'issuance,' as applied to a contract like a policy of insurance, would, if standing alone, probably be taken to mean, either the signing (without delivery) of the contract by the authorized officers of the insuring company . . . or, perhaps, the act of delivery of a fully written and signed policy. . . . But in construing any writing, the usual definition of a single word is not a conclusive test of the meaning to be attributed to it in the connection in which it is found. We must endeavor to ascertain, from an examination of the entire instrument, read in the light of the circumstances surrounding its execution, the sense [in] which the parties employed the particular phrase in question.

"Here we find that the policy incorporates, as a part of the contract, the application of May 22d. Unquestionably the word 'issuance of this policy,' in the policy itself, were intended to mean the same thing as 'date of issue' in the application. The insurer, acting, so far as the record shows, with full knowledge of all the facts, elected to base its policy upon the first application, to date its policy May 22, 1908, the day upon which the medical examination of Anderson had taken place, to make the premiums payable on the 22d day of May of successive years, to make the principal sum payable in the event of death within twenty years from the apparent date of the policy, and to make dividends payable on the 22d day of May of each year. In all these particulars, the company expressed its intention to fix the rights of the parties with reference to the 22d day of May in just the same way that these rights would have been fixed if a policy had been actually signed and delivered on that day. It is perfectly competent for the parties to agree that a policy shall be antedated, and, when this is done, the policy takes effect by relation from the date agreed upon."

In American Nat. Ins. Co. v. Thompson (1916) — Tax. Civ. App. —, 186 S. W. 254, a policy issued August 11, 1913, stated that it was issued in consideration of the application and the payment of a stated sum for term insurance for one year, ending the 29th of November, 1914, and the payment of a like sum on the same date each year, and a rider attached to the policy provided that, in consideration of the application for "short-term insurance," together with the application for the policy to which the rider was attached, dated July 29, 1913, and the payment of a stated sum, the life was insured, "under the aforesaid policy for like amount and under like conditions as stated in said policy for the period July 29, 1913, to November 29, 1913, inclusive, preliminary to the date when the principal contract shall become in full force." The question in dispute was whether a provision of the policy limiting liability "if during the first policy year the insured shall commit suicide" should be construed to mean the year beginning August 11, 1913, the date of the issuance of the policy, or November 29, 1913, the date of the expiration of the "short-term" insurance and the date from which the policy provided the yearly premiums should be computed. The former construction was adopted, it being held that the rider providing for the short-term insurance was a part of the policy, and that there was but one contract of insurance, and that the "first policy year" contemplated by the suicide clause began on August 11, 1913, the date of the issuance of the policy, so that a recovery for the full amount on the policy was not barred by the insured's committing suicide more than a year after such date.

J. T. W.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

I. W. HOLCOMB, Appt.,

v.

GRAND LODGE, BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN.

(171 Ky. 843, 188 S. W. 885.)

Insurance — total disability — loss of sight.

A railroad employee is not totally disabled by the destruction of one eye and injury to the other so that he is not able to perform the duties of his employment, within the meaning of a benefit policy insuring against total disability, which is defined inter alia, as complete and permanent loss of the sight of both eyes, if he is able to go about without assistance and recognize persons 30 or 40 feet distant.

For other cases, see Insurance, VI. c. 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 1, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for McCracken County dismissing an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a benefit certificate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Campbell & Campbell, for appellant:

Loss of eyesight, under the provisions of § 68 of the constitution, means the loss of the usefulness of the eyes for the purposes to which, in their normal condition, they were susceptible of application.

Beber v. Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, 75 Neb. 183, 121 Am. St. Rep. 782, 106 N. W. 108; Lord v. American Mut. Acci. Asso. 89 Wis. 19, 26 L.R.A. 741, 46 Am. St. Rep. 815, 61 N. W. 293; Sheanon v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 77 Wis. 618, 9 L.R.A. 685, 20 Am. St. Rep. 151, 46 N. W. 799; Sneck v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 88 Hun, 94, 34 N. Y. Supp. 545, 156 N. Y. 669, 50 N. E. 1122; Sneck v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 81 Hun, 331, 30 N. Y. Supp. 881; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 301; Fuller v. Locomotive Engineers' Mut. Life & Acci. Ins. Asso. 122 Mich. 548, 48 L.R.A. 86, 80 Am. St. Rep. 598, 81 N. W. 326.

Total disability is a relative matter, and must be applied to an insured considering his vocation at the time of injury, and anything which prevents an insured from doing substantially all of the necessary and material things required in his customary vocation is, within the meaning of an insurance policy, a total disability.

Wolcott v. United Life & Acci. Ins. Asso.

Note. — As to what constitutes disability within meaning of accident or health policy, see annotation following this case, post, 108, L.R.A.1917B.

55 Hun, 98, 8 N. Y. Supp. 263; Commercial Travelers Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Springsteen, 23 Ind. App. 657, 55 N. W. 973; McMahon v. Supreme Council, O. C. F. 54 Mo. App. 468; Commercial Ben. Asso. v. Nancarrow, 18 Colo. App. 274, 71 Pac. 423; Albert v. Order Chosen Friends, 34 Fed. 721; Turner v. Fidelity & C. Co. 112 Mich. 425, 38 L.R.A. 529, 67 Am. St. Rep. 428, 70 N. W. 398.

Mr. F. E. Graves also for appellant.

Messrs. Wheeler & Hughes, for appellee:

Under a contract of insurance which provides for indemnity when the beneficiary has suffered "complete and permanent loss of sight of both eyes," no recovery can be had for impairment of vision without the loss of sight.

Lyon v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 46 Iowa, 631.

Turner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In December, 1911, the appellee, a fraternal insurance company, issued to appellant a policy of insurance in class C of its organization, wherein it agreed, in consideration of the premiums paid and to be paid, to pay appellant or the named beneficiary in the event of his death or total disability the sum of $1,500 in accordance with the terms of the contract.

It was provided in appellee's constitution that policies issued by it in class C should be for $1,500, and that the full amount thereof should be payable upon the insured becoming permanently or totally disabled within the meaning of § 68 of the constitution. Section 68 reads as follows: "Any beneficiary member in good standing who shall suffer the amputation or severance of an entire hand, at or above the wrist joint, or who shall suffer the amputation or severance of an entire foot, at or above the ankle joint, or who shall suffer the complete and permanent loss of sight of both eyes, shall be considered totally and permanently disabled, and shall thereby be entitled to receive, upon furnishing sufficient and satisfactory proofs of such total and permanent disability, the full amount of his beneficiary certificate, but not otherwise."

Appellant at the time the policy was issued was a flagman employed by a railroad company, and thereafter, on the 6th day of May, 1912, while engaged in his said occupation, was injured by a cinder which struck him in the left eye, by reason of which he was made practically blind in that eye, and because of which injury he lost his position as flagman, and was unable to obtain another position of a similar kind.

This is an action seeking a recovery on the insurance policy upon the theory that appellant was totally and permanently disabled within the meaning of the policy and of the constitutional provision quoted.

By agreement of parties the cause was submitted to the court, without the intervention of a jury, for the trial of both the issues of law and fact; that the court, after separating its finding of law and fact, entered a judgment dismissing the plaintiff's petition, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted. The only question necessary to be determined is whether there was such a total disability as is contemplated in the provision quoted.

The evidence shows that the cinder struck the appellant in the left eye, and that he was almost totally blind in that eye, although he could still tell daylight from dark; that both of his eyes were affected, and that at times the right eye was almost as bad as the left eye; that sometimes he could tell persons across the street; that he lost his position as flagman because of the injury to his eye, and had been refused similar employment upon application to other companies for that reason; that he and his wife had since run a lunch counter or restaurant, but that he had been unable to do any work which required the use of his eyesight; that since the accident he had been able to walk around the streets alone without a cane or other assistance, and to drive a buggy around the streets of Paducah; that during the progress of the trial he was able to recognize persons in the court room 30 or 40 feet distant from him.

The argument for the appellant is that total disability within the meaning of the policy is a relative matter, and must be applied in this case to the insured in the light of his vocation as a flagman; that it must be held to be a total disability because it prevents him from discharging the customary duties of that vocation; and that, as appellant was at the time the contract was entered into a flagman and engaged in the operation of trains, the contract must be construed as having particular reference to his vocation as such trainman, and that, inasmuch as the loss of one eye is a total disability so far as that vocation is concerned, the contract should be interpreted in the light of his occupation.

That there are cases justifying such an interpretation where reference is made in the policy of insurance to the insured's vocation, and the contract may be fairly interpreted from its terms to have reference to his particular vocation although he may thereafter be able to follow a different vocation, there is no doubt. As in this case, if the policy had undertaken to indemnify the appellant against any such total disability as would prevent him from following his occupation as a flagman, then undoubtedly he could recover; but in the policy in question his occupation is not referred to, and his occupation must be treated as a mere circumstance, and not as a determining factor in fixing the liability of the organization.

It is true that the appellant at the time the contract was entered into was a trainman, and it may be true, as asserted in appellant's brief (although the record does not disclose it), that none other than trainmen were eligible to membership in the organization, but that is not to be deemed conclusive in the absence of some provision in the contract that he was to be indemnified for such total disability as might prevent him from following that vocation as distinguished from a total disability to follow any vocation. For, although appellant at the time was a flagman, it cannot be assumed that, if he thereafter ceased to be one, the insurance would have ceased if he had continued to pay his premiums.

The policy in this case clearly was not an insurance against such total disability as might prevent appellant from following his vocation as a flagman, but was against such total disability, in a broader and more comprehensive sense, which might prevent him from following that or any other vocation.

The language is clear, explicit, and unambiguous, and that appellant has not suffered the complete and permanent loss of the sight of both eyes is perfectly clear, and for that reason there can be no recovery.

The judgment is affirmed.

Annotation—What constitutes disability within meaning of accident or health policy.

The earlier cases on this question are discussed in the annotations to Turner v. Fidelity & C. Co. 38 L.R.A. 529; Keith v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 352; Industrial Mut. Indemnity Co. v. Hawkins, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 635; and Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen v. Aday, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 126. L.R.A.1917B.

As to liability for indemnity against total disability which results from an injury for which an independent indemnity is provided, see annotation to Anderson v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 730.

As to liability for death under policy insuring against permanent or total disability, see Hill v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 742.

As to construction and effect of condition in accident or health policy that assured must be confined to the house to entitle him to indemnity, see annotation to Breil v. Claus Groth Plattsdsutschen Vereen, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 359, and Metropolitan Plate Glass & Casualty Ins. Co. v. Hawes, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 700.

Inability to do anything.

Supplementing annotation in 38 L.R.A. 530, and 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 352.

In Indiana Life Endowment Co. v. Patterson (1914) 55 Ind. App. 291, 103 N. E. 817, the averments of total and permanent disability in a complaint were held sufficient on demurrer where it was alleged that the insured's injury was total and permanent; that he was totally and permanently disabled from performing any and all kinds of manual labor or business upon which he depended for a livelihood, and was totally and permanently disabled from performing any kind of manual labor whatever; that he was also permanently disabled from following his usual occupation.

The court in this case refused to disturb a verdict for the insured, holding that the evidence, the substance of which does not appear, was sufficient to warrant a finding that he had been totally and permanently disabled.

Ability to do some small act.

Supplementing annotation in 38 L.R.A. 529, and 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 353.

In Davis v. Midland Casualty Co. (1914) 190 Ill. App. 338, it was held unnecessary to constitute "total disability" that the insured be helpless.

The question of total disability in that case was held one of fact, there being evidence that the insured, a farmer, had received an injury to his hand which disabled him for some time from doing any work, although he was able to go around and give instructions to others; and a verdict for the insured was held to be justified by the evidence.

And in Great Eastern Casualty Co. v. Robins (1914) 111 Ark. 607, 164 S. W. 750, the insured, a publisher of a newspaper, was held totally disabled and prevented from performing any and every duty pertaining to any and every kind of business or occupation within the meaning of an accident policy, where it was shown that he was unable to perform any of the duties pertaining to his business, although during a short period he made an occasional trip down to his office and gave instructions to his foreman.

Ability to attend to part of usual business.

Supplementing annotation in 38 L.R.A. 531 and 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 353.

In Commonwealth Bonding & Casualty Ins. Co. v. Bryant (1916) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 185 S. W. 979, the court quoted with approval from the decision Fidelity & C. Co. v. Getzendanner, set out in the annotation in 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 354, to the effect that, under a policy providing for indemnity in case of injuries which wholly-disable and prevent the insured from performing any and every kind of duties pertaining to his occupation, the insured is entitled to recover, although he was not absolutely disabled to do some acts usually done by him in carrying on his occupation.

The court did not set out the evidence, but stated that it appeared from it that the insured, a railroad conductor, could perform some of his duties, but could not perform others; and that it also appeared what his duties were; and held the question whether he was totally disabled a relative one of fact for the determination of the jury.

In Hefner v. Fidelity & C. Co. (1913) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 160 S. W. 330, a provision of an accident policy for indemnity in case of injuries resulting in total disability that prevented the insured from performing any and every kind of duty pertaining to his occupation was construed to mean a disability which prevented the performance of any substantial part of the insured's business.

The evidence in this case was held sufficient to take the question to the jury whether the insured had suffered a total disability, where it in substance tended to show that the insured, an attorney at law, from the time of the accident was not prevented from performing all of the duties required in his profession, but that he was unable to perform many of the duties incident thereto, among which was work in the library and the taking charge of and conducting lengthy cases in court.

In Fidelity & C. Co. v. Joiner (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 178 S. W. 806, where the accident policy provided for certain indemnities in case the insured suffered immediate total disability, and defined total disability as disability "that prevents the insured from performing any and every kind of duty pertaining to his occupation," it appeared from the evidence that the insured, a commercial traveler, sustained an injury in an automobile accident, and that he was badly bruised and skinned in several places, and almost immediately went to bed, but there was evidence that a little over two weeks thereafter he made a short trip for the purpose of transacting business, and solicited one customer and received a payment from another; but the evidence showed that at this time he was almost exhausted and in a nervous condition; and it was held that the question whether he was totally disabled was for the jury; and a judgment against the insurer was sustained.

In this case the insurer contended that, because the insured solicited the order and collected the debt subsequently to his injury, he performed duties pertaining to his occupation after the accident, and that it therefore appeared as a matter of law that he was not totally disabled within the meaning of the policy. With reference to this contention the court said: "We agreed it conclusively appeared as claimed that the assured, after he suffered the injuries, performed duties pertaining to his occupation, but we do not agree that his doing so established as matter of law that he was not 'totally disabled' within the meaning of those words as used in the policy. It not infrequently happens that one suffering from injuries to his person performs duties pertaining to his occupation which he is wholly unable, in the reasonable and proper sense of those words so used, to perform, and that as a consequence, because he was unable to do so, he suffers death or an aggravation of his injuries. In a case in which such a result follows the performance of the duty, the performance thereof, instead of establishing that the assured was able to perform it, it seems to us, would establish the contrary. We think, therefore, that to construe the language in the policy as meaning what appellant contends it means would be unreasonable. . . . In reaching the conclusion indicated, the fact that the words 'total disability' used in the policy are defined therein as disability 'that prevents the assured from performing any and every kind of duty pertaining to his occupation' has not been overlooked, but when it is remembered that the word 'prevent' is synonymous with the word 'hinder,' and that the latter might properly be substituted for the former where it is used in the quotations made from the policy, it is obvious that appellant has no cause to complain that we ignored L.R.A.1917B.

the definition, for undoubtedly the jury had a right to find from the testimony that the disability the assured suffered as a result of the injuries 'hindered' him in the performance of every kind of duty pertaining to his occupation."

In Bachman v. Travelers Ins. Co. (1916) — N. H. —, 97 Atl. 223, the question of the insured's total disability for a specified term was held for the jury, where there was evidence that during the period in question the insured, who was a traveling salesman, went out upon the road at different times, took some orders, and that others were sent to him, and that he received a compensation on account of these orders; and there was also evidence tending to prove that during the time in question the insured's mental faculties were impaired, so that he was incapable of performing services of any value whatever in his line of business, and that the orders taken did not result from valuable services performed by him. It was urged in this case that because the insured went about and received orders for which he was paid, it could not be found that he was without earning capacity, and that, since his efforts produced revenue, total disability could not be found; and that one who earns must have earning capacity. The court stated that the answer to this was that it could be found that the payments in question were made for what his employers believed that he did for them when in fact he did nothing; that it could be found that his capacity to give and hold trade was gone, although neither he nor his employers fully realized the situation until a subsequent date.

In Continental Casualty Co. v. Wynne (1912) 36 Okla. 325, 129 Pac. 16, the action was on an accident policy issued to a deputy sheriff engaged in making arrests, insuring against injury which caused total inability to engage in any occupation; and there was evidence that, while the insured was suffering from an accidental injury, and unable to work or perform the duties of his office, he had handed a few subpoenas to some jurors or witnesses upon a certain occasion. It was held that an instruction was proper which, after stating that before the plaintiff could recover it must be shown that the injury caused total and continuous disability to engage in any occupation, stated that, even though during the time he claimed to be totally and continuously disabled, he did perform some trivial services, this should not be so construed as to prevent him from recovering for all of the time, if it was found from the evidence that he was, when the trivial services were rendered, unable to have performed them; the court stating that the test was not whether he did perform any services of any character, but whether he was able to perform services of any sort or character.

In National Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. O'Brien (1913) 155 Ky. 498, 159 S. W. 1134, where a policy provided for indemnity in case of accidental injuries which wholly and continuously from the date of the accident disabled and prevented the insured from performing every duty pertaining to any business or occupation, it was held that the language should be construed to mean that the disability would be total if of such a character as to prevent the insured from transacting any kind of business pertaining to his occupation, and that it was sufficient if the disability was such as to prevent him from doing all the substantial acts required of him in his business.

The evidence in this case, which was in effect that the insured for brief intervals following the accident got up from his bed and was able to go out of the house, but could not perform any material work pertaining to his business, was held to show that his disability was so total and continuous as to prevent him from performing any substantial work or duty pertaining to his business or occupation.

In Workingmens' Mut. Protective Assn. v. Roos (1916) — Ind. App. —, 113 N. E. 760, where the policy provided for a specified indemnity in case an injury should, from the date of the accident, disable and prevent the insured from performing every duty pertaining to any and every kind of business or occupation, and as to partial disability provided that "if such injury shall wholly and continuously from date of accident disable and prevent the assured from performing one or more important duties pertaining to his occupation, or in the event of like disability immediately following total loss of time, the association will pay the assured for the period of such partial disability," it was held that the words, "total loss of time," in the last provision, when read in connection with the stipulation in reference to total disability, made it clear that the insured would not be entitled to recover for total disability except in the event of a total loss of time, as he must have been prevented from performing every duty pertaining to any and every kind of business or occupation.

And in this case an instruction that, if a person was so disabled that he was disqualified and rendered unable to perform substantially and in a reasonable way his usual and ordinary work and vocation, he was totally disabled within the meaning of the language used in the policy, was held incorrect.

The court stated that they had been unable to find a decision which had had occasion to construe language of the same import as that found in the policy before them.

Ability to work in other occupation.

Supplementing annotation in 38 L.R.A. 534, and 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 356.

It will be noted that in HOLCOMB v. GRAND LODGE, B. R. T. ante, 107, where the policy provided that the full benefit should be payable upon the insured's becoming permanently or totally disabled within the meaning of a section of the constitution providing that any member in good standing who should suffer the amputation or severance of an entire hand at or above the wrist joint, or who should suffer the amputation or severance of an entire foot, or who should suffer the complete and permanent loss of sight of both eyes, should be considered totally and permanently disabled, the court held that, notwithstanding the fact that the organization was one which accepted only railroad trainmen as members, yet the policy was not an insurance against such total disability as might prevent the insured from following his vocation as a flagman alone, but was against such total disability in a broader sense, which might prevent him from following that of any other vocation.

In Indiana Life Endowment Co. v. Reed (1913) 54 Ind. App. 450, 103 N. E. 77, where the insurer issued a life insurance policy with certain provisions for burial and disability benefits, to one who it knew was an illiterate laborer, and the policy provided for a certain indemnity if the insured should become totally and permanently disabled from performing any and all kinds of manual labor or business upon which he might depend for a livelihood, and provided that total and permanent disability as used in the policy should be understood to mean such disability as should render the insured totally incapable of doing, performing, managing, or directing any service of any kind or character by which he might earn a livelihood, it was held that if, from an injury received, the insured was totally and permanently incapacitated from earning a livelihood, the insurer could not rightfully refuse to pay because of a mere possibility that, by education or otherwise, he might at some time become able to earn a living in some manner or by some means not then available to him.

In this case, where the insured had suffered the loss of a hand through an accident, it was held that this injury would not necessarily entitle him to recover the indemnity provided for in case of total and permanent disability; but the question whether he was disabled within the meaning of this provision was held one of fact to be determined by the jury.

What loss of members constitutes disability.

Supplementing annotation in 38 L.R.A. 535, and 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 358.

As to extent of loss or mutilation contemplated by provision as to loss or removal of bodily member or part thereof, see annotation to Moore v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 264.

Under a certificate providing for the payment of a specified amount in case of total disability as defined by the by-laws, one of which provided, among other things, that a member suffering by means of a physical separation the loss of four fingers of one hand at or above the third joint, or of three fingers and a thumb of one hand at or above the third joint, should be considered totally and permanently disabled, a recovery for a total disability cannot be had where the insured's hand was crushed and an amputation of the second, third, and fourth fingers was had above the third joint, and the bone in the palm connecting with the first finger was injured in such a manner that one half the power and efficiency of the first finger was lost, but the entire first finger and thumb were left remaining attached to and part of the hand, since the evidence did not bring the injury within the meaning of the clause defining total disability. Mady v. Switchmen's Union (1911) 116 Minn. 147, 133 N. W. 472.

In Whitton v. American Nat. Ins. Co. (1916) 17 Ga. App. 525, 87 S. E. 827, the policy provided for certain indemnities in the event of a total and permanent loss of sight of both eyes, or loss of both arms or both legs, or one arm and one leg, or one eye and one limb, or in case the insured should become "totally and permanently disabled to such extent as to render it impossible for him to engage in any gainful occupation whatever," and expressly provided that "the total and permanent disability referred to must be such that there is neither then nor at any time thereafter any work, occupation, or profession that the insured can sufficiently do or follow to earn or obtain any wages, compensation, or profits," and where the evidence only showed the loss by accident of one eye, it was held that it was not shown that he was totally disabled within the meaning of the term as defined in the contract, as it appeared that he was not wholly unable to earn or obtain any wages, compensation, or profit.

In Rabb v. North American Acci. Ins. Co. (1916) 28 Idaho, 321, 154 Pac. 493, where the policy provided for the payment of one third of the principal sum for the loss of entire sight of one eye resulting from accident, and also provided that, for total loss of time resulting necessarily and solely from injury through accidental means, an indemnity of a specified sum per month should be paid for a certain period, it was held that the insured, who had lost one of his eyes through an accident and also received a fracture of his leg by reason of the same accident, was not limited in his recovery to one third of the principal sum, but was also entitled to recover the monthly indemnity for the period during which he was unable to work on account of the fracture of his leg.

In Convery v. Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen (1914) 190 Ill. App. 479, a provision of the constitution of a fraternal beneficiary association reading: "Any beneficiary member in good standing who shall suffer the amputation or severance of an entire hand at or above the wrist joint, or who shall suffer the amputation or severance of an entire foot at or above the ankle joint, or who shall suffer the complete and permanent loss of sight of both eyes, shall be considered totally and permanently disabled, and shall thereby be entitled to receive, upon furnishing sufficient and satisfactory proofs of such total and permanent disability, the full amount of his beneficiary certificate, but not otherwise," when taken in connection with another section providing that the beneficiary fund should be distributed exclusively in paying death, total and permanent disability, and benevolent claims as described in the section quoted, and another section providing that all claims of disability not coming within the quoted provision should be held to be addressed to the systematic benevolence of the brotherhood,—was held not to exclude all liability for any other kind of permanent disability than that enumerated therein, the court holding that the words, "but not otherwise," at the end of the quoted section, referred to the furnishing of the proof, and did not have the effect of excluding liability for all other forms of permanent injury; and the insured in this case was allowed to recover the amount of his certificate for an injury sustained to his knee which resulted in a total and permanent disability, from performing the duties of a railroad trainman, in which occupation he had been engaged.

In Bond v. Grand Lodge, B. R. T. (1911) 165 Ill. App. 490, where the insured, a brakeman, received an injury to his foot which crippled him, evidence was held admissible that he had made application to several railroads, and had been examined by their surgeons, and had been refused employment because he was not physically qualified to perform duties on trains, as such evidence was competent as tending to prove that he was totally disabled by his injury.

J. T. W.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

SAMUEL S. STALEY, Appt.,

v.

SOUTH JERSEY REALTY COMPANY,
Resp't.

(83 N. J. Eq. 300, 90 Atl. 1042.)

Contempt — classification.

1. Contempts are of two sorts, civil and criminal; in a civil contempt the proceeding is a remedial step in a cause inter partes, and, if the contemnor be imprisoned, it is only until he performs some required act beneficial to the other party; criminal contempts are offenses against organized society and are punishable as such in a proceeding at law which, while it may be administered by the court in which the contumacious conduct occurred, is no part of the private litigation therein.

For other cases, see Contempt, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — criminal — rights of accused.

2. A proceeding instituted in the court of chancery for the purpose of having that court adjudge whether or not the defendant in a cause pending therein was guilty of a contemptuous violation of an injunction issued by it is a proceeding at law in a criminal contempt in which the defendant is entitled to all of the substantial rights of a person accused of crime that are consistent with the summary nature of the proceeding and the processes of the tribunal in which it is administered, one of which rights is that the incriminating testimony shall be given by witnesses subject to cross-examination and impeachment under the ordinary rules of evidence.

For other cases, see Contempt, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Headnotes by GARRISON, J.

Note.—As to applicability, in proceeding to punish criminal contempt, of rules of evidence in criminal cases, see annotation following this case, post, 118.
L.R.A.1917B.

Same — ex parte order.

3. A punitive order of the court of chancery in such a proceeding made upon ex parte affidavits will be set aside.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII.

1, 3, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — affidavits.

4. Ex parte affidavits to which the rules of evidence are not applied are not juridical evidence, and hence are incapable of supporting a judicial decision in a proceeding at law.

For other cases, see Evidence, IV. g, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(June 15, 1914.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Court of Chancery adjudging him guilty of contempt for violation of an injunction restraining him from disposing of or claiming the right to convey title to certain lands. Reversed.

Statement by Garrison, J.:

Two bills to quiet title were filed in the court of chancery against Samuel S. Staley and others, in one of which a final decree was entered on April 2, 1909, and in the other of which a final decree was entered on October 22, 1909. In each case a permanent injunction was awarded restraining Staley from disposing of or claiming the right to make title to certain lands referred to in the said decrees respectively. On June 18, 1910, upon proceedings for contempt for the violation of this injunctive provision of the earlier decree, Staley was adjudged guilty and ordered to pay a fine of $50 for the use of the state. On September 22, 1910, an order in the other suit was made upon Staley requiring him to show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt of court for the violation of the permanent injunction awarded in that case. This order was returnable at the chancery chambers at Jersey City on October 3, 1910, and was served on Staley personally. At the time and place designated in this order to show cause the vice chancellor took up the consideration of the proceeding for contempt, and has made, for the purposes of this appeal, the following written statement of what then occurred: "An order to show cause was signed and served upon the respondent, Staley, who was then sojourning in Philadelphia. He did not appear at the hearing on the return day, but sent his counsel, who moved that a day might be fixed for taking the deposition of the respondent, who counsel represented desired to have a hearing in open court. He presented no answering affidavits. His counsel was inquired of as to whether Staley was in court in response to the order to show cause, to which counsel replied that he was not. His counsel stated that he was in Philadelphia, where he lived. I then examined the petition, and finding that the respondent, Staley, had been adjudged guilty of contempt on a former action, and had been fined $50, inquired of his counsel if the fine and costs had been paid, to which his counsel replied that Staley had not paid the fine because he could not raise the money, but that he thought that Staley should be entitled to a hearing without having complied with the previous order of the court. Counsel for the complainant then moved that the order be made absolute, and this was done."

Thereupon the following order was made and filed: "It appearing to the chancellor that, upon petition filed by the complainant in the above-entitled cause, an order was entered, dated 22d day of September, 1910, requiring the defendant, Samuel S. Staley, to show cause before the chancellor, at the chancery chambers, in the city of Jersey City, on Monday, the 3d of October, 1910, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt of court, in violation of the terms of the permanent injunction granted against him in the above-entitled cause, and be punished accordingly; and it further appearing by affidavits that copies of said petition and order were duly served personally upon the said Staley, as required by the terms of said order; and the court, after considering the said petition and the affidavits attached thereto, being of opinion that the said defendant, Staley, did commit the contempt with which he is charged, and violated the terms of the injunction aforesaid, and that his conduct was calculated to impair, defeat, and prejudice the rights of the complainant in this cause, and was an affront to the dignity and power of this court: It is thereupon on this 4th day of October, 1910, on motion of Lewis Starr, solicitor of the complainant, ordered that the said Samuel S. Staley be and he is L.R.A.1917B.

hereby adjudged to be guilty of contempt by reason of the misconduct alleged in said petition, and that he pay to the clerk of this court a fine of $50 for the use of the state, and that he pay to the complainant the costs of these proceedings to be taxed. And it is also ordered that, as further punishment for his said conduct, that the said Samuel S. Staley be committed to the common jail of the county of Camden, at Camden, in this state, and there confined for a period of three months from the date of his commitment, to run concurrently with a similar term of imprisonment imposed in another cause pending in this court between the parties hereto by order, dated this day, and for a further term until he shall have paid said fine and costs, as aforesaid, unless the chancellor shall see fit sooner to discharge him. And it is further ordered that a warrant issue accordingly, directed to any sheriff, constable, or other peace officer of the state of New Jersey."

From this order Samuel S. Staley has appealed, specifying as one ground of appeal that he was entitled to have proof made of his alleged contempt by competent testimony with opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses that testified against him.

Messrs. George H. Bates and Leo Belmont, for appellant:

Defendant was entitled, upon the rule to punish him for contempt, to require proof to be made of the contempt and to be confronted with the witnesses upon whose testimony he was accused, in order that he might have an opportunity for cross-examination and to produce witnesses in court in contradiction thereof, and the right to be examined and have the opportunity, if desired, to purge himself of any contempt, if such were proved.

Seastream v. New Jersey Exhibition Co. 69 N. J. Eq. 15, 59 Atl. 914.

The vice chancellor has no power to punish for any contempt not committed in the presence of the court.

Re Haines, 67 N. J. L. 442, 51 Atl. 929; Oscar Barnett Foundry Co. v. Crowe, 80 N. J. Eq. 109, 74 Atl. 964; Frowley v. Superior Ct. 158 Cal. 220, 110 Pac. 817.

The act alleged to have been committed by the defendant and which, by the order appealed from, it was attempted to punish as a contempt, if it were such, was a civil, and not a criminal, contempt, as those terms are known and used in the law, and such contempt as that charged in this case is not punishable by imprisonment for a definite term.

Re Brewster, 15 N. J. L. J. 360; Frank v. Herold, 64 N. J. Eq. 371, 51 Atl. 774; Thompson v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 48 N. J.

Eq. 105, 21 Atl. 182, 49 N. J. Eq. 318, 24 Atl. 544; Re Dill, 32 Kan. 668, 40 Am. Rep. 505, 5 Pac. 39; Smythe v. Smythe, 28 Okla. 266, 114 Pac. 257; Neeley v. State, 98 Miss. 816, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 138, 54 So. 315, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 281; Re Rice, 181 Fed. 217; State ex rel. Crow v. Shepherd, 177 Mo. 205, 99 Am. St. Rep. 624, 76 S. W. 79; Powers v. People, 114 Ill. App. 323; Welch v. Barber, 52 Conn. 147, 52 Am. Rep. 567; Wages v. Com. 13 Ky. L. Rep. 925; Ex parte Robertson, 27 Tex. App. 628, 11 Am. St. Rep. 207, 11 S. W. 669; People ex rel. Munsell v. Oyer & Terminer Ct. 101 N. Y. 245, 54 Am. Rep. 691, 4 N. E. 259, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 163; Clay v. Waters, 101 C. C. A. 645, 178 Fed. 385, 21 Ann. Cas. 897; People v. Kizer, 151 Ill. App. 6; Stewart v. State, 140 Ind. 7, 39 N. E. 508; Frowley v. Superior Ct. 158 Cal. 220, 110 Pac. 817; Saal v. South Brooklyn R. Co. 122 App. Div. 364, 106 N. Y. Supp. 996; Re Clark, 208 Mo. 121, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 389, 106 S. W. 990; Ex parte Wright, 65 Ind. 504; Haskett v. State, 51 Ind. 176; Costilla Land & Invest. Co. v. Allen, 15 N. M. 528, 110 Pac. 847; Gorham v. New Haven, 82 Conn. 153, 72 Atl. 1012; Vilter Mfg. Co. v. Humphrey, 132 Wis. 587, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 591, 112 N. W. 1095; Hake v. People, 230 Ill. 174, 82 N. E. 561; Anderson v. Indianapolis Drop Forging Co. 34 Ind. App. 100, 72 N. E. 277; Patterson v. Wyoming Valley Dist. Council, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 112; Androscoggin & K. R. Co. v. Androscoggin R. Co. 49 Me. 392; Ex parte Gudenoge, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 110, 100 Pac. 39; Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. 221 U. S. 418, 55 L. ed. 797, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 874, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 492.

Inability to comply with an order of the court is a sufficient excuse for failing to do so and a good defense in proceedings for contempt.

Re Brewster, 15 N. J. L. J. 360; State v. Gulick, 17 N. J. L. 435; Den ex dem. Hendrickson v. Hendrickson, 18 N. J. L. 366; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Thompson, 49 N. J. Eq. 318, 24 Atl. 544; Walton v. Walton, 54 N. J. Eq. 607, 35 Atl. 289; Grand Lodge, K. P. v. Jansen, 62 N. J. Eq. 737, 48 Atl. 526; Jenkins v. State, 60 Neb. 205, 82 N. W. 622; Herrington v. Cassem, 82 Ill. App. 594; Re Davison, 143 Fed. 673; State ex rel. McLean v. District Ct. 37 Mont. 485, 97 Pac. 841, 15 Ann. Cas. 941.

Mr. G. Doré Cogswell also for appellant.

Mr. Lewis Starr for respondents.

Garrison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Contempts are of two sorts, "civil" and "criminal." The distinction has been frequently pointed out. Dodd v. Una, 40 N. J. Eq. 672, 5 Atl. 155; Thompson v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 48 N. J. Eq. 105, 21 Atl. 182; Frank v. Herold, 64 N. J. Eq. 371, 51 Atl. 774; Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. 221 U. S. 418, 55 L. ed. 797, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 874, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 492; Gompers v. United States, 233 U. S. 604, 58 L. ed. 1115, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 693, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1044 (1914). In a "civil contempt" the proceeding is remedial, it is a step in the cause the object of which is to coerce one party for the benefit of the other party to do or to refrain from doing some act specified in the order of the court. Hence, if imprisonment be ordered, it is remedial in purpose and coercive in character, and to that end must relate to something to be done by the defendant by the doing of which he may discharge himself. As quaintly expressed, the imprisoned man "carries the keys to his prison in his own pocket." Re Nevitt, 54 C. C. A. 622, 117 Fed. 451. "Criminal contempts," on the other hand, as the term implies, are offenses against organized society which, although they may arise in the course of private litigation, are not a part thereof, but, like other criminal offenses, raise an issue between the public and the accused. Hence if imprisonment be adjudged, it is, by analogy with the criminal law, punitive in purpose and definite in character. So marked is the difference between the two sorts of imprisonment that it serves as a practical test by which the two sorts of contempt may be distinguished.

As was said by Mr. Justice Lamar in Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co.: "The distinction between refusing to do an act commanded—remedied by imprisonment until the party performs the required act, and the doing of an act forbidden—punished by imprisonment for a definite term; is sound in principle, and generally, if not universally, affords a test by which to determine the character of the punishment."

Judged by this test, the order brought up by this appeal was for a criminal contempt; it was for the doing of an act forbidden, and the punishment was imprisonment for a definite term. In principle the present case is indistinguishable from Frank v. Herold, in which, as in this case, the defendants were adjudged guilty of a contempt of the court of chancery for wilfully violating a restraining order of that court, and were sentenced to imprisonment for a definite term. The appeal was dismissed by this court upon the express ground that the proceeding was a criminal contempt in which, as the law then stood, an appeal did not lie. The legislature has since given a right of appeal under which the present case is now before us. This statute was passed in 1909

(P. L. 270), and because of the previous absence of an appeal in criminal contempts the questions that now arise are for the most part res nova in this court.

The Herold Case establishes beyond question the criminal character of the present contempt; and the other cases cited are also precedents for the authority of the court in which the contumacious conduct is alleged to have occurred to institute and carry through such criminal proceeding to its termination. In Dodd v. Una, Mr. Justice Depue described this proceeding as "of a criminal nature, instituted by the court of its own motion—heard by it in a summary manner—and punishable by imprisonment until the contempt be purged, or by a fine payable to the state."

It is not essential that the proceeding should be instituted by the court of its own motion; the matter may be, and in actual practice generally is, brought to the attention of the court by complainant's counsel who, in such case, acts as amicus curiæ. However set on foot, the person at whom the criminal proceeding is directed is entitled throughout to such of the substantial rights of a person accused of crime as are consistent with the summary nature of the proceeding and the processes of the forum in which it is administered. One of these rights of the accused is that the facts by which his guilt is determined and his punishment meted out shall be established by the oaths of witnesses subject to cross-examination and impeachment under the ordinary rules of evidence, unless the accused has either expressly or by implication waived the right thus intended for his protection, as to which latter point nothing is now decided. Magennis v. Parkhurst, 4 N. J. Eq. 433; Buckley v. Perrine, 55 N. J. Eq. 518, 36 Atl. 1037, 1088; Holt's Case, 55 N. J. L. 384, 27 Atl. 909.

Extended citation is unnecessary in view of the fact that the right of which we are speaking is upon fundamental principles applicable to all trials for criminal offenses, and in criminal offenses the sort of evidence by which the guilt of the accused may be established depends not upon the character of the tribunal by which he is tried, but upon the nature of the offense for which he is tried, so that evidence that would be inadmissible upon an indictment for contempt, tried by the courts of ordinary criminal jurisdiction, is equally so when tried in a summary way by the court of chancery.

"These contempts are infractions of the law visited with punishment as such. If such acts are not criminal we are in error as to the most fundamental characteristic L.R.A.1917B.

of crimes as that word has been understood in English speech. So truly are they crimes that it seems to be proved that in the early law they were punished only by the usual criminal procedure (3 Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, N. S. p. 147, 1885), and that at least in England it seems that they still may be, and preferably are, tried in that way."

The quotation is from the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Holmes in Gompers v. United States (1914) 233 U. S. 604, 58 L. ed. 1115, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 693, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1044. The relegation of criminal contempts to the courts of ordinary criminal jurisdiction insures a tribunal in which the functions of prosecutor, judge, and jury are exercised by different officers against none of whom was the contumacious conduct directed; if, however, the affront is to be punished by the tribunal at which it was aimed, and which by its constitution is both judge and jury and accuser as well, it is all the more important that there should be a scrupulous observance of the substantial rights of the defendant, one of which unquestionably is that of being represented by counsel when the incriminating testimony is given with right to cross-examine the witnesses, who are in effect state's witnesses, and to lay, if possible, the foundation for their contradiction or impeachment.

In the case now before us no witnesses were examined, although the accused was represented by counsel who was present in court upon the return of the rule to show cause. Counsel, it is true, moved for a continuance, which was denied; but such motion had reference solely to the taking of the deposition of the defendant, and in no way suggested that the case against the defendant should be made out otherwise than by lawful testimony. This motion for a continuance the court denied apparently because of an unpurged contempt in another cause. The denial of this motion was a matter of discretion that we do not review. When, however, this motion was disposed of, there remained nothing for the court to do but to hear the rule to show cause which on its face disclosed that its object was to have the court adjudge whether or not the defendant was guilty of a contemptuous violation of its permanent injunction, i. e., a proceeding at law for a criminal contempt, and not a motion in the equity cause or a step in that private litigation. This is the precise point on which the case of Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. turned, in which the ground of reversal was that, while the judgment was appropriate only to a proceeding at law for a criminal contempt, the proceeding throughout was framed and treated as part of the civil cause in equity. "There are some differences," said the court in that case, "between the two classes of proceedings which involve substantial rights and constitutional privileges. Without deciding what may be the rule in civil contempt, it is certain that in proceedings for criminal contempt the defendant is presumed to be innocent, he must be proved to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt and cannot be compelled to testify against himself,"—citing a large number of cases.

It is hardly necessary to add that among these substantial rights is that the defendant's guilt must be proved by judicial evidence, i. e., by testimony to which the ordinary rules of evidence are applied, which is not the case with ex parte affidavits such as those upon which the defendant in the case before us was convicted. These ex parte affidavits, if served upon the defendant, as to which the case is silent, were not legal evidence in a proceeding at law such as this. Baldwin v. Flagg, 43 N. J. L. 496.

The chancery rules referred to by Mr. Justice Depue do not, and could not, make such affidavits evidence in this criminal proceeding; they were lacking in the essential elements of legal evidence. As was said by Chief Justice Beasley in State v. Bd. of Public Works, 58 N. J. L. 362, 33 Atl. 966, speaking of the ex parte affidavit on which the writ of certiorari is allowed: "Such oath has no semblance of juridical testimony. The rules of evidence are not applied to it, and it is used against a party who has no knowledge of its existence. Such a basis as this is incapable of supporting anything in the nature of a judicial decision."

The defendant is not to be held responsible for the manner in which the case against him was conducted; his counsel waived nothing and acquiesced in nothing excepting as to the adverse ruling of the court on his motion for a continuance. If the incriminating witnesses had been sworn and examined as they should have been, he was there to cross-examine them or to lay the ground for their contradiction or impeachment. The ex parte affidavits, if known to the defendant, were not recognized by him as legal evidence; answering affidavits were not filed, hence the defendant did not even apparently acquiesce in that method of trial. We can reach therefore but one conclusion, and that is that the order sentencing the defendant to a definite term of imprisonment for a criminal contempt was made L.R.A.1917B.

without any evidence of his guilt that was legally admissible in such a proceeding.

That an order so made will be set aside upon appeal goes without saying. It may well be that such order is also open to the same objection that led the Supreme Court of the United States to set aside a similar order in Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. the syllabus of which case is: "A punitive sentence appropriate only to a proceeding at law for criminal contempt where the contempt consisted in doing that which had been prohibited by an injunction could not properly be imposed in contempt proceedings which were instituted, entitled, tried, and up to the moment of sentence, treated as a part of the original cause in equity."

If there is any essential difference between the case cited and the one before us it is not apparent upon a somewhat careful examination; or perhaps it would be more frank to say that, while it is apparent that there is no difference, we prefer to place our decision upon the meritorious ground already stated rather than upon the narrow one of an error in procedure.

We are asked by the appellant's counsel to say that the vice chancellor, in any event, had no power to make the order appealed from and § 102 of the Chancery Act and the case of Seastream v. New Jersey Exhibition Co. 69 N. J. Eq. 15, 59 Atl. 914, are cited to us.

The conclusion we have reached renders it unnecessary to consider this question, but we point out that § 102 applies to the vice chancellors sitting as judicial officers, and not to orders made by the chancellor with or without their advice. It may also be well to point out that what was said by Chancellor Magie in the Seastream Case was not approved by this court when that case came before it upon appeal (Seastream v. New Jersey Exhibition Co. 72 N. J. Eq. 377, 380, 65 Atl. 982), and also that the absence of an appeal, which was an influential factor in the case in chancery, has since been altered by the enactment of the statute under which the present appeal is now before us. It is further argued that, if a vice chancellor may try a criminal contempt, he can do so only when the matter is expressly referred to him, and that such a reference is not covered by the general chancery rules. The question is not free from difficulty, and is not now passed upon for the reason that such a decision is entirely unnecessary to the rights of any party now before us.

For the reason already stated, the order brought up by this appeal is reversed.

Annotation—Applicability in proceeding to punish criminal contempt of rules of evidence in criminal cases.

- I. Introductory, 118.*
- II. Accused as witness, 118.*
- III. Ex parte evidence, 119.*
- IV. Presumption of innocence and burden of proof, 122.*
- V. Degree of proof, 123.*
- VI. Various questions of evidence, 127.*
- VII. Miscellaneous, 129.*

I. Introductory.

The preliminary difficulty in this subject is that the courts often do not inform us whether they consider the contempt in question as civil or criminal; for while, generally speaking, civil contempts are remedial, and criminal contempts are in support of the court's dignity, there is considerable difference of opinion as to which class certain contempts belong. Under these circumstances it has not been sought to collect cases where the court does not indicate that it considers the contempt criminal, though some of such cases are included. The reader will understand that where the contempt is not referred to as "criminal" that the court has not definitely so characterized it.

Statements are occasionally found in the cases that contempt is a criminal proceeding or is of a quasi criminal nature, etc., which do not inform us whether the particular case is considered to be a criminal or a civil contempt. There is indeed authority to the effect that all contempt proceedings are of a criminal nature, and that the rules of evidence applicable to proceedings to punish for contempt generally are those of the criminal law. 4 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 766-769. It is stated in 1 Whart. Crim. Ev. 10th ed. § 350, note, that "a proceeding in contempt in a Federal court is a criminal case to be prosecuted in the name of the United States."

The reader is reminded that contempts as regards evidence are of two classes: (1) A contempt committed in or near the court's presence where the court proceeds summarily by its own knowledge; and (2) other contempts. It is of course with the second class that we are here concerned.

For right of one charged with contempt to notice and hearing, see the note to Mylius v. McDonald, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1098.

For necessity of finding facts before adjudging one guilty of contempt, see L.R.A.1917B.

the note to Hoffman v. Hoffman, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 564.

For effect of denial under oath to purge one of criminal contempt, see the note to O'Flinn v. State, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1119.

For the question whether a proceeding for contempt for violation of an injunction is civil or criminal, see the notes to Vilter Mfg. Co. v. Humphrey, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 591; Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 874; and Rothschild & Co. v. Steger & Sons Piano Mfg. Co. 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 793; also the note to Enterprise Foundry Co. v. Iron Moulders' Union, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, as to the same question, where the injunction is against interfering with another's employees.

For necessity and sufficiency of notice of injunction to render one not a party guilty of contempt in disobeying it, see the note to Garrigan v. United States, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1295.

II. Accused as witness.

In his own behalf.

It has been held that, as a contempt proceeding is in the nature of a criminal prosecution, one charged with contempt is not competent as a witness in his own behalf. Thus, where a bench warrant was issued accusing respondent of wilful misbehavior in the presence of the court or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, and also of wilfully conversing with grand jurors about matters of importance before them, and tampering with witnesses before them, it was held that in answer to the warrant by way of purging himself of contempt, the respondent might have filed an affidavit, but, the proceeding being in the nature of a criminal prosecution, he was not competent to testify as a witness in his own behalf, and there was no error in the refusal of the court to allow him to be examined as a witness. Harwell v. State (1882) 10 Lea (Tenn.) 544.

Compelled to testify—interrogatories.

It has been held under the practice requiring the accused to answer interrogatories, that he could not object that it was compelling him to give evidence against himself.

Thus, one charged with contempt for attempting to obstruct the administration of justice by soliciting a bribe while acting as juror could not complain of the order requiring him to answer interrogatories, as such order was not against the provision of the Constitution providing that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to give evidence against himself, as this was not a criminal proceeding. O'Neil v. People (1904) 113 Ill. App. 195.

So, in State v. Soule (1844) 8 Rob. (La.) 500, where the court issued an attachment against an attorney for the language of a petition filed by him for a rehearing, and also propounded interrogatories, it was held that he had no right to refuse to answer the interrogatories on the ground that he could not be compelled to answer them. The court said: "The right of the court to propound interrogatories to the defendant is as unquestionable as the right to attach his person. The practice is almost universal, and is not deviated from, except in those cases where the court have other evidence before them upon which they can act. When presented, the court has a right to have them answered; and we do not believe the defendant is protected by the clause of the Constitution he invokes. The interrogatories in this case were not propounded for the purpose of compelling the defendant to give evidence against himself, but to enable him, if he could, to exculpate himself from the alleged contempt. This he has refused to do, and thereby aggravated the first offense."

—oral testimony.

The cases on this subject leave the matter in some doubt.

It was held in State v. Sieber (1907) 49 Or. 1, 88 Pac. 313, that one accused of criminal contempt cannot refuse to answer questions on the ground that he is thus compelled in a criminal prosecution to testify against himself, as a proceeding for contempt is not a criminal prosecution, the court disapproving Ex parte Gould (Cal.) infra, and saying: "If the questions propounded to a party at his examination for the alleged commission of a contempt tended in any manner to incriminate him, he would be entitled to rely upon the constitutional guaranty invoked herein. . . . In the case at bar the questions asked were not of that kind, and hence no error was committed in requiring the defendant to answer the inquiries."

A somewhat similar opinion was expressed (obiter) by Smith, J., in Merchants' Stock & Grain Co. v. Board of L.R.A. 1917B.

Trade (1912) 120 C. C. A. 582, 201 Fed. 20.

The contrary was held in California, where contempt of court is a public offense and expressly declared to constitute a misdemeanor. Ex parte Gould (1893) 99 Cal. 360, 21 L.R.A. 751, 37 Am. St. Rep. 57, 33 Pac. 1112. It was there held that, in a proceeding against a person for the violation of an injunction, an order to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt having been issued, the respondent could not be compelled to testify. His objection was good that he could not be compelled to be a witness against himself, as the proceedings were of a criminal nature.

In Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. (1911) 221 U. S. 418, 55 L. ed. 797, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 874, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 492, Lamar, J., said: "It is certain that in proceedings for criminal contempt the defendant is presumed to be innocent. He must be proved to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and cannot be compelled to testify against himself."

It has been held in Kansas that one charged with a contempt, which is also a crime, cannot be compelled to take the stand and give evidence, as this would be against the constitutional provision that "no person shall be a witness against himself." Re Nickell (1892) 47 Kan. 734, 27 Am. St. Rep. 315, 28 Pac. 1076; Re McKenna (1892) 47 Kan. 738, 28 Pac. 1078.

In Re Haines (1902) 67 N. J. L. 442, 51 Atl. 929, it was held that one charged with contempt in failing to obey a subpoena to attend and give evidence upon an indictment cannot be required to take the stand in advance of proof against him. The court said: "At the hearing upon which the appellant was adjudged in contempt, he was required to go upon the stand and convict himself before a particle of testimony was put in the case proving that he was in contempt. No person should be required to purge himself of contempt, except for contempts in the presence of the court and affecting its dignity, prior to the legal proof of his guilt. The defendant cannot be required to give such proof against himself."

III. Ex parte evidence.

There is a direct conflict in the courts as to whether affidavits may be received in evidence in criminal contempt.

Ex parte evidence inadmissible.

Some of the cases hold with STALEY v.

SOUTH JERSEY REALTY Co. ante, 113, that ex parte evidence may not be received.

Thus, in New Jersey Patent Co. v. Martin (1909) 166 Fed. 1010, the court said that disobedience of an injunction would be a criminal contempt, but held that, whether it was a civil or criminal contempt, as the punishment might subject him to imprisonment, he ought not to be convicted on ex parte affidavits.

So, in a criminal contempt it was held that the ex parte accusing affidavit and the answers to interrogatories by a third person were alike inadmissible. The court said: "If evidence beyond the examination of the defendant is gone into, I think only such evidence should, in general, be received as would be admissible on the trial of an indictment for the same offense." Bates's Case (1875) 55 N. H. 325.

So, in Welch v. Barber (1884) 52 Conn. 147, 52 Am. Rep. 567, it was held error in a criminal contempt to admit the complaining affidavit, the court saying: "The affidavit had performed its office when it satisfied the court that this was a case which it ought to notice. It could not be received in evidence to prove guilt without violating two cardinal principles in all criminal trials,—the right of the accused to confront the witnesses against him in open court, and his right to cross-examine them. The error was not healed by the subsequent appearance of two of the affiants as witnesses."

An affidavit made by a party charging a justice and a constable of contempt in disobeying a certiorari is not sufficient to prove the fact, especially in the face of sworn answers denying the allegations. Ex parte Kilgore (1877) 3 Tex. App. 247.

In State ex rel. Russell v. Ives (1895) 60 Minn. 478, 62 N. W. 831, where it does not appear whether the contempt was civil or criminal nor whether there was any answer, it was held that the complaining affidavit was not competent evidence of guilt.

(In Una v. Dodd (1884) 38 N. J. Eq. 460, where the managers of a savings institution were charged with contempt in investing funds contrary to the order of the chancellor, and an application was made to take the depositions of witnesses against them residing out of the state, the court, in holding that it had power to take such depositions, stated that it was quite unimportant whether the proceeding was classified as civil or criminal contempt, and said: "The managers are not under indictment nor on trial for a crime; they are not, in this matter, entitled to a trial by jury, nor to be confronted with the witnesses against them. They have a right that the court shall, according to its accustomed methods, ascertain whether the charges are true or not before pronouncing judgment, but not that the court shall depart from its ordinary course of practice." But the judgment was reversed on other grounds in (1885) 40 N. J. Eq. 672, 5 Atl. 155 [cited in the principal case], where the court seemed to consider the case one of civil contempt.)

(Baldwin v. Flagg (1881) 43 N. J. L. 496, cited in Staley v. South Jersey Realty Co. ante, 113, was not a case of contempt.)

Contra.

On the other hand, other cases hold that ex parte evidence is admissible.

Thus, where the defendant, charged with contempt for attempting to obstruct the administration of justice by soliciting a bribe while acting as juror, refused to answer the interrogatories, and the information was supported by affidavits, the court found him guilty of contempt; and it was held that he could not object that, as the conviction was based upon affidavits, he was deprived of his constitutional rights to meet the witnesses face to face, as, however criminal the contempt, it was not a criminal proceeding within the meaning of the Constitution. O'Neil v. People (1904) 113 Ill. App. 195.

So, in a proceeding against the respondent for contempt in attempting to bribe a juror, an information having been filed and the respondent, having been ordered to answer, declined to do so and stood mute, it was held that the refusal might be treated by the court as an admission of the charges contained in the information, as standing mute in a contempt case was not equivalent to a plea of not guilty in a criminal case. Toozier v. State (1903) 5 Neb. (Unof.) 182, 97 N. W. 584.

(In Nebraska Children's Home Soc. v. State (1899) 57 Neb. 765, 78 N. W. 267, where the court referred to the matter as being rather remedial than punitive, it was held that where the demurrer of the respondents to the information had been overruled, it was correct to hold that, by failing to answer, they confessed the information and tendered no issue, and that the trial court properly refused to receive evidence; the court stating that doubtless if an answer had been tendered the trial court would have permitted it to have been filed.)

—under statute.

It has been held that the statute may properly provide that the evidence against the respondent in contempt proceedings may be by affidavit.

In State v. Harris (1905) 14 N. D. 501, 105 N. W. 621, contempt for violation of an injunction against using premises as a house of prostitution, it was held that the complaining affidavit might be received in evidence where the statute provided that "upon the original affidavits, the answer, and subsequent proofs, the court or judge must determine whether the accused has committed the offense charged;" and it was further provided as to appeal in contempt cases that "upon such appeal the supreme court may review all the proceedings had and affidavits and other proof introduced by or against the accused." The court said: "Under these provisions, it seems too clear for discussion that affidavits may be used and considered on the hearing in contempt cases. The proceeding is not a trial. The defendant has no constitutional right to be confronted by the witnesses against him. The reception of affidavits to establish the offense is generally sustained by the authorities."

In State v. Mitchell (1892) 3 S. D. 223, 52 N. W. 1052, which was a proceeding to punish for contempt a person who was defendant in a proceeding by the state against him in which an injunction had been issued in relation to intoxicating liquors, where the statute provided that upon the examination of the charge of contempt the evidence "may be oral, or in the form of an affidavit, or both," the court said: "Defendant argues that he was thus deprived of his constitutional right 'to meet the witnesses against him face to face.' This right, however, is confined to 'criminal proceedings,'—such prosecutions as also entitled him to 'a speedy public trial by an impartial jury.' Const. § 7, art. 6. The authorities cited on the last point, supra, fully exhibit the character of contempt proceedings. While they are criminal in their nature, they are not of themselves criminal actions or prosecutions. They are incidental to and may occur in any action, civil or criminal, and neither the constitutional right to be tried by a jury, nor to be confronted with the adverse witnesses, exists in such proceedings. It was therefore competent for the law to provide that in such proceedings the evidence might be by affidavit, or oral, or both."

A provision of the statute providing that "the affidavits upon which the attachment for contempt issues shall make a prima facie case by the state" has been held not unconstitutional as being an encroachment of the legislative, upon the judicial, powers. State v. Mitchell (S. D.) supra, where the court said: "It is claimed that it undertakes to determine in advance, regardless of what the affidavits may in fact state, that they shall be prima facie evidence of an offense which may be punished criminally, thus seeking to deprive the courts of the power to determine whether the affidavits state sufficient facts to support a conclusion of guilt or not. This construction of the language of this section is too narrow. It must be construed with reference to the known and well-understood procedure of the courts.

In the enactment of the provision criticized by the defendant, the legislature presumed, as they reasonably might, that no attachment would be issued by any court, 'unless a clear case' therefor appeared from the affidavits presented, and when such justifying facts did appear to the satisfaction of the court, and an attachment was issued, then the affidavits upon which it was so issued should 'make a prima facie case for the state.' The court first determines whether the affidavits make a case of contempt, and upon that determination grants or withholds the attachment; and the manifest meaning of the law is that, if the court regards the affidavits as sufficient to justify its issuing an attachment, they shall be held upon the hearing as sufficient to make a prima facie case against the defendant. So construed, this provision is neither unreasonable nor novel. The theory of an ordinary order to show cause is that the party in whose favor it is granted has made a prima facie case, entitling him to certain relief, and upon the strength of such prima facie case the adverse party is called upon to show cause to the court, if any he have, why such relief should not be granted, in accordance with the prima facie case made, and this theory and practice prevail equally in proceedings for contempt."

It may be noted that, in Re Cole (1907) 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 255, 90 C. C. A. 50, 163 Fed. 180, where the conviction of contempt was reversed, it was held that the provision of the Federal Constitution entitling an accused to the right to be confronted by the witnesses against him does not apply to a summary proceeding to punish one for contempt in refusing to comply with an order in bankruptcy, in refusing to turn over property; also that in Manderscheid v. District Ct. (1886) 69 Iowa, 240, 28 N. W. 551, no objection was made to the affidavits in the court below; and in the same case in the Supreme Court of the United States (1889) 134 U. S. 31, 33 L. ed. 801, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424, it was held that the clause in the United States Constitution giving the accused in criminal cases the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him did not apply to the states.

IV. Presumption of innocence and burden of proof.

By the weight of authority one accused of criminal contempt is entitled to the presumption of innocence. Jones v. United States (1913) 126 C. C. A. 407, 209 Fed. 585; Burdick v. Marshall (1896) 8 S. D. 308, 66 N. W. 462; State v. Ralph Snyder (1890) 34 W. Va. 352, 12 S. E. 721; Lamar, J., in Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. (1911) 221 U. S. 418, 55 L. ed. 797, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 874, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 492. See also State v. Edwards (1902) 15 S. D. 383, 89 N. W. 1011.

"If false swearing in the presence of the court constitutes direct contempt, then judicial knowledge of its falsity is, in our opinion, indispensable to the right of the court to exercise authority to commit therefor, and there is nothing in the record to disclose that the court knew or could know that the testimony was false." People v. Stone (1913) 181 Ill. App. 475.

In Hunt v. State (1904) 27 Ohio C. C. 16, affirmed without opinion in (1905) 72 Ohio St. 643, 76 N. E. 1132, in reversing a conviction for contempt, in filing certain papers, as not supported by the evidence, also for proceeding without written charges, the court said: "It is a quasi criminal proceeding. The presumptions are all in favor of the persons charged with the offense, i. e., in favor of innocence. It is not a case of the character where a court reviewing the conviction is to assume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the action of the tribunal below was correct and lawful. It is a case where the guilt of the person convicted must appear affirmatively in the record. The offense is in its character like those set forth in the chapter of the Criminal Code on offenses against public justice."

The same quotation in part was made *L.R.A.*1917B.

in Tracy v. State (1906) 28 Ohio C. C. 453, holding that where the sole ground alleged in a journal entry and bill of exceptions for a judgment and sentence of contempt is that motions falsely charged the trial judge with improper or irregular conduct, and the motions were not otherwise objectionable and were filed in due course of procedure, bad faith of the attorneys filing the same will not be presumed.

In Herald-Republican Pub. Co. v. Lewis (1913) 42 Utah, 188, 129 Pac. 624, a criminal contempt for a publication, there was no hearing, the trial court proceeding on the ground that the publication was admitted and that it was in law contemptuous; but it was held on the appeal that the prosecution had the burden as in other criminal cases of making out a prima facie case. The court said: "Though sufficient facts are alleged to constitute a constructive and criminal contempt, and though the person charged therewith stands mute, still the court under the statute may not treat such allegations as confessed, and upon them pronounce a judgment of conviction. The court nevertheless is required 'to investigate the charge.' It no doubt may, without proof or evidence, pronounce such a judgment if a plea of guilt or an answer equivalent thereto is entered. But the court here was not justified in regarding the answers as equivalent to such a plea. They put in issue about every allegation in the affidavits alleged, except the publications." The statute referred to provided: "When the person arrested has been brought up or has appeared, the court or judge must proceed to investigate the charge, and must hear any answer which the person arrested may make to the same, and may examine witnesses for or against him. . . . Upon the answer and evidence taken, the court or judge must determine whether the person proceeded against is guilty of the contempt charged; and if it be adjudged that he is guilty of the contempt, a fine may be imposed on him not exceeding $200, or he may be imprisoned not exceeding thirty days, or both."

But in sustaining a conviction of a court officer for contempt in giving information of the issue of a criminal warrant, the court considered that the trial court had a right to show certain inferences of the failure of the officer to make explanations as to certain facts, and said: "While the proceedings were quasi criminal in their nature, it was not the prosecution of a criminal offense in fact, under which the party accused could deny to the authority he was bound to respect and suppress any information that would exonerate him. He was not prosecuted for a criminal contempt upon indictment or complaint, but under proceedings which authorized the court to call for specific explanations to secure respect for its authority; and appellant's failure to make such explanations cannot be excused by a reliance upon the presumption that belongs to a party accused in a strictly criminal proceeding under Gen. Stat. 1894, § 5658." State v. O'Brien (1902) 87 Minn. 161, 91 N. W. 297.

If the party charged with contempt sets up an affirmative defense, the burden is in general upon him to prove it. (Compare bankrupt's failure to turn over money or property, infra, V.)

In State v. Nelson (1914) 29 N. D. 155, 150 N. W. 267, a proceeding for contempt on account of a certain publication, the court held that the burden of proof was upon the defendant to show the truth of the allegations made by him, which he refused to do, thereby in effect admitting their falsity.

In Kornik v. Kornik (1913) 3 Tenn. C. C. A. 41, which was a proceeding to punish the respondent for contempt in failing to obey the orders of the court as to counsel fee and temporary alimony in a divorce suit, the court, while stating that a contempt proceeding is of a criminal nature and must be tried as if the party were under indictment, said that prima facie or presumptively he ought to have obeyed the order of the court, and the burden of proof was upon him to show that he was unable to do so, he having urged his inability as a defense. The court further says that there was evidence that he was able to pay, —that the evidence did not preponderate against such a finding,—and that, although they should treat it as a criminal case in which the presumption of innocence obtains, they must affirm.

In this connection reference may be made to St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. State (1910) 26 Okla. 764, 110 Pac. 749, contempt by a railroad company in violating orders of a Corporation Commission, where the court did not characterize the contempt as civil or criminal. It was there said: "The burden is upon the prosecution to prove that the contemner is guilty of the facts of contempt with which it is charged; but, where the contemner admits the acts constituting the alleged contemptuous conduct and relies on other facts, such as inability to perform the order or failure to perform it from mistake or misapprehension as to the meaning of the order or other circumstances not within its control, the burden is upon the contemner to establish such matter of defense. 3 Enc. Ev. 470. Inability to perform the duties required by an order is an excuse for a nonperformance, and likewise where a failure to perform has been due to misapprehension of the order, or where it has resulted from a mistake, and the contemner presents such facts as a reasonable excuse to the court, ordinarily he will be discharged upon payment of the costs and expenses of the proceeding (9 Cyc. 57); but such defenses are in their nature affirmative, and he who seeks to rely upon them must prove them."

V. Degree of proof.

Reasonable doubt.

In criminal contempt the guilt of the accused must be established beyond reasonable doubt. United States v. Carroll (1906) 147 Fed. 947 (endeavoring to influence or bribe a witness); Jones v. United States (1913) 126 C. C. A. 407, 209 Fed. 585 (falsely swearing in a bail bond); King v. Ohio & M. R. Co. (1877) 7 Biss. 529, Fed. Cas. No. 7,801; Burdick v. Marshall (1896) 8 S. D. 308, 66 N. W. 462; Kidd v. Virginia Safe Deposit & Trust Corp. (1912) 113 Va. 612, 75 S. E. 145; State v. Ralph Snyder (1890) 34 W. Va. 352, 12 S. E. 721; State v. Davis (1901) 50 W. Va. 100, 40 S. E. 331, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 282 (obiter); Lamar, J., in Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. (1911) 221 U. S. 418, 55 L. ed. 797, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 874, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 492.

In a jurisdiction where the respondent may purge himself of criminal contempt by his answer, it was said and held in People v. Hille (1915) 192 Ill. App. 139, where the respondent was accused of criminal contempt in making false representations to the court as an attorney in a criminal case: "Before it can be successfully maintained that the making of the representations on the occasion and under the circumstances in question was a contempt of the court, it must appear beyond a reasonable doubt from the personal knowledge of the court, or by admissions from the lips of the defendant himself in open court, and in the presence of the court, and from no other source whatsoever, that (1) the representations so made were false and untrue when made; (2) that the defendant knew of their falsity when he made them; and (3) that he made them knowing their falsity and with a wilful and malevolent intention of assailing the dignity of the court, or of interfering with its procedure and the due administration of justice."

(To convict in a case of criminal contempt, the trial court must be convinced of the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt, but when there is evidence tending to show guilt the finding of facts by the trial court cannot be reviewed by the United States circuit court of appeals. Schwartz v. United States (1914) 133 C. C. A. 576, 217 Fed. 866; Oates v. United States (1916) — C. C. A. —, 233 Fed. 201.)

In quashing an information for criminal contempt the court said: "The proceeding is to be strictly construed in favor of the personal liberty of the defendant. As it is to vindicate the dignity of the court in compelling respect for its mandate, a judge may best demonstrate his title to respect by according to the accused the benefit of any reasonable doubt in his own mind as to the obligatory force of his command, and whether or not its disobedience was wilful." United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1905) 142 Fed. 176.

Where in the case of alleged contemptuous behavior in the presence of the court by an attorney, the court, instead of proceeding summarily to punish him, had a trial and took evidence, it was held on appeal that the proceeding was criminal in its nature, and that as the evidence failed to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty of a wilful purpose to obstruct the proceedings of the court or to insult or humiliate the judge, etc., the conviction must be reversed. Connell v. State (1907) 80 Neb. 296, 114 N. W. 294.

There are a number of cases holding that the guilt of the person accused of the contempt must be established beyond a reasonable doubt, which apparently state this to be the rule as to contempts generally. Accumulator Co. v. Consolidated Electric Storage Co. (1892) 53 Fed. 793 (attachment denied in alleged violation of injunction against infringement of patent, as proceeding is criminal in its nature and character); United States v. Jose (1894) 63 Fed. 951 (taking away property in possession of a receiver); Sabin v. Fogarty (1895) 70 Fed. 482 (taking property out of the hands of the deputy marshal of the court); Re Cashman (1909) 168 Fed. 1008 (failure to answer questions,—stating that, proceedings for contempt being criminal in their nature, contempt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, but that the admission of the accused would prove it); Hollister v. People (1904) 116 Ill. App. 338 (failure to obey a subpoena issued by a master in a civil case,—stating that imposition of a fine or sentencing a person for contempt is the rendering of judgment in a criminal case); Richardson v. Thompson (1899) 59 Neb. 299, 80 N. W. 909 (violation of order restraining interference with right of challenge at registration, as proceedings in contempt are in their nature criminal); Oscar Barnett Foundry Co. v. Crowe (1909) 80 N. J. Eq. 109, 74 Atl. 964 (disobedience of an injunction, as a contempt proceeding in quasi criminal); Burdick v. Marshall (1896) 8 S. D. 308, 66 N. W. 462 (as proceedings for contempt are essentially criminal in their character); State v. Fredlock (1902) 52 W. Va. 232, 94 Am. St. Rep. 932, 43 S. E. 153 (violation of injunction,—holding the evidence sufficient under the rule that contempt is in the nature of a criminal offense, that its punishment is criminal in its character, and that the evidence must establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt).

A contempt of court being considered a criminal offense, the guilt of the respondent must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Cunningham (1890) 33 W. Va. 607, 11 S. E. 76, contempt by commissioners of a county court in refusing to obey a mandamus ordering them to settle and sign a bill of exceptions in an election case, where the court said: "This being a criminal case, the respondent is entitled both to the presumption of innocence, and that of conformity to official duty (see Alderson v. Kanawha County (1889) 32 W. Va. 648, 5 L.R.A. 334, 25 Am. St. Rep. 840, 9 S. E. 868), and if the relator traverse the return, he must prove the delinquency of the respondent beyond all reasonable doubt."

In Bullock Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. (1904) 63 C. C. A. 607, 129 Fed. 105, in holding there had been no disobedience of an order forbidding infringement of a patent, the court said: "It is immaterial to consider the distinction sometimes noticed between criminal and civil contempts, inasmuch as both kinds involve the vindication of the authority of the court, whether the remedy incidentally inure to the benefit of a party or not. . . . The proceeding to punish for a contempt is in its nature a criminal proceeding, whether the result be partially remediable or not; and the same rules prevail which govern in the trial of indictments, the defendant being entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt."

There are also other cases where it does not appear whether the court considered the contempt civil or criminal, where evidence beyond a reasonable doubt has been required; for example:

Where there is a reasonable doubt whether a published article has a reasonable tendency to prevent a fair and impartial trial of the case, the doubt must be resolved in favor of the person accused of contempt. State ex rel. Dorrian v. Hazeltine (1914) 82 Wash. 81, 143 Pac. 436.

In order to punish an assignee for wilfully disobeying an order to produce books, the proof must show beyond a reasonable doubt that he had wilfully refused to do what the court directed. Re Wegman (1899) 40 App. Div. 632, 57 N. Y. Supp. 987 (denied that he ever had them); Watertown Paper Co. v. Place (1900) 51 App. Div. 633, 64 N. Y. Supp. 673 (stated they were lost).

In Potter v. Low (1858) 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 549, it was held that one would not be required to show cause, etc., under an order restraining him from transferring, etc., his unexempt property, when it did not appear beyond a reasonable doubt that he had disobeyed the order, and as the order only applied to property owned when it was made, and it was not shown that the money he had paid was not earned thereafter, the motion was denied.

In Saal v. South Brooklyn R. Co. (1907) 122 App. Div. 364, 106 N. Y. Supp. 996, it was held that the proof must show beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants had wilfully refused to do what the court directed in enjoining them, where there was no prohibition of any express acts.

In a proceeding to punish respondent for contempt for executing a false and fraudulent bond in discharge of a mechanics' lien, as the proceeding deprived him of a trial by jury, the fact of his insolvency should be made to appear beyond a reasonable doubt and also that he had been guilty of perjury. Johnson v. Austin (1902) 76 App. Div. 312, 78 N. Y. Supp. 501, which, however, would appear to be a civil contempt under the Code definition.

It may be noted that, in proceedings against bankrupts for contempt in failing to turn over money or property, the courts do not usually characterize the contempt as civil or criminal. It is generally held in these cases that it must be shown beyond a reasonable doubt that the money or property is within the bankrupt's control.

Re Anderson (1900) 103 Fed. 854; Re Meyer (1900) 98 Fed. 839; Re Goldfarb Bros. (1904) 181 Fed. 643; Re Switzer (1905) 140 Fed. 976; Re Mize (1909) 172 Fed. 945; Re McCormick (1899) 97 Fed. 566 (as the punishment may involve imprisonment). See also Re Walder (1906) 142 Fed. 784. See also as recognizing the rule Re Schlesinger (1899) 97 Fed. 930, affirmed in (1900) 102 Fed. 117; Re De Gottardi (1902) 114 Fed. 328; Ripon Knitting Works v. Schreiber (1900) 101 Fed. 810; also Moody v. Cole (1906) 148 Fed. 295 (holding the proceeding criminal in its character, but the evidence inducing belief beyond a reasonable doubt). See also the note to Re Cole 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 256, on failure or refusal of a bankrupt, or person having money or property belonging to a bankrupt, to deliver it to a trustee, as a contempt of court.

"The court, in making an order to commit a bankrupt to jail as for contempt for failure to account for goods and money, should be governed by the same considerations which would influence a jury in a criminal prosecution, giving to the bankrupt the benefit of any reasonable doubt." Re Switzer (1905) 140 Fed. 976.

As finding that the bankrupt had the property in his possession, that a jury would have so found, while affirming the rule that the facts must be established upon proof beyond a reasonable doubt or which must be clear and convincing in the case of a bankrupt failing to turn over property as ordered, see Re Levy (1905) 73 C. C. A. 558, 142 Fed. 442.

(A bankrupt cannot be committed for failure to pay over money as part of the bankrupt estate, unless he is given notice of a claim that will be made that the money in question is a part of the bankrupt's estate; and an order that it is part of it, made without such notice and ordering him to show cause why he should not pay over, cannot cure the initial defect, his commitment of contempt on such an order is a nullity. Re Rosser (1900) 41 C. C. A. 497, 101 Fed. 562.)

Contra.

The rule as to reasonable doubt is not entirely unanimous.

In State v. Harris (1905) 14 N. D. 501, 105 N. W. 621, a case of contempt for violation of an injunction, where the court does not state whether the contempt was civil or criminal, the court, in holding that the guilt need not be shown beyond a reasonable doubt, said: "It is contended that in such cases the accused must be shown to be guilty of the contempt beyond a reasonable doubt. The proceedings being criminal in their character, some cases uphold that contention. The weight of authority, however, does not support that rule. The statute lays down no rule as to the degree of proof. It simply says that the court shall determine whether the accused has committed the offense. In contempt cases the rule generally followed is that the offense must be clearly shown to have been committed."

In this connection reference may be made to Re Fellerman (1906) 149 Fed. 244, holding that to commit for contempt a bankrupt refusing to surrender his books of account and falsely swearing, it is not necessary to prove with the strictness of criminal practice the false swearing. It is enough if the witness's conduct tends to bring the authority of the law and of the court into disrespect or disregard. But in this case the false swearing, or some of it, was shown by contradictory statements by the bankrupt.

In a New York case of criminal contempt a distinction is made between the proof of the duty and the proof of the disobedience of it, holding that the former is to be shown beyond doubt, but not the latter. In Re McCormick (1909) 117 N. Y. Supp. 70, briefly reported also in 132 App. Div. 921, affirmed in (1909) 196 N. Y. 571, 90 N. E. 1161, where an order convicting of a criminal contempt under § 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure and confirming a referee's report was affirmed, and where the referee holds that the guilt need not be shown beyond a reasonable doubt, he says: "While the inquiry relates to acts styled criminal, the proceeding is not a criminal action. It is a civil special proceeding . . . and the question of guilt or innocence—the issue to be determined—must be resolved in accordance with the rules of proof applicable to civil cases. In contempt proceedings, the party proceeded against is entitled to the benefit of any doubt which may exist by reason of the form of the statute under which punishment is invoked, or in the form of the order which it is claimed he has disobeyed, so far as a doubt is thus cast upon the fact of the prohibition of an act which is claimed to have been committed. L.R.A.1917B.

. . . But upon the question of the degree of proof to be looked for to support the fact of the commission of an act in such a proceeding as this, where the inhibition is clear, the court is to treat the case in its aspect of a civil, as distinguished from a criminal, proceeding. It is the character of the proceeding itself which controls upon this question; and, while the fact to be proved may involve the finding of the commission of a crime, that fact, in a civil case such as this, is to be determined upon the preponderance of the evidence, giving proper regard to the existence of the presumption of innocence when determining the weight of the evidence; but the fact of guilt need not be found beyond a reasonable doubt. New York Ferry Co. v. Moore (1886) 102 N. Y. 667, 6 N. E. 293." The Ferry Case had nothing to do with contempt, but the court there observed (6 N. E. 297) that "there is no rule of law which requires the plaintiff in a civil action, when a judgment against the defendant may establish his guilt of a crime, to prove his case with the same certainty which is required in criminal prosecutions. Nothing more is required in such cases than a just preponderance of evidence, always giving the defendant the benefit of the presumption of innocence. Where a judgment for the plaintiff involves crime or moral turpitude on the part of the defendant, the court should always require satisfactory proof, and, when that has been given, judgment should follow regardless of consequence."

There seems to be no authority in contempt cases for the distinction made in the McCormick Case between the proof of the duty and the proof of its violation. Of the cases heretofore cited requiring proof beyond reasonable doubt to be necessary, the only ones where the doubt was confined to the duty were: Hollister v. People (1904) 116 Ill. App. 338 (conflict as to tender of witness fees); Richardson v. Thompson (1899) 59 Neb. 299, 80 N. W. 909 (failure of proof of knowledge of order); Kidd v. Virginia Safe Deposit & Trust Corp. (1912) 113 Va. 612, 75 S. E. 145 (failure of proof of knowledge of order which indeed did not order the respondent); Oscar Barnett Foundry Co. v. Crowe (1909) 80 N. J. Eq. 109, 74 Atl. 964 (doubt whether act done was forbidden); Saal v. South Brooklyn R. Co. (1907) 122 App. Div. 364, 106 N. Y. Supp. 996 (no prohibition of any express acts); and also it seems United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1905) 142 Fed. 176.

"Clear" proof.

In some cases it is stated that the proof must be "clear," etc.

Thus, where the accused was held not guilty of violating an injunction, the court said: "A contempt of the character here charged is in the nature of a criminal offense, and the proceeding for its punishment is in the nature of a criminal proceeding. No punishment should be inflicted unless the facts constituting the contempt have been clearly and satisfactorily established." Woodruff v. North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. (1891) 45 Fed. 129.

In Weeks v. Smith (1856) 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 211, the court in denying an application for an attachment for an alleged criminal contempt, asserting disobedience of an order, said: "This proceeding being criminal in its nature, the acts constituting the alleged contempt must not only be clearly proved, but they must be a positive violation of the plain terms of the process or order of the court. The act for the commission of which punishment is invoked must be one which the court has expressly forbidden. The disobedience complained of must be 'wilful.' If the order be ambiguous or doubtful, or fairly capable of a construction which will consist with the person's innocence of any intentional disrespect to the court, I think the court should not interfere to punish for a contempt."

In this connection reference may be made to the following cases not stated to be civil or criminal contempts, where the court stated that the evidence must be clear etc.: Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Chrolithion Collar & Cuff Co. (1885) 23 Blatchf. 205, 24 Fed. 585 (holding that a violation of an injunction ought to be shown by clear proof, the proceeding being in its nature somewhat criminal); State ex rel. Chrisman v. Small (1907) 49 Or. 595, 90 Pac. 1110 (injunction, proof of guilt should be "clear and conclusive"); Wells v. District Ct. (1905) 126 Iowa, 340, 102 N. W. 106 (where, in annulling a judgment for contempt by a party to the action as attempting to influence a juror, the court said: "Contempt proceedings are in their nature criminal, and, before a conviction is had, the proof of guilt should be clear and satisfactory"); Sawyer v. Hutchinson (1910) 149 Iowa, 93, 127 N. W. 1089 (where the court declined to interfere with the decision of the court below refusing to convict of contempt in a sharp conflict of testimony, on the question of L.R.A.1917B.

the violation of an injunction restraining the respondent from the sale of intoxicating liquors contrary to law, and said: "A contempt proceeding, being quasi criminal in nature, calls for a greater weight of evidence than an ordinary civil case; and the rule generally prevailing in other states is that a clear case should be made out before an accused will be punished for violating an injunctive decree. . . . And such appears to be the rule with us"); Keenhold v. Dudley (1915) — Iowa, —, 151 N. W. 1076 (where, in holding that they would not interfere with the decision of the trial court finding the evidence sufficient to show contempt in attempting improperly to influence a juror, the court said: "While, under the rules governing such cases, the contempt or guilt of the defendants should be clearly established, we are not disposed to interfere too much with the trial judges in attempting to keep sources of justice pure, and in seeing to it that trials before them are conducted in an orderly and proper manner.")

VI. Various questions of evidence.

Deposition taken in another court.

The deposition of a witness in another court given in obedience to a subpoena cannot be used against him in a proceeding for criminal contempt, under a statute providing that "no pleading of a party, nor any discovery or evidence obtained from a party or witness by means of a judicial proceeding in this or any foreign country, shall be given in evidence, or in any manner used against him or his property or estate in any court of the United States in any criminal proceeding, or for the enforcement of any penalty or forfeiture." Hammond Lumber Co. v. Sailors' Union (1909) 167 Fed. 809.

Judicial notice.

For right to take judicial notice of decree in proceeding to punish violation of same as contempt, see the note to Haaren v. Mould, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 404.

The court will take judicial notice of proceedings in its record, where it is claimed a decree has been violated. Ferguson v. Wheeler (1904) 126 Iowa, 111, 101 N. W. 138, not stating whether the contempt was civil or criminal.

In contempt for a publication upon pending proceedings, the court has judicial knowledge that the particular proceeding is pending. State v. Bee Pub. Co. (1900) 60 Neb. 238, 50 L.R.A. 195, 83 Am. St. Rep. 531, 83 N. W. 204.

In Burke v. Territory (1894) 2 Okla. 499, 37 Pac. 829, a proceeding for contempt for a publication regarding a pending matter in court where the publication was admitted, it was held that the court could take judicial notice of its proceedings, and as all the matters of fact which the court found were matters that were either admitted by the defendant's answer or of which the court could take judicial knowledge, that therefore the allegation by the accused that he was entitled to have the evidence against him produced and an opportunity to refute it must fail.

On the other hand, in State v. Broome (1897) 61 N. J. L. 115, 38 Atl. 841, in a proceeding to punish for contempt in disobeying the stay implied in a writ of certiorari which brought up for review a city ordinance, the court held that as the proofs submitted contained neither the ordinance nor the writ, the rule to show cause must be discharged, as this was not a proceeding for private relief, saying: "When the purpose is, as in the present case, merely to punish a party for an alleged disregard of the authority of the court, the proceeding is quasi criminal, and entirely distinct from the suit out of which it sprang."

The court cannot take judicial notice that its clerk, accused of contempt in disobeying an order requiring him not to destroy ballots, knew and understood the contents of the order, although the same judge claimed that he explained it to the clerk when it was made. Dines v. People (1891) 39 Ill. App. 565.

In Myers v. State (1889) 46 Ohio St. 473, 15 Am. St. Rep. 638, 22 N. E. 43, it was held that the court erred in assuming to take judicial notice of the facts forming the ground of a previous proceeding for contempt, and of the respondent's being adjudged guilty; and that this was none the less so although both proceedings may have been before the same judge. The court stated that, if the facts were competent, they were the subject of evidence.

Other acts of contempt.

In Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Rogers (1871) 38 Conn. 121, a question of contempt for disobedience of an injunction, the court said: "Another question submitted relates to the admissibility in evidence of other acts of contempt than those charged. Evidence of this kind is in general inadmissible. If, however, the party accused seeks to mitigate his offense, by showing that he acted under innocent mistake, or by inadvertence, then evidence might be proper to show the purpose and spirit of the party in doing the acts specifically charged."

In Re Fite (1912) 11 Ga. App. 665, 76 S. E. 397, it was held that "on a trial for contempt in writing and publishing a newspaper article, a subsequent article written and published by the respondent, relating to the same subject matter, and which in substance repeats the offense for which he is on trial, is admissible in evidence, as illustrative of the question of intent."

Accomplice.

Under the California statute a conviction for contempt will not lie on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. Re Buckley (1886) 69 Cal. 1. See also Re Taylor (1886) 2 Cal. Unrep. 648, 10 Pac. 88.

In French v. Com. (1906) 30 Ky. L. Rep. 98, 97 S. W. 427, it was held that, a criminal contempt being a misdemeanor, all accomplices were principals, and consequently it could not be claimed that the jury should be instructed that there could be no conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice (this being a case necessary for a trial by jury, as the punishment was greater than allowed by the statute without a jury), but the court held that the guilt was fully shown without the testimony of the alleged accomplice.

Knowledge of order.

In declining to commit the respondent for criminal contempt as disobeying an injunction, the court said in Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Minnesota Moline Plow Co. (1903) 124 Fed. 736: "It is true in a civil case parties to a suit are held to the obligation of taking notice of all orders and judgments in the case, and their civil liabilities will rest upon their duty of taking such notice; but I do not think they can be convicted criminally upon any presumption of that kind. It must be shown, in order to convict them, that they had actual knowledge, and that there was an intentional violation of the order for an injunction."

For necessity and sufficiency of notice of injunction to render one not a party guilty of contempt in disobeying it, see the note to Garrigan v. United States, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1295.

Confining evidence to charge.

Where the statute makes the filing of an affidavit charging the commission of a constructive contempt a prerequisite to the institution of proceedings, testimony offered by the state or by a relator must be confined to and correspond with the sworn statement, and the examination in a case of disobedience of an order must be confined to show a violation of the order of the court in the manner stated; and it is error in criminal contempt to show a violation in a manner different from that stated in the affidavit. State v. Sieber (1907) 49 Or. 1, 88 Pac. 313, the court stating that in such a case the affidavit might be amended by a re-verification, which, however, was not done.

A proceeding for contempt against a person not a party to an action for the disobedience of an injunction granted therein is a criminal proceeding, and the accused is entitled to be informed of "the nature and cause of the accusation" against him, and to be tried on the charge as made, and on no other charge. Re Reese (1901) 47 C. C. A. 87, 107 Fed. 942, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 253, where the theory of the charge was that the accused disobeyed an order against him, and the theory of the conviction was that, while the order was not against him, he obstructed justice by not obeying it.

"Contempt being a criminal proceeding, and the party being entitled to know with what he is charged, it will not be presumed that he was held guilty of some act not specifically alleged in the affidavit or fairly covered thereby. The offense being criminal in its nature, both the charge and the finding and judgment of the court thereon are to be strictly construed in favor of the accused." Schwarz v. Superior Ct. (1896) 111 Cal. 106, 43 Pac. 580.

But in State v. McCarley (1906) 74 Kan. 874, 87 Pac. 743, where the contempt was for violation of an injunction, and is not characterized as civil or criminal, it was held that there was no error in holding the respondent guilty of acts other than those charged in the affidavit on which the attachment was granted, and which were charged in subsequent affidavits. The court said: "The hearing was continued for several weeks, so that appellant was informed of the nature of the charge. If he had been compelled to go to trial at once upon the offense charged in the accusation, he might, with some reason, complain that it was not the same violation which the prosecutor had in mind when the warrant issued, and against which he was expected to defend. Appellant was entitled to know the nature of the charge against him and to have an opportunity to make his defense. His rights were fully protected in these respects. He was given a fair trial. The evidence clearly established that he was guilty of repeated violations of the injunction."

Rescue.

In State v. Ackerson (1855) 25 N. J. L. 209, where the defendant was arrested by the sheriff and rescued the court said: "A rescue is deemed an offense of such a nature that, whenever the sheriff makes return of anyone having been guilty of it, the court will grant an attachment against such person, in the first instance (1 Sellon, Pr. 134), and will proceed to punish him, without going through the ordinary course of his being examined on interrogatories, as no denial on such interrogatories will excuse him. (Rex v. Elkins (1767) 4 Burr. 2129, 98 Eng. Reprint, 110.) The return of the sheriff is of itself a conviction of the rescue. It is conclusive evidence of the fact, and if it be false the remedy is against the sheriff for a false return."

VII. Miscellaneous.

In Parks v. Johnson (1892) 86 Iowa, 475, 53 N. W. 285, where the contempt is not designated as civil or criminal, it was held proper to use in the contempt proceeding as admissions the statements of the respondent made as a witness in supplementary proceedings, although the statute provided that "all examinations and answers under this chapter shall be on oath, and no person shall, on such examination, be excused from answering any question on the ground that his examination will tend to convict him of a fraud, but his answers shall not be used as evidence against him in a prosecution for such fraud." The court said: "The argument is 'that the word "fraud" is synonymous with the phrase "criminal offense," for the reason that the phrase in this section, "convict him of a fraud," must mean conviction of a criminal offense, as the word "convict" is only applicable to some crime.' If it should be conceded that the word 'fraud' would have application to some criminal offense, it would not avail the plaintiff, because we cannot hold that the word was used for 'criminal offenses' generally. It is never so used. It would be an unnatural use of the word. The contempt proceeding in no manner involved the question of fraud, and nothing in the section rendered the testimony incompetent."

It is proper in criminal contempt to take evidence before an examiner. Merchants' Stock & Grain Co. v. Board of Trade (1912) 120 C. C. A. 582, 201 Fed. 20.

The following cases are of interest in connection with the general subject:

In a case where the proceeding for contempt is for acts committed out of the presence of the court, and the proceeding is not in furtherance of the remedy sought in a suit or in enforcement of the orders or decrees of the court, but to maintain the authority of the court and uphold the administration of justice, if the answer admits the material facts charged to be true and the facts constitute a contempt of court, punishment is imposed upon the answer. People v. Seymour (1916) 272 Ill. 295, 111 N. E. 1008.

Refusal to permit a man charged with contempt by publications respecting evidence in a judicial trial, to show in defense that the publications were true, and for this purpose to disprove the accuracy of the reporter's notes which have been offered against him, is such a deprivation of the constitutional right to make a defense as to be a denial of due process of law. McClatchy v. Superior Ct. (1897) 119 Cal. 413, 39 L.R.A. 691, 51 Pac. 696.

In Ex parte Nelson (1913) 251 Mo. 63, 157 S. W. 794, contempt for publication of a certain article, the answer of the respondent was filed the day before the time set for the hearing, and the judge, with the answer before him, the night before the hearing, then wrote his opinion and stated that he did this because he knew that no testimony could be offered in the remotest way tending to prove the truth of the article, etc. It was held that the respondent must be discharged, and the conviction annulled, as he was convicted without due process of law, that is to say, that he was tried and found guilty in his absence without an opportunity to introduce any evidence or otherwise to be heard therein; the appellate court considering that the trial was held in the night when the judge wrote the opinion.

In Re Dingley (1914) 182 Mich. 44, 148 N. W. 218, where the respondent was convicted of contempt in making a certain publication, and was not given time to show the truth of it, the appellate court dismissed the proceeding on the ground that the respondent had not been given his proper day in court.

Where in a proceeding to punish for contempt for a certain publication, attachment was issued without any preliminary proofs or affidavits, no affidavit or proof was given by the respondent, and no proof given against him, the conviction was set aside. Re Holt (1893) 55 N. J. L. 384, 27 Atl. 909. B. B. B.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FIFTH CIRCUIT.

PARLIN & ORENDORFF IMPLEMENT COMPANY et al.

v.

R. L. MOULDEN, Trustee of A. B. Andrews, Bankrupt.

(142 C. C. A. 517, 228 Fed. 111.)

Lien — promise to pay out of specified fund.

A promise by an insolvent to pay specified creditors out of the proceeds of insurance on property which has been destroyed by fire gives them a lien on such proceeds which they may follow into property in which he has attempted to invest them as a homestead.

For other cases, see Liens, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 1, 1915.)

Note. — PARLIN & O. IMPLEMENT Co. v. MOULDEN seems to be a case of first impression as to right to follow into a homestead a fund which has been specifically promised to be devoted to payment of debts, L.R.A.1917B.

PETITION by creditors of A. B. Andrews, bankrupt, to review an order of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas (Russell, District Judge), affirming an order of the referee allowing an exemption of homestead to him. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Pardee and Walker, Circuit Judges, and Speer, District Judge.

Messrs. Francis Marion Etheridge, Joseph Manson McCormick, and Henri Louis Bromberg, for petitioners:

While the mere use of nonexempt property in the acquisition of a residence will not prevent the homestead character from attaching thereto when occupied by the head of a family, yet the use of only such funds therefor, after a promise to creditors to use them in the payment of debts, on which promise the creditors have relied and refrained from using legal means for the collection of their debts, constitutes actual fraud, and will prevent the exempt character of the property from attaching to it.

though the theory of an equitable lien by which the right was sustained in that case has received many other specific applications, as is shown in the foregoing opinion.

Re Wright, 3 Biss. 359, Fed. Cas. No. 18,067; Re Lammer, 7 Biss. 269, Fed. Cas. No. 8,031; Pratt v. Burr, 5 Biss. 36, Fed. Cas. No. 11,372; Re Sauthoff, 8 Biss. 35, Fed. Cas. No. 12,380; Re Boothroyd, Fed. Cas. No. 1,652; Re Wood, 147 Fed. 877; Ro Letson, 84 C. C. A. 582, 157 Fed. 78; North v. Shearn, 15 Tex. 175; Re Gerber, 26 Am. Bankr. Rep. 608; McGahan v. Anderson, 51 C. C. A. 92, 113 Fed. 115.

Respondent, after promising to make settlement with his creditors, became the trustee of an express trust of which he was the grantor, the insurance policies and their proceeds the subject matter, and the creditors the beneficiaries, and he could not, of his volition, terminate the trust, nor, with this trust fund, acquire homestead or other exempt property.

Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How. 333, 11 L. ed. 622; Thompson v. Caruthers, 92 Tex. 530, 50 S. W. 331; Howison v. Baird, 145 Ala. 683, 40 So. 94; 39 Cyc. 66-248.

Homestead rights cannot be acquired in property purchased with trust funds.

Farmer v. Simpson, 6 Tex. 303; Gage v. Neblett, 57 Tex. 378; Jones v. Male, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 181, 62 S. W. 827; Johnston v. Arrendale, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 504, 71 S. W. 45; Parriss v. Hughes, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 155, 109 S. W. 1140; Wallis v. Wendler, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 235, 65 S. W. 43; Wright v. Straub, 64 Tex. 66; Arnold v. Chamberlain, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 634, 39 S. W. 201; West End Town Co. v. Grigg, 93 Tex. 457, 56 S. W. 49, 747.

When once a homestead has been acquired free of liens, no lien can be placed on it without the consent of the wife, nor then except for specific purposes; and, as a corollary thereto, acts of the husband not participated in by the wife are inefficient to place a lien on the homestead by estoppel.

Cahill v. Dickson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 77 S. W. 289; Shepherd v. White, 11 Tex. 354, 16 Tex. 172; Moores v. Wills, 69 Tex. 109, 5 S. W. 675; Portwood v. Newberry, 79 Tex. 337, 15 S. W. 270; Wynne v. Hudson, 66 Tex. 1, 17 S. W. 110; House v. Phelan, 83 Tex. 595, 19 S. W. 140.

Messrs. R. R. Neyland, R. O. Merritt, and N. E. Peak for respondent.

Walker, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

On May 6, 1913, prior to the institution of the bankruptcy proceedings, the bankrupt's stock of merchandise was destroyed by fire. It was insured to the amount of $5,000, but the bankrupt then owed more than this amount. He had previously assigned the policies to a bank to secure his indebtedness to it of about $1,560. Immediately after the fire the bankrupt communicated with his principal creditors by telephone and by letter, made mention of the fire and of the insurance he held, and stated that as soon as he got the insurance money he would pay his creditors as far as it would go. In a short time he collected $4,950.10 on the policies, and used the part of that amount remaining after the payment of the debt to the bank in the purchase of a homestead. The referee stated his conclusions as follows: "The evidence discloses that immediately after the fire the bankrupt by phone and by letter notified his creditors thereof and caused them to believe that as soon as he collected his fire insurance he would settle with them in full or in part, at least. The creditors rested upon this belief and took no steps to fix a lien by process of law upon the debtor's assets. The bankrupt testified at this time it was his intention to apply his insurance upon his debts, and there is nothing in evidence to contradict this, except his failure to carry it out; but that later he and his wife decided to invest a larger part of the money as a homestead."

It was adjudged by the court that the real estate so purchased by the bankrupt was his homestead, that it was not a part of the bankrupt estate, and that it could not be subjected to the payment of his debts.

The bankrupt's communications with his creditors after the fire had reference to specific personal property of which he was the owner, and clearly manifested his agreement to charge that specific property with the payment of his debts. As matters stood when these statements were made, it was open to the creditors by attachment or garnishment proceedings to subject the policies of insurance, or the amounts payable on them, to liens in their favor. The debtor's voluntary undertaking to dedicate to the payment of his debts the collections to be made on those choses in action was calculated to induce his creditors to forego legal proceedings looking to the same end. What he did stands upon a different footing from a mere promise by him to pay his debts, unaccompanied by a reference to specified property and a manifestation of an intent to charge it. Under familiar principles, a court of equity gives to an agreement that certain property shall be appropriated to the payment of an indebtedness the effect of creating a charge upon that property: "The doctrine may be stated in its most general form, that every express executory agreement in writing, whereby the contracting party sufficiently indicates an intention to make some particular property, real or personal, or fund, therein described or identified, a security for a debt or other obligation, or whereby the party promises to convey or assign or transfer the property as security, creates an equitable lien upon the property so indicated, which is enforceable against the property in the hands, not only of the original contractor, but of his heirs, administrators, executors, voluntary assignees, and purchasers or encumbrancers with notice. Under like circumstances a merely verbal agreement may create a similar lien upon personal property. The ultimate grounds and motives of this doctrine are explained in the preceding section; but the doctrine itself is clearly an application of the maxim, 'Equity regards as done that which ought to be done.' In order, however, that a lien may arise in pursuance of this doctrine, the agreement must deal with some particular property, either by identifying it, or by so describing it that it can be identified, and must indicate with sufficient clearness an intent that the property so described, or rendered capable of identification, is to be held, given, or transferred as security for the obligation." 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. § 1235.

The above statement was quoted with approval in the opinion rendered in the case of Walker v. Brown, 165 U. S. 654, 664, 41 L. ed. 865, 870, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 453, and the doctrine announced was there so applied as to lead to the holding that certain bonds were subjected to a charge for the payment of debts owing by a third party as a consequence of a statement made with reference to them by their owner in a letter to the creditor which did not more clearly indicate that they were to stand as security for such debts than the above referred-to statements of the bankrupt indicated that the collection on his insurance policies were to be applied to the payment of his debts. The same doctrine was applied in the case of Fourth Street Nat. Bank v. Yardley, 165 U. S. 634, 41 L. ed. 855, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 439, with the result that it was there held that the circumstances of the giving of a check by one bank to another were such that the transaction had the effect of creating an equitable assignment of or lien upon the deposit against which the check was drawn, and was not governed by the general rule that a check, drawn in the ordinary form, does not, as between the maker and the payee, constitute an equitable assignment pro tanto of an indebtedness owing by the bank upon which the check has been drawn. In the course of the opinion rendered in that case it was said: "Whilst an equitable assignment or lien will not arise against a deposit account solely by reason of a check drawn against the same, yet the authorities establish that if, in the transaction connected with the delivery of the check, it was the understanding and agreement of the parties that an advance about to be made should be a charge on and be satisfied out of a specified fund, a court of equity will lend its aid to carry such agreement into effect as against the drawer of the check, mere volunteers, and parties charged with notice." Fourth Street Nat. Bank v. Yardley, supra, 165 U. S. page 644.

The frequency of the application in the Federal courts of the doctrine in question is indicated by the citations which accompany the above-quoted and the two succeeding sections of Mr. Pomeroy's text. In the section of that work (§ 1234) which is referred to in the above quotation as containing a statement of the ultimate grounds and motives of the doctrine it is said: "In a large class of executory contracts, express and implied, which the law regards as creating no property right, nor interest analogous to property, but only a mere personal right and obligation, equity recognizes, in addition to the personal obligation, a peculiar right over the thing concerning which the contract deals, which it calls a 'lien,' and which, though not property, is analogous to property, and by means of which the plaintiff is enabled to follow the identical thing, and to enforce the defendant's obligation by a remedy which operates directly upon that thing. The theory of equitable liens has its ultimate foundation, therefore, in contracts, express or implied, which either deal with or in some manner relate to specific property, such as a tract of land, particular chattels or securities, a certain fund, and the like."

That the bankrupt's agreement with his creditors as to the application of the amounts to be collected on his insurance policies was such a contract as is described in that statement seems plain. What he did amounted to an unequivocal dedication of the proceeds of the policies, so far as they were subject to his control, to the payment of his debts. This had the effect of conferring upon the creditors with whom he communicated a right over the thing concerning which the contract dealt, and of enabling them, in a court which applies equitable doctrines, to follow the identical thing, and to enforce the bankrupt's obligation by a remedy which operates directly upon that thing. In other words, those creditors were entitled to have the proceeds of the insurance policies applied as the bankrupt agreed that they should be applied,—to treat that as having been done which had been agreed to be done. This right existed against those proceeds when they were by the bankrupt, in violation of his agreement, invested in real estate. See Goodnough Mercantile & Stock Co. v. Gallo-way (D. C.) 171 Fed. 940; Wilder v. Watts (D. C.) 138 Fed. 426. The homestead rights acquired by the bankrupt and his wife in that property were subordinate to the rights of the creditors in the fund made use of in making that investment. The assertion of the homestead rights cannot be allowed to defeat the prior and superior rights of the creditors to follow the fund into the property in which it was so improperly invested. and to subject that property to the charge to which the money used in the purchase was subject when the purchase was made.

It follows that the prayer of the petition to superintend and revise should be granted, and the ruling presented for review reversed; and it is so ordered.

Petition for rehearing denied January 4, 1916.

Petition for a writ of certiorari denied by the Supreme Court of the United States, April 24, 1916 (241 U. S. 669, 60 L. ed. 1230, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 553).

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

FRANK MELVILLE, Appt.,

v.

MINNIE ROLLWAGE.

(171 Ky. 607, 188 S. W. 638.)

Automobile — signal of traffic officer — duty as to care.

1. The signal of a traffic officer to an automobilist to cross a street intersection does not absolve him from the duty of sounding a warning, slowing his speed, or otherwise exercising reasonable care for the safety of pedestrians on the opposite foot crossing.

For other cases, see Automobiles, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Highway — standing on crosswalk — negligence.

2. A pedestrian is not negligent per se in stopping at a point upon a crosswalk to await the passage of a street car, to which he had proceeded after satisfying himself that no automobile was in the immediate vicinity, without thereafter keeping a constant watch for the approach of such vehicles. For other cases, see Automobiles, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Damages — permanent injuries.

3. Damages for permanent injuries may be awarded to one having a rib torn loose and a floating kidney as a result of a negligent injury, where the attending physicians testify that the injuries are permanent.

For other cases, see Damages, III. i, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — excess — floating kidney.

4. $1,250 are not excessive to allow for permanent injuries consisting of a floating kidney and a rib torn from its fastening, which confine the plaintiff to his bed for several weeks, where the physicians' and hospital bills amounted to about $375.

For other cases, see Damages, III. i, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 20, 1916.)

Note. — For signal of traffic officer as affecting duty of travelers to exercise care, see annotation following this case, post, 137. L.R.A.1917B.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Branch, Second Division, of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County, in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligent operation of an automobile. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hubbard & Hubbard, for appellant:

Appellee, in attempting to cross Walnut street without looking to see what traffic was approaching, and by her total disregard of the traffic rules and signals of the traffic officer, was guilty of contributory negligence such as precludes her recovery.

Dolfinger v. Fishback, 12 Bush, 474; Gnau v. Ackerman, 166 Ky. 258, 179 S. W. 217; Johnson v. Westerfield, 143 Ky. 10, 135 S. W. 425; Peterson v. P. Ballatine & Sons, 205 N. Y. 29, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1147, 98 N. E. 202; McCormick v. Hesser, 77 N. J. L. 173, 71 Atl. 55; Davis v. John Breuner Co. 167 Cal. 683, 140 Pac. 586; Perez v. Sandrowitz, 180 N. Y. 397, 73 N. E. 228.

The trial court erred in refusing to give the instructions offered by defendant upon the question of the effect of plaintiff's violation of the city traffic ordinance.

Foley v. Northrup, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 277, 105 S. W. 229; Denver Omnibus & Cab Co. v. Mills, 21 Colo. App. 582, 122 Pac. 798; May v. Hahn, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 365, 54 S. W. 416; Robinson v. Simpson, 8 Houst. (Del.) 398, 32 Atl. 287; United States Brewing Co. v. Stoltenberg, 211 Ill. 531, 71 N. E. 1081, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 193.

Messrs. H. O. Williams and Edwards, Ogden, & Peak, for appellee:

The question of plaintiff's contributory negligence was properly submitted to the jury.

Williams v. Benson, 87 Kan. 421, 124 Pac. 531; T. B. Jones Co. v. Pelle, — Ky. —, 128 S. W. 305.

The instruction upon the question of the effect of plaintiff's violation of the city traffic ordinance properly submitted the law.

Netter v. Louisville R. Co. 134 Ky. 684, 121 S. W. 636; Gregory v. Slaughter, 124 Ky. 347, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1228, 124 Am. St. Rep. 402, 99 S. W. 247.

The instruction given on the measure of damages was fully authorized under the facts.

National Concrete Constr. Co. v. Duvall, 153 Ky. 394, 155 S. W. 757.

Messrs. Williams & Walker also for appellee.

Settle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

About 5 o'clock P. M., October 30, 1914, the appellee, Minnie Rollwage, was knocked down and injured at the crossing of Fourth and Walnut streets in the city of Louisville by an automobile owned and operated by the appellant, Frank Melville. Shortly thereafter she brought this action to recover of him damages for the injuries sustained from the collision in question, alleging in the petition that they were caused by appellant's negligent operation of the machine. The latter answered, traversing the averments of the petition and alleging contributory negligence on the part of appellee. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of appellee for $1,250. Appellant complains of the judgments, hence this appeal.

It appears from the evidence that appellee, a young lady twenty-five years of age, was going south on the west side of Fourth street, in company with her sister and another young lady, and that in crossing Walnut street the appellant, who was going west on Walnut street in his automobile, ran into the appellee, knocked her down, ran one wheel of the machine over her body, and knocked the two young ladies with her down as well. Fourth street runs North and South, and Walnut street east and west, the Seelbach hotel being the southwest corner, Selman's mercantile building on the northwest corner, the Stewart Dry Goods Company's building on the southeast corner, and the United Cigar store on the northeast corner. There are double lines of street car tracks on both Walnut and Fourth streets. Not only is every building in this vicinity devoted to business purposes, but the intersection of the streets at this point is notoriously the most congested and busiest intersection in Louisville. The city maintains at this intersection a policeman or traffic officer, who constantly stands on duty directly in the middle of the street. He uses a whistle, one sound of which indicates that vehicles and persons going east and west, or on Walnut street, shall have the right of way over vehicles and persons moving north and south, or on Fourth street. Two blasts of the whistle indicate that vehicles and persons moving north and south, on Fourth street, shall have the right of way. At the time of the collision in question appellee and her two companions were standing in the space between the two Walnut street car tracks, to which point they proceeded in the attempt to cross Walnut street, but the stop made by them was necessary because an east-bound Walnut street car was standing over the foot crossing immediately in front of them, discharging and taking on passengers. The traffic officer had just given the signal for the car to pass over Fourth street and on east, the conductor had rung the car bell for the car to start, and it was in the act of starting, when appellee and her companions were struck by the automobile, coming from the east and going at a speed of 10 or 12 miles an hour, without slowing up for the Fourth street intersection or giving any warning whatever. After being momentarily halted by the street car appellee's attention was directed to the car, although before she left the pavement in her rear she looked east on Walnut street without seeing appellant, whose automobile was then somewhere on the east or opposite side of Fourth street, and not in her view.

The foregoing facts were shown by the testimony of appellee, her two companions, and other witnesses. Among the latter was J. W. Raymond, the traffic officer, whose position between the point of the accident and the approaching automobile enabled him, better than all others to see what occurred.

His description of the accident was as follows:

Well, sir, about five or ten minutes after 5 that afternoon there was an East Walnut street car going east, and I blew one whistle; that signified for traffic to go east and west. Mr. Melville was coming down in his automobile, and this car was going east. The car had started to go up, and Mr. Melville came down with his automobile and these young ladies there were standing on the south side of the car by the street car.

The court: South side or north side of the street car?

The witness: On the north side. A. (continued): I hollered to him to stop; he never blew his whistle or anything, his horn or anything, and I hollered for him to stop. Just as he was about over here to that table from the women, he hollered, "Look out." As he hollered, "Look out!" he hit them and knocked all three of them down.

Q. With reference to the speed of his automobile, how was he traveling?

A. He was traveling, I judge it to be, 10 or 12 miles an hour.

Q. At that time, state, please, whether there were many or few people on that intersection.

A. There were quite a few people in the intersection; yes, sir.

Q. Up until the time he hollered "Look out!" had you heard any horn or warning given by the defendant?

A. None whatever. . . .

Q. What were these young ladies doing at that time, when he hollered, "Look out?"

A. They were waiting for this car to pass so they could cross the intersection.

John Walsburger, another police officer, was also near and witnessed the accident. His description of the occurrence was as follows:

Q. Did you notice whether they were walking or standing still, or what they were doing when the automobile approached them?

A. They had to stand still; the car was going east.

Q. The street car?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear a horn or any warning given of the approach of this automobile?

A. No, sir; I did not; only the hollering.

Q. How far was the automobile away from these young ladies when he hollered?

A. Well, about 5 foot.

Q. Can you tell the jury about how fast the automobile was running at that time?

A. It was going right between 10 and 12 miles an hour.

The appellant's theory of the accident was that appellee and her companion stepped out from the crowd of persons who were crossing the street, in front of his automobile, when it was only a few feet from them and too late for him to bring his car to a standstill and avoid the accident. He testified that he stopped his machine on the east side of Fourth street, and did not again start it until the traffic officer gave the signal, following which he proceeded across Fourth street down to the point of the accident, at a slow rate of speed; that he sounded the horn of his machine upon starting it after the signal to move from the officer was given, but did not again sound it after starting, although he saw, as he admits, as many as 10 or 12 people on the crossing where appellee was injured, between the car track and pavement. In his opinion, as he stated, there was no necessity for sounding his horn, as he was on the track over which westbound cars run and the congested condition of the crossing did not extend across the street car track. With reference to the speed of the automobile at the time of the accident, appellant testified that it was not more than 3 or 4 miles an hour, in which he was corroborated by R. O. Wellman, by whom he seems to have been arrested immediately after the accident. Wellman, on cross-examination, said he saw appellee and her companions standing in the street, awaiting the moving of the street car from the crossing, but that they did not step out suddenly in front of the automobile, as testified by appellant. Henry W. Newman, Jr., another witness for appellant, also expressed the opinion that, at the time of the accident, the speed of the automobile did not exceed 3 or 4 miles an hour.

Without further discussing the evidence in detail it is sufficient to say that it abundantly justified the submission of the case to the jury. That introduced for appellee, if believed by the jury, authorized the conclusion expressed by their verdict, viz., that her injuries were caused by appellant's negligent operation of his automobile, and that she was not guilty of such contributory negligence as ought to have prevented the recovery by her of damages for the injuries sustained by reason of appellant's negligence. The signal of the traffic officer, by reason of which appellant claims to have moved his automobile westwardly across Fourth street from the point where he had momentarily stopped it east of that street, did not relieve him of the duty of sounding the horn of his machine, slowing its speed, or otherwise exercising reasonable care for the safety of pedestrians on the opposite foot crossing, and as much of the evidence conduced to prove he failed to observe these duties after seeing a large crowd of pedestrians on the intersection, and by reason thereof appellee was struck by the machine and injured, such failure constituted actionable negligence. If, as testified by appellee, she looked before stepping from the pavement to ascertain whether vehicles were approaching from the east side of Fourth street, from which appellant's automobile came, and discovered none, she was not required thereafter to keep her eyes constantly turned in that direction, nor was it negligence or contributory negligence per se for her to stop in the street by the side of a standing street car to await its passage, in obedience to a signal from the traffic officer, given immediately before or as she stopped. In any event, the question whether appellee was guilty of contributory negligence, as well as that of appellant's negligence, should have been, and was properly, submitted to the decision of the jury by the trial court. Hence the peremptory instruction directing a verdict for appellant, asked by him at the conclusion of the evidence, was properly refused by the court.

In the very recent case of Weidner v. Otter, 171 Ky. 167, 188 S. W. 335, the following general principles are emphasized as applicable to an action of the character here involved: (1) It is the duty of the operator of an automobile at street crossings, as well as at other places used by pedestrians, to keep a lookout, to run his machine at a reasonable rate of speed, and to give warning of its approach. (2) It is the duty of a pedestrian, in crossing a street used by automobiles and other vehicles, to exercise such care as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise for his own safety in crossing a street at such a crossing, considering the amount and kind of vehicle traffic thereat. He is not obliged as a matter of law to look or listen for the approach of automobiles in order to keep out of their way, and whether he has exercised the proper degree of care is for a jury to say under all the facts and circumstances shown by the evidence in the case. (3) The pedestrian and the automobilist have equal rights in streets that are set apart for the use of vehicles as well as for the accommodation of pedestrians, and each has rights that the other is bound to respect.

It appears from the record that appellant was permitted to introduce and read in evidence on the trial the following sections of an ordinance of the city of Louisville:

"Section 55. Duties of pedestrians.—The roadbeds of highways and streets are primarily intended for vehicles, but pedestrians have the right to cross them in safety, and all drivers of vehicles shall exercise all proper care not to injure pedestrians, and pedestrians, before stepping from the sidewalk to the roadbed, should look to see what is approaching, and shall not needlessly interfere with the passage of vehicles. Pedestrians shall not cross diagonally the intersection of any highway, and in crossing shall be governed by directions of traffic officers."

"Section 59. Obedience to traffic officers, etc.—Drivers must at all times comply with any direction given by voice, hand or whistle of any officer of the police force as to stopping, starting, approaching or departing from any place, and also as to the manner of taking up or letting off passengers and the loading and unloading of vehicles."

It is insisted for appellant that there was in the matter of receiving her injuries L.R.A.1917B.

a violation by appellee of the provisions of one or both of the above sections, and that the trial court erred in refusing instructions Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, offered by appellant, by which the jury would have been advised of the effect to be given in this case to the alleged violation of the provisions of the traffic ordinance. This contention is unsound. As the sections of the ordinance, supra, are but declaratory of the common law, their provisions did not require of appellant or appellee any greater or different degree of care than that imposed by the law as uniformly applied by this court and clearly stated in the instructions that were given by the trial court; and, although neither section is named in the instructions, the requirements of each are embraced therein. In other words, the law as expressed by the instructions is not in conflict with any provision of the ordinance, and no provision of either section authorized the negligent operation of the automobile in the manner indulged in by appellant. For the foregoing reasons, and because of the misleading effect they would probably have had upon the jury, the rejection by the court of the instructions offered by appellant on the subject of the ordinances was proper.

In contending that in starting his automobile from the east side of Fourth street, as was done by him, appellant acted in obedience to a requirement of § 59 of the ordinance and a signal given by the traffic officer, his counsel ignore the negligence manifested by his subsequent conduct. He may have been authorized to move his automobile by a signal from the officer, but such signal did not require or authorize him to move it over the intervening street and the crossing being used by appellee without giving the necessary warning of its movements, or at such speed as to make its collision with her unavoidable. The street car by which appellee's progress was obstructed was also put in motion by the same signal that caused appellant to start his automobile, and appellee, upon stopping to await the passing of the car, was rightfully in possession of the crossing, and all the while in plain view of appellant as he approached in his automobile. Consequently her presence there when struck by the automobile, instead of constituting negligence per se, seems to have been imperatively necessary, because she could not have gone in front of the moving street car without endangering her life, nor would she have had time to return to the pavement from which she stepped upon the street, without coming into collision with appellant's automobile. In leaving the pavement and going upon the crossing she obeyed the requirements of § 55 of the ordinance, by looking to see what vehicles were approaching the crossing, at which time appellant's automobile was not in her view; and, after going upon the street, she could not have kept a constant lookout in either direction for the coming of vehicles, because she also had to look to where she walked after reaching the street, to avoid collision with other persons. It cannot therefore be said that her conduct in leaving the pavement and proceeding to the place of the accident as she did, under the circumstances, necessarily constituted negligence.

The only criticism of the instructions of the trial court found in the brief of the appellant's counsel is directed at the seventh and last one, which objection we will later consider. It is their contention, however, that none of the instructions should have been given, because, in their view of the case, there was such a showing of contributory negligence on the part of appellee as entitled appellant to a peremptory instruction, directing a verdict for him. Our consideration of the instructions convinces us that they correctly gave for the guidance of the jury all the law applicable to the issues of fact in the case. In addition to defining ordinary care and the measure of damages in the event of a recovery by appellee, the instructions advised the jury as to the reciprocal rights and duties of the appellant and appellee in their use of the streets, the measure of care required of each, what acts or omissions on the part of appellant in operating his automobile would constitute actionable negligence, entitling appellee to damages for the injuries, if any, thereby caused her, and what acts or omissions upon her part would constitute negligence or contributory negligence that would defeat a recovery. Our conclusion as to the correctness and sufficiency of the instructions was reached by application to the facts here presented of the tests furnished by the very latest decision of this court in the character of case here involved; viz., Weidner v. Otter, supra. Indeed, the instructions so nearly conform to the statement of the law as in the opinion of that case expressed as would induce the belief that, in writing them, the trial judge had before him the opinion itself, but for the fact that the record shows that the instructions were written many months before the opinion.

Appellant's objection to instruction No. 7, which gives the measure of damages, is that it permitted, in the event of a verdict for appellee, a recovery of damages for permanent injury. One of the injuries sustained by appellee from her collision with the automobile was a fracture of one of her ribs, which was broken loose. She also received various cuts and bruises about her body and limbs. The evidence shows that she was confined to her bed for two weeks, was then up and about for nearly two weeks, and again confined to her bed; that during the entire time she suffered much physical and mental pain. Upon being confined to her bed the second time it was discovered by the family physician, Dr. Sauter, who examined her, that she had a movable kidney. After an abortive attempt to hold the kidney in its proper position with adhesive straps, it was determined by the physician that an operation for the purpose of permanently securing the kidney in its proper position and relieving her sufferings was indispensably necessary. Thereupon a specialist, Dr. Schachner, was called in. According to his testimony he found appellee to be suffering a great deal of pain, to relieve which and prevent lockjaw an injection of antitetanic serum was necessary. The operation for securing the kidney was performed by Dr. Schachner. It further appears from the testimony of both Dr. Sauter and Dr. Schachner that the movable kidney resulted from her collision with appellant's automobile. The physicians expressed the opinion that her injuries were permanent. In view of the evidence we are of opinion that appellee was entitled to recover upon the ground that the injuries sustained by her were of a permanent nature; that is, such as will probably injuriously affect her health in the future. It was not, therefore, error for the court to embrace in instruction No 7 the recovery of damages for permanent injury.

We are unable to sustain appellant's final contention that the amount of damages awarded appellee by the verdict was excessive. It appears that it will take $75 of the amount recovered to pay the bill incurred by her while in the hospital, and that her doctor's bills amounted to about $300. There would therefore be left a little less than $900 to compensate her for the injuries sustained. We are unwilling to declare this amount unreasonable.

Judgment affirmed.

Annotation—Signal of traffic officer as affecting duty of travelers to exercise care.

Generally as to reciprocal duty of operator of automobile and pedestrian to use care, see annotation to Deputy v. L.R.A.1917B.

Kimmell, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 989, and earlier annotation there referred to.

As to duty of operator of automobile with respect to horses encountered on the highway, see annotation to Messer v. Bruening, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 945.

It will be noticed that the court in MELVILLE v. ROLLWAGE, ante, 133, decided that the signal of a traffic officer to an automobilist to cross a street intersection did not absolve him from the duty of exercising reasonable care for the safety of pedestrians on the opposite foot crossing. This conclusion is undoubtedly sound. There is little authority upon the effect of signals of traffic officers upon the duty of travelers to exercise care. It would appear that while signals by such officers do not absolve travelers from using ordinary care, yet that they may to some extent be relied upon, and that they may be taken into consideration with the other evidence in determining whether reasonable care was used under the particular circumstances. This position is borne out by cases disclosed upon the question under annotation.

In Dennison v. North Penn Iron Co. (1903) 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 219, which was an action by a pedestrian to recover for an injury received through being struck by a wagon loaded with iron trusses, it appeared that the driver, upon reaching an intersecting street down which he intended to turn westward, stopped at the signal of the traffic officer; when he was signaled by the officer to proceed, he drove slowly, the street being crowded, and went as far to the north side of the intersecting street as possible, and turned slowly, looking ahead at the traffic; the plaintiff was standing on the curbing and saw the iron extending beyond the wagon before it commenced to turn; she did not see the wagon make the turn and was not watching it, but was watching for the traffic officer to signal for her to cross, when she was struck by the projecting iron. It was held that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the driver, and that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in not looking at the wagon until it had passed a sufficient distance to allow her to make the crossing safely; that if she was misled by any signal given by the officer, the defendant was not liable for that, and that if she was mistaken in the signal of the officer, she alone was responsible. The court remarked that it was evident that the plaintiff did not look for herself and determine for herself whether or not the crossing was safe, and, with respect to the driver's reliance on the officer's signal, the court stated that he had the right to presume that the officer would prevent pedestrians from crossing until the wagon had passed.

In Canfield v. New York Transp. Co. (1908) 128 App. Div. 450, 112 N. Y. Supp. 854, where the plaintiff sought to recover for an injury received by being thrown down while attempting to cross a street by a rope by which one of the defendant's electric hansoms was being towed, it appeared that there was a man on each hansom, and that, in response to the order of a police officer, the machines had been stopped at a street intersection, and that, as the plaintiff attempted to cross, the man on the rear car shouted a warning to the plaintiff, but that she proceeded without seeing the rope, although she testified that there was sufficient light to see the number on the car. It was held that there was no evidence in the case upon which a finding of negligence on the part of the defendant could be predicated. The court remarked that the automobiles were lawfully on the street, that they had been ordered by the traffic officer to stop at the place where they stood, and that the only thing that the drivers could do was to warn the plaintiff, and that they did this.

In Foster v. Frank Parmelee Co. (1913) 179 Ill. App. 21, the plaintiff, a pedestrian, while attempting at a street intersection to cross from south to north, was struck by a cab driving from west to east; the movement of pedestrians and vehicles was regulated by a traffic officer, who, at the time the injury occurred, had given a signal for carriages and pedestrians to cross from east to west and west to east, and for an intermission of the north and south movement of travel. The court, in upholding the peremptory instruction of the trial court for a verdict for the defendant, said, with respect to the regulation of traffic by the police officer: "This attempted regulation, of course, neither placed nor released legal obligations of the plaintiff or defendant, but is of importance in considering the only question which was litigated in this cause,—the negligence of the defendant's servant and the due care of the plaintiff."

J. T. W.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.*COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY FOR USE OF WILLIAM LEDFORD, Appt.,

v.

J. W. HINSON et al.

(143 Ky. 428, 136 S. W. 912.)

Official bond — duration — termination of term.

1. The sureties on the official bond of a policeman are liable for his acts only during the term for which he is appointed at the time it is executed, although the premium paid for their undertaking would entitle him to a bond covering a longer period. For other cases, see Bonds, II. c. 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — parol extension — validity.

2. A parol promise of a surety on the official bond of a policeman whose appointment is for six months, that, in consideration of payment of the premium for a year, the bond may cover another six months' period in case of his reappointment, cannot be enforced by one injured by the wrongful act of the officer, although the agreement was consented to by the municipal authorities, where the statute provides that no action shall be brought to charge any person upon a promise to answer for the misdoing of another unless it is in writing.

For other cases, see Contracts, I. c. 2; V. c. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(May 2, 1911.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Montgomery County sustaining a demurrer to the petition in an action brought to recover damages for an alleged wanton assault committed by defendant Hinson upon plaintiff Ledford. Reversed as to defendant Hinson. Affirmed as to the other defendants.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Robert H. Winn and R. A. Chiles, for appellant:

Parol evidence is admissible to show the approval of an official bond by the proper officers.

American Book Co. v. Wells, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1159, 83 S. W. 622; Bank of United States v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat. 64, 6 L. ed. 562; Ramsay v. People, 197 Ill. 572, 90 Am. St. Rep. 177, 64 N. E. 549.

The requirement that a bond be accepted and approved is for the benefit of the public, and not for the principal and his sureties.

Note.—For effect of the Statute of Frauds upon the right to modify, by subsequent parol agreement, a written contract required by the statute to be in writing, see annotation following Bonicamp v. Starbuck, post, 144.
L.R.A.1917B.

The failure, therefore, of approval altogether will not relieve the sureties of their liability.

American Book Co. v. Wells, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1159, 83 S. W. 622; Reid v. Com. 123 Ky. 240, 94 S. W. 641; Growbarger v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 126 Ky. 118, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 758, 128 Am. St. Rep. 274, 102 S. W. 873; Com. use of Rosenthal v. Teel, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 741, 111 S. W. 340; Ramsay v. People, 197 Ill. 572, 90 Am. St. Rep. 177, 64 N. E. 549.

A bond entered into voluntarily, and for a valid consideration, is good as a common-law obligation, though not in conformity to a statute, or even entirely without any statute.

Combs v. Breathitt County, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 809, 38 S. W. 138, 39 S. W. 33; Cotton v. Wolf, 14 Bush, 238; Clay v. Edwards, 84 Ky. 548, 2 S. W. 147.

Paid contracts, or bonds of suretyship, are contracts, and it is the duty of the courts to enforce them.

Federal Union Surety Co. v. Com. 139 Ky. 92, 129 S. W. 335; Walker v. Holtzclaw, 57 S. C. 459, 35 S. E. 754.

Messrs. Robert L. Page and Lewis Apperson, for appellee Citizens' Trust & Guaranty Company:

The fact that appellee was elected for six months, and then re-elected again for another six months shows conclusively that the term was for six months; and, whatever the term is, the bond only covers for the term, and if there was any agreement that the bond should cover for two terms, that certainly should have been in writing, and not oral, in order to bind a surety.

Stearns, Suretyship, § 173; Offutt v. Com. 10 Bush, 212; Bryan v. United States, 1 Black, 140, 17 L. ed. 135; Brandt, Suretyship, § 543; South Carolina Soc. v. Johnson, 1 M'Cord, L. 41, 10 Am. Dec. 644; Moss v. State, 10 Mo. 338, 47 Am. Dec. 116; 29 Cyc. 1457; 32 Cyc. 77.

Messrs. McChord, Bingham, & Page also for appellees.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was instituted in the name of the commonwealth in behalf of William Ledford against J. W. Hinson, a policeman of Mt. Sterling, Kentucky, and the Citizens' Trust & Guaranty Company as his surety, to recover damages for an alleged wanton assault committed by the policeman upon Ledford. To the petition as amended a demurrer interposed by each of the defendants was sustained upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against either of them.

Therefore the only question presented by the record is the sufficiency of the petition as amended.

Mt. Sterling is a city of the fourth class; and under § 3492 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's Stat. § 1549) its board of council has the power to appoint a police force "whose term of office shall not exceed two years from the date of election." In § 3497 (§ 1554) it is provided: "Every policeman, before he enters upon the duties of his office, shall give bond, with approved surety, before the mayor, to the commonwealth of Kentucky, in the sum of $1,000, for the faithful performance of the duties of his office; and for any unlawful arrest, or unnecessary or cruel beating or assault in making an arrest, he and his bondsmen shall be liable to the person so injured on said bond." On December 7, 1909, the council appointed Hinson a policeman for a term of six months beginning on the first Monday in January, 1910. Hinson thereupon qualified as such policeman and gave bond with the Citizens' Trust & Guaranty Company as his surety. The bond, which was entered into by the surety on the 31st day of December, 1909, was conditioned as follows: "Whereas, James Warner Hinson has been duly appointed to the office of policeman in and for the city of Mount Sterling, Montgomery county, Kentucky: Now, we, James Warner Hinson, principal, and the Citizens' Trust & Guaranty Company of West Virginia, surety, hereby covenant to and with the commonwealth of Kentucky for the benefit of the city of Mount Sterling, Montgomery county, Kentucky, in the sum of $1,000, lawful money of the United States, that the said James Warner Hinson shall well and faithfully discharge the duties of his said office of city policeman according to law." On the 15th of June, 1910, and before the expiration of the first term of six months, Hinson was again elected policeman for another term of six months, and again took the oath of office and continued in the discharge of his duties as policeman. The assault complained of occurred after the expiration of his first appointment and during the period of his second appointment. The bond executed by the company on the 31st of December, 1909, was accepted and approved by the mayor, but no other bond was ever executed by Hinson. It is averred in the amended petition that Hinson paid to the company when it became his surety the full premium for one year, and that it was agreed by and between the trust and guaranty company and Hinson at the time the bond was executed that, if Hinson was re-elected policeman for the six months beginning on the first Monday in July, 1910, the bond executed by it on the 31st day of December, 1909, should cover the remaining six months' period, and that no further action would be necessary in order to hold it liable on the bond as surety. It was further averred that the mayor and council entered into and approved this agreement, and did not require the execution of a bond, but stood upon and relied upon the agreement of the trust and guaranty company to remain bound upon the bond for one year. As the truth of these allegations was confessed by the demurrer, the pleading is to be tested by their sufficiency to constitute a cause of action.

To briefly restate the facts so that the issues may be clearly understood, it appears: (1) That Hinson was appointed policeman on December 7, 1909, for a term of six months, and that before the expiration of this term he was reappointed for another term of six months to begin upon the expiration of the first six months. (2) That subsequent to his appointment in December, 1909, and before he assumed the duties of the office, the trust and guaranty company undertook that Hinson would "well and faithfully discharge the duties of said office of city policeman according to law," and that this bond was approved and accepted by the mayor. (3) That no new bond was executed covering the second term of Hinson, nor was there any written or record evidence of an agreement between Hinson and the company that it should remain upon his bond during his second term; but it was verbally agreed between Hinson and the company that, as he had paid the premium for one year when the bond was executed, this bond should cover the remaining six months of the year if he was re-elected for another term. (4) That the assault complained of took place during the second term.

Taking up first the sufficiency of the pleading as to the trust and guaranty company, and assuming that it entered into the parol agreement with Hinson heretofore set out, the question is: Was this parol agreement sufficient to bind the company for the misdoings of Hinson during his second term?

We think there can be no doubt that the bond executed by the surety company only bound it for the acts of Hinson during his first term. Hinson had only been appointed or elected for six months at the time the bond was executed, and it was to answer for his conduct during this term of six months that the bond was executed. We know of no principle of law that would authorize us to extend this undertaking beyond the term of six months it was executed to cover. On the contrary, all the authorities we have had an opportunity to examine lay it down that, under circumstances like those appearing in this case, the liability of the surety is confined to the term for which the official was appointed or elected. Nor can the mere fact that the officer is reappointed for another term have the effect of increasing the liability of the surety or extending his obligation. The contract of suretyship only contemplated its continuance during the term. We find no language in the bond from which it can be inferred that the surety intended to become responsible for another term under another appointment or election. Stearns, Suretyship, § 173; Brandt, Suretyship, § 543; Offutt v. Com. 10 Bush, 212; South Carolina Soc. v. Johnson, 1 M'Cord, L. 41, 10 Am. Dec. 644; Moss v. State, 10 Mo. 338, 47 Am. Dec. 116.

Recognizing the force of the argument that the terms of the bond confined the obligation of the surety to the expiration of the first term, the attempt is made to avoid its effect by the assertion that the surety company agreed in consideration of the payment to it by Hinson of the full premium for one year that it would remain bound as his surety for the year if he was reappointed, and that this agreement was approved by the mayor and council. But this agreement on the part of the surety company was not in writing, and was therefore within that section of the Statute of Frauds providing that "no action shall be brought to charge any person . . . upon a promise to answer for the debt, default, or misdoing of another; . . . unless the promise . . . or some memorandum or note thereof, be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by his authorized agent." Ky. Stat. § 470 (Russell's Stat. § 1775). This statute presented a complete bar to a recovery against the surety company. The fact that it received a consideration for entering into the verbal agreement relied on did not have the effect of making it liable when in the absence of such consideration it would not have been. The payment of a consideration cannot supply the place of a writing signed by the person to be charged, or have the effect of taking out of this statute an agreement that would otherwise be void. But it is said that the mayor and council consented to and approved this verbal agreement between Hinson and the surety company, and thus made it a valid undertaking. We cannot understand how the consent or approval of the mayor and council could impart validity to a void agreement between Hinson and the surety company. There was no agreement or contract that the mayor or council could approve or consent to. If a binding agreement had been entered into between Hinson and the surety company, then we would hold that its acceptance or approval of record by the official whose duty it was to accept or approve it was not essential to its validity. Ramsay v. People, 197 Ill. 572, 90 Am. St. Rep. 177, 64 N. E. 549; Growbarger v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 126 Ky. 118, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 758, 128 Am. St. Rep. 274, 102 S. W. 873; Reid v. Com. 123 Ky. 240, 94 S. W. 641; Com. use of Rosenthal v. Teel, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 741, 111 S. W. 340. But the principle announced in these cases has no application to the one before us, for the simple reason that no second bond was executed that could or should have been approved or accepted, and it is on this vital point that the case of appellant fails. If a bond had been executed that covered the second term of Hinson, its approval or acceptance by the mayor would not be essential to its validity. We think the lower court correctly ruled that the petition as amended did not state a cause of action against the surety company, but we are also of the opinion that it did state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against Hinson.

Wherefore the judgment as to the Citizens' Trust & Guaranty Company is affirmed, and the judgment as to Hinson is reversed.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

JOHN BONICAMP, SR., Plff. in Err.,
v.

W. H. STARBUCK.

(25 Okla. 483, 106 Pac. 839.)

Contract within Statute of Frauds — parol modification — validity.

Parties to a written agreement within the provisions of the Statute of Frauds may not, by subsequent oral agreement, add to or alter one or more of its terms, and thus make a new contract resting partly in writing and partly in parol; and where they do, in a suit on said new contract, testimony to establish such subsequent agreement is not admissible in evidence. For other cases, see Contracts, V. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Headnote by TURNER, J.

Note. — For effect of the Statute of Frauds upon the right to modify, by subsequent parol agreement, a written contract required by the statute to be in writing, see annotation following this case, post, 144.

(January 11, 1910.)

ERROR to the Probate Court for Kay County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for alleged breach of a lease. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Tetrick & Curran, for plaintiff in error:

If new terms are sought to be ingrafted upon an original contract which is within the Statute of Frauds, they must be reduced to writing; otherwise the modified agreement cannot be proved; for, to allow a party to sue partly on a written and partly on an oral agreement would be in direct contravention of the statute.

Beach, Contr. §§ 75, 577, 579; 1 Chitty, Contr. 154; 1 Addison, Contr. § 201; Halsell v. Renfrow, 14 Okla. 674, 78 Pac. 118, 2 Ann. Cas. 286; Neverman v. Bank of Cass County, 14 Okla. 417, 78 Pac. 382; 3 Parsons, Contr. *17; 2 Rice, Ev. p. 1261; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 268; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 824, 825; Swain v. Seamens, 9 Wall. 254, 19 L. ed. 554; Emerson v. Slater, 22 How. 28, 16 L. ed. 360; Heisley v. Swanstrom, 40 Minn. 106, 41 N. W. 1029; Hanson v. Gunderson, 95 Wis. 613, 70 N. W. 827; Pingrey, Extra Industrial & Interstate Contr. § 81; Rucker v. Harrington, 52 Mo. App. 481; Ringer v. Holtzelaw, 112 Mo. 519, 20 S. W. 800; Nelson v. Shelby Mfg. & Improv. Co. 96 Ala. 515, 38 Am. St. Rep. 116, 11 So. 695; Reid v. Kenworthy, 25 Kan. 701; Fuller v. Reed, 38 Cal. 99.

Messrs. John S. Burger and H. S. Gurley, for defendant in error:

Contracts for improvements and repairs on real estate are not contracts for an interest in or concerning land.

2 Page, Contr. pp. 993, 1840, §§ 655, 1198; Scales v. Wiley, 68 Vt. 39, 33 Atl. 771; Plunkett v. Meredith, 72 Ark. 3, 77 S. W. 600; Clark v. Shultz, 4 Mo. 235; Frear v. Hardenbergh, 5 Johns. 272, 4 Am. Dec. 356; Godeffroy v. Caldwell, 2 Cal. 489, 56 Am. Dec. 360; Morrison v. Dickey, 119 Ga. 698, 46 S. E. 863.

The parol agreement made about the time of the written lease may be shown by parol.

Erskine v. Adeane, L. R. 8 Ch. 766, 42 L. J. Ch. N. S. 835, 29 L. T. N. S. 234, 21 Week. Rep. 802, 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 619; Palmer v. Sanders, 49 Fed. 144; Welz v. Rhodius, 87 Ind. 1, 44 Am. Rep. 747; Freese v. Arnold, 99 Mich. 13, 57 N. W. 1038; Brant v. Vincent, 100 Mich. 426, L.R.A.1917B.

59 N. W. 169; Flanders v. Fay, 40 Vt. 316; Danforth v. McIntyre, 11 Ill. App. 417; Hope v. Balen, 58 N. Y. 380; Deisher v. Stein, 34 Kan. 39, 7 Pac. 608; Hepworth v. Pendleton, 7 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 601; Powell v. McAshan, 28 Mo. 70; Shuey v. Adair, 18 Wash. 188, 39 L.R.A. 473, 63 Am. St. Rep. 886, 51 Pac. 388; Nonamaker v. Amos, 73 Ohio St. 163, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 980, 112 Am. St. Rep. 708, 76 N. E. 949, 4 Ann. Cas. 170; Stark v. Wilson, 3 Bibb, 476; Crocker v. Higgins, 7 Conn. 342; 20 Cyc. 287; Cummings v. Arnold, 3 Met. 486, 37 Am. Dec. 155; Stearns v. Hall, 9 Cush. 31.

Turner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On May 2, 1906, W. H. Starbuck, defendant in error, sued John Bonicamp, plaintiff in error, in the probate court of Kay county in damages for the alleged breach of a lease, dated November 1, 1905, wherein the latter undertook to lease to the former for a period of five years from that date a two-story building of certain dimensions located in Blackwell, Oklahoma, "at a monthly rent of $70 per month, said sum to be increased at the rate of 15 per cent of the sum expended by the first party for purchase price and improvements in excess of the sum of $4,550; first party to make all necessary improvements and repairs to put property in first-class condition to be occupied as a first-class hotel. Parties to this contract to agree on the improvements necessary therefor." After answer admitting the execution of the lease, and a general denial and reply thereto filed, there was trial by a jury, which resulted in a judgment for plaintiff for $817.50, and on second trial for $640; and, after motion for a new trial filed and overruled, to which defendant excepted, he brings the case here for review by petition in error and case-made.

To maintain the issues on his part plaintiff, among other things, introduced in evidence the lease providing as aforesaid, proved that defendant had refused him possession thereunder and had leased the premises to another, and, pursuant to allegations in his petition, over the objection of defendant, was permitted to introduce parol testimony in effect that shortly after the execution and delivery of the lease plaintiff and defendant agreed on what improvements and repairs were to be placed in said building to put it in first-class condition to be occupied as a first-class hotel, which was, among other things, that a bake-shop should be built in the rear of the premises, that the building should be painted and finished, the necessary partitions put up, sewerage and waterworks connection made, and that the rent of the premises thereafter should be $90 per month.

It is contended by plaintiff in error that the court erred in admitting said testimony, because, he says, that the terms of said lease could not be altered except by a contract in writing, and therefore the judgment is contrary to law. The testimony is objectionable for the reason that a lease for five years is one required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing, which must contain the whole contract. To permit a party to sue partly on a written and partly on an oral agreement, as is here attempted, would be in direct contravention of the statute. 1 Beach, on Contracts, § 579, lays down the rule as stated, and in § 577 says: "It is also the general rule that the evidence necessary to take the contract out of the Statute of Frauds must all be furnished by the writings; parol evidence not being admissible to supply evidence not found in them." Dana v. Hancock, 30 Vt. 616, 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 824, says: "The general rule is, contrary to the rule at common law, that parties to a written agreement coming within the provisions of the Statute of Frauds may not, by mere oral agreement, alter one or more of the terms thereof, and thus make a new contract, resting partly in writing and partly in parol. And it has been said that it is not important whether or not the alteration is in a particular which was originally required by the statute to be in writing. If any alteration is made, so that part of the contract has to be proved by oral evidence, it ceases to be a contract in writing, and is thus exposed to all the evils which the statute was intended to remedy." Woods on Statute of Frauds, § 384, says: "It is by the written contract alone . . . that the parties are bound, and more especially is that so in a case where, as here, the contract is one which by the Statute of Frauds is required to be in writing. The intention of the legislature was that the writing should be the evidence, and the only evidence, of the contract, and that there should be no occasion to look beyond it."

The lease, providing, as it does in effect, that plaintiff was to make all necessary improvements and repairs to put the premises in first-class condition to be occupied as a first-class hotel, and that the parties thereto were thereafter to agree on what improvements and repairs were necessary so to do, standing alone, was incapable of enforcement for uncertainty, for the reason that on its face it left some essential terms to be agreed on in the future. Ringer v. Holtzelaw, 112 Mo. 519, 20 S. W. 800; Day-L.R.A.1917B.

ton v. Stone, 111 Mich. 196, 69 N. W. 515; Bumpus v. Bumpus, 53 Mich. 346, 19 N. W. 29; Wardell v. Williams, 62 Mich. 50, 4 Am. St. Rep. 814, 28 N. W. 796; Gates v. Gamble, 53 Mich. 181, 18 N. W. 631. Recognizing this fact, defendant sought to sustain his cause of action by a subsequent oral contract, the subject-matter of which is found in the original writing, while the contract itself is found in the subsequent oral agreement sought to be proved, connecting itself with the writing as a part of its terms. To enforce said contract would practically annul our statute, supra, and the Statute of Frauds. If a part of the entire contract is void under the statute, it is void in toto (Fuller v. Reed, 38 Cal. 99), and thereby becomes reduced to the grade of a mere unwritten contract (Dana v. Hancock, supra). Such subsequent oral agreement varied the terms of the writing contained in the lease, and plaintiff cannot recover upon said writing as thus qualified.

Browne on Statute of Frauds, 5th ed. § 411, says: "It seems to be well established that where a contract affected by the statute has been put in writing, and the plaintiff, in a case of subsequent oral variation of some of the terms of the written agreement, declares upon the writing as qualified by the oral variation, he cannot prevail,"—citing Cuff v. Penn, 1 Maule & S. 21, 105 Eng. Reprint, 8; Goss v. Nugent, 5 Barn. & Ad. 67, 110 Eng. Reprint, 713, 2 Nev. & M. 28, 2 L. J. K. B. N. S. 127; Harvey v. Graham, 5 Ad. & El. 61, 111 Eng. Reprint, 1089, 6 Nev. & M. 154, 2 H. & W. 146, 5 L. J. K. B. N. S. 235; Stead v. Dawber, 10 Ad. & El. 57, 113 Eng. Reprint 22, 2 Perry & D. 447, 9 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 101; Marshall v. Lynn, 6 Mees. & W. 109, 151 Eng. Reprint, 342, 9 L. J. Exch. N. S. 126,—concerning all of which he says in § 415: "The ground upon which the cases just cited were all decided is this: That the plaintiff sued upon a contract which the Statute of Frauds required to be in writing, but which in fact was partly in writing and partly in parol; and that although originally put in writing, and varied only as to the manner of performance, still the suit could not be said to be upon the original written contract, but upon a new contract made out by incorporating therewith certain oral stipulations."

In Alabama Mineral Land Co. v. Jackson, 121 Ala. 172, 77 Am. St. Rep. 46; 25 So. 709, the former brought suit against Jackson on an alleged contract in writing to purchase certain timber. The issue raised on a demurrer to his plea of the Statute of Frauds was whether said alleged contract was void under such statute. The trial court in effect held that it was, which holding was affirmed by the supreme court. The writing sued on was signed by both plaintiff and defendant. By its terms the latter was to purchase from the former at a stipulated price per acre "the timber from a continuous block of 10,000 acres, consecutive sections, in a northwesterly line from Maplesville, townships 21 and 22," the purchaser to determine upon a continuous body of lands and to designate the same to the seller on a day named. The writing further stipulated that in "case of any material tract recently timbered having been cleared of said timber, or pillaged of same to any material extent, the seller will substitute other lands for cutting in its stead" at any time prior to a certain date. The purchaser failed to designate the lands or pay therefor as provided in the contract, and the land company brought suit in damages for the breach thereof. Defendant pleaded, among other things, the Statute of Frauds for insufficient description of the land, an interest in which was intended to be embraced in the contract. Plaintiff demurred to the plea, which was overruled, and plaintiff appealed. The court, in passing, held in effect that under the Statute of Frauds the written memorandum must describe the subject-matter directly or by reference to something outside of the writing, by resorting to which certainty might be obtained; that the contract furnished no such identification of the land intended to be sold, but, on the contrary, expressly referred the segregation and identification of it to be fixed by subsequent acts in pais, and for that reason was void and would not support an action in damages, and, in passing, said: "So long as the particular lands are not determined upon by Jackson and designated by him to the company, the whole agreement remains at large as to the thing intended to be contracted about, the infirmity of the absence of identification still attaches to the writing, and it cannot be said that there is any contract to sell any land, because there is no contract to sell any particular land. Had Jackson determined upon and designated the particular 10,000 acres to be sold and purchased, and evidenced such determination and designation by writing, the effect would have been to complete, or, to speak accurately, to make, a contract for the sale of land where no contract before existed,"—and, after holding that every requisite of the contract not being in writing there was no written contract, but that the whole lay in parol, in the syllabus said: "A paper writing, by the terms of which one party agrees to sell and another to purchase the timber from a designated number of acres of land which are to be selected by the purchaser, is, to all intents and purposes, an agreement to make a contract for the sale and purchase of land, and is, until selection is made in writing, void under the Statute of Frauds."

Hence we conclude that the testimony was improperly admitted, and the judgment contrary to law, in that it was based upon a parol contract void under the Statute of Frauds, and are of the opinion that the case should be reversed, unless, as is contended by defendant in error, there has been sufficient partial performance to take the contract out of the statute. On this point the testimony discloses that plaintiff, in anticipation of taking possession under his lease, with the knowledge of defendant, had purchased tables and table ware, linen, counters, shelving, office furniture, and fixtures for use in said hotel, which depreciated in value because of defendant's failure to turn over the premises and plaintiff's consequent inability to so use them.

Defendant in error cites no authority in support of his contention that such would constitute a part performance, and, as we are unable to find any, the case is reversed and rendered.

All the Justices concur.

Annotation—Effect of the Statute of Frauds upon the right to modify, by subsequent parol agreement, a written contract required by the statute to be in writing.

I. Introductory, 145.

II. Rule that contract cannot be modified by oral agreement:

1. In general, 147.

2. Application as dependent upon character of modification, 157.

3. Action taken on oral agreement, 160.

III. Rule that oral modification of a matter relating to the performance is valid, 161.

IV. Rule that oral modification which has been acted upon is valid:

1. In general, 164.

2. Theories, 167.

V. Extension of time, 171.

I. Introductory.

It is a well-settled rule that a written agreement not within the Statute of Frauds may be modified by the subsequent oral agreement of the parties;<sup>1</sup> the parol-evidence rule excludes only prior and contemporaneous negotiations of the parties; it does not apply to subsequent agreements entered into by them.<sup>2</sup> Whether the Statute of Frauds prevents the subsequent oral modification is the subject of investigation in this note.

The note has been confined to agreements attempting to modify the prior written agreement, and excludes cases in which a discharge of the written agreement was attempted. The subject of the discharge will be discussed in a future note.<sup>3</sup> Modification may consist of two elements: 1st, a discharge of the written contract or some of its terms; 2d, the creation of a new obligation instead of those discharged, so that a phase of discharge is necessarily considered herein. But this extends only so far as it is connected with an attempted substitution. In a great majority of the cases discussed in this note, modification is not separated into its elements. It is true, of course, that modification may not involve a discharge of any element of the original contract, but consist merely of additions.

The modification of contracts originally oral, but which have been taken out of the Statute of Frauds by part performance, acceptance, etc., is not considered.<sup>4</sup>

The note has also been confined to modification by agreement, as distinguished from a mere forbearance or waiver by one of the parties thereto.<sup>5</sup> The line between these two situations is somewhat indistinct in the cases, however clear it may be in theory, and some cases in which there was, strictly speaking, no agreement, have been included. The note has also been confined to the modification of executory contracts; that is, to the modification before breach, or expiration thereof by its terms. Parol modification after breach or expiration will be the subject of a subsequent note.<sup>6</sup>

Modification of a contract must be distinguished from the entering into a new contract which is to take the place of the old. Examples of new contracts are found in the note.<sup>7</sup> The question as to what amounts to a modification is beyond the scope of the note. If the subsequent agreement is treated as a modification, it is discussed herein, otherwise not. Some examples of facts which have

<sup>1</sup> 6 R. C. L. 299; Elliott, Contra. § 1988; 3 Page, Contra, § 1348; 2 Page, Contra. § 608; 9 Cyc. 597, 598.

That a contract under seal cannot be modified by subsequent oral agreement is the doctrine of some cases, but the contrary is held as to this. 6 R. C. L. 300; Elliott, Contra. § 1988; 9 Cyc. 596.

<sup>2</sup> 6 R. C. L. 299; 4 Wigmore, Ev. § 2441; 5 Chamberlayne, Ev. § 3566.

The court in Castro v. Illies (1854) 13 Tex. 229, confuses these two things. After referring to the rule that no written agreement can be added to, altered, varied, or changed by parol testimony, the court points out that in the case at bar it was attempted by subsequent agreement to substitute other lands for those mortgaged, and adds, "What is this but an attempt to alter or to vary or to change a written instrument by parol?"

<sup>3</sup> See Rogers v. Dockstader, L.R.A.—, —.

<sup>4</sup> It has been held where a contract for the sale of goods is taken out of the Statute of Frauds by the payment of earnest money, but is not reduced to writing, it does not contravene the spirit or policy of the statute to allow its terms to be varied by parol any more than it would to allow the terms of the original contract to be thus proved. It is competent, therefore, for the parties to extend or vary the time for the performance of such a contract by a subsequent parol agreement at any time L.R.A.1917B.

while it remains executory. Packer v. Stewart (1861) 34 Vt. 127.

<sup>5</sup> The mere act of a purchaser in awaiting delivery by his vendor may not in all cases amount to a contract extending time. Where it does not, the Statute of Frauds, of course, has no application. Ogle v. Vane (1867) L. R. 2 Q. B. (Eng.) 275, 7 Best & S. 855, 36 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 175, 15 Week. Rep. 564.

<sup>6</sup> See Thompson v. Robinson, L.R.A. —, —.

<sup>7</sup> Pearsall v. Henry (1008) 153 Cal. 314, 95 Pac. 164, 159.

In Wilson v. Beam (1890) 12 Ky. L. Rep. 367, 14 S. W. 362, a purchaser at an auction sale, being unable to give the bond required, wrote to the vendor to that effect, and stated that he would have to renounce the contract. This was acceded to by the vendor, who entered into a new agreement with the vendee relative to the purchase of the same upon new terms as to security. Upon an action for breach of the oral contract, this was treated as a new contract, and not as a modification of the old, and it is held that, the agreement being verbal, no action for its breach can be maintained.

A surety for the lessor of a mill who has verbally assented to a subsequent agreement between the lessor and lessee changing the term of the lease is not relieved of liability on his suretyship. Smith v. Loomis (1883) 74 Me. 503. The argument for the surety was that the second arrangement been held not to amount to modification are, however, given in the note.<sup>8</sup>

It has been suggested that a lease which has less than a year to run after the subsequent agreement may be modified by a parol agreement, since it is then not within the Statute of Frauds.<sup>9</sup> So, an agreement by a mortgagee to accept payment of the mortgage debt in other than money is held not an agreement with respect to a conveyance in land, hence is not within the Statute of Frauds.<sup>10</sup> Other examples of facts held not to present a case within the Statute of Frauds are given in the note.<sup>11</sup>

It may be stated generally at this point that, with the exception of the cases discussed under subdiv. III., the cases uniformly support the rule that an oral executory modification of a written contract within the Statute of Frauds is unenforceable. This rule is applied in some cases in which it appears that acts have been done in accord with the oral modification, and in some cases at least where it is expressly alleged that such acts were done in reliance upon the oral modification. Other cases in which a party has acted in reliance upon the oral modification, especially where he has completed performance of the obligations imposed upon him by the agreement, hold that the rights of the parties must be determined by the modified agreement. It is difficult, if not impossible, to reconcile the cases in which the

was a new and independent contract substituted for and canceling the first one, and was not binding upon the surety on account of the Statute of Frauds, a contention that was denied.

<sup>8</sup> The question of modification by parol is not raised where the parties by mistake stated a wrong purchase price in their contract for the sale of real estate and subsequently had the scrivener who drew the contract change the amount to the correct purchase price. Kneedler v. Anderson, (1892) 43 Ill. App. 317.

An agreement between the vendor and vendee of goods upon the vendee's finding himself unable to pay for the goods, that the vendor should buy them back, is not a modification of the original contract, but a resale. Blanchard v. Trim (1868) 38 N. Y. 225.

In Creigh v. Boggs (1881) 19 W. Va. 240, specific performance of a written contract for the sale of land was granted, with parol variations in the courses of the land agreed to by the parties subsequently and admitted in the answer, where the variations in the courses were not made, as admitted by the answer, with a view of modifying the original parol understanding of the parties which preceded the written contract, but simply to carry out the original parol agreement and understanding, which the written contract failed to do because of a mutual mistake of the parties.

<sup>9</sup> Doherty v. Doe (1893) 18 Colo. 456, 33 Pac. 165. The decision in this case, however, is based upon another ground.

<sup>10</sup> McKenzie v. Stewart (1916) — Ala. —, 72 So. 109. It is stated that it is true that the result of the mortgagee's acceptance of the property, agreed to be accepted in payment, would be the release of the land from the mortgage, but the same result would follow from his acceptance of money also, and in either case the release of the land results incidentally from the operation of law, and not from any agreement of the parties.

<sup>11</sup> An agreement by vendors who were under obligation to remove clouds upon their title, with the vendee, to remove the clouds, has been held an original undertaking, which does not vary, add to, or contradict the written contract of sale, and is, therefore, not required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing. Foster v. Hoff (1913) 37 Okla. 144, 131 Pac. 531, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 218.

It has been held that a written agreement between a grantor and grantees after the conveyance of the land, that a balance on the purchase price should be retained until the grantor had perfected the title, might be modified by oral agreement of the parties that in consideration of an abatement of part of the purchase price so retained the balance of the purchase money should be paid without the perfection of the title as agreed upon. Negley v. Jeffers (1875) 28 Ohio St. 100. This is on the theory that the contract was not one within the Statute of Frauds.

The extensions from time to time by parol for periods less than a year, of a contract which was to be performed within a year, are unaffected by the Statute of Frauds. Donovan v. Richmond (1896) 61 Mich. 467, 28 N. W. 516.

A subsequent agreement specifying a certain place within a city for the payment of a balance due upon a land contract which specified no particular part of the city for the payment of the balance, is held in Sayre v. Mohny (1899) 35 Or. 141, 56 Pac. 526, not to change or qualify the terms of the written agreement, but to be a collateral or independent engagement.

There was an attempt to modify a lease in Blumenthal v. Bloomingdale (1885) 100 N. Y. 558, 3 N. E. 292, but no specific objection to the evidence of the modification founded upon the Statute of Frauds was taken when the proof was offered, and there was no exception to the charge that, after breach, the terms of the lease could be modified or altered by a parol agreement; the sole contention being that the substituted agreement which formed the basis of the lessee's right was itself void as a lease for more than one year or revocable as a mere license founded upon no consideration.

oral agreement has been acted upon. A majority of those cases which adhere to the rule that the Statute of Frauds invalidates the oral modification do not consider the fact that the oral agreement has been acted upon; while those adhering to the opposite theory emphasize this fact and thereby present a case of waiver, estoppel, etc. Where the contract is fully executed by both parties, according to the modified agreement, the Statute of Frauds does not invalidate the oral modification.

The foregoing rules have been applied in many cases without reference to the character of the modification. In some a distinction is made in regard to whether the modification is one of a part of the agreement which itself must be in writing. Other cases have expressly repudiated this distinction where the part sought to be modified is part of the writing. A distinction has also been made in some jurisdictions between an extension of time and other modifications.

II. Rule that contract cannot be modified by oral agreement.

1. In general.

The broad general doctrine is announced in many cases that a contract required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing cannot be modified by subsequent oral agreement.<sup>12</sup> In some of the

<sup>12</sup> Adler v. Friedman (1860) 16 Cal. 138; Boyd v. Big Thresh Ranch Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 108, 133 Pac. 625, approved in obiter statement in Fogg v. McAdam (1914) 25 Cal. App. 522, 144 Pac. 296; Malikan v. Hemming (1909) 82 Conn. 293, 73 Atl. 752; Simonton v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. (1874) 51 Ga. 80; Mitchell v. Universal L. Ins. Co. (1875) 54 Ga. 289; Augusta Southern R. Co. v. Smith & K. Co. (1899) 106 Ga. 864, 33 S. E. 28; Willis v. Fields (1909) 132 Ga. 242, 63 S. E. 828; Hawkins v. Studdard (1908) 132 Ga. 268, 131 Am. St. Rep. 190, 63 S. E. 852; Moore v. Collier (1910) 133 Ga. 762, 66 S. E. 1080; Jarman v. Westbrook (1910) 134 Ga. 19, 67 S. E. 403; Sikes v. Malloonee (1912) 11 Ga. App. 632, 75 S. E. 988, holding that a contract of guaranty cannot be modified by oral agreement; Carpenter v. Galloway (1881) 73 Ind. 418; Bradley v. Harter (1900) 156 Ind. 499, 60 N. E. 139; Christian v. Highlands (1903) 32 Ind. App. 104, 69 N. E. 266; Burgett v. Loeb (1908) 43 Ind. App. 657, 88 N. E. 346; Napier Iron Works v. Caldwell & D. Iron Works (1916) — Ind. App. —, 110 N. E. 714; Autem v. Mayer Coal Co. (1916) 98 Kan. 379, 158 Pac. 13; McComathy v. Lanham (1903) 116 Ky. 735, 76 S. W. 535. See note 119; Walter v. Victor G. Bloede Co. (1901) 94 Md. 80, 50 Atl. 433; Abell v. Munson (1869) 18 Mich. 306, 100 Am. Dec. 165; Cook v. Bell (1869) 18 Mich. 387; Brown v. Sanborn (1875) 21 Minn. 402; Burns v. Fidelity Real Estate Co. (1892) 52 Minn. 31, 53 N. W. 1017; Grand Forks Lumber Co. v. McClure Logging Co. (1908) 103 Minn. 471, 115 N. W. 406; Warren v. A. B. Mayer Mfg. Co. (1901) 161 Mo. 112, 61 S. W. 644; Rucker v. Harrington (1893) 52 Mo. App. 481, approved in Newman v. Bank of Watson (1897) 70 Mo. App. 135; Espy v. Anderson (1850) 14 Pa. 311. But see Le Fevre v. Le Fevre (1818) 4 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 241, 8 Am. Dec. 696; Ladd v. King (1849) 1 R. I. 224, 51 Am. Dec. 624; Hicks v. Aylsworth (1832) 13 R. I. 562; Beard v. A. A. Gooch & Son (1910) 62 Tex. Civ. App. 60, 130 S. W. 1022; Gurley v. Hanricks (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 139 S. W. 721. See L.R.A.1917B.

Adams v. Hughes, infra; Pence v. Life (1905) 104 Va. 518, 52 S. E. 257; Heth v. Woolridge (1828) 6 Rand. (Va.) 605, 18 Am. Dec. 751; Hanson v. Gunderson (1897) 95 Wis. 613, 70 N. W. 827; Emerson v. Slater (1859) 22 How (U. S.) 28, 16 L. ed. 360 (obiter); Reid v. Diamond Plate Glass Co. (1898) 29 O. C. A. 110, 54 U. S. App. 619, 85 Fed. 193; Jones's Case (1875) 11 Ct. Cl. (Fed.) 733.

Hill v. Blake (1884) 97 N. Y. 216, holding that a vendor who had failed to deliver within the time stipulated by the written contract, but had offered to deliver within the time provided by the oral extension could not maintain an action for breach of contract against his vendee for failure to accept the goods sold. The court states that there were no circumstances that would work an estoppel against the defendant. See further, infra, V., especially New York cases.

Pence v. Life (1905) 104 Va. 518, 52 S. E. 257, holding that a contract for the sale of land cannot be modified by a subsequent parol agreement, in the absence of some act as part performance to take it out of the operation of the Statute of Frauds.

A verbal modification of a written agreement for the purchase and sale of goods is invalid under the Statute of Frauds. Schultz v. Bradley (1874) 57 N. Y. 646. By the verbal agreement the parties sought to increase the amount of the goods to be delivered under the contract.

A stipulation in a deed that it was made upon condition that the grantee live with and care for the grantor during the remainder of his life cannot be waived by parol. Culy v. Upham (1903) 135 Mich. 131, 106 Am. St. Rep. 388, 97 N. W. 405.

An existing lease for years cannot be turned into a lease at will by verbal agreement. Den ex dem. Mayberry v. Johnson (1835) 15 N. J. L. 116.

That a purchaser of land cannot be compelled to take and pay for land not embraced within the written contract, but included in a parol agreement, is held in Wigginton v. Ewell (1888) 10 Ky. L. Rep. 383, 9 S. W. 285. In the headnote to the leading English cases, and some American cases, there is announced a more limited rule to the effect that an agreement resting partly in writing and partly in parol cannot be made the basis of an action. But in other English cases the rule is stated as broadly as the foregoing, and in some at least it is expressly held that the oral agreement does not modify the writing, consequently an action may be maintained on such writing; in such an action the oral agreement cannot be shown even defensively. It thus appears that the English cases as a whole support the broad rule of the American cases.

The broad rule above stated has been held to apply and prevent the subsequent oral modification of a term of the contract implied by law. Thus, where the legal import of a contract for the sale of real estate is that the balance of the purchase price is to be paid presently, the parties cannot, by parol agree-case the parol agreement is stated to have been a subsequent agreement. Nothing is said as to this in the opinion, nor is it stated anywhere to have been a modification of the original contract.

The parties to a mortgage cannot, by subsequent parol agreement, substitute lands other than those prescribed in the written instrument, as this would be conveying land by parol. Castro v. Illies (1854) 13 Tex. 220.

A subsequent oral agreement between the parties to a contract for the sale of timber, as to what had been growth of the timber between the date of the contract and of the cutting, is stated in Whitfield v. Rowland Lumber Co. (1910) 152 N. C. 211, 67 S. E. 512, to be an oral conveyance of an interest in realty.

A supplementary verbal contract by which the lessor of a coal mine agreed to pay an additional royalty for the coal mined was held invalid where neither of the parties had taken any action upon it, but the court does not consider this as a modification of the original lease. Crawford v. Wick (1868) 18 Ohio St. 190, 98 Am. Dec. 103, 8 Mor. Min. Rep. 541.

An agreement by a vendor of brick to receive in payment of the brick a certain amount in cash and the balance in two lots cannot, when part of the brick has been delivered, and the purchaser has refused to receive any more, be modified orally by the parties, to the effect that the purchaser should pay for the brick already delivered at the contract price, the purchaser to take one of the lots at the stipulated price, and to pay the balance in cash. The action in this case was brought to secure a conveyance of the lot agreed upon in the oral agreement, and recover the balance of the purchase price. Burns v. Fidelity Real Estate Co. (1892) 52 Minn. 31, 53 N. W. 1017.

A bond for title having been merged in a judgment, it has been held that the bond cannot be reinstated and the judgment disregarded by parol agreement. Scott v. Sanders (1831) 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 506.

It is stated in Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Earle (1876) 33 Mich. 143, that a written insurance policy not within the Statute of Frauds may be changed by parol, thus excepting contracts that are within the Statute of Frauds from such modification.

Where the doctrine prevails that a mortgage is a lien or security only, and not in any sense a title, a parol agreement that a mortgage shall stand as security for a future loan is ineffectual to create a lien to secure such loan; the one loaning the money does not acquire any equitable lien or right to charge the new advance upon the land. Stoddard v. Hart (1861) 23 N. Y. 556. The agreement in this case was contemporaneous with the execution of the mortgage, and is not treated as a subsequent modification of a written agreement.

An oral agreement by the equitable owner of land which has been conveyed to a third person as security for a debt, that the land shall stand as security for still another debt of the equitable owner, is void and unenforceable. Curle v. Eddy (1856) 24 Mo. 117, 66 Am. Dec. 699.

The surplus arising from the sale of real property under deeds of trust given to secure debts described in them cannot be retained as security for debts subsequently made on the strength of a parol engagement. Williams v. Hill (1856) 19 How. (U. S.) 246, 15 L. ed. 570.

But in Re Burns (1909) 171 Fed. 1008, affirmed in (1909) 98 C. C. A. 658, 174 Fed. 1020, where a borrower who had given as security a warranty deed for certain lands, and contemporaneously thereto had taken back from the grantee a bond for title, and who, upon payment of the note given in evidence of the debt, obtained another loan from the grantee, and agreed with him that the deed should stand as security for the larger indebtedness, and with that end in view made certain interlineations in the bond for title, but by inadvertence allowed the sum of money describing the first loan to remain therein, the right of the creditor to a lien upon the land for the larger amount was sustained as against a subsequent creditor of the debtor with notice of the facts.

That the consent of a surety to extend the time of payment of debt need not be in writing, was held in Bandler v. Bradley (1910) 110 Minn. 66, 124 N. W. 644.

See Worden v. Crist, infra, note 113; Doar v. Gibbs (1831) Bail. Eq. 371, infra, note 114; Bullis v. Presidio Min. Co. (1889) 75 Tex. 540, 12 S. W. 397, and Adams v. Hughes, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 140 S. W. 1163, infra, note 128; and Creigh v. Boggs (1881) 19 W. Va. 240, supra, note 8.

ment, fix a subsequent specific time for the payment of the balance.<sup>13</sup>

Some courts thus announcing the doctrine first above stated have applied it to its fullest extent, and sustained an action on the written contract, upon the theory that, the subsequent oral modification being invalid, the written contract is unaffected.<sup>14</sup> But a majority of the cases in which this broad doctrine has been announced have been cases in which the action was upon the contract as modified.<sup>15</sup> The oral modification be-

<sup>13</sup> Hawkins v. Studdard (1909) 132 Ga. 265, 131 Am. St. Rep. 190, 63 S. E. 852. See Giraud v. Richmond (1846) 2 C. B. 835, 135 Eng. Reprint, 1172, 15 L. J. C. P. N. S. 180, 10 Jur. 360, note 17.

<sup>14</sup> Willis v. Fields (1909) 132 Ga. 242, '63 S. E. 828; Pence v. Life (1905) 104 Va. 518, 52 S. E. 259.

Malkan v. Hemming (1909) 82 Conn. 293, 73 Atl. 752, holding that the vendor in a land contract was entitled to judgment in an action for specific performance of the contract as originally written, if the vendees failed to prove the modification in writing. By the alleged modification the vendees were to convey a tract of land, instead of giving their note secured by a mortgage as was provided in the original writing.

Burgett v. Loed (1909) 43 Ind. App. 657, 88 N. E. 346, sustaining an action upon a lease as written and holding invalid an attempted oral modification.

Abell v. Munson (1869) 18 Mich. 306, 100 Am. Dec. 165, holding in an action by a vendee who had paid in full the purchase price for land, to recover damages for not conveying the land according to the terms of the written contract, that the defendant could not show an oral extension of the time of performance for the purpose of showing that he was not in default.

Grand Forks Lumber Co. v. McClure Logging Co. (1908) 103 Minn. 471, 115 N. W. 406, holding that parol evidence was inadmissible to prove that the terms of the contract for the sale of timber had been modified by parol. But see the cases from this jurisdiction, infra.

Warren v. A. B. Mayer Mfg. Co. (1900) 161 Mo. 112, 61 S. W. 644, holding inadmissible parol evidence in an action for breach of contract, to show that the manner of payment had been modified by parol and the plaintiff had not complied with the terms of the modified agreement.

Eepv v. Anderson (1850) 14 Pa. 308, holding that evidence of a subsequent parol agreement cannot be received to alter the terms of a written agreement for the sale of land, in an action of covenant by the vendor to recover a part of the purchase price.

Hanson v. Gunderson (1897) 95 Wis. 613, 70 N. W. 827, holding in an action by an employee against the members of a co-partnership who had contracted by a written agreement relating to the payment of the plaintiff's wages so as to make themselves jointly liable, that evidence of an oral agreement that the partners should be severally liable each for one half of the wages could not be introduced in evidence. L.R.A.1917B.

Reid v. Diamond Plate Glass Co. (1898) 29 C. C. A. 110, 54 U. S. App. 619, 85 Fed. 193, holding incompetent, evidence of a subsequent parol agreement changing the price at which glass was to be delivered and also the amount from that stipulated in a written contract, in an action by the vendor, who had performed according to the written agreement, to recover a balance due on the purchase price.

In Adler v. Friedman (1860) 16 Cal. 138, an action upon a promissory note, the defendant was not allowed to prove a parol agreement reducing the interest. It seems that the interest, even after reduction, was beyond the statutory rate, and under the California statute such a claim must be evidenced by writing, or it is invalid and unenforceable. The court states that the effect of the proof in this case would have been to establish a contract upon which the plaintiff could not recover, that no action could be maintained upon it, and no effect could be given to it as a modification of the terms of the original agreement.

A contract of employment of real estate brokers which by the statute is required to be in writing, and which states the amount of the commissions to be received by the brokers, cannot be modified by parol agreement to take property in payment of the commission. Lincoln Realty Co. v. Garden City Land & Immigration Co. (1913) 94 Neb. 346, 143 N. W. 230, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 392.

In Thill v. Johnston (1910) 60 Wash. 393, 111 Pac. 225, specific performance of a written agreement between the purchasers of property as to division of the property was granted, and the right to show that the contract had been abrogated by a new oral contract denied the defendant.

A parol agreement between lessee and lessor under which the lessee obtained additional space at an increased rental was held not to operate as a waiver, surrender, or cancellation of the prior written lease, in Lamont v. United States Reduction Co. (1915) 191 Ill. App. 446.

See Seymour v. Hughes (1907) 55 Misc. 248, 105 N. Y. Supp. 249, note 61; Carpenter v. Galloway (1881) 73 Ind. 418, note 15.

<sup>15</sup> Augusta Southern R. Co. v. Smith & K. Co. (1899) 106 Ga. 864, 33 S. E. 28; Hill v. Blake (1884) 97 N. Y. 216; Heth v. Wooldridge (1828) 6 Rand. (Va.) 605, 18 Am. Dec. 751.

Malkan v. Hemming (1909) 82 Conn. 293, 73 Atl. 752, holding that a vendor could not maintain an action for specific performance against his vendee upon a written contract for the sale of land as modified by parol.

ing invalid, it cannot, of course, form the basis of an action. It was contended

Simonton v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. (1874) 51 Ga. 76, holding that an insured cannot maintain an action upon an insurance policy for the destruction of goods in a location other than that stipulated in the policy, upon the oral agreement of an agent of the company to change the policy so as to correspond with the new location.

Bradley v. Harter (1901) 156 Ind. 499, 60 N. E. 139, holding that no damages could be recovered of a vendor of real estate upon his oral agreement, subsequently made, to accept other real estate in payment of the purchase price, instead of money as provided in the writing. It was urged in this case that the subsequent oral agreement did not destroy, vary, or contradict the written contract, but simply provided for an additional mode of paying the purchase money for the real estate; that it did not even seek to change altogether the manner of its payment; that the written contract was left intact as to that as well as to its other provisions, and the purchase money could still be paid according to the terms of the written instrument. The court, however, held, as above stated, that the agreement in question amounted to an oral modification and was unenforceable.

Napier Iron Works v. Caldwell & D. Iron Works (1915) — Ind. App. —, 110 N. E. 714, holding that an action in damages for breach of a written contract for the sale of merchandise could not be maintained upon the written contract as modified by a subsequent oral agreement.

Walter v. Victor G. Bloede Co. (1901) 94 Md. 80, 50 Atl. 433, holding that no action could be maintained upon a written contract for the sale of goods as modified by a parol agreement for the extension of time for the delivery of the goods.

Brown v. Sanborn (1875) 21 Minn. 402, holding that a vendor of straw of certain specifications could not show an oral modification of the specifications in an action against his vendee for refusal to accept.

Rucker v. Harrington (1893) 52 Mo. App. 481, holding that a vendor of real estate could not maintain an action for damages for breach of his written contract to give good title as modified by a subsequent oral agreement, upon discovery that he was unable to give good title, that there should be a deduction from the purchase price and a delivery of possession earlier than provided in the written contract, and the purchaser would waive the defect in the title and accept the title as it was.

Ladd v. King (1849) 1 R. L. 224, 51 Am. Dec. 624, holding in an action by a vendor who had not performed within the time stipulated in the written agreement, but who had performed within the time fixed by an oral extension, that parol evidence of the oral agreement was inadmissible.

Beard v. A. A. Gooch & Son (1910) 62 Tex. Civ. App. 69, 130 S. W. 1022, denying to a purchaser of wood from a tenant who had the right to sell wood from a part of L.R.A.1917B.

the land put in cultivation by him, the right to introduce testimony tending to show a subsequent parol agreement between the landlord and tenant by which the latter was authorized to sell the wood although he had not complied with the terms of the written contract, in an action by such purchaser against the landlord for the value of the wood which he alleged had been unlawfully converted by the landlord.

In Carpenter v. Galloway (1881) 73 Ind. 418, an action was brought upon a note given in part payment of a jack. In the contract of purchase the seller agreed to purchase all mules of the jack's getting during that season which complied with certain specifications. This agreement was claimed by the purchaser to have been orally modified by changing the specifications, and for refusal to accept the mules according to the modified agreement the purchaser set up a cross complaint and set-off asking damages for breach of the modified agreement. This relief was denied, the court stating that in case of a contract within the Statute of Frauds it cannot be subsequently modified so as to sustain an action upon the writing as qualified by the oral variation.

A vendee who has failed to make payments as provided in his contract for the purchase of land cannot maintain an action in damages for failure to convey, upon the written contract as modified by oral agreement extending the time of payment and making some new terms as to the manner of payment. Cook v. Bell (1869) 18 Mich. 387.

It is held in Autem v. Mayer Coal Co. (1916) 98 Kan. 379, 158 Pac. 13, that a vendor who has tendered a deed to his vendee for a less estate than that stipulated in the writing is not entitled to recover the purchase price, the court stating: "If we view the case as one in which the parties contracted in writing for one thing, and afterwards agreed orally upon another thing, we encounter the Statute of Frauds."

A real estate broker cannot recover for the sale of a part of an entire tract of land which he was authorized to sell, upon an oral contract modifying the written contract, authorizing him to make sale of the part thus sold. Boyd v. Big Three Ranch Co. (1913) 22 Cal. App. 108, 133 Pac. 623 (obiter).

A mortgage of several lots cannot be affected by a subsequent parol agreement that, upon the payment to the mortgagee of a stated sum for each lot he would release such lot from the mortgage, so as to furnish the basis of an action by a purchaser of such lot from the mortgagor to compel a discharge from the mortgage of the lot thus purchased. Cooper v. Stevens (1815) 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 425.

In Hawkins v. Studdard (1908) 132 Ga. 265, 131 Am. St. Rep. 190, 63 S. E. 852, it is held that an agreement for the sale of land the legal import of which is that the payment for the same was to be made in one case<sup>16</sup> involving a sale of brick in payment of which the vendor was to receive two lots and the balance in cash, that upon an oral modification made after the delivery of part of the brick, that he was to receive one of the lots in question and the balance in cash for the brick then delivered, the original contract remained intact, and that a suit to enforce a conveyance of the lot and recover the balance of the purchase was a suit on the original contract, from which the vendor had merely waived or dropped out the provision as to the conveyance of the other lot. After stating that this is not true in fact, as the vendor claimed and recovered under the new oral agreement a larger money judgment than he would be entitled to under the original contract, the court continues: "It is very clear that the suit is not on the original contract, but upon a new contract made out by incorporating therewith certain oral stipulations varying its terms. If counsel means by 'dropped out' that some of the provisions of the original contract were 'cut off' or 'dropped out' by the subsequent oral agreement of the parties, the Statute of Frauds is still in the way, for it makes no difference whether the modification consists in adding to or subtracting from the terms of a contract. In either case the terms are altered and the contract is a new one." The court further states that the facts alleged and found may show a good reason for the vendor not having performed, and may state a cause of action for damages for the breach of the contract by the defendant, or for compensation in money for the brick which the vendor delivered, "but they do not make out a case entitling him to specific performance. In other words he is not entitled to specific performance of the original contract, because he himself or his assignor has not performed, and he is not entitled to specific performance of the new one because it is void under the statute."

It is sufficient in the cases discussed in the last preceding paragraph, in which the action was based upon the modified contract, to hold merely that no action can be maintained on a contract resting partly in writing and partly in parol where the contract is one required by the statute to be in writing. Some cases of this kind announce this limited rule<sup>17</sup> presently cannot be modified by a subsequent parol agreement fixing the time for payment.

In Jarman v. Westbrook (1910) 134 Ga. 19, 67 S. E. 403, the owner of land had written a letter to a prospective purchaser offering to sell for a stated price if accepted, and the deal closed within a stated time. Before the time limited the prospective purchaser verbally accepted the proposal and agreed to meet the owner of the land at a date later than that stipulated in the written proposal for the purpose of closing the trade. Upon the refusal of the owner to complete the transaction, an action was brought for the specific performance of the contract. In holding that the action could not be maintained, the court states that the parol agreement that the parties should meet on a day subsequent to the time limited in the written option, and there close the trade on terms different from those stated in the written option, does not entitle the plaintiff to specific performance. "The Statute of Frauds requires that a contract for the sale of an interest in lands shall be in writing, and any modification of a written contract required by law to be in writing must also be in writing in order to be valid."

It is not clear that there was a subsequent modification in Randolph v. Frick (1892) 50 Mo. App. 275, but the case is discussed as though there had been one, and it is stated that a contract within the Statute of Frauds cannot be modified by a subsequent oral agreement so as to be enforceable.

The plaintiff who brought the action for damages sought to excuse his nonperformance of the terms of the contract by the oral agreement.

The action in Moore v. Collier (1910) 133 Ga. 762, 66 S. E. 1080, was apparently for breach of the written contract as modified by parol, but no report of this case appears, and it is not clear that this was the fact.

<sup>16</sup> Burns v. Fidelity Real Estate Co. (1892) 52 Minn. 31, 53 N. W. 1017. And see Bradley v. Harter (1901) 156 Ind. 499, 60 N. E. 139, note 15.

<sup>17</sup> BONICAMP v. STARBUCK, ante, 141; Price v. McDowell (1915) — Okla. —, 153 Pac. 649; Dana v. Hancock (1858) 30 Vt. 616; Goss v. Nugent (1833) 5 Barn. & Ad. 58, 110 Eng. Reprint, 713, 2 Nev. & M. 28, 2 L. J. K. B. N. S. 127; Harvey v. Grabham (1836) 5 Ad. & El. 60, 111 Eng. Reprint, 1089, 2 H. & W. 146, 6 Nev. & M. 154, 5 L. J. K. B. N. S. 235. The court here treats the acts of the parties as an attempt at waiver of the written provision, but holds that a waiver by parol is not binding.

The rule is stated in Emmet v. Dewhurst (1851) 3 Macn. & G. 587, 42 Eng. Reprint, 386, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 497, 15 Jur. 1115, that an agreement within the Statute of Frauds "must be in writing, and any alteration of it must also be in writing." That case, however, relies upon Goss v. Nugent as authority for its statement. The rule is stated thus broadly in Peters v. Hamilton (1879) 19 N. B. 284, but reliance is placed upon the English cases.

A contract of hiring within the Statute without stating the broad general proposition, that a contract required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing cannot be modified by parol. Consequently, where an action at law is based upon the contract as modified by parol, the action must fail because the agreement is not all in writing.<sup>18</sup> It is stated in the early case of Goss v. Nugent that in such a situation "the written contract is not that which is sought to be enforced; it is a new contract which the parties have entered into, and that new contract is to be proved partly by the former written agreement and partly by the new verbal agreement the . . . contract, therefore, is not a contract entirely in writing." This is true whether the modification consists of a part of the contract which is itself required to be in of Frauds because not to be performed within a year, which is construed to require the salary thereby agreed to be paid at the end of every year, though not so expressly providing, cannot be modified by a subsequent oral agreement of the parties that the salary shall be paid quarterly, so as to entitle the servant to recover on the quarterly basis. Giraud v. Richmond (1846) 2 C. B. 835, 135 Eng. Reprint, 1172, 15 L. J. C. P. N. S. 180, 10 Jur. 360.

See Hawks v. Studdard (1908) 132 Ga. 265, 131 Am. St. Rep. 190, 63 S. E. 852, note 13.

Some of the English cases above referred to point out that the English Statute of Frauds does not require all contracts or agents concerning the sale of land to be in writing, but provides merely that no action shall be brought unless the contract is in writing.

In Hoadly v. McLaine (1834) 10 Bing. 485, 131 Eng. Reprint, 982, 4 Moore & S. 340, 3 L. J. C. P. N. S. 162, it is held that a carriage maker could recover the price of a carriage although a great number of alterations and additions were made from time to time from those stipulated in the written agreement. Gaselee, J., states that "unless we establish as a general principle that every alteration introduced in the progress of an executory contract is to constitute a distinct bargain requiring a distinct note in writing, I am of opinion that there is no variance in this case, and that there has been a sufficient memorandum of the contract."

<sup>18</sup> Goss v. Nugent (1833) 5 Barn. & Ad. 58, 110 Eng. Reprint, 713, 2 Nev. & M. 28, 2 L. J. K. B. N. S. 127, holding that a vendor who had agreed to make good title to the lots which were the subject of the sale could not recover a balance on the purchase price where he was unable to make good title to one of the lots, although the purchaser agreed to waive the necessity of a good title as to this lot, and the vendor afterwards delivered possession of the whole of the lots to the purchaser, which he accepted, but refused to pay a balance due on the purchase money, and relied on the objection to the title.

Price v. McDowell (1915) — Okla. —, 153 Pac. 649, holding that a vendee of real estate who had made a cash payment on the contract could not, upon tendering performance according to the contract as modified by a subsequent oral agreement and refusal of the vendor to accept such tender, recover the cash payment.

See BONICAMP v. STARBUCK, ante, 141.

A vendee cannot recover for breach of a written contract to convey real estate, where the written contract required a survey to be made by a named person, and the survey was made by another person who was substituted by oral agreement. Dana v. Hancock (1858) 30 Vt. 616.

A purchaser of goods to be delivered at a stated date who has orally agreed to extend the time for delivery cannot recover in assumpsit for damages for breach of the contract of his vendor to deliver upon the day agreed, by parol, where he declared upon the writing as modified by the parol agreement. Stead v. Dawber (1839) 10 Ad. & El. 57, 113 Eng. Reprint, 22, 2 Perry & D. 447, 9 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 101. See further discussion of this case, infra.

Upon the authority of Stead v. Dawber, it is held in Marshall v. Lynn (1840) 6 Mees. & W. 109, 151 Eng. Reprint, 342, 9 L. J. Exch. N. S. 126, that a written agreement under § 17 of the Statute of Frauds, for the sale of goods, to be sent by a ship on a certain voyage, cannot be modified subsequently by parol to the effect that the goods are to be sent by the ship on a subsequent voyage. The vendor was accordingly denied recovery for nonacceptance of the goods. Referring to the case of Stead v. Dawber, the court states that "it does not appear to proceed altogether upon the time being an essential part of the contract, but on the ground that the contract itself, whatever be its terms if it be such as the law recognizes as a contract, cannot be varied by parol."

See Clark v. Fey (1890) 121 N. Y. 470, 24 N. E. 703, infra, note 23.

An action of covenant on articles of agreement by which the plaintiff undertook to build certain houses for the defendant on or before a certain time, which alleges that the houses were finished on that time, is not sustained by proof of a parol agreement that the time might be extended, and that the whole work was finished before the expiration of the extended time. Littler v. Holland (1790) 3 T. R. 590, 100 Eng. Reprint, 749.

But in Thresh v. Rake (1793) 1 Esp. (Eng.) 55, a declaration in an action brought to recover a penalty for the breach of a special agreement to assign premises upon a consideration to be determined by a writing,<sup>19</sup> or of a part which might have been good of itself without writing.<sup>20</sup>

This rule has been held to apply in equity in the absence of fraud,<sup>21</sup> and to prevent the court granting relief on a contract by way of specific performance in favor of one who has not complied with the conditions of the writing, but fair appraisement made on a certain date, that the appraisement was made and performance generally had on the part of the plaintiff, was held supported, although the evidence showed that the appraisement had been delayed through the fault of the defendant and performance on the agreed day waived by his agents.

<sup>19</sup> Goss v. Nugent (Eng.) supra, the opinion, however, is not based upon the fact that an essential part of the contract was involved, but it is stated: "But our opinion is not formed upon the stipulation about the title being an essential part of the agreement, but upon the general effect and meaning of the Statute of Frauds, and that the contract now brought forward by the plaintiff is not wholly a contract in writing."

It is stated in Marshall v. Lynn (1840) 6 Mees. & W. 109, 151 Eng. Reprint, 342, 9 L. J. Exch. N. S. 126, that it is unnecessary to inquire what are the essential parts of the contract and what not, since every part of the contract in regard to which the parties are stipulating must be taken to be material.

<sup>20</sup> Harvey v. Grabham (1836) 5 Ad. & El. 61, 111 Eng. Reprint, 1089. In this case there had been an agreement to give a lease, the lessee to pay for straw, fodder, chaff, etc., that was on the premises at the beginning of the lease, the value thereof to be determined by arbitrators in the usual way. Subsequent to the agreement, the lessee entered upon possession of the premises and also of the straw, etc. It was subsequently proposed by the lessee that the value of the straw, etc., be determined by a stated individual, instead of the arbitrators, as provided in the agreement. This was assented to by the lessor, and the appraisement made by the individual agreed upon. The action was one to recover the value as appraised, the lessor stating that he was ready to grant the lease upon the terms agreed upon and upon the payment to him of the amount of the appraisal. The second count was indebitatus assumpsit for goods and chattels bargained and sold, under and by virtue of which the defendant had taken the same to his own use. In holding that there could be no recovery of the amount of the appraisal, the court states that "here that part might have been good of itself without writing by reason of the acceptance which is averred in the first count, though it may be otherwise as to the second count, which is for goods bargained and sold, not sold and delivered, and it is contended that as it was competent to the parties to have made two contracts in the first instance—one in sought to excuse nonperformance by an oral variation.

In the case of Cuff v. Penn,<sup>22</sup> a case that has frequently been cited in support of the theory that the Statute of Frauds does not prevent the subsequent modification by parol of a written contract, a vendor at the request of the pur-writing as to the lease; the other not in writing as to the straw, manure, etc.,—so it was competent to them afterwards by agreement not in writing to separate into two parts the subject-matters of the original agreement, and to substitute a new agreement not in writing as to the straw, manure, etc. We think that is not so, but that the agreement, being entire in the first instance, must so continue, and that it cannot be separated or altered otherwise than by writing. . . . It was attempted to be argued that the original agreement was performed, inasmuch as one person named by mutual consent might be considered as 'competent persons' respectively appointed by the parties, but we think that this construction cannot reasonably be put on the words of the agreement, neither has the plaintiff attempted so to treat it, for he has both in his first count and in his replication to the second plea expressly alleged a waiver of and substitution for, and not a compliance with, the original agreement."

But see Stark v. Wilson (1814) 3 Bibb (Ky.) 476, note 50; Dana v. Hancock (1858) 30 Vt. 616, note 18.

<sup>21</sup> Emmet v. Dewhurst (1851) 3 Macn. & G. 587, 42 Eng. Reprint, 386, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 497, 15 Jur. 1115, refusing specific performance to a creditor to compel a guarantor to execute a writing as agreed by him, where the creditor had not complied with the conditions of the writing within the time prescribed. The court states: "It is clear that at law such an agreement as this, namely, to pay the debt of another person, cannot be made, and cannot be varied, by parol, and in this court, unless there be fraud, the same rule prevails."

A written agreement for a lease cannot be subsequently modified by parol changing the time at which the term is to commence. Jordan v. Sawkins (1791) 1 Ves. Jr. 402, 30 Eng. Reprint, 407. The term of the lease was stipulated to be for twenty-one years to commence from April; by the modification it was sought to make the lease commence in June. The court states that if the second agreement had been that the lease should commence from June and continue not for twenty-one years absolutely, but for twenty-one years to determine in April, it would have been good, because that would have been no variation, but only waiving a part of the lease. The action was one to enforce specific performance of the agreement with the variations.

<sup>22</sup> (1813) 1 Maule & S. 21, 105 Eng. Reprint, 8.

chaser forbore to deliver goods for some time, but at length informed the purchaser that he had exceeded a reasonable time and requested him to name a time for delivery. Upon refusal of the purchaser to accept the goods an action of assumpsit was brought for nonacceptance. In the second count of the declaration the agreement extending the time for the delivery of the goods is set up and relied upon. Two distinct objections were taken by the defendant to the introduction of parol evidence,—one, that the case involved a written contract for the sale and purchase of goods, and could not be varied by parol; second, that if the subsequent parol agreement was to be considered not as varying the written contract, but as substituting a new one in its place, then it was void by the Statute of Frauds, there being neither a part acceptance nor a part payment under it. The court disposes of the second objection by stating that, by the express provision of the Statute of Frauds, it is only necessary, in order to make a contract for the sale of goods binding upon the parties, that there should be either a note or memorandum of the bargain in writing, or, if there be no writing, that there should be a part payment by way of earnest or a part acceptance of the goods. It is then stated that in the case there existed two indicia pointed out by the statute, namely, a contract for sale in writing and a part performance, so that not only the literal intention, but the spirit also of the statute, was satisfied. The court concludes: "The objection then does not found itself upon a noncompliance with the provisions of that statute, but is more properly this, that an agreement once made in writing cannot be varied by parol." In answering this objection, the court states that what has been done is only in performance of the original contract; that the contract remained, consequently the modification does not violate this rule. It thus appears that the effect of the Statute of Frauds upon the subsequent parol modification of a contract required by the statute to be in writing was not considered in this case in the light in which it is now regarded as affecting contracts. But, whatever may have been the theory of Cuff v. Penn, it is clearly established by subsequent English cases that an oral modification of a written contract within the Statute of Frauds is unenforceable. Some of the English cases expressly state that Cuff v. Penn is overruled by the later cases.

Where the modification consists of an extension of the time for performance, the English cases at first followed the rule of Goss v. Nugent. Thus, it has been held that a creditor cannot compel specific performance by a guarantor of the debtor, of his agreement to execute a guaranty, where the creditor has not complied with the conditions of the agreement within the time prescribed.<sup>23</sup> Any oral agreement extending the time is ineffectual. So, a purchaser of a leasehold interest in land may recover an advance payment where the vendor defaulted in performance on the day stipulated in the writing, notwithstanding an oral agreement to extend time. Evidence of the oral agreement is held inadmissible.<sup>24</sup> A purchaser of goods who has orally extended the time for the delivery thereof cannot subsequently recover damages for nondelivery, where the oral extension amounts to the substitution of a new contract for the written one, the same in all respects as the written one except as to the delivery of the goods and payment therefor.<sup>25</sup> But it has been held in England that an action upon the written agreement for failure to accept goods, by a vendor who at the request of

<sup>23</sup> Emmet v. Dewhurst (Eng.) supra.

<sup>24</sup> Stowell v. Robinson (1837) 3 Bing. N. C. 928, 132 Eng. Reprint, 668.

At the day agreed upon neither of the parties was ready to carry the contract into effect, not only on account of objections that were taken to the title, which were then in a course of being removed, but also because the brokers had not completed their valuation at that time. Subsequently to the day agreed upon, both the parties were endeavoring to procure the license from the ground landlord for the assignment of the lease. Some objection being raised on this ground, the purchaser wrote the vendor that he considered the contract at an end, and demanded a return of the deposit. Within a few days after this letter, and within what appears to the court to be a reasonable time for that purpose. the objection would have been met, "so that the question, as was before stated, is this, Can the day for the completion of the purchase of an interest in land inserted in a written contract be waived by a parol agreement, and another day be substituted in its place, so as to bind the parties? and we are of opinion that it cannot." The court states that this "is virtually and substantially to allow an action to be brought on an agreement relating to the sale of land partly in writing signed by the parties, and partly not in writing, but by parol only, and amounts to a contravention of the Statute of Frauds."
I.R.A.1917B.

<sup>25</sup> Stead v. Dawber (1839) 10 Ad. & El.

the purchaser allowed delivery of the goods sold to stand over, cannot be defeated by showing the oral agreement.<sup>25</sup> The court states that the plaintiff is not attempting to enforce any verbal agreement, but is suing on the original agreement, which is in writing.

The distinction between Stead v. Dawber<sup>26</sup> and Hickman v. Haynes<sup>27</sup> is an elusive one, and rests more in the theory of the respective actions in these cases than in any difference in facts between them. The distinction as expressed by the court in Hickman v. Haynes is perhaps as logical a one as can be made, and is as follows: "In Stead v. Dawber there was a written agreement for the delivery of goods on a particular day and a subsequent verbal agreement for their delivery on a later specified day, and the court came to the conclusion that the parties intended to substitute the later verbal agreement for the previous written agreement; but in the case now before the court there was no fresh agreement at all for the delivery of the twenty-five tons, which can be regarded as having been substituted for the original written contract. There was nothing more than a waiver by the defendants of a delivery by the plaintiff in June of the last twenty-five tons of iron; and it should seem that in Stead v. Dawber the court would have been in favor of the plaintiff if they had come to the conclusion that there had been no substitution of one agreement for another." In Hickman v. Haynes, the extension of time was granted at the request of the defendant purchaser, and the breach alleged in the action by the vendor was a refusal to accept the goods at the time agreed upon in the written contract. In a subsequent case, the court speaks of such a situation, and states that "where the vendor, being ready to deliver within the agreed time, is shewn to have withheld his offer to deliver until after the agreed time, in consequence of a request to him to do so made by the vendee before the expiration of the agreed time, and where, after the expiration of the agreed time and within a reasonable time, the vendor proposes to deliver and the vendee refuses to accept, the vendor can recover damages. He can properly aver and prove that he was ready and willing to deliver according to the terms of the original contract. . . . In such case it is said that the original contract is unaltered, and that the arrangement has reference only to the mode of performing it. But if the alteration of the period of delivery were made at the request of the vendor, though such request were made during the agreed period for delivery, so that the vendor would be obliged if he sued for nonacceptance of an offer to deliver after the agreed period to rely upon the assent of the vendee to his request, he could not aver and prove that he was ready and willing to deliver according to the terms of the original contract. The statement shews that he was not. He would be driven to rely on the assent of the vendee to a substituted time of delivery, that is to say, to an altered contract or a new contract. This he cannot do so as to enforce his claim."<sup>28</sup>

But the English cases have gone farther than to hold merely that no action can be maintained on an agreement resting partly in writing and partly in parol. It has been expressly held that the written agreement is not rescinded by an oral one extending the time for the performance thereof, or modifying it in some other particular; consequently an 57, 113 Eng. Reprint, 22, 2 Perry & D. 447, 9 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 101.

See Marshall v. Lynn (1840) 6 Mees. & W. 109, 151 Eng. Reprint, 342, 9 L. J. Exch. N. S. 126, where there was what amounted to a substituted contract.

<sup>26</sup> Hickman v. Haynes (1875) L. R. 10 C. P. (Eng.) 598.

The court, after reviewing the English cases, concludes that "the result of these cases appears to be that neither a plaintiff nor a defendant can at law avail himself of a parol agreement to vary or enlarge the time for performing a contract previously entered into in writing, and required so to be by the Statute of Frauds. But so far as this principle has any application to the present case, it appears to us rather to preclude the defendants from setting up an agreement to enlarge the time for delivery in answer to the plaintiffs' demand, than to prevent the plaintiff from suing on the original contract for a breach of it."

every in answer to the plaintiffs' demand, than to prevent the plaintiff from suing on the original contract for a breach of it."

<sup>28</sup> Plevins v. Downing (1876) L. R. 1 C. P. (Eng.) 220, 45 L. J. C. P. N. S. 695, 35 L. T. N. S. 263. It was accordingly held in this case that a vendor who had failed to deliver the goods at the time stipulated in the writing could not recover damages for nonacceptance thereof upon the strength of a subsequent oral agreement. The court states that, in such a situation, the vendors are logically driven to rely upon the subsequent requests of the purchaser either as a proposed alteration of a term of the original contract, or as a request upon which to hang a new contract to accept; but as the request was merely verbal, the undertaking sought to be founded on it cannot be enforced.

action may be maintained thereon.<sup>30</sup> See comment upon the English cases in the first paragraph of this subdivision.

In an action for specific performance in which the complainant admitted the subsequent modifications and asked to have specific performance of the modified agreement if the defendant so elected, or, if not, for specific performance of the original agreement, the complainant was held entitled to the relief asked.<sup>31</sup> But it has been held in England that variations in a written contract that have been acted upon, so that the original agreement can no longer be enforced without injury to one party, bar an action for specific performance of the original agreement.<sup>32</sup>

The rule that the Statute of Frauds prevents the oral modification of a writing has been applied in case of a writing which is insufficient under the statute.<sup>33</sup> The courts have failed to discriminate between two entirely different things in this connection. It is one thing to supply an omission from a writing which, because of such omission, fails to comply with the requirements of the Statute of Frauds, and another thing to modify a contract that has been put in writing so as to comply with the statute. This is true although the part sought to be supplied to perfect the defective writing is that agreed upon subsequently. In other words, where the parties have entered into an agreement required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing, and have failed to put sufficient of the

But in Marshall v. Lynn (Eng.) supra, a vendor who was seeking to recover in assumpsit for nonacceptance of goods sold alleged that he was ready and willing to deliver upon the time fixed in the writing, and tendered and offered to perform at that time, but, at the request of the purchaser, delayed performance according to an oral agreement. Recovery was denied in this case.

<sup>30</sup> Noble v. Ward (1866) L. R. 1 Exch. (Eng.) 117, 4 Hurlst & C. 149, 35 L. J. Exch. N. S. 81, 12 Jur. N. S. 167, 13 L. T. N. S. 639, 14 Week. Rep. 397, holding that a vendor of goods might maintain an action upon the written contract although there had been an oral agreement extending the time for the performance thereof. It is stated that the declaration was framed so as to fit either the written agreement or the oral agreement, and that the goods were tendered by the vendor to the purchaser in time for either of those contracts. The action was one for damages for nonacceptance. This case was affirmed upon appeal (1867) L.R.A. 2 Exch. 135, 36 L. J. Exch. N. S. 91, 15 L. T. N. S. 672, 15 Week. Rep. 520.

<sup>31</sup> Vezey v. Rashleigh [1904] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 834, 90 L. T. N. S. 663, 73 L. J. Ch. N. S. 422, 52 Week. Rep. 442, holding that an agreement to execute a lease cannot be subsequently varied by parol.

And a subsequent oral agreement that goods shipped by a certain vessel should be received by the purchaser from the warehouse, instead of the quay, as provided in the written agreement, is invalid, consequently, in an action by the purchaser against his vendor for failure to deliver, the sufficiency of the delivery cannot be in question where the only attempt at delivery was made from the warehouse. Moore v. Campbell (1854) 10 Exch. (Eng.) 323, 2 C. L. R. 1084, 23 L. J. Exch. N. S. 310. The court states that, if the purchaser had accepted and received the goods from the warehouse, or even the delivery or transfer order which was offered as a performance of the contract on the vendor's L.R.A.1917B.

part, there would have been a good answer to the action by way of accord and satisfaction, but, there being no such acceptance, no such question arises in the case. A broker who is held to have acted solely for the purchaser in the transaction requested the goods to be warehoused on the purchaser's account, and the refusal to accept the warehouse orders tendered by the vendor was based upon a discrepancy in the description therein of the amount of the goods.

<sup>32</sup> Robinson v. Page (1826) 3 Russ. Ch. 119, 38 Eng. Reprint, 519, 27 Revised Rep. 26.

<sup>33</sup> Legal v. Miller (1750) 2 Ves. Sr. 299, 28 Eng. Reprint, 193; Price v. Dyer (1810) 17 Ves. Jr. 363, 34 Eng. Reprint, 137, 11 Revised Rep. 102.

<sup>34</sup> Arky v. F. W. Brockman Commission Co. (1914) 185 Mo. App. 241, 170 S. W. 353, after stating that the memorandum was insufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, the court continues: "But, as we have said, plaintiff's case proceeds upon the theory of a subsequent oral agreement modifying the prior one evidenced by the memorandum." The court, referring to Rucker v. Harrington (1893) 52 Mo. App. 481, states that it is well settled in this state at least that a contract which the Statute of Frauds requires to be in writing may not be modified or varied by a subsequent oral agreement. It was accordingly held in the case that a memorandum for the sale of goods which was insufficient under the Statute of Frauds could not be modified by a subsequent agreement as to the terms of payment.

See BONICAMP v. STARBUCK, ante, 141.

In Whiteaker v. Vanschoiack (1873) 5 Or. 113, the court refused specific performance of an agreement for the exchange of land where the original written agreement contained an insufficient description of land, and the subsequent oral agreement introduced new terms into the contract and added to and perfected the description of the land. There were other objections, however, to the specific enforcement of the contract in this case.

agreement in writing to comply with the statute, there is no enforceable contract. Any subsequent oral modification the parties agree upon is ineffective because there is no enforceable contract to be modified. It seems unnecessary, therefore, to consider the subsequent agreement, because, it being admitted that the oral agreement is merely supplementary, and there being no enforceable agreement to be supplemented, the oral agreement must necessarily be of no effect.

2. Application as dependent upon character of modification.

In a large number of cases the character of the modification is not considered; the rule is applied without reference thereto. It has seemed advisable to show in a general way the character of modifications to which the rule has been applied. No attempt has been made, however, to make this treatment exhaustive of the cases which have not made a point of the character of the modification. The rule has been applied and held to prevent: An oral reduction in the rate of interest on a promissory note where such a claim must be evidenced by writing;<sup>34</sup> an oral modification of the provision in an insurance policy as to the location of insured goods;<sup>35</sup> an oral modification of the time for payment of premiums on a life insurance policy;<sup>36</sup> an oral modification of a logging contract as to the timber included therein;<sup>37</sup> an oral extension of the time for the performance of a written agreement;<sup>38</sup> an oral modification of the terms of a written contract for the sale of chattels as to the chattels to be delivered thereunder;<sup>39</sup> an oral modification of the specifications of mules which were the subject of sale,<sup>40</sup> or the specification of straw;<sup>41</sup> an oral agreement that a lease for saloon purposes should not be enforced if lessee failed to obtain the necessary license to carry on the saloon business;<sup>42</sup> an oral modification of a written lease by the terms of which the lessee was allowed to sell or dispose of any wood or timber standing upon any part of the premises which he put in cultivation, so that the lessee could sell the wood although he had not complied with the terms of the written agreement;<sup>43</sup> an oral modification of the manner of making payment for goods purchased;<sup>44</sup> an oral agreement between vendor and vendees that payment was to be made in land instead of note and mortgage as provided in writing,<sup>45</sup> or instead of money;<sup>46</sup> an oral modification, upon discovery that vendor could not give good title, to deduct a certain sum from the purchase price and accept the title as it was found.<sup>47</sup>

In some jurisdictions the validity of the subsequent oral modification is dependent upon the character thereof. It has been held that a mere oral extension of time for performance is valid,<sup>48</sup> but if the subsequent oral agreement involves more than a mere extension of time it is not.<sup>49</sup>

So, where the vendor's title to part of

<sup>34</sup> Adler v. Friedman (1860) 16 Cal. 138.

<sup>35</sup> Simonton v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. (1874) 51 Ga. 76.

<sup>36</sup> Mitchell v. Universal L. Ins. Co. (1875) 54 Ga. 289.

<sup>37</sup> Grand Forks Lumber Co. v. McClure Logging Co. (1908) 103 Minn. 471, 115 N. W. 406.

<sup>38</sup> Hawkins v. Studdard (1908) 132 Ga. 265, 131 Am. St. Rep. 190, 63 S. E. 852 (time implied by law); Napier Iron Works v. Caldwell & D. Iron Works (1916) — Ind. App. —, 110 N. E. 714; Walter v. Victor G. Bloede Co. (1901) 94 Md. 80, 50 Atl. 433; Abell v. Munson (1869) 18 Mich. 306, 100 Am. Dec. 165; Cook v. Bell (1809) 18 Mich. 387. See Jarman v. Westbrook (1910) 134 Ga. 19, 67 S. E. 403, infra; Ladd v. King (1849) 1 R. I. 224, 51 Am. Dec. 624. But see subdivision V. as to the validity of a subsequent agreement extending time.

<sup>39</sup> Willis v. Fields (1908) 132 Ga. 242, 63 S. E. 828.

<sup>40</sup> Carpenter v. Galloway (1881) 73 Ind. 418, see infra.

<sup>41</sup> A provision in a contract for the purchase of flax straw, that the straw "be delivered in a dry condition and free from L.R.A.1917B.

grass, weeds, and all foreign substances, cannot be modified by parol by waiving the condition or provision that the straw must be free from weeds, and agreeing to receive the same under the contract notwithstanding its weedy condition. Brown v. Sanborn (1875) 21 Minn. 402.

<sup>42</sup> Burgett v. Loeb (1908) 43 Ind. App. 667, 88 N. E. 346.

<sup>43</sup> Beard v. A. A. Gooch & Son (1910) 62 Tex. Civ. App. 69, 130 S. W. 1022.

<sup>44</sup> Warren v. A. B. Mayer Mfg. Co. (1900) 161 Mo. 112, 61 S. W. 644.

<sup>45</sup> Malkan v. Hemming (1909) 82 Conn. 293, 73 Atl. 752.

<sup>46</sup> Bradley v. Harter (1900) 156 Ind. 499, 60 N. E. 139.

<sup>47</sup> Rucker v. Harrington (1892) 52 Mo. App. 481.

<sup>48</sup> See infra, subdiv. V. But see Welch v. McIntosh (1913) 89 Kan. 47, 130 Pac. 641, infra, note 83, and Autem v. Mayer Coal Co. (1916) — Kan. —, 158 Pac. 13, note 15.

<sup>49</sup> Banister v. Fallis (1911) 85 Kan. 320, 116 Pac. 822. It is stated that the agreement produced a new condition which not only became essential to any conveyance at all, but which was regarded and is still re-

the land had failed, and it was agreed that appraisers should value that part, and the parties orally substituted other appraisers, who valued the land to the mutual satisfaction of both parties, whereupon the purchaser took possession and has held possession since, and the vendor paid the balance which fell due the purchaser according to the valuation thus made, the objection of the Statute of Frauds was held not available to the vendor;<sup>50</sup> the court stating that "it cannot, however, be admitted that the agreement comes within the statute. It is in writing and signed by the parties, and, though the parties thereto by subsequent parol agreement substituted other valuers to ascertain the value of the land, that arrangement cannot affect the right of [the purchaser] to a conveyance of the land agreed to be conveyed by the written agreement. The subsequent parol agreement did not alter the rights of the parties under the written contract, but only related to and regulated the manner of ascertaining the value of the land. We are of opinion, therefore, the agreement does not come within the statute." Specific performance was accordingly allowed the vendee to compel the conveyance by the vendor according to the agreement.

In other cases in which the oral modification is held invalid, it is pointed out that the modification involved was of an essential particular of the contract.<sup>51</sup> If the oral modification is as to a matter which is not required by the statute to be in writing, it has been held good.<sup>52</sup> The court in a case involving a sale of timber reasons thus: "While the sale of timber was necessarily reduced to writing, and the parties incorporated into the writing other subsidiary or incidental agreements, yet the force of the established by the plaintiff as indispensable to the vesting of title in him. Under these circumstances the oral agreement constituted a modification of a written contract for the sale of land, and was itself an agreement for the sale and conveyance of an interest in land, and hence was unenforceable because not in writing.

See Barton v. Gray (1865) 57 Mich. 622, 24 N. W. 638, note 114; McConathy v. Latham (1903) 116 Ky. 735, 76 S. W. 535, note 120.

<sup>50</sup> Stark v. Wilson (1814) 3 Bibb (Ky.) 476.

<sup>51</sup> Heisley v. Swanstrom (1889) 40 Minn. 196, 41 N. W. 1029, holding that a stipulation in a contract for the sale of land that if the title of the vendor is not good, and cannot be made good, the agreement shall be void, and the vendor shall not be liable for any damage except to return the cash payment made, cannot be orally modified by an agreement of the vendor that if the vendee would wait, and not buy other land, the vendor would deliver the land in question, and, if he failed to do so, would pay all damages, so as to entitle the vendee to damages.

Ibid. The rights of third parties intervened in this case. Apparently the oral agreement was made after the time for the delivery of the deed in the original contract had expired, but no point is made of this beyond the mere statement of the fact.

But see Scheerschmidt v. Smith (1898) 74 Minn. 224, 77 N. W. 34, infra.

It is stated in the case that it is "undoubtedly competent for the parties to waive a forfeiture or strict performance as to time, and to consent to performance of the contract in a modified form, so that such substituted performance should stand as a fulfillment of the same by virtue of the acts of the parties . . . but the supplemental contract relied on in this case to establish a valid legal claim for damages subsisting against [the vendor] in favor of [the vendee] . . . was a modification of the original contract in an essential particular by substituting a new and independent stipulation therein." Heisley v. Swanstrom (Minn.) supra. It has been expressly held in this jurisdiction that an oral extension of time does not become a part of the contract. See Scheerschmidt v. Smith (Minn.) infra.

Hanson v. Gunderson (1897) 95 Wis. 613, 70 N. W. 827, holding that a written contract relating to the payment of an employee's wages which by implication of law was joint in its obligation, and not several, could not be modified by a subsequent oral agreement to the effect that each of the partners should pay one half the wages. The court states that "this change would affect the contract in an essential particular, in which, by its terms, it was not to be performed within a year. An oral agreement covering that particular is void by the express terms of the statute."

<sup>52</sup> Murray v. Boyd (915) 165 Ky. 625, 177 S. W. 468, holding that the provision in a written agreement for the sale of timber that it shall be branded within a certain time may be waived by parol.

Rank v. Garvey (1902) 66 Neb. 767, 92 N. W. 1026, 99 N. W. 666, holding that the written authority required by a statute to authorize a real estate broker to sell land might be modified by parol as to the price of the land, since the price at which the agent is authorized to sell is not required to be contained in the writing. This case is approved in Furse v. Lambert (1910) 85 Neb. 739, 124 N. W. 146, a case involving the modification of the price in a written authorization for the sale of real estate. The rule of these cases was extended in Hetzel v. Lyon (1910) 87 Neb. 261, 126 N. W. 997, to authorize a parol extension contract of sale was not affected by the other conditions, and a subsequent parol agreement with reference to them cannot properly be said to be within the Statute of Frauds. To illustrate, if one by written contract sells a certain boundary of land, and the contract provides for a subsequent survey to ascertain the boundary before payment is required, a subsequent parol agreement for the sale of more land would be within the Statute of Frauds and, therefore, not enforceable. But if the subsequent agreement merely postponed the time of payment, or waived or rescinded the agreement for survey, there is no reason why that character of agreement would not be binding; since the Statute of Frauds does not require agreements in relation to such subjects to be in writing. If the parol modification would otherwise be enforceable, its validity is not affected although it is incident to a written contract which concerns a subject that the law requires shall be in writing."<sup>53</sup>

On the contrary the law has been declared "to be well settled that an oral variation of the written contract within the Statute of Frauds, though made in respect of a particular which might, if standing alone, be good by parol, cannot be available as a part of the contract, so long as the whole contract embracing that which is required to be in writing as well as that which is not remains execof the time for the performance of a real estate broker's contract which contained a limitation of the time of its continuance, the court stating that the statute does not require that the time for the existence of the agent's authority to sell be stated in the written contract, and therefore that one of the provisions that may be modified by parol. The commission of the broker cannot be changed by parol, see Lincoln Realty Co. v. Garden City Land & Immigration Co. (1913) 94 Neb. 346, 143 N. W. 230, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 392, infra, note 61.

In Sizemore v. Bowling (1909) — Ky. —, 115 S. W. 737, a vendor and purchaser, upon discovery of the purchaser that he was unable to take and pay for all the land covered by the purchase, agreed orally that he should take a part of the land and pay for the same a sum then agreed upon. He had gone into possession under the written agreement, and after the new agreement remained in possession of the part of the land retained under and by virtue of his entry under the written contract. In an action by the vendor to recover a balance due on the purchase price and have it adjudged a lien on the land, the purchaser pleaded the Statute of Frauds, on the theory, however, that the written contract had been canceled, and that a new contract had been entered into for the purchase of a part of the land. The court denied this contention, holding that it was a modification, and, having so held, sustained the action for the purchase price without much discussion of the effect of the Statute of Frauds upon the right to thus modify the contract. It is stated, however, that "the contract under which Sizemore [the purchaser] holds the land is the written contract . . . as modified by the verbal agreement. . . . This being so, the contract of 1884 [the verbal one] was not within the Statute of Frauds."

A parol agreement between the parties to an oil lease, reducing the amount of the royalty to the lessor upon discovery that the land did not produce oil sufficient to pay for operating the same at the royalty L.R.A.1917B.

prescribed in the lease, in pursuance of which verbal agreement the lessee drilled, equipped, and put in operation additional wells at a considerable expense, and tendered the landowner the royalty agreed upon in the oral agreement, was sustained in Nonamaker v. Amos (1905) 73 Ohio St. 163, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 980, 112 Am. St. Rep. 708, 76 N. E. 949, 4 Ann. Cas. 170. The court concludes that when the parties entered into the parol contract they were not contracting for an interest in or concerning real estate, but for a division of personal property in proportions different from those named in the written lease. The apparent theory of the court is that the parol contract was not within the Statute of Frauds, as it is held it did not relate to an interest in or concerning land, nor was it within the Statute of Frauds on the theory that it was not to be performed within a year, since on its face it was susceptible of being performed within the year. The court also rests the decision in part upon the fact that the lessee had fully performed his part of the contract; and it is stated that the lessor cannot repudiate the contract as invalid and defeat the rights of the lessee. The action was one by the lessor to enforce specific performance of the original written lease; and the court states that courts of equity do not always grant specific performance of contracts, and they will not do so where it would work manifest injustice to adverse parties.

In one case it is stated that if an agreement required to be in writing under the Statute of Frauds is modified by a subsequent oral agreement which does not in itself constitute a contract within the Statute of Frauds, the modification is valid and binding upon the parties. Stamey v. Hemple (1910) 97 C. C. A. 379, 173 Fed. 61. In accord with this general statement it was held in this case that an oral agreement extending the time for the performance of an option is valid.

<sup>53</sup> Murray v. Boyd (1915) 165 Ky. 625, 177 S. W. 468.

utory.”<sup>54</sup> It was accordingly held in this case that an oral extension of the time of payment of rent under a lease became no part of the contract so as to bind the party, but that the lessor could not declare the contract forfeited for nonpayment, as he had a right to do under the terms of the writing, until the lessee had a reasonable time thereafter in which to make payment, because the failure to pay on due day was caused by the defendant's own conduct. The English cases proceed upon the theory that, when the terms of the agreement have been reduced to writing, it cannot be modified by parol even in respect to a matter which was not required to be in writing.<sup>55</sup>

In one case,<sup>56</sup> the court concludes that all of the terms of the agreement (except possibly the consideration) are required to be in writing; consequently there can be no modification by subsequent oral agreement on the theory that since, in the first instance, it was not necessary that all the agreement should have been in writing, a modification of such parts as were not so required to be in writing might be had without violating the statute.

It is the theory of some cases that a substitution of other subject-matter creates a new contract, and is not a modification of the old one. In one case involving a sale of iron rails to be shipped “from the other side” at a certain time, a parol modification dispensing with the tender of the contract rails and permitting the carrying and offer of any rails shipped from the other side irrespective of the date of shipment is held to substitute for the sale of the contract iron a new sale of different iron which never before had been the subject of a contract; such new contract being by parol, it is void under the Statute of Frauds.<sup>57</sup>

3. Action taken on oral agreement.

It appears in many of the cases discussed in the preceding subdivision that at least one of the parties had acted upon the oral agreement.<sup>58</sup> No point is made of this fact, however, the general

<sup>54</sup> Scheerschmidt v. Smith (1898) 74 Minn. 224, 77 N. W. 34. It was held that the lessee had a right to take the lessor at his word, and consider his contract at an end after it had been declared forfeited by the lessor although without right. Accordingly, he could maintain an action in damages for breach of the agreement.

In Ladd v. King (1849) 1 R. I. 224, 51 Am. Dec. 624, an action upon an agreement for the sale of a house and lot in which the vendor agreed to complete the house upon the lot by a certain time, it was urged that the agreement was divisible into two parts, namely, the sale of the land and the finishing of the house; the first was in the Statute of Frauds, and the second not. The court, however, denied this contention, stating that the purchase was of the entire estate, house and lot, and was to be protected at the same time. It is further stated that the true interpretation of the contract is that the sale was to be completed by the stated time; in other words, that the vendor agreed to convey to the purchaser the house and lot complete on or before that date.

<sup>55</sup> See supra, notes 23 et seq.

<sup>56</sup> Rucker v. Harrington (1892) 52 Mo. App. 481.

<sup>57</sup> Clark v. Fey (1890) 121 N. Y. 470, 24 N. E. 703, it is the theory of the New York cases that a sale of goods to be shipped at a stated time makes the date of the shipment a material element in the identification of the property. It is stated that the contract is not for the sale of the goods generally, but for the sale of goods that are to be shipped during the stated period, and, unless such are tendered, the contract is not performed.
L.R.A.1917B.

See Marshall v. Lynn (1840) 6 Mees & W. 109, 151 Eng. Reprint, 342, 9 L. J. Exch. N. S. 126, supra, note 18.

<sup>58</sup> In Carpenter v. Galloway (1881) 73 Ind. 418, the vendor of mules, having certain specifications, which it was claimed were modified by parol, tendered mules conforming to the modified specifications to the vendee.

The vendee in Jarman v. Westbrook (1909) 134 Ga. 19, 67 S. E. 403, had made several trips in his attempt to close up the deal involved in that case, and, in his action for damages, asked for $250 for traveling expenses incurred.

In Bradley v. Harter (1900) 156 Ind. 499, 60 N. E. 139, a case involving a scheme for the sale of lots in which the vendees were to sell the lots and the vendor to convey to the persons thus obtained, an oral agreement was claimed to the effect that the vendor would accept payment in other land instead of money. The vendees claimed to have obtained a number of other purchasers who were willing to pay for the lots in land.

Christian v. Highlands (1903) 32 Ind. App. 104, 69 N. E. 266, holding that the relation of trust under which one who held the title for the purpose of paying the debts of the grantor could not be changed into a mortgage to secure or indemnify the holder of the legal title upon his contract of suretyship for the owner, to be entered into in the future, although it appears that the holder of the legal title assumed the obligations of suretyship upon the strength of the oral agreement.

In Ladd v. King (R. I.) supra, parol evidence showing a subsequent agreement to extend the time of performance in favor of rule being applied without reference thereto. This rule has been applied in cases involving an extension of time where the party against whom the statute is invoked performed within the time of the oral extension but not within the time fixed in the writing.<sup>60</sup> Other cases, however, consider the fact that the oral agreement has been acted upon. It has been stated in an action on a contract with the United States government to deliver army cloth, in which, after obtaining an extension of time, the vendor purchased a large part of the cloth necessary to fulfil the contract and tendered it to the government, that, so long as the parol agreement extending the time was executory, it imposed no binding obligation upon the government; that, when the extension was made, the contractor should have had the arrangement reduced to writing as required by the statute, or should have stood upon the contract and assumed the liabilities which had been imposed; attempting to perform amid the circumstances then existing involved new risks; and those new risks would rest upon him until, in a legal manner, they were assumed by the government;<sup>61</sup> that assumption of the risk would have happened if the government had accepted the goods, or if it had entered into a new contract in a manner prescribed by the statute; neither of these events happening, the risk remained with the contractor.

Other cases limit the doctrine to executory modifications.<sup>62</sup> Even in cases that so limit the rule, it is not every action that will render the oral modification good. This question receives further consideration in subdivision IV., infra.

III. Rule that oral modification of a matter relating to the performance is valid.

It has been held in some jurisdictions

a vendor who had agreed to finish a cottage on the land sold by a stated time was held inadmissible although the vendor alleged that, relying on the agreement, he proceeded to finish the cottage and did finish it by the time agreed upon by parol, and then and there tendered a conveyance of the lot with proper deed to the purchaser.

Hanson v. Gunderson (1897) 95 Wis. 613, 70 N. W. 827, holding invalid a subsequent oral modification of a written agreement by which copartners assumed a joint liability that each should be liable severally for one-half the amount of the obligation, notwithstanding one of the partners paid the amount thus due from him according to the oral agreement.

In one case a lessee was to pay the lessor for certain straw on the premises to be valued by a named person. The lessee subsequently proposed another person as valuer, and this was agreed to by lessor and the valuation made by the person thus proposed. But it was held that the lessor could not recover this valuation. Harvey v. Grabham (1836) 5 Ad. & El. 61, 111 Eng. Reprint, 1089, 2 H. & W. 146, 6 Nev. & M. 154, 5 L. J. K. B. N. S. 235, see supra.

See Espy v. Anderson (1850) 14 Pa. 308, supra, note 14, where the vendee had taken possession of the land under the oral agreement.

Hicks v. Alyswoth (1881) 13 R. I. 562, note 119. See Boyd v. Big Three Ranch Co. supra, note 15. Special attention is called to Moore v. Campbell (1854) 10 Exch. (Eng.) 326, 23 L. J. Exch. N. S. 310, supra, note 30.

<sup>60</sup> Hawkins v. Studdard (1908) 132 Ga. 265, 131 Am. St. Rep. 100, 63 S. E. 852; Cook v. Bell (1869) 18 Mich. 387.

In Napier Iron Works v. Caldwell & D. Iron Works (1915) — Ind. App. —, 110 N. E. 714, the vendor, who claimed the oral L.R.A.1917B.

modification, had delivered part of the iron after the time specified in the written agreement.

In Abell v. Munson (1869) 18 Mich. 306, 100 Am. Dec. 165, a vendor who was sued for failure to convey property sought to show that there had been no default or none which had not been waived by subsequent oral agreement; but this was denied on the theory that the time for the performance could not be extended.

<sup>61</sup> Knott, J., in Jones v. United States (1875) 11 Ct. Cl. (Fed.) 733. That acceptance would have imposed an obligation on the government, see Salomon v. United States (1873) 19 Wall. (U. S.) 17, 22 L. ed. 46.

<sup>62</sup> Lincoln Realty Co. v. Garden City Land & Immigration Co. (1913) 94 Neb. 346, 143 N. W. 230, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 392; Kingsley v. Kressly (1911) 60 Or. 167, 111 Pac. 385, 118 Pac. 678, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 746; Swain v. Seamens (1869) 9 Wall. (U. S.) 254, 19 L. ed. 554.

Banister v. Fallis (1911) 85 Kan. 320, 116 Pac. 822, holding unenforceable an oral modification of an agreement for the sale of real estate, upon discovery of a supposed defect in title that the deeds should not be delivered until the defect was cured.

In Seymour v. Hughes (1907) 65 Misc. 248, 105 N. Y. Supp. 249, an oral agreement between landlord and tenant under a lease giving the landlord the option to terminate the tenancy at any time by a certain notice, modifying this lease so as to entitle the tenants to remain in possession of the premises until the expiration thereof at a different rent which was paid by the tenant for several months following the agreement, was held invalid where the unexpired term of the original lease at the time of the agreement was more than a year. The landlord was accordingly held that modification of certain terms of the contract relating to the performance thereof may be made by parol. The manner of making payment may be modified by parol.<sup>62</sup> The time for performance may be enlarged.<sup>63</sup> But in one case which makes this distinction, the contract is not treated as binding; for, although the extension was for a definite time, the party granting it is held authorized to repudiate it; but it is held in the case which involved a lease that it cannot be repudiated and a forfeiture declared until a reasonable notice of his intention to do so has been given.<sup>64</sup> A conveyance to a person subsequently agreed upon by the vendor and vendee relieves the vendor from an action for breach of his contract.<sup>65</sup> These cases proceed upon the theory that the Statute of Frauds does not undertake to regulate the performance of a contract.<sup>66</sup> One court argues that "the statute, therefore, requires a memorandum of the bargain to be in writing, that it may be made certain; but it does not undertake to regulate its performance. It does not say that such a contract shall not be varied by a subsequent oral agreement for a substituted performance, that is left to be decided by the rules and principles of law in relation to the admission of parol evidence to vary the terms of written contracts." The court refers to the case of Stowell v. Robinson (1837) 3 Bing. N. C. 928, 132 Eng. Reprint, 668, 5 Scott, 196, 3 Hodges, 197, 6 L. J. C. P. N. S. 326, and states that it "was decided on a mistaken construction and application of the Statute of Frauds, and that entitled to terminate the tenancy according to the writing.

The Georgia cases limit the rule to situations in which its enforcement would not work a fraud, or in which there is no part performance. See Georgia case cited in note 12 and discussion in IV. 1, infra.

See Scheerschmidt v. Smith, supra, note 54.

<sup>62</sup> Low v. Treadwell (1835) 12 Me. 441, holding that an agreement for the sale of land payable in brick might be modified so as to make delivery of the brick to a creditor of the vendor a payment. The bricks in this case had been delivered to the creditor of the vendor, and the purchaser was seeking specific performance of the contract to convey as provided in the writing.

The provision in a written contract for the sale of goods that the sale is made on credit may be modified by a subsequent oral agreement requiring the purchaser to give a promissory note in payment or to make payment in cash at a discount. Cummings v. Arnold (1842) 3 Met. (Mass.) 486, 37 Am. Dec. 155.

It is stated obiter in Lerned v. Wannemacher (1864) 9 Allen (Mass.) 412, an action upon a contract for the sale of coal in which the purchasers agreed to send vessels for the same, that an agreement that, if the vessels were not sent, the coal should be shipped immediately, would be good even if made only by parol.

See Welch v. McIntosh (1913) 89 Kan. 47, 130 Pac. 641, infra, note 83.

<sup>63</sup> Stearns v. Hall (1851) 9 Cush. (Mass.) 31.

Hurlburt v. Fitzpatrick (1900) 176 Mass. 287, 57 N. E. 464, holding that a subsequent oral modification extending the time for the performance of a contract for the purchase and sale of real estate is not within the Statute of Frauds, in an action by the vendor to recover a cash payment from one with whom it had been deposited to pay over to the vendor in case the vendees failed to perform.

L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>64</sup> Scheerschmidt v. Smith (1898) 74 Minn. 224, 77 N. W. 34.

<sup>65</sup> Long v. Hatwell (1870) 34 N. J. L. 116; Moore v. McAllister (1857) 34 Miss. 500.

<sup>66</sup> Cummings v. Arnold (1842) 3 Met. (Mass.) 486, 37 Am. Dec. 155; Stearns v. Hall (Mass.) supra. See Scheerschmidt v. Smith (1898) 74 Minn. 224, 77 N. W. 34, infra, note 125.

In Low v. Treadwell (Me.) supra, it is stated that the plaintiff, who was seeking a specific performance of the contract to convey, was seeking the performance of a written agreement, and he proved that he has so performed the condition precedent on his part as to be entitled to relief, and that whether the time be the essence of his contract or not it has been waived. Again, after referring to an English decision, to the effect that an agreement to waive a contract for the purchase of land is as much agreement concerning land as the original contract is, and therefore must be in writing, the court states that, without expressing any opinion upon that point, "it is a sufficient answer that the waiver here, if any there was, did not relate to the purchase of lands but to the time of delivery of a quantity of bricks; those bricks indeed formed a consideration of the purchase, but the payment of the consideration may be proved by parol."

The court in Low v. Treadwell (Me.) supra, in sustaining a subsequent parol agreement between vendor and vendee that the vendee was to deliver the property given in payment of the land to a creditor of his, cites from Chitty on Contract, 27, to the effect that a subsequent parol agreement not contradicting the terms of the original contract, but merely in continuance thereof, and in dispensation of the performance of its terms as in prolongation of the term of execution, is good, even in the case of a contract to reduce into writing under the Statute of Frauds.

the distinction between the contract of sale which is required to be in writing and its subsequent performance as to which the statute is silent was overlooked or not sufficiently considered by the court, otherwise the decision perhaps might have been different."<sup>67</sup>

It is accordingly held in these cases that one who has performed according to the substituted agreement may specifically enforce the agreement of the other,<sup>68</sup> or maintain an action thereon,<sup>69</sup> or he may set up the oral agreement in defense of an action for breach of the written agreement, where he has performed<sup>70</sup> or offered to perform<sup>71</sup> according to the oral agreement, but such tender has been refused. The doctrine is not confined to executed contracts. In fact the leading case on this theory involved an executory contract.<sup>72</sup> So far as the oral agreement has been executed by one of the parties, the result is not distinguishable from that in the cases discussed in IV., infra.

The theory of the cases is that the action is upon the written contract whether a party who has performed according to the oral agreement is seeking to compel the other party to perform his agreement according to the writing, or whether the action is against the party whose obligation has been modified by parol. In each instance the oral agreement is treated as defensive matter to be shown in answer to the claim that the party whose obligation has thus been modified had not performed his agreement according to the writing. In other words, the writing is held to exist for the purposes of the action, notwithstanding the oral modification. It is not invalidated by the oral modification.<sup>73</sup> It has been stated that "this distinction avoids the difficulty suggested in some of the cases cited, where it is said that, to allow a party to sue partly on a written and partly on a verbal agreement would be in direct opposition to the requisitions of the statute; and it undoubtedly would be; but no party having a right of action can be compelled to sue in this form. He may always declare on the written contract; and unless the defendant can prove performance according to the terms of the contract or according to the agreement for a substituted performance, the plaintiff would be entitled to judgment."<sup>74</sup>

The earlier Massachusetts cases have been construed in a subsequent case<sup>75</sup> as holding that "the action can be maintained only upon the written contract; because to allow a party to sue partly on a written and partly on an oral agreement would be in direct contravention of the statute."

If the party whose obligation has been modified by parol does not perform that obligation, nor the one imposed upon him by the writing, nor offer to do so, he, of course, has no defense to an action for breach of the contract.<sup>76</sup>

Without deciding the general question whether the parties to a written contract may or may not modify the various terms by a subsequent verbal agreement, it is held in this jurisdiction that a verbal modification cannot be admitted as a ground for specific performance.<sup>76a</sup>

<sup>67</sup> Cummings v. Arnold (Mass.) supra.

<sup>68</sup> Low v. Treadwell (Me.) supra.

<sup>69</sup> Stearns v. Hall (1851) (Mass.) supra, holding that one who had accepted an option within the time for which the same had been extended by oral agreement could maintain an action of assumpsit against the defendant for failure to comply with his agreement. The land which was the subject matter of the contract was previously conveyed by the plaintiff to the defendant apparently for the purpose of securing certain advances, the defendant agreeing to reconvey by a stated date if the plaintiff would pay what it had cost the defendant and his charges. This contract was extended by oral agreement, and within the time of the extended oral agreement the plaintiff had accepted. The plaintiff had sold the property, and the action in assumpsit was apparently brought to recover the difference between the selling price and what he was to pay the defendant.

See Scheerschmidt v. Smith (1898) 74 Minn. 224, 77 N. W. 34, infra, note 125.

<sup>70</sup> No action can be maintained for the L.R.A.1917B.

breach of a contract for the sale of real estate, where the vendor defendant has conveyed the land to the vendee's wife as agreed upon by the parties. Long v. Hartwell (N. J.) supra.

<sup>71</sup> Cummings v. Arnold (1842) 3 Met. (Mass.) 486, 37 Am. Dec. 155. The vendor had made a tender of the goods, but the purchaser had refused to comply with the oral agreement.

<sup>72</sup> Ibid. And see Stearns v. Hall (1851) 9 Cush. (Mass.) 31.

<sup>73</sup> Whittier v. Dana (1865) 10 Allen (Mass.) 326.

<sup>74</sup> Cummings v. Arnold (Mass.) supra.

<sup>75</sup> Whittier v. Dana (Mass.) supra.

<sup>76</sup> Whittier v. Dana (Mass.) supra, holding that a vendor of bricks who had not delivered or offered to deliver the same had no defense to an action for breach of his contract.

<sup>76a</sup> Brooks v. Wheelock (1831) 11 Pick. (Mass.) 439, holding that a vendor who had agreed to make a deed upon the payment of a certain note given him for the amount of the purchase money could not

The doctrine of the foregoing cases has been expressly disapproved by other courts.<sup>77</sup> It is pointed out in one case<sup>78</sup> that the theory fails to distinguish between substituted performance which has been executed and substituted performance which rests merely on an executory agreement, and it is stated that substituted performance is substituting something else in the place of what was agreed to be done in the writing. "And if an unexecuted oral agreement to do this is binding, other land on other conditions, terms, and stipulations may be orally agreed to be substituted in performance or satisfaction of the writing. This would be juggling with the statutes." After referring to the statement that one of the main designs of the Statute of Frauds was to prevent burdensome fabricated contracts from being imposed upon parties, the court continues: "But a contract is only burdensome because of the consequence of performance flowing from it. Per se the contract is harmless. It is the performance that does the hurt. It is therefore at least equally proper to say that the principal design of the statute was to protect parties from the performance of burdensome contracts which they never made. Therefore, if you may enforce an oral agreement for a substituted performance of a written agreement, you apply the statute to the shadow and withhold it from the substance. Such application of the statute only makes it necessary that parties have a contract in writing, then, under the guise of performance, the contract enforced is shown by parol."

IV. Rule that oral modification which has been acted upon is valid.

1. In general.

As shown above, the broad rule that a written contract within the Statute of Frauds cannot be modified by subsequent parol agreement has been applied, although the agreement as modified has been acted upon. On the contrary in many cases where the agreement as modified has been acted upon, the rights of the parties have been held to be determined by the modified agreement,<sup>79</sup> es-be compelled to make a deed before the note fell due, in pursuance of his verbal agreement to make the deed upon payment of the note before due. The vendor refused to accept payment of the notes not due when tendered him in accord with his verbal agreement.

<sup>77</sup> Rucker v. Harrington (1892) 52 Mo. App. 481, approved in Warren v. A. B. Mayer Mfg. Co. (1900) 161 Mo. 112, 61 S. W. 644; Ladd v. King (1828) 1 R. I. 224, 51 Am. Dec. 624.

<sup>78</sup> Rucker v. Harrington (Mo.) supra.

<sup>79</sup> Beach v. Covillard (1854) 4 Cal. 315; Spencer v. McCament (1907) 7 Cal. App. 84, 93 Pac. 682; Worden v. Crist (1883) 108 Ill. 326; Welch v. McIntosh (1913) 89 Kan. 47, 130 Pac. 641; Blake v. J. Neils Lumber Co. (1910) 111 Minn. 513, 127 N. W. 450; Moore v. McAllister (1857) 34 Miss. 500; Thomson v. Poor (1895) 147 N. Y. 402, 42 N. E. 13; Alston v. Connell (1906) 140 N. C. 485, 53 S. E. 292; Neppach v. Oregon & C. R. Co. (1905) 46 Or. 374, 80 Pac. 482, 7 Ann. Cas. 1035; Scott v. Hubbard (1913) 67 Or. 498, 136 Pac. 653; Whiting v. Daughton (1903) 31 Wash. 327, 71 Pac. 1026; Smiley v. Barker (1897) 28 C. C. A. 9, 55 U. S. App. 125, 83 Fed. 684.

A subsequent oral agreement between vendor and vendee by the terms of which the vendor is to accept a conveyance of property in lieu of a note which was to be assigned him and which has been executed in part, at least, by delivery of the property, was sustained in Baker v. Robertson (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 163 S. W. 326.

That an oral modification may be made L.R.A.1917B.

good by conduct of the parties is recognized in an obiter statement in Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Trimble (1870) 10 Wall. (U. S.) 383, 19 L. ed. 953.

It was held in Marsh v. Bellew (1878) 45 Wis. 36, that a written agreement for the sale of land to be paid at a price to be determined by the quantity of timber on the same might be modified with regard to the price to be paid for the down timber on the land; but it is stated that, under the original contract, it was a matter of at least some doubt whether the vendee was bound to pay for any lumber or timber which was damaged or not merchantable; that this new agreement may therefore be treated as an amicable settlement by the party and a determination of the construction which should be given to the original contract, and limiting it to such timber as was undamaged and merchantable, and making a new contract by which the defendant, in consideration of such construction of the original, agreed to take the down and damaged timber upon the land at the reduced price. The court states that there can be no doubt but that the vendors could enforce the same against the vendee after the defendant had executed the same on his part by cutting and converting the timber to his own use. The vendee in this case did not object to the enforcement of the agreement, and the court adds that there can certainly be no ground for refusing to enforce the same under such circumstances.

In Harrison v. Prestonburg (1908) 32 Ky. L. Rep. 864, 107 S. W. 337, it is held that a written agreement between land-owners in platting land for an addition to pecially if there has been what amounts to a part performance.<sup>60</sup> A vendor of property can defend an action for breach of his contract to convey, by showing that he has conveyed the land which is the subject of the sale in pursuance of a subsequent oral agreement between the parties.<sup>61</sup> Likewise he can defend an action in specific performance by showing an oral agreement that the title was to be held until a note given for money borrowed by his vendee on which he became surety was paid.<sup>62</sup> A party who has performed according to the oral extension may maintain an action to compel performance by his vendor,<sup>63</sup> or rea town, that a part of the land equal in width to a street of which it was an extension should be laid off, but that the same should not become a street, might be modified by a parol agreement that a narrow part of the strip should be excluded from the street, and was thus modified. The plat was drawn, the lots laid out, and a number of them sold with reference to the plat.

A contract extending the time for the performance of a vendor's contract to make a deed which has been executed is thereby taken out of the statute, so as to effect a release of a surety on the vendor's bond. Bever v. Butler (1833) Wright (Ohio) 367.

Nonamaker v. Amos (1905) 73 Ohio St. 163, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 980, 112 Am. St. Rep. 708, 70 N. E. 949, 4 Ann. Cas. 170, see supra, note 52.

<sup>60</sup> Gerard-Fillio Co. v. McNair (1912) 68 Wash. 321, 123 Pac. 462; Oregon & W. R. Co. v. Elliott Bay Mill & Lumber Co. (1912) 70 Wash. 148, 126 Pac. 406.

<sup>61</sup> Beach v. Covillard (1854) 4 Cal. 315. The facts are not clearly stated in this case. It was an action to recover damages for the breach of a covenant under seal to convey certain lots. On the trial of the cause the defendants offered to show that they had conveyed one of said lots to a third party at the verbal direction and request of the plaintiff, and also offered in evidence a receipt signed by the plaintiff for the "deed to said lots described in said bond." This testimony was excluded by the trial court and a judgment rendered for the plaintiff. Upon appeal, this judgment was reversed and new trial ordered.

See McKinley v. Macbeth (1911) 113 Minn. 148, 129 N. W. 216, 389, infra, note 91.

<sup>62</sup> Worden v. Crist (1883) 106 Ill. 326. It is stated that the Statute of Frauds does not prevent the parties to an executory contract for the sale of real estate from agreeing by parol to change the terms of the contract and impose new conditions. In this case the legal title to the land in question was in a third party, and it was agreed by parol that the land should be held by the third party until the note was paid. Upon an action by an assignee of the bond for title whose rights rose no higher than those of the vendee in specific performance, his right to maintain the action was denied; the oral agreement being held a defense.

<sup>63</sup> Welch v. McIntosh (1913) 89 Kan. 47, 130 Pac. 641, holding that a vendor of real estate who was to receive payment in a certain way and who orally agreed to accept payment of a part of the purchase price in cash, and a mortgage for the balance, where upon a check for the cash payment and such a mortgage were given him, he agreeing to make a deed if, upon examination, he found no more against the mortgaged property than had been represented to him, could be compelled to convey the land as agreed. See supra, note 60, as to the effect of acceptance of performance.

One who gave an option upon land, and who, when the optionee was arranging to secure and pay the sum stipulated, requested that the time for the payment of the same be extended beyond the period fixed in the writing, is estopped from pleading the statute and denying his obligation under the contract, in an action by the optionee, who has performed within the time fixed by the oral extension, to enforce the obligation of the contract. It is stated that the optionee, "having consented to the delay at the request of [the optionor], will be taken to have been ready and willing to perform at the time stipulated in the written agreement. Having tendered the amount due within the period fixed by the postponement, he is in no default, and the extension having been given at [the optionor's] request and for his convenience, when the extended agreement itself and all the circumstances clearly implied that he regarded it as a valid and binding contract, and that he intended to live up to its terms, the law will not permit him now to repudiate its obligations, invoke for his protection the Statute of Frauds, and defeat the plaintiff's recovery, who has forborne a timely performance by reason of [his] request and in reasonable reliance on his assurance." Alston v. Connell (1906) 140 N. C. 485, 53 S. E. 292.

It is held in Anderson v. Moore (1893) 145 Ill. 61, 33 N. E. 848, that the parties to a contract for the sale of real estate may agree by parol that, if the vendee will pay the entire purchase money, the vendor will deliver the deed therefor before the time fixed in the writing. Accordingly, a specific performance was granted, although the bill was filed before the time fixed in the writing for delivery of the deed. Nothing is said as to the Statute of Frauds.

A vendee was granted specific performance in Maloughney v. Crowe (1912) 26 Ont. L. Rep. 579, 22 Ont. Week. Rep. 635, 3 Ont. Week. N. 1488. The parties in this case have modified the written agreement by providing that part of the purchase price should be paid at the time stipulated in the writing and the balance should be paid at a subsequent date, upon which possession was to be delivered by the vendor. Apparently, at the time of the action the entire sum was due.

See Spencer v. McCament (1907) 7 Cal.

cover according to the writing;<sup>84</sup> or maintain an action in damages for non-performance;<sup>85</sup> or recover according to the oral agreement.<sup>86</sup> One who has performed according to the oral agreement can defend an action on the writing,<sup>87</sup> or for damages for default.<sup>88</sup> One who agreed to purchase a certain amount of bark to be peeled by him can defend an action for the purchase price for the amount fixed in the writing, where, by oral agreement, this amount was reduced, and he had acted on the oral modification, making his contracts accordingly.<sup>89</sup> A vendor cannot declare a contract forfeited for nonpayment within the time fixed in the written agreement, where he has induced the delay.<sup>90</sup>

This rule, that the rights of the parties must be determined by the modified agreement where it has been acted upon, is especially applicable where both parties have governed themselves by the modified agreement and the same has been fully executed.<sup>91</sup>

Where the other party has accepted

App. 84, 93 Pac. 682, infra, note 139. See Low v. Treadwell, 12 Me. 441, supra, note 68. See Stark v. Wilson, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 476, supra, note 50.

<sup>84</sup> Moore v. McAllister (1857) 34 Miss. 500, holding that the obligee in bonds given for the purchase money of lands in each of which there was a clause that it was to be void unless, on or before the time it became due, the obligee made a good title to the land to the obligor, who failed to make title before the first obligation became due, but before the maturity of the second obligation, at the request of the obligor, procured the title to be conveyed to a third party, to whom the obligor had sold,—might recover on the bonds against the obligor.

<sup>85</sup> Kingston v. Walters (1911) 16 N. M. 59, 113 Pac. 594, holding valid an oral extension of the time for the performance of the land contract so as to sustain an action by the vendee, who has performed within the time of the extension, against the vendor for damages for breach of his contract in refusing to perform. This is based in part in this case upon the principles of estoppel; the court stating that where a representation as to the future relates to an intended abandonment of an existing right, and is made to influence others, and they have been influenced by it to act, it operates as an estoppel.

<sup>86</sup> Blake v. J. Neils Lumber Co. (1910) 111 Minn. 513, 127 N. W. 450, holding that one who had contracted to cut and deliver timber might recover an increased compensation orally agreed upon, where, in reliance on the agreement, he went forward with his contract. The suit was for the increased compensation only, the compensation fixed in the writing having been paid.

<sup>87</sup> Gerard-Fillio Co. v. McNair (1912) 68 Wash. 321, 123 Pac. 462; Oregon & W. R. Co. v. Elliott Bay Mill & Lumber Co. (1912) 70 Wash. 148, 126 Pac. 406.

<sup>88</sup> Smiley v. Barker (1887) 28 C. C. A. 9, 55 U. S. App. 125, 83 Fed. 684.

<sup>89</sup> Thompson v. Poor (1895) 147 N. Y. 402, 42 N. E. 14. But see infra, note 124.

<sup>90</sup> Neppach v. Oregon & C. R. Co. (1905) 46 Or. 374, 80 Pac. 482, 7 Ann. Cas. 1035; Whiting v. Doughton (1903) 31 Wash. 327, 71 Pac. 1026. See Smiley v. Barker (1897) 28 C. C. A. 9, 55 U. S. App. 125, 87 Fed. 684, and Scott v. Hubbard (1913) 67 Or. 498, 136 Pac. 653, infra.
L.R.A.1917B.

<sup>91</sup> Doherty v. Doe (1893) 18 Colo. 456, 33 Pac. 165, holding that a lessor who had agreed to accept a less rent from his lessee than was stipulated in the writing, and had made a final settlement with him on this basis, has no cause of action against the lessee on the agreement as contained in the writing.

A written lease by the terms of which the tenant was entitled to a portion of the net proceeds of the crop raised on the land may be modified by oral agreement so as to entitle him to one half of the crop, and where the parties have acted upon it in its modified form it is valid to the extent and during the period so acted upon and carried out. Denison v. Sawyer (1905) 95 Minn. 417, 104 N. W. 305, holding valid a chattel mortgage given by the tenant on the crop.

McKinley v. Macbeth (1911) 113 Minn. 148, 129 N. W. 216, 389, holding that a party to a contract for the exchange of real estate who has performed his agreement as modified by parol is not in default so as to subject him to an action in damages for breach of the contract. The contract involved in this case was performed by both of the parties, and upon application for rehearing it is stated that, such being the fact, the bar of the Statute of Frauds was thereby removed from the entire contract.

Where the rent provided in a lease has been reduced and the lesser sum paid, there can be no recovery of the sum stipulated in the writing. Bowman v. Wright (1902) 65 Neb. 661, 91 N. W. 580, 92 N. W. 580. The sum provided for in the parol agreement had been paid and accepted in full during the whole term of the lease.

Where, in pursuance of a subsequent oral contract authorizing an exchange of properties, instead of a sale as provided in the written agreement, the subject-matter of the written contract has passed beyond the control of the parties to that performance of the written contract on either side is impossible, the rights of the parties must be determined according to the subsequent modification; in such a case neither party can predicate any right of action on the writing against the other, because neither can aver performance or an offer to perform his part of such contract. Lucas v. Cass County (1905) 75 Neb. 351, 106 N. W. 217.

Where by mistake a contract between a the performance according to the oral agreement, he can then be compelled to perform according to his agreement contained in the writing.<sup>92</sup>

Specific performance of the written contract will not be decreed when the complainant in the action has by parol waived or discharged the contract, and the defendant by such action has entered into obligations inconsistent with its performance; there is thus presented an equity that will bar the remedy of specific performance.<sup>92a</sup> It has been held that specific performance of the substituted contract will be decreed, if the defendant admits the substituted contract and the complainant chooses to perform it on his part.<sup>92b</sup> vendor and vendee described too much land, and, upon discovery of the mistake, a proposal was made by the vendor to alter the terms of the written contract and an acceptance of the proposal by the vendee, the final payment, delivery, and acceptance of the deed were held in Benesh v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (1905) 14 N. D. 39, 103 N. W. 405, to be a complete execution of that modification of the written contract within the meaning of a statute that a written contract may be altered by an executed parol agreement.

The question of the Statute of Frauds is not directly raised in Reed v. Chambers (1834) 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 490. In that case one who had purchased land of an execution debtor, agreeing to pay the amount of the execution and the amount of a mortgage on the premises and the balance to the vendor, agreed with the officer levying the execution, for the purpose of securing the title to the purchaser, that the land should be sold by the officer under the execution. Upon the execution sale the land was bid in by an assignee of the original purchaser at the sum agreed upon. The assignee then sold his title at an advance over this sum, with an understanding that his purchaser was to pay the mortgage debt and the judgment, and the balance to him. As a method of obtaining the title in the last purchaser, it was agreed that he should be returned as the purchaser and obtain a deed from the sheriff. This was accordingly done and the mortgage debt and the judgment discharged, and the balance paid into court. The action was by the last vendor to secure this balance of the purchase money. Apparently, in answer to the objection that the Statute of Frauds prevented this relief, the court states that the contract between the original vendor and his purchaser was legal and binding upon the parties, being in all respects perfectly conformable to the Statute of Frauds. That the verbal agreement subsequently entered into was no variation or change of the written contract for the sale of the land, but only indicated the mode in which the title was to be secured for the purchaser. L.R.A.1917B.

2. Theories.

The theories upon which the courts have based the holdings that an oral modification which has been acted upon determines the rights of the parties are not harmonious. Waiver, estoppel, part performance, executed contract, and the rule that a court will not allow the Statute of Frauds to become an instrument of fraud, have each been relied upon in support of the holdings. It is evident that not every act of a party in pursuance of the oral modification should render the modification effective to determine the rights of the parties. As stated above,<sup>93</sup> it is the theory of some cases that no such act renders the oral

In the subsequent Maryland case of Walter v. Victor G. Bloede Co. (1901) 94 Md. 80, 50 Atl. 433, the court states that the agreement in the former case was fully executed and the lien paid, and the surplus purchase money paid into court, so that there was in fact no question under the Statute of Frauds before the court, since the statute has no application to executed contracts.

See Le Fevre v. Le Fevre (1818) 4 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 241, 8 Am. Dec. 696, infra, note 95.

<sup>92</sup> Salomon v. United States (1873) 19 Wall. (U. S.) 17, 22 L. ed. 46. See Welch v. McIntosh (1913) 89 Kan. 47, 130 Pac. 641, see supra, note 83.

Swain v. Seamens (1869) 9 Wall. (U. S.) 254, 19 L. ed. 554, holding that a mortgagee who had agreed to cancel and discharge the mortgage and accept in its stead an insurance policy upon a mill of a certain dimension, to be erected upon the mortgaged premises, could not, in a suit to compel him to cancel and discharge the mortgage as agreed in the written stipulation, set up that the mill was not of the dimensions fixed in the writing, where he acquiesced in a change in dimensions at the time the work was done, and accepted the mill as built and completed, and also accepted the policies of insurance procured on it as security in place of the mortgage.

<sup>92a</sup> Huffman v. Hummer (1866) 18 N. J. Eq. 83, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 242. See Nona-maker v. Anos, supra, note 52.

In an action for the specific performance of a written contract to convey real estate, it has been held competent for the defendant to show that, by a subsequent parol agreement, he was to retain the title until other money than that named in the original contract (which had been loaned by him) should be repaid, and he may properly refuse to convey until such other money is repaid. Hewlett v. Miller (1883) 63 Cal. 185. No mention is made of the Statute of Frauds in this case.

<sup>92b</sup> Ryno v. Darby (1869) 20 N. J. Eq. 231. It will be noticed that this was a case of substitution, not modification.

<sup>93</sup> Jones' Case (1875) 11 Ct. Cl. (Fed.) 733, agreement effective unless it is accepted by the other party. But this has not been adopted generally. It is true that, if there is an acceptance of the performance according to the oral agreement, the rights of the parties must be determined thereby, but it does not follow from this that there must be an acceptance to render the oral agreement effective. It may become effective although not accepted. The extent to which the oral agreement must have been acted upon is a matter that is left in considerable doubt, largely through a failure of the courts to consider this phase of the question. An attempt will be made in this connection to show the acts that have taken place in pursuance of the oral modification so far as this can be extracted from the reports, together with the discussion of this question which appears in a few cases. As stated above, the courts have relied on various theories to render the oral modification effective, and it is necessary to note these theories and show what acts have brought the theory adopted into operation.

That equity will not allow the Statute of Frauds to be used as an instrument of fraud is the reason given in some cases for holding the oral modification effective. It has been stated that under this rule equity will decree specific performance, or hold the maker of an oral contract estopped from denying it, when the other party, by virtue of it and under and in pursuance of it, has so far acted that it would be aiding in a fraud to permit the contract to be repudiated,<sup>94</sup> and it has been stated that courts of law under proper allegations will also grant relief in such a case.<sup>95</sup> As to what brings a case within the operation of the rule depends largely upon the facts of the individual case. It may be stated generally that the acts relied upon by the party seeking relief on the oral modification must have been taken by virtue of the oral contract, and under and in pursuance of it. If the acts relied upon have not been so taken, relief cannot be granted.<sup>96</sup>

The foregoing rule has not always been distinguished from that of part performance.<sup>97</sup> It has been held that a part and see Moore v. Campbell, supra, note 32. But the Federal courts have not accepted this theory, as appears from Swain v. Seamens, infra, note 107, and Smiley v. Barker, infra, note 105.

<sup>94</sup> Simonton v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. (1874) 51 Ga. 80; Gerard-Fillio Co. v. McNair (1912) 68 Wash. 321, 123 Pac. 462; Oregon & W. R. Co. v. Elliott Bay Mill & Lumber Co. (1912) 70 Wash. 148, 126 Pac. 406.

It is held in Kingston v. Walters (1908) 14 N. M. 368, 93 Pac. 700, that a court of equity in order to prevent fraud will take jurisdiction of an action by a vendee against his vendor to recover damages for failure of the vendor to perform his contract, where the vendee has performed the agreement stipulated by him therein to be performed within an extended time granted by the vendor, where it was alleged that the vendor absented himself from his usual place of business and remained absent for some time, thereby defeating payment within the time of the oral extension.

<sup>95</sup> Simonton v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. (Ga.) supra.

This rule was applied, and the grantor of a tract of land with the right to a water course through adjoining lands owned by the grantor, held to have no right to destroy the water course which had been placed on another route verbally agreed upon by the parties subsequent to the deed, and which had been so maintained for a period of years prior to the time when the plaintiff in the action had purchased the property. Le Fevre v. Le Fevre (Pa.) supra.

<sup>96</sup> Simonton v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1917B.

(Ga.) supra, holding that an insured cannot recover upon an insurance policy upon the destruction of the insured goods in a location other than that stipulated in the policy, upon an oral statement made by an agent of the company at the time the goods were being removed that the company would agree to the change in location, and that he would fix it upon the books accordingly, where it appears that the insured would have removed the goods without the parol statement of the agents and was in the act of removing them when it is charged to have been made. The court states that the most the insured claimed to have done in pursuance of the parol agreement is that they failed to take out a new policy, trusting, as they did, that their old one had by the parol agreement of the agent been altered. "It will be noted that they paid no money; they simply trusted to the parol agreement and failed to take out another policy." The court concludes that this was not taking a new position by virtue of the contract in fulfillment of their part of it, so as to bring it within the rule.

One court states that, "to make out a case as we understand the law, the party seeking to set up a parol contract which the law requires to be in writing must show that he has done some act in performance of the contract upon his side, which act of performance has put him in a new position, so as that it would be a fraud upon him to permit the other party who has accepted this part performance to repudiate it." Ibid.

<sup>97</sup> Gerard-Fillio Co. v. McNair (Wash.) supra.

performance cannot be made out by mere nonaction on the part of one party to a contract, relying on the parol agreement modifying the writing so as to take the case out of the statute.<sup>98</sup> Nor in the case of a sale of goods does a part payment, and acceptance of part of the goods according to the terms of the written contract, put the written contract in the same category as parol contracts and written contracts not within the Statute of Frauds, thereby subjecting it to modification by a subsequent parol agreement.<sup>99</sup> On the contrary it has been stated obiter<sup>100</sup> that, when a part of the goods which are the subject matter of a sale within the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds have been received and accepted by the vendee, it is competent to prove the contract by parol evidence; consequently a modification of the contract by parol is no violation of the Statute of Frauds, but in this case evidence of the subsequent modification was held inadmissible because the declaration was based exclusively upon the written agreement. But where there is a performance, or a substantial part performance, by the party against whom the statute is invoked, such performance in pursuance of the oral modification may be used as a defense.<sup>101</sup>

In cases which apply the theories of waiver and estoppel, it has been held that mere nonaction by one party to a contract induced by the other prevents the latter from taking advantage of the Statute of Frauds.<sup>102</sup> In cases involving an extension of time, the act of the party seeking to take advantage of the statute in inducing the other to delay performance is emphasized and held to constitute a waiver.<sup>103</sup> One

<sup>98</sup> Augusta Southern R. Co. v. Smith & K. Co. (1899) 106 Ga. 864, 33 S. E. 23. Plaintiff alleged that, relying upon the parol agreement, it postponed the doing of certain essential things beyond the time within which, under the original written contract, it had agreed to do the same. But see subdivision V., infra.

<sup>99</sup> Willis v. Fields (1909) 132 Ga. 242, 63 S. E. 828. As to whether an oral contract that has been taken out of the statute by part payment or acceptance of part of the goods can be modified by subsequent oral agreement is beyond the scope of this note, but see I., supra.

Payment of the consideration is not sufficient to take a new contract abrogating a former one out of the operation of the statute. Thill v. Johnston (1910) 60 Wash. 393, 111 Pac. 225.

<sup>100</sup> Kribs v. Jones (1875) 44 Md. 396. And see Walker v. Victor G. Bloede Co. (1901) 94 Md. 80, 50 Atl. 433, supra.

<sup>101</sup> Gerard-Fillio Co. v. McNair (Wash.) supra, holding that real estate brokers could not recover the commission stipulated in a written agreement for the exchange of lands, where the parties liable for the commission had refused to carry out the exchange, unless the commission was reduced, and thereupon it was orally agreed that the commission should be reduced, whereupon the parties carried out the exchange in reliance upon the agreement.

Oregon & W. R. Co. v. Elliott Bay Mill & Lumber Co. (1912) 70 Wash. 148, 126 Pac. 408, holding that a lessor could not maintain an action of unlawful detainer against his lessee where, upon a dispute arising as to the title, it was orally agreed that the lessee should not pay him any rent, but might pay the other claimant, where the lessee, in pursuance of the agreement, ceased payment to the lessor and paid the other claimant.

<sup>102</sup> Alston v. Connell (1906) 140 N. C. 485, 53 S. E. 292.
L.R.A.1917B.

See Kingston v. Walters (1911) 16 N. M. 59, 113 Pac. 594, supra, note 85. See also Low v. Treadwell (1835) 12 Me. 441, supra, note 66, and Thomson v. Poor (1895) 147 N. Y. 402, 42 N. E. 13, infra, note 126; Spencer v. McCament, infra, note 139.

<sup>103</sup> Neppach v. Oregon & C. R. Co. (1905) 46 Or. 374, 80 Pac. 482, 7 Ann. Cas. 1035, holding that a vendor of land the title to which was involved in a controversy, who requested of the vendees that payments should not be made according to the written contract until the controversy as to the title should be settled, and the vendees, in reliance upon this agreement, refrained from making the payments as they became due, although they were ready and willing to do so, cannot insist upon a forfeiture of the contract on account of the failure to make such payments. The court states that we deem it "unnecessary to decide at this time whether a contract required by the statute to be in writing can be altered as to the time or manner of performance by a subsequent parol executory agreement between the parties." The action in this case was for breach of the contract.

Scott v. Hubbard (1913) 67 Or. 498, 136 Pac. 653, holding that an owner of land who had given an option thereon, payments upon which were due monthly, who had agreed with the optionee to accept an advance payment by a certain date, but who when tendered this payment refused it, could not rescind the agreement for failure to make one of the monthly payments upon the date provided in the written agreement. The owner of the land had previously accepted monthly payments after they had become due, and the court states that his act created the impression that time was not of the essence of the agreement, and, not having given the optionee a written notice of any alteration of his supposed intention, he ought not be permitted to insist upon a forfeiture of the contract for failure to make the monthly court<sup>104</sup> states: "We know of no principle of law which will permit a party to a contract who is entitled to demand the performance by the other party of some act within a specified time, and who had consented to the postponement of the performance to a time subsequent to that fixed by the contract, and where the other party has acted upon such consent and in reliance thereon has permitted the contract time to pass without performance, to subsequently recall such consent and treat the nonperformance within the original time as a breach of the contract. The original contract is not changed by such waiver, but it stands as an answer to the other party who seeks to recover damages for nonperformance induced by an unrecalled consent. The party may, in the absence of a valid and binding agreement to extend the time, revoke his consent so far as it has not been acted upon, but it would be most inequitable to hold that a default justified by the consent happening during its extension should furnish a ground of action."

Even assuming that the oral contract is invalid, the acts of the party inducing the other not to perform constitute a waiver.<sup>105</sup> The fact that the oral agreement involved matters other than a mere extension of time does not affect this, especially where the other matters were contingent upon the happening of an event which did not occur, so that nothing is claimed upon this part of the agreement.<sup>106</sup>

Some cases in which affirmative action has been taken by the party against whom the statute is invoked consider the necessity of such action having been taken in reliance upon the oral agreement to work an estoppel.<sup>107</sup>

It has been stated<sup>108</sup> in a case which proceeds upon the assumption that an executory oral agreement for the extension of time of performance of a payment upon the date provided in the written agreement.

Whiting v. Doughton (1903) 31 Wash. 327, 71 Pac. 1026, holding that a vendor who had told his vendee that the remaining payments on the contract under which the vendee had been let into possession could be made at his convenience, in reliance upon which the vendee did not make payments at the time stipulated in writing, could not declare a forfeiture of the contract as provided in writing.

<sup>104</sup> Thomson v. Poor (1895) 147 N. Y. 402, 42 N. E. 13, as will be seen by a reference to note, 108, infra, this was not a case of pure extension of time, although so treated by the courts.

<sup>105</sup> A vendor of sheep who wrote his vendee suggesting a change in the method of delivery, which was agreed to by the vendee, who is thereby induced to remain away from the place of delivery according to be written contract, and from performing according to the written contract, will be held to have waived delivery and payment at the time and place named in the written contract. He cannot therefore declare a default on the part of the vendee, and refuse to return an advance payment on the purchase price, nor can he recover damages for such default. Smiley v. Barker (1897) 28 C. C. A. 9, 55 U. S. App. 125, 83 Fed. 684. Upon failure of the vendee to perform according to the written contract, the vendor sold the sheep to other parties and thereby disenabled himself from performing.

<sup>106</sup> Neppach v. Oregon & C. R. Co. (Or.) supra. In addition to providing for the extension of the time for making payment as was shown in note 103, supra, the agreement provided that, if it should finally be determined that the vendor had no title to L.R.A.1917B.

the premises, the vendees should make no claim for damages, but should be entitled to a return of the money already paid, the controversy over the title having been settled in favor of the vendor. The contingency herein provided did not occur.

But see Banister v. Fallis (1911) 85 Kan. 320, 116 Pac. 822, note 135.

<sup>107</sup> Where it was agreed between a mortgagor and mortgagee that the mortgagor should erect a sawmill of certain dimensions upon the mortgaged premises, and that the mortgagee would then release the mortgage and accept as security an insurance policy on the mill, and the mortgagee, by his conduct and best declarations, led the mortgagor to believe that he was content with the change made in the specifications of the mill, and thereby induced the mortgagee to erect a mill upon the changed specification, he is estopped to refuse to discharge the mortgage because the mill does not comply with specifications in the writing. Swain v. Seamens (1869) 9 Wall. (U. S.) 254, 18 L. ed. 554.

<sup>108</sup> In Neppach v. Oregon & C. R. Co. (1905) 46 Or. 374, 80 Pac. 482, 7 Ann. Cas. 1035, involving the oral extension by a vendor of time for making payment by the vendees, revocation of the oral extension was not pleaded as a defense. It is stated in this case that a letter written by the vendor to the vendees which was not delivered to the vendees until the day on which the time allowed to make the payment expired was not a reasonable time in which to make the payment.

That the agreement may be revoked is also the theory of Thomson v. Poor (1895) 147 N. Y. 402, 42 N. E. 14.

See Scott v. Hubbard (1913) 67 Or. 498, 136 Pac. 653, supra, note 103.

written contract within the Statute of Frauds is invalid, that the oral stipulation can be revoked at any time upon giving the other party notice of its intention to do so, and a reasonable time after such notice to comply with its agreements as provided in the written contract.

After the contract has expired there can be no oral agreement extending the time; there must then be a new agreement, which must be in writing.<sup>109</sup> Modification after the expiration of the contract is not, however, considered in the note.

Other cases proceed upon the theory that the execution of the oral modification takes it out of the Statute of Frauds.<sup>110</sup> The facts that have brought the rule into operation are shown in the note. In one case<sup>111</sup> in which a vendor who had conveyed to a third person at the oral request of the vendee was seeking to recover on bonds given for the purchase price, the contract is treated as fully executed, and it is stated that the Statute of Frauds has been stated to have relation alone to executory contracts, "and can never apply to contracts which have been fully executed, for the reason that such contracts as the latter can never be made the foundation of an action unless they should be connected with some collateral matter. It may be true that this new arrangement could not be enforced if it were merely executory, but this is not the question. The object was not to make a new contract, but merely to stipulate what should be a performance of the original contract, and it certainly cannot be contended that the parties could not agree that performance might be made in a manner different from that originally stipulated. The party bound to convey performed his contract as soon as he complied with its terms or conveyed in the manner prescribed by the party interested. Performance of contracts may be waived either as to time, place, or manner of performance."

Where the agreement is fully executed by both parties, it is taken out of the statute as shown above.<sup>112</sup>

Some cases do not seem to rely upon the fact that action had been taken upon the oral modification.<sup>113</sup>

V. Extension of time.

The character of alterations of written contracts which have been adjudicated are many and varied, as will be seen by reference to the foregoing subdivisions of this note. There is one alteration which has been before the courts so frequently, and which involves distinct questions, so that it has been deemed advisable to make it the subject of an independent subdivision. The alteration in question is that extending the time for the performance of written agreements. It is the theory of some cases that the time for the performance of a written contract within the Statute of Frauds cannot be modified by subsequent oral agreement.<sup>114</sup>

The oral extension cannot be shown in support of a cause of action. Accord-

<sup>109</sup> Kingsley v. Kressly (1911) 60 Or. 167, 111 Pac. 385, 118 Pac. 678, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 746.

<sup>110</sup> Beach v. Covillard (1864) 4 Cal. 315. See supra, note 81, for facts.

Blake v. J. Neils Lumber Co. (1910) 111 Minn. 513, 127 N. W. 450, holding that a contract for the cutting and delivering of timber, by the terms of which one of the parties was to perform the work and receive a certain compensation, could be modified by oral agreement by stipulating an additional compensation, and when in reliance upon the new agreement the party had fully performed the contract as modified, he could recover the price agreed upon orally. The written contract covered several seasons, but the oral agreements were from season to season, and the recovery was sought on the work done for one season. This was held a severable contract, on which the recovery might be had as above stated.

<sup>111</sup> Moore v. McAllister (1867) 34 Miss. 500.

<sup>112</sup> Note 91 et seq.

<sup>113</sup> Worden v. Crist (1883) 106 Ill. 326, where the party against whom the statute L.R.A.1917B.

was invoked had assumed obligations as surety on strength of oral agreement.

It has been held in this jurisdiction that a vendor who has orally agreed to accept a balance on the contract before due, and make a deed for the property, may be compelled to perform his agreement. (Anderson v. Moore (1893) 145 Ill. 61, 33 N. E. 848), the court stating that this amounts to a waiver of the time of payment and is good although made by parol.

<sup>114</sup> Walter v. Victor G. Bloede Co. (1901) 94 Md. 80, 50 Atl. 433; Abell v. Munson (1869) 18 Mich. 306, 100 Am. Dec. 165; Cook v. Bell (1869) 18 Mich. 387; Ladd v. King (1849) 1 R. I. 224, 51 Am. Dec. 624.

See also Com. use of Ledford v. Hinson (Ky.) ante, 139, where, however, the court treats the extension as a new agreement rather than a modification.

It is stated obiter in Hasbrouck v. Tappen (1818) 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 200, that a parol agreement to extend the time for the performance by the vendor of his contract to convey land is void under the Statute of Frauds.

In Blood v. Goodrich (1832) 9 Wend. (N.

ingly a vendor who has not delivered the property sold within the time specified in the writing cannot show an oral extension of the time, in an action by him for breach of the purchaser's contract to accept and pay for the goods,<sup>115</sup> even though he relied on the oral agreement in completing his contract.<sup>116</sup> Nor can a vendee who has failed to make the payments stipulated in the writing, in which event the vendor might, according to the agreement, avoid the contract and retain payments made, show an oral extension in an action against the vendor to recover damages for breach of the contract.<sup>117</sup>

Nor can the oral extension be shown as defensive matter. A vendor of land cannot show an oral extension of the time for conveyance in an action in damages by the vendee, who has fully performed and paid the purchase money, for failure to convey according to the written agreement.<sup>118</sup>

A writing which is a mere option cannot be modified by parol so as to extend the time within which it may be accepted and thus keep it alive beyond the time fixed in the writing itself.<sup>119</sup> Accordingly, an acceptance and promise to pay the purchase price after the expiration of the time fixed in the writing, but

(Y.) 68, 24 Am. Dec. 121, the court states that the doctrine that the time of performance of a written contract may be enlarged by parol does not apply to contracts for the conveyance of land, or to any other contract where the contract itself would not have been valid if made by parol.

But see Thomson v. Poor (N. Y.) supra.

A written agreement for the sale of land in which the vendor agreed to make the title, provided the vendee complied with the terms of the agreement within a stated time, cannot be extended by parol. Doar v. Gibbes (1829) Bail. Eq. (S. C.) 371. The action in this case was by the vendee for specific performance, and the relief sought is denied also on the ground that the court had a discretion in such an action.

A vendor who has sold and conveyed land under an agreement that the vendee should search upon the land for coal, and, if coal should be found by a stated date, an additional sum should be paid, cannot recover the additional sum where coal was not found for a number of years after the expiration of the time fixed in the contract, on the strength of a parol agreement to extend the time for making the search. Heth v. Wooldridge (1828) 6 Rand. (Va.) 605, 18 Am. Dec. 751.

A contract with the United States government to furnish cloth, which by a special statute is required to be in writing, cannot be modified by an extension of time by parol. Jones v. United States (1875) 11 Ct. Cl. (Fed.) 733.

That an oral extension for a longer period than a year is within the Statute of Frauds is the opinion expressed in Hogan v. Crawford (1869) 31 Tex. 634, but that case turned upon a lack of consideration sufficient to sustain the agreement independently of the Statute of Frauds. And see Bullis v. Presidio Min. Co. (1889) 75 Tex. 540, 12 S. W. 397, and Adams v. Hughes (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 140 S. W. 1163, infra, note 128.

The postponement of the time for performance of a logging contract is treated in Barton v. Gray (1885) 57 Mich. 622, 24 N. W. 638, more in the nature of an independent contract, and it is stated that it must be a valid and binding agreement L.R.A.1917B.

between the parties not void under the Statute of Frauds. The jury having found that the oral arrangement relative to the extension of time of performance could not by its terms be performed within one year from the time of the making thereof, it was void under the Statute of Frauds and as a necessary consequence was held a mere nullity, so that it could not be used for any purpose.

That the time for the payment of premiums on a life insurance policy cannot be changed, see Mitchell v. Universal L. Ins. Co. (1875) 54 Ga. 289, supra, note 36.

See Augusta Southern R. Co. v. Smith & K. Co. (1899) 106 Ga. 864, 33 S. E. 28, supra, note 98; Hawkins v. Studdard (1908) 132 Ga. 265, 131 Am. St. Rep. 190, 63 S. E. 852, supra, note 13; Napier Iron Works v. Caldwell & D. Iron Works (1915) — Ind. App. —, 110 N. E. 714, supra, note 98; English cases discussed in note 23 et seq.

<sup>115</sup> Walter v. Victor G. Bloede Co. (1901) 94 Md. 80, 50 Atl. 433.

<sup>116</sup> Ladd v. King (1849) 1 R. I. 224, 51 Am. Dec. 624, see supra, note 15, for facts.

<sup>117</sup> Cook v. Bell (1869) 18 Mich. 387; Doar v. Gibbes (1829) Bail. Eq. (S. C.) 371, supra, note 114.

<sup>118</sup> Abell v. Munson (1869) 18 Mich. 306, 100 Am. Dec. 165.

<sup>119</sup> McConathy v. Lanham (1903) 116 Ky. 735, 76 S. W. 535, holding that no action could be maintained upon an option contract for the sale of real estate where the parties had not performed the agreement until within an extension granted by parol. Atlee v. Bartholomew (1887) 69 Wis. 43, 5 Am. St. Rep. 103, 33 N. W. 110. See Jarman v. Westbrook (1910) 134 Ga. 10, 67 S. E. 403, supra, note 15.

In Hicks v. Aylesworth (1882) 13 R. I. 562, it was held that the time for accepting an option contract for the sale of real estate could not be extended by parol. The court speaks of the parol agreement in this case being a gratuitous one. The optionee during the time granted by parol had made unsuccessful efforts to obtain the money necessary to accept the option.

In Lawyer v. Post (1901) 47 C. C. A. 491, 109 Fed. 512, the verbal agreement extending time included other property as well within that fixed by the parol agreement, creates no enforceable obligation.<sup>120</sup> The party who accepts the option within the time fixed by the oral extension and seeks to enforce it is seeking to enforce a contract which is not in writing, and therefore void under the statute.<sup>121</sup>

Time may be such a substantial part of the agreement that its modification involves more than the question whether there may be a waiver by parol. In such a case it is held that a parol modification is not good. Thus a written contract for the sale of iron, in the form of a bought and sold note which describes the iron and specifies it to be "for shipment by sail in December, 1879, or January, 1880," cannot be modified by a parol agreement specifying a later date of shipment and delivery.<sup>122</sup> The court states: "I do not think it necessary to inquire whether the mere time of performance might be waived by parol, for that is not the question. The only one before us relates to a substantial matter, one affecting the identity of the thing sold, and without mention of which there could have been no contract, and which, although agreed upon, would have been invalid if not in writing."

In case of a sale of standing timber in which the title to the trees remains in the owner of the land until cut and converted into personalty, and in which the right to cut continues until a stated day, on which day the trees remaining uncut adhere in the land and lapse into the fee from the written instrument, an oral extension is invalid.<sup>123</sup>

While adhering to the theory that an oral extension cannot become a part of the contract so as to bind the parties, it has been held that it may affect their rights when relied upon by one of them, as that described in the written agreement. The holding that the verbal extension is invalid is perhaps nothing more than obiter in this case, as the court states that there was no evidence of an extension.

<sup>120</sup> McConathy v. Lanham (1903) 116 Ky. 735, 76 S. W. 535. The contract in this case involves the sale of a lease for a longer period than one year. The verbal acceptance by the prospective purchaser was made at a time when the lease had a longer period than one year still to run. It was therefore a contract which was required by the statute to be in writing, and the parol agreement was accordingly held invalid. Atlee v. Bartholomew (Wis.) supra.

<sup>121</sup> Atlee v. Bartholomew (Wis.) supra.

<sup>122</sup> Hill v. Blake (1884) 97 N. Y. 216. See supra, note 12 for facts; Clark v. Fey, supra, note 57.

<sup>123</sup> Clark v. Guest (1896) 54 Ohio St. 298, L.R.A.1917B.

and so far as relied upon, but the party granting the extension may revoke it upon proper notice.<sup>124</sup> Thus it has been held that a lessor who has orally agreed to extend the time for the payment of rent under the lease cannot declare a forfeiture of the lease for nonpayment at the time stipulated in the writing as he had a right to do under the written agreement, until the lessee had a reasonable time thereafter in which to make payment, because the failure to pay on due day was caused by the lessor's own conduct. The case states that a distinction must be kept in mind between the contract itself, which is within the purview of the statute, and the subsequent performance, which is not. The oral stipulation for an extension of the time of payment goes simply to the question of performance, constituting an excuse as it does for the failure to perform according to the terms of the written contract, and a reason why the lessor had no right to declare a forfeiture on account of such failure, and it is suggested that perhaps as good a ground as any upon which to put the rule is that of equitable estoppel; that he who prevents a thing being done shall not avail himself of nonperformance which he himself has occasioned.<sup>125</sup>

Other cases do not consider it necessary to determine whether a contract within the Statute of Frauds can be altered as to the time of performance by a subsequent oral executory agreement where one of the parties has acted upon the oral agreement so that it has become executed before suit is brought for a breach. Such a situation is held to show a waiver by the plaintiff of his right to insist upon the requirements of the written contract.<sup>126</sup>

<sup>43</sup> N. E. 862. The agreement in this case was made before the expiration of the time fixed in the writing. The court emphasizes the fact that both the title and possession of the trees in question remained in the landowner, and this being true his agreement to extend the time in which to take them off was an agreement for an interest in and concerning the trees still standing at the expiration of the written contract. Such verbal extension of time is stated to be clearly within the statute.

<sup>124</sup> Scheerschmidt v. Smith (1898) 74 Minn. 224, 77 N. W. 34. That the extension may be revoked so far as it has not been acted upon is held also in Thomson v. Poor (N. Y.) infra.

<sup>125</sup> Scheerschmidt v. Smith (Minn.) supra.

<sup>126</sup> Thomson v. Poor (1895) 147 N. Y. 402, 42 N. E. 13, holding that an owner of land who had entered into a written con-

It has been held if the subsequent agreement is not a mere extension, but involves other matters, that it is invalid.<sup>127</sup>

On the contrary it is held that an oral extension of the time for performance of a contract within the Statute of Frauds, made before the expiration of the written contract, is valid.<sup>128</sup> This rule is held to apply although a definite agreement as to the time of the extension was not arrived at by the parties until the day after the expiration of the time limited in the contract.<sup>129</sup> It appeared, however, in this case which involved a contract for the sale of real estate, that a short time before the expiration of the time limited in the contract the purchaser talked to the vendor and reminded him that the time for the performance of the agreement was about to expire, and that he had not furnished the abstract as agreed. The vendor replied that he had not been able to find the abstract, but that he would give the purchaser time to have it examined.

In a case involving a sale of real estate where the extension was granted at the request of the vendee, who was suing for breach of the bonds for title, the court holds that the plaintiff's conduct can be considered in no other light than a waiver of the condition of the bond so far as it related to the time of its performance, consequently there was no breach.<sup>130</sup> The performance by the tract with another to peel a specified number of cords of bark from trees on the owner's land during each of several consecutive years could not maintain an action for breach of the written contract upon a failure of the other party to peel the specified number in a stated year, where the parties had orally contracted that a less number of cords be peeled during that year and that the oral agreement was complied with. The court states that the effect of the oral agreement was to change the terms of the original written agreement "as to the time and manner of performance."

Daniels v. Rogers (1905) 108 App. Div. 339, 96 N. Y. Supp. 642, holding that a vendor who had offered to deliver to the vendee a deed duly executed conveying good title in accordance with the written agreement, but who, upon the vendee's request and for his benefit, extended the time for closing for three days, might maintain an action for specific performance of the agreement.

See Neppach v. Oregon & C. R. Co. (1905) 46 Or. 374, 80 Pac. 482, 7 Ann. Cas. 1035, and Scott v. Hubbard (1913) 67 Or. 498, 136 Pac. 653, supra, note 103; Whiting v. Doughton (1903) 31 Wash. 327, 71 Pac. 1026, supra, note 103.

<sup>127</sup> Infra, note 135.

<sup>128</sup> Baker v. Whiteside (1826) Breese (Ill.) 132, 12 Am. Dec. 168; Kissack v. Bourke (1906) 224 Ill. 352, 79 N. E. 619; Longfellow v. Moore (1882) 102 Ill. 289; Kingston v. Walters (1911) 16 N. M. 59, 113 Pac. 594, s. c. former appeal (1908) 14 N. M. 368, 93 Pac. 700; Stamey v. Hemple (1910) 97 C. C. A. 379, 173 Fed. 61.

An oral modification of a contract for the sale of real estate with reference to the time of making payments was sustained in Delaney v. Linder (1887) 22 Neb. 274, 34 N. W. 630, but the court does not discuss the Statute of Frauds.

It is stated obiter in Bullis v. Presidio Min. Co. (1889) 75 Tex. 540, 12 S. W. 397, that the time for the performance of a contract of lease with a privilege in the lessee to purchase the property may be extended by a verbal agreement, but it is held in this case that the parties did not seek L.R.A.1917B.

a mere extension of the time of performance of the first agreement, but sought a distinct and independent undertaking, which, not being signed by the lessor, was within the Statute of Frauds, and not binding upon him. But see Hogan v. Crawford (1869) 31 Tex. 634.

The court in Adams v. Hughes (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 140 S. W. 1163, while treating the statement in Bullis v. Presidio Min. Co. as dictum, concludes: "We are not disposed to so regard it, however, and would hold ourself concluded by the statement of law referred to, notwithstanding the weight of authority elsewhere." But it was held in the Adams Case that where vendor and vendee met at the time stipulated in their contract for closing the contract, and, upon discovery that the vendor did not have a good title to the premises sold, agreed that he should not be required to make a merchantable title as provided in the written agreement, but in lieu thereof should make an effort to cure the defect in his title, but if he should not be able to do so within a reasonable time the vendee would accept his warranty deed for the timber which was the subject of sale, that this entirely changed the conditions of the contract, and absolved the vendee from the obligation to make the payments required by the written agreement, and relieved the vendor from the obligation of tendering a merchantable title by substituting therefor a warranty deed, and this, not being in writing, was not valid.

See Murray v. Boyd (1915) 165 Ky. 625, 177 S. W. 468, supra, note 52; and Heasley v. Swanstrom (1889) 40 Minn. 196, 41 N. W. 1029, supra, note 51; Moore v. McAllister (1857) 34 Miss. 500, supra, note 111; Alston v. Connell (1906) 140 N. C. 485, 53 S. E. 292, supra, note 83; Smiley v. Barker (1897) 28 C. C. A. 9, 55 U. S. App. 125, 83 Fed. 684, supra, note 106.

<sup>129</sup> Bourke v. Kissack (1909) 242 Ill. 233, 89 N. E. 990.

<sup>130</sup> Baker v. Whiteside (1826) Breese (Ill.) 132, 12 Am. Dec. 168. The Statute of Frauds, however, is not mentioned in this case.

vendee in a contract for the sale of land within the time agreed upon in an oral extension was held a sufficient performance, so as to entitle him to a specific performance of the contract, on the theory of waiver.<sup>131</sup> Again, it is stated that the principles of estoppel will not permit one party to throw the other off his guard, and thus obtain an inequitable advantage by agreeing to extend the time of performance and then insist upon it as written.<sup>132</sup> An oral agreement between a vendor and vendee upon a contest arising with a third party over the vendor's title to the land sold; that further payment under the contract might be suspended until the title should be determined, estops the vendor from claiming a forfeiture of contract for nonpayment of instalments falling due during a determination of the contest proceedings. Accordingly, the vendee may recover the sums paid by him previous thereto, upon the contest being decided adversely to his vendor.<sup>133</sup> The doctrine of estoppel and waiver have been used interchangeably.<sup>134</sup>

But, if the subsequent oral agreement is not a mere extension, but involves other matters, such as that the title of land which is the subject of the contract shall be perfected, it has been held that the oral modification is invalid.<sup>135</sup>

It has been held that time for the performance by a real estate broker of his written agency contract which contains a limitation as to time may be extended by parol, on the theory that time is not required to be stated in the writing.<sup>136</sup>

Under the Massachusetts theory discussed in III., supra, it is held that the time may be extended.

It has been held where there is an option in a contract having a certain time to run, to extend the contract for a further period, that the option may be exercised by any definite notice given before the expiration of the first period, and that the Statute of Frauds has no application in such a case.<sup>137</sup>

A statute has been enacted in some states, expressly providing that a contract in writing may be altered by "an executed oral agreement." It has been claimed where there has been an oral extension of time for the performance of a contract, and the thing which, by the terms of the writing, was to be done, is done within the period provided by the oral extension, that this constitutes an executed oral agreement within the meaning of the statute, but this is denied.<sup>138</sup> It is stated that an oral agreement simply extending time cannot be executed, for there is nothing to exe-

<sup>131</sup> Bourke v. Kissack (III.) supra.

<sup>132</sup> Longfellow v. Moore (1882) 102 Ill. 289; Kingston v. Walters (1911) 16 N. M. 59, 113 Pac. 504, s. c. former appeal (1908) 14 N. M. 368, 93 Pac. 700, holding that a vendee of real estate has the extended time in which to perform.

<sup>133</sup> Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Pratt (1902) 64 Kan. 118, 67 Pac. 464.

<sup>134</sup> In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Pratt (Kan.) supra, "the effect of the oral agreement made was not to change the binding effect of the written contract in relation to the land, but was an express waiver of the right to insist upon a default which might be made by the plaintiff in his not making payments in accordance with the terms of the contract. . . . The oral agreement made estops the company from claiming a forfeiture of the contracts for nonpayment of instalments falling due during a determination of the contest proceedings."

<sup>135</sup> In Banister v. Fallis (1911) 85 Kan. 320, 116 Pac. 822, the parties to a written agreement for an exchange of land, upon discovery of what they conceived to be a defect in the title of one of them, orally agreed that the papers should be delivered in escrow until the title was perfected. The parties, however, delivered possession of the respective tracts according to the agreement, and subsequently the deeds were taken from the custodian without the L.R.A.1917B.

knowledge of the plaintiff in the action and recorded. The plaintiff then brought suit for the cancellation of the deed which he had executed, to quiet his title to the land which such deed purported to convey, and for damages for the expense he had incurred in the removal of his improvements. Upon the trial he offered to show the parol agreement, and contended that until the title of the defendant was cured as agreed thereby, all papers were to be retained by the custodian without delivery. This offer was rejected, and in sustaining the rejection the supreme court says that the parol agreement not only extended the time for the performance of the contract, but introduced a new condition, which not only became essential to any conveyance at all, but which was regarded and is still regarded by the plaintiff as indispensable to the vesting of title in him.

<sup>136</sup> Hetzel v. Lyon (1910) 87 Neb. 261, 126 N. W. 997, see supra, note 52.

<sup>137</sup> Byrne Mill Co. v. Robertson (1907) 149 Ala. 273, 42 So. 1008.

<sup>138</sup> Platt v. Butcher (1896) 112 Cal. 634, 44 Pac. 1060. It was accordingly held in this case under a statute requiring the employment of a real estate broker to be in writing, that the broker could not recover for his services where he had found a purchaser within an extension fixed by parol agreement.

cute. No affirmative action is required. Such an agreement calls for nothing to be done, and expires by mere lapse of time. It is further stated that an oral agreement does not alter a contract in writing until it becomes an executed oral agreement. But where one of the parties has relied upon the extension of time, allowing the original time to pass without performing his agreement, the other party has been held estopped to demand a strict performance.<sup>129</sup>

<sup>129</sup> A vendor who has at the request of the vendee extended the time within which the vendee may remove a building which is a part of the consideration for the contract is estopped to insist upon a strict performance of the contract as written, in an action by the vendee to compel specific performance. Spencer v. McCament (1907) 7 Cal. App. 84, 93 Pac. 682. W. A. E.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

HOMER K. GALPIN

v.

CITY OF CHICAGO et al.

ELIZABETH C. WAYMAN, Admr., etc., of John E. W. Wayman, Deceased, Appt.

v.

COUNTY OF COOK.

(269 Ill. 27, 109 N. E. 713.)

Statutes — amendment — reference to title.

1. A statute which attempts to change the beneficiary of the fees to be taxed as costs in criminal prosecutions, by means of the addition of a section to the existing statute by mere reference to the title of such statute, is within a constitutional provision that no law shall be amended by reference to its title only.

For other cases, see Statutes, III. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — subjects embraced by title.

2. Provisions of a statute depriving an officer of fees and increasing his salary under a title, An act to provide for payment to him of further compensation, does not comply with a constitutional provision that no act shall embrace more than one subject and that shall be expressed in the title.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. e, and f, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Officer — promise to release portion of salary — estoppel.

3. A public official is not estopped from claiming fees to which by law he is entitled by the fact that, prior to his election, he stated publicly that he would pay them into the treasury, and that after election he complied with the promise.

For other cases, see Estoppel, III. e, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

District attorney — right to apply fines to uncollected fees.

4. Failure to tax the fees of the prosecuting attorney as costs against accused in a criminal proceeding deprives the attorney of the benefit of a statute permitting him, in case the fees cannot be collected from the person against whom they are taxed, to apply to the payment of them any fines and forfeitures collected by the attorney.

For other cases, see District and Prosecuting Attorneys, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — commissions on moneys collected — to what applicable.

5. A statute giving a prosecuting attorney a commission upon all moneys collected by him applies to money paid the county clerk as fines and penalties when the prosecution was conducted by such attorney, and when the law made it his duty to collect the fines and penalties imposed in suits not prosecuted by him.

For other cases, see District and Prosecuting Attorneys, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — duty to prosecute.

6. Under a statute making it the duty of the state's attorney to prosecute all actions in which the people of the state are concerned, it is his duty to prosecute those arising under a statute imposing a fine upon persons practising dentistry without a license, and upon public employees and upon employees of the state employment agency who accept fees from applicants for employment.

For other cases, see District and Prosecuting Attorneys, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — violation of park ordinance — duty to prosecute.

7. A provision of a school law providing that all fines, forfeitures, and penalties except those for violation of municipal ordinances shall be paid to the school superintendent, and requiring the state's attorney to enforce the collection of all such fines, forfeitures, and penalties, makes it his duty to enforce the penalties for violation of ordinances passed by park commissioners under legislative authority, for the violation of which no other provision is made.

For other cases, see District and Prosecuting Attorneys, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Statute — title — sufficiency.

8. A provision for the disposal of fines imposed for violation of park ordinances cannot be inserted in a statute entitled, An act in relation to a municipal court in a certain city, under a constitutional provision that no act shall embrace more than one subject and that shall be expressed in the title.

Note.—As to agreement to accept less than amount of appropriation, salary, or fee, see annotation following this case, post, 190.

L.R.A.1917B.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. e, and f, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Statutes — repeal.

9. A statute setting apart the fines and penalties imposed for violation of park ordinances for a police pension fund repealed so much of a former act as entitled the superintendent of schools to moneys arising from that source and imposing upon the state's attorney the duty of collecting them. For other cases, see Statutes, III. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — repeal — repugnancy.

10. A statute giving the state's attorney a lien on fines and penalties collected by him, to compensate him for fees taxed against persons prosecuted by him as costs, and not collected, is repealed by statutes appropriating such fines and penalties to specific purposes.

For other cases, see Statutes, III. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

District attorney — lien for fees.

11. The lien given by a statute to a state's attorney upon fines collected by him, to compensate him for uncollected fees taxed against persons prosecuted by him, does not extend to fines collected in cases which he is not required to prosecute.

For other cases, see District and Prosecuting Attorneys, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Interest — upon money derived from fines — disposition.

12. Interest accumulating upon funds in the hands of a county clerk derived from fines and penalties should be divided among those entitled to the fines in proportion to their respective interests in the principal.

For other cases, see Fines, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Interpleader — questions which may be determined.

13. The right of a county to a return of money paid a state's attorney as salary cannot be adjudicated in an interpleader proceeding by the county clerk to determine the right to moneys accumulated in his hands a portion of which is claimed by such attorney as fees.

For other cases, see Interpleader, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(June 24, 1915.)

A PPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court for Cook County distributing funds collected by complainant in his official capacity as clerk of the municipal court, in an interpleader proceeding to determine the right to such funds. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Thomas Marshall, for appellant:

The lien given by § 8, chap. 53, Fees and Salaries Act, and § 239, chap. 122, Schools Act, is the lien of the state's attorney who secured the conviction, and of his representative, and it is not the lien of L.R.A.1917B.

the county of Cook or any other person or corporation.

Galpin v. Chicago, 249 Ill. 554, 94 N. E. 961, 159 Ill. App. 135, 176; People v. Williams, 232 Ill. 519, 83 N. E. 1047; People v. Nedrow, 122 Ill. 363, 13 N. E. 533, affirming 25 Ill. App. 28; Cook County v. Healy, 222 Ill. 310, 78 N. E. 623; Buckingham v. People, 26 Ill. App. 269; People ex rel. Honore v. Olsen, 222 Ill. 122, 113 Am. St. Rep. 371, 78 N. E. 23; People v. Warren, 14 Ill. App. 296; People ex rel. Bussey v. Gault, 149 Ill. 39, 36 N. E. 576; Kitchell v. Madison County, 5 Ill. 163; Mayfield v. Moore, 53 Ill. 428, 5 Am. Rep. 52; Borschenious v. People, 41 Ill. 236; People ex rel. Gersch v. Chicago, 242 Ill. 566, 90 N. E. 259.

The state's attorney is a county officer of that class to which § 10, art. 10, of the Constitution does not apply.

Butzow v. Kern, 264 Ill. 498, 106 N. E. 338; Jimison v. Adams County, 130 Ill. 558, 22 N. E. 820, affirming 38 Ill. App. 52; Wulff v. Aldrich, 124 Ill. 591, 18 N. E. 886; Cook County v. Healy, 222 Ill. 310, 78 N. E. 623; People v. Williams, 232 Ill. 519, 83 N. E. 1047; Reports of Atty. Gen. 1910, p. 451.

The fees of an office are incident to it as fully as the rents and profits of lands, the increase of cattle, or the interest on bonds or other securities; and Wayman, as state's attorney, was clearly invested with the right to receive the fees and emoluments as his personal property.

Mayfield v. Moore, 53 Ill. 428, 5 Am. Rep. 52; Chicago v. Luthardt, 191 Ill. 523, 61 N. E. 410; People v. Williams, 232 Ill. 519, 83 N. E. 1047; Butzow v. Kern, 264 Ill. 505, 106 N. E. 338; Fell v. McLain County, 43 Ill. 216; People ex rel. Ballou v. DuBois, 23 Ill. 547; Andrews v. Portland, 70 Me. 484, 1 Am. St. Rep. 280, 10 Atl. 458; Borschenious v. People, 41 Ill. 236; Galpin v. Chicago, 249 Ill. 554; People ex rel. Malley v. Barrett, 203 Ill. 108, 96 Am. St. Rep. 296, 67 N. E. 742; Thall v. Dreyfus, 84 App. Div. 509, 82 N. Y. Supp. 691; People's Trust Co. v. Smith, 31 Abb. N. C. 422, 30 N. Y. Supp. 342; Meehan v. Jones, 70 Fed. 453.

The interest and title of the state's attorney in the fees is of such a nature and so vested in him that even a pardon or remission by the governor of the state cannot divest him of his vested right thereto.

Holliday v. People, 10 Ill. 214; Meul v. People, 198 Ill. 258, 64 N. E. 1106.

The compensation of an officer is not based on contract, but is fixed by law. When the compensation is fixed by law there can be no waiver as to the amount, either by express agreement or by the conduct of the officer.

Pryor v. Rochester, 166 N. Y. 548, 60 N. E. 252; Bates v. St. Louis, 153 Mo. 18, 77 Am. St. Rep. 701, 54 S. W. 439; 28 Cyc. 459, 460; Abbott v. Hayes County, 78 Neb. 729, 111 S. W. 780; State ex rel. Chapman v. Walbridge, 153 Mo. 194, 54 S. W. 447; Bennett v. Orange, 69 N. J. L. 675, 56 Atl. 1131; Gallagher v. Lincoln, 63 Neb. 339, 88 N. W. 505; Bodenhofer v. Hogan, 142 Iowa, 321, 134 Am. St. Rep. 418, 120 N. W. 659, 19 Ann. Cas. 1073; Kehn v. State, 93 N. Y. 291; Montague v. Massey, 76 Va. 307; Lattimore v. Tarrant County, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 610, 124 S. W. 205; Young v. Jefferson County, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 1209, 100 S. W. 335; Indianapolis v. Martin, 45 Ind. App. 256, 89 N. E. 599; Whiting v. United States, 35 Ct. Cl. 291; Gilman v. Des Moines Valley R. Co. 40 Iowa, 200; Peters v. Davenport, 104 Iowa, 625, 74 N. W. 6; Daniels v. Des Moines, 108 Iowa, 484, 79 N. W. 269; Purdy v. Independence, 75 Iowa, 356, 39 N. W. 641; Robertson v. Robinson, 65 Ala. 610, 39 Am. Rep. 17; Hall v. Gavitt, 18 Ind. 390; Hope v. Linden Park Blood Horse Assn. 58 N. J. L. 627, 55 Am. St. Rep. 614, 34 Atl. 1070; Butler v. Pennsylvania, 10 How. 402, 13 L. ed. 472; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 492.

All finances of the county are under the control of the local corporate authorities. The legislature cannot spread a tax in Cook county for county corporate purposes.

Givins v. Chicago, 188 Ill. 348, 58 N. E. 912; McDonald v. Louisville, 113 Ky. 425, 68 S. W. 413; Booth v. Opel, 244 Ill. 317, 91 N. E. 458; People ex rel. Van Slooten v. Cook County, 221 Ill. 497, 77 N. E. 914; Washingtonian Home v. Chicago, 157 Ill. 414, 29 L.R.A. 798, 41 N. E. 893; People ex rel. Skinner v. Auditor, 12 Ill. 307; People ex rel. Merchants' Sav. L. & T. Co. v. Auditor, 30 Ill. 434; People ex rel. Becker v. Miner, 46 Ill. 384; Chicago v. Nichols, 177 Ill. 97, 52 N. E. 359; Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626; Lindblad v. Board of Education, 221 Ill. 261, 77 N. E. 450; People ex rel. Ahern v. Bollam, 182 Ill. 532, 54 N. E. 1032; State v. Ferguson, 33 N. H. 427; Morgan Park v. Wiswall, 155 Ill. 262, 40 N. E. 611; Lemont v. Jenks, 197 Ill. 363, 90 Am. St. Rep. 172, 64 N. E. 362; De Clercq v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 167 Ill. 215, 47 N. E. 367; Webster v. People, 98 Ill. 343; People ex rel. Neil v. Knopf, 171 Ill. 191, 49 N. E. 424; Bebb v. People, 172 Ill. 376, 50 N. E. 185; Morgan v. Schusselle, 228 Ill. 106, 81 N. E. 814; Yamhill County v. Foster, 53 Or. 124, 99 Pac. 286; Cooley, Const. Lim. § 713; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. State, 49 Ohio St. 189, 16 L.R.A. 380, 30 N. E. 435; Hib- L.R.A.1917B.

bard v. State, 65 Ohio St. 574, 58 L.R.A. 654, 64 N. E. 109; Ramsey v. Hoeger, 76 Ill. 432; Lane v. Dorman, 4 Ill. 240, 36 Am. Dec. 543.

The 2-mill tax under the Constitution of 1848, levied to pay an indebtedness of the state, must be applied to the purpose for which it was intended to be used by the Constitution, and cannot be diverted into the general state revenue fund.

People ex rel. Skinner v. Auditor, 12 Ill. 307; People ex rel. Merchants' Sav. L. & T. Co. v. Auditor, 30 Ill. 434; People ex rel. Becker v. Miner, 46 Ill. 384; Water Comrs. v. Hall, 98 Ill. 371; Alton v. Aetna Ins. Co. 82 Ill. 45; Chicago v. Nichols, 177 Ill. 97, 52 N. E. 359; Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626; Wright v. Bishop, 88 Ill. 302; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 1237, 1289; Fuller v. Chicago, 89 Ill. 294; Lindblad v. Board of Education, 221 Ill. 274, 77 N. E. 450; People v. Williams, 232 Ill. 519, 83 N. E. 1047; Walcott v. People, 17 Mich. 68; Union Trust Co. v. Wayne Probate Judge, 125 Mich. 495, 84 N. W. 1101; Niles Bryant School of Piano Tuning v. Bailey, 161 Mich. 193, 126 N. W. 116; Board of Education v. Macon County, 137 N. C. 310, 49 S. E. 353; Yazoo City v. State, 48 Miss. 440; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. State, 51 Miss. 137; Blair v. Marye, 80 Va. 485; Southern R. Co. v. Mecklenburg County, 148 N. C. 220, 61 S. E. 600; People ex rel. Biebinger v. Peoria & E. R. Co. 216 Ill. 221, 74 N. E. 734.

The legislature must prescribe some compensation to the state's attorney; and when prescribed and fixed by law the command of the Constitution is that he "shall receive such compensation as is or may be provided by law."

People v. Williams, 232 Ill. 519, 83 N. E. 1047; Blair v. Marye, 80 Va. 485; Thon v. Com. 77 Va. 289; Thomas v. Owens, 4 Md. 189.

House Bills 231 and 232 are invalid as being in express violation of § 13, of art. 4, of the Constitution.

Lyons v. Police Pension Bd. 255 Ill. 139, 99 N. E. 337; Brooks v. Hatch, 261 Ill. 179, 103 N. E. 745.

House Bill 232, providing additional compensation, is a local and special law within the meaning of the 6th paragraph of § 22, of art. 4, of the Constitution, which prohibits the general assembly from passing local or special laws "regulating county and township affairs."

Pettibone v. West Chicago Park Comrs. 215 Ill. 304, 74 N. E. 387; West Chicago Park Comrs. v. Chicago, 216 Ill. 54, 74 N. E. 771.

The Acts of 1907, if valid when passed, merely required that the state's attorney pay over certain fees, and the law that so provided being now repealed, there is now no requirement applying to the Wayman term to pay over the fees.

People ex rel. Burdick v. Board of Education, 166 Ill. 388, 46 N. E. 1099; Farwell v. Benevolent Assn. of Paid Fire Dept. 4 Ill. App. 36; Palmer v. Danville, 166 Ill. 42, 46 N. E. 629; Kipp v. Lichtenstein, 79 Ill. 358; Menard County v. Kincaid, 71 Ill. 587; Wilson v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 64 Ill. 542, 16 Am. Rep. 565; Eaton v. Graham, 11 Ill. 619; People ex rel. Kern v. Nelson, 156 Ill. 364, 40 N. E. 957; Struthers v. People, 116 Ill. App. 481; Allen v. People, 84 Ill. 502; People ex rel. Higgins v. Freeman, 242 Ill. 150, 80 N. E. 667; Holcomb v. Boynton, 151 Ill. 294, 37 N. E. 1031, affirming 49 Ill. App. 503; Mix v. Illinois C. R. Co. 116 Ill. 502, 6 N. E. 42; Hall v. Steele, 82 Ala. 562, 2 So. 650; Mechem, Pub. Off. 1890 ed. § 942, p. 630.

The representative of Wayman, in any view of this case, is authorized to deduct his 10 per cent commission from the fines and forfeitures and to retain the same. There is no provision anywhere that he pay over his commission to the county.

Buckingham v. People, 26 Ill. App. 269; Morton v. Bailey, 2 Ill. 213, 27 Am. Dec. 767; Doyle v. Wilkinson, 120 Ill. 430, 11 N. E. 890; Fulton County v. Boyer, 116 Ill. App. 388; Hargrave v. Penrod, Beecher's Breese (Ill.) 401, 12 Am. Dec. 201; Reddick v. Cloud, 7 Ill. 670.

Wayman had the power of assignment of the fees, and his lien is enforceable after his death by his personal representative for the benefit of his estate.

Dayhuff v. Dayhuff, 81 Ill. 499; Keith v. Horner, 32 Ill. 524; Robinson v. Appleton, 124 Ill. 276, 15 N. E. 761; 1 Jones, Liens, § 990, p. 682; Telfer v. Kierstead, 9 Abb. Pr. 418; Hubbard v. Clark, — N. J. Eq. —, 7 Atl. 26; Batre v. Auze, 5 Ala. 173; Selden v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 239 Ill. 67, 130 Am. St. Rep. 180, 87 N. E. 860; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Ackley, 171 Ill. 100, 44 L.R.A. 177, 49 N. E. 222; People v. Williams, 232 Ill. 519, 83 N. E. 1047; Galpin v. Chicago, 159 Ill. App. 135; Stewart v. Sample, 168 Ala. 270, 53 So. 182; Thompson v. Cullers, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 35 S. W. 412; Birkbeck v. Stafford, 14 Abb. Pr. 285, 23 How. Pr. 236; Roesch v. W. B. Worthen Co. 95 Ark. 482, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 374, 130 S. W. 551; Oberdoerfer v. Louisville School Bd. 120 Ky. 112, 85 S. W. 696; Carnegie Trust Co. v. Battery Place Realty Co. 67 Misc. 452, 122 N. Y. Supp. 697; First Nat. Bank v. State, 68 Neb. 482, 94 N. W. 633, 4 Ann. Cas. 423; Brackett v. Blake, 7 Met. 335, 41 Am. Dec. 442; People ex rel. Grattan v. Dayton, L.R.A.1917B.

50 How. Pr. 143; Mechem, Pub. Off. § 874.

The administratrix succeeds to the legal title to the personal estate, and the title takes effect by relation from the death of the intestate.

Stewart v. Taylor, 9 Lea, 352; Makepeace v. Moore, 10 Ill. 474; Hawkins v. McCalla, 95 Ga. 192, 22 S. E. 141; Re Seidel, 2 Woodw. Dec. 259; Chadwick v. People, 108 Ill. App. 620.

The rights of the city are subordinate to those of every other claimant to the fines, penalties, and forfeitures, excepting only the superintendent of schools. The claim of each defendant is subsequent to the prior lien and claim of the Wayman estate.

Galpin v. Chicago, 249 Ill. 554, 94 N. E. 961, affirming 159 Ill. App. 135; People v. Williams, 232 Ill. 519, 83 N. E. 1047.

The action is interpleader, and judicial cognizance cannot be taken of mere equitable claims or rights as between different governmental agencies; and the court should disburse as Galpin, clerk of the municipal court, was directed by law to disburse the fund.

Dyas v. Dyas, 231 Ill. 374, 83 N. E. 229; Galpin v. Chicago, 159 Ill. App. 135; Byers v. Sanson-Thayer Commission Co. 111 Ill. App. 575; Clinton County v. Schuster, 82 Ill. 137.

Messrs. John W. Beckwith, Joseph F. Grossman, Robert Redfield, Francis O'Shaughnessy, Jacob C. LeBoesky, P. J. Lucey, Attorney General, Thomas J. O'Hare, Carl R. Chindblom, John P. Barnes, William F. Struckmann, Walter E. Moss, Howard W. Hayes, Henry P. Chandler, and M. H. Gladstone for appellees.

Cooke, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On December 13, 1912, Homer K. Galpin filed in the circuit court of Cook county his bill of interpleader, alleging that in November, 1906, he was elected clerk of the municipal court of Chicago and held that office until December 2, 1912; that during the four-year period beginning December 6, 1908, and ending December 1, 1912, the fines and penalties paid to him by persons convicted of violating various statutes and park ordinances particularly mentioned in the bill aggregated the sum of $191,206.50 and that he has received interest amounting to $5,998.10 on said fund and $5,272.30 as interest on funds other than those above mentioned; that John E. W. Wayman, who was state's attorney of Cook county during the said four-year period, the county of Cook, and the superintendent of schools of Cook county, are each claiming the entire fund, and the city of Chicago, the South Park commissioners, the commissioners of Lincoln Park, the West Chicago Park commissioners, the North Shore Park district, the Ridge Avenue Park district, the state board of pharmacy, the Illinois state board of dental examiners, the state board of commissioners of labor, E. A. Rust, Charles Hagenbucher, Christ Heiser, Joseph Obornij, and Matt A. Berkholz are each claiming specific portions of said fund; that complainant has always been, and is now, willing to pay the amounts collected by him as such clerk, and interest accrued thereon, to the person or persons lawfully entitled to the same, but is, by reason of the various conflicting claims aforesaid, uncertain as to the proper distribution of the fund. All of said claimants were made defendants to the bill, which prayed that they be required to interplead and settle and adjust their demands among themselves.

All of the defendants, except Rust, Hagenbucher, Heiser, Obornij, and Berkholz, who were deputy game wardens and whose interest, if any, in the fund are insignificant, answered the bill, setting up their various claims to the fund or to portions thereof. The boards of trustees of various police pension funds filed an intervening petition, praying that they be made defendants and be permitted to set up, by way of answer, their claims to portions of the fund. The prayer of the petition was granted, and answers were filed by the respective boards of trustees of the police pension funds. Hale Gossart also filed an intervening petition praying to be made a party defendant and claiming $75 of the fund.

On September 15, 1913, the death of John E. W. Wayman was suggested, and Elizabeth C. Wayman, as administratrix of his estate, was substituted as a defendant in his stead. Thereafter the court entered an order allowing the complainant to retain out of the fund in his hands $1,049.85 on account of costs and expenses incurred by him in filing the bill of interpleader, and directing him to pay the balance, amounting to $201,427.05, to the clerk of the circuit court, which was accordingly done and the complainant was dismissed from the suit.

The cause was heard by the chancellor upon a stipulation of facts, and a decree was entered finding that the defendant Hale Gossart is entitled to $75 of said fund, that the city of Chicago is entitled to $5,272.32 of said fund, and that the county of Cook is entitled to the balance of said fund, and directing the clerk to distribute the fund among said parties in the proportions in which they are entitled to the same as found by the decree. From that decree Elizabeth C. Wayman, as administratrix, has L.R.A.1917B.

prosecuted this appeal, and various of the defendants who were found to have no interest in the fund, and the city of Chicago, have assigned cross errors.

No complaint is made by any of the parties of that portion of the decree which awards to Gossart $75 and to the city of Chicago $5,272.32 of the fund. The controversy here is over the proper distribution of the remainder of the fund, amounting to $196,079.73.

The Wayman estate claims the entire fund under and by virtue of § 8 of the Fees and Salaries Act and § 239 of the School Law. That portion of said § 8, as amended in 1907, necessary to be here noticed, is as follows: "State's attorneys shall also be entitled to the following fees: . . . All the foregoing fees shall be taxed as costs to be collected from the defendant, if possible, upon conviction. But in cases of inquiry into the sanity or insanity of any person alleged to be insane, in cases on a charge of bastardy and in case of appeal or writ of error in the supreme or appellate court, where judgment is in favor of the accused, the fees allowed the state's attorney therein shall be retained out of the fines and forfeitures collected by them in other cases. Ten per cent of all moneys, except revenue, collected by them and paid over to the authorities entitled thereto, which per cent, together with the fees provided for herein that are not collected from the parties tried or examined, shall be paid out of any fines and forfeited recognizances collected by them. State's attorneys shall have a lien for their fees on moneys except revenue received by them until such fees and earnings are fully paid." Laws 1907, p. 329.

Section 239 of the School Law of 1909 reads as follows: "It shall be the duty of the state's attorneys of the several counties to enforce the collection of all fines, forfeitures and penalties imposed or incurred in the courts of record of their respective counties, and to pay the same to the county superintendent of the county wherein the same have been imposed or incurred, retaining therefrom the fees and commissions allowed them by law." Laws 1909, p. 406.

This provision of the School Law of 1909 is identical with § 2 of article 14 of the School Law of 1889, which was in force when Wayman became state's attorney of Cook county.

The county of Cook claims the entire fund under and by virtue of two acts of the general assembly approved May 17, 1907, both of which have since been repealed. One of these acts is referred to in this proceeding as House Bill 231 and the other as House Bill 232. House Bill 231 was as follows:

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the people of the state of Illinois represented in the general assembly: That 'An Act Concerning Fees and Salaries, and to Classify the Several Counties of This State with Reference Thereto,' approved March 29, 1872, in force July 1, 1872, title as amended by act approved March 28, 1874, in force July 1, 1874, 'Act as Amended by an Act Approved May 15, 1903, in Force July 1, 1903,' be and the same is hereby amended by adding thereto section 9a to read as follows:

"9a. Each state's attorney in counties of the third class, hereafter to be elected, at the end of each and every quarter of the year after entering upon the duties of his office and within ten days after the expiration of his term of office shall pay all fees collected and remaining in his hands into the county treasury of his county." Laws 1907, p. 320.

House Bill 232 reads as follows:

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the people of the state of Illinois, represented in the general assembly: That the state's attorney of Cook county shall be paid by the said county, in addition to the salary which may be paid to him from the state treasury, such further compensation as will make his salary amount to the sum of $10,000 per annum, which sum shall be in full payment for all services rendered by him.

"Sec. 2. The said compensation shall be paid in equal quarterly instalments; and it shall be the duty of the county comptroller of said county, at the end of each and every quarter of the year, to draw an order or warrant therefor in favor of the state's attorney on the county treasurer of said county, whose duty it shall be to pay the same on its presentation properly indorsed: Provided, that no warrant shall be drawn or money paid unless the state's attorney shall have, for the current quarter, made a report to the commissioners of said county and paid into the county treasury all fees collected by him as state's attorney for said quarter." Laws 1907, p. 323.

The Wayman estate contends that both of these acts were unconstitutional for various reasons, but it will be necessary to consider but one of the grounds urged against each act.

It is contended by the Wayman estate that House Bill 231 violated that portion of § 13 of article 4 of the Constitution which provides that "no law shall be revived or amended by reference to its title only, but the law revived, or the section amended, shall be inserted at length in the new act."

This provision of the Constitution has been considered in numerous cases decided L.R.A.1917B.

by this court since the adoption of our present Constitution. The question arising in most of the cases has been whether an act which does not in express terms purport to amend another act, but which in fact does alter or change some prior act, is within the constitutional inhibition. Soon after the adoption of the Constitution of 1870 this question was presented in People ex rel Klokke v. Wright, 70 Ill. 388. It was pointed out in that case that the act there under consideration did not purport to amend any particular section of any act, and that all that could be said of it in that respect was that by implication it amended the municipal charters of cities. With reference to the constitutional provision above quoted it was said: "It cannot be held that this clause of the Constitution embraces every enactment which, in any degree, however remotely it may be, affects the prior law on a given subject: for, to so hold would be to bring about an evil far greater than the one sought to be obviated by this clause."

In many subsequent cases it has been held that it was not the purpose of the framers of the Constitution to limit or control repeals by implication, but that if an act is complete in itself, and does not purport to amend a prior act, it is not within the constitutional prohibition, although its effect may be to repeal certain provisions contained in prior acts and to substitute new provisions in lieu thereof. Geisen v. Heiderich, 104 Ill. 537; School Directors v. School Directors, 135 Ill. 464, 28 N. E. 49; People ex rel. Stuckart v. Knopf, 183 Ill. 410, 56 N. E. 155; People ex rel. Akin v. Loeffler, 175 Ill. 585, 51 N. E. 785; Erford v. Peoria, 229 Ill. 546, 82 N. E. 374; People v. McBride, 234 Ill. 146, 123 Am. St. Rep. 82, 84 N. E. 865, 14 Ann. Cas. 994; People v. Jones, 242 Ill. 138, 89 N. E. 711; Hollingsworth v. Chicago & C. Coal Co. 243 Ill. 98, 90 N. E. 276; People v. Van Bever, 248 Ill. 136, 93 N. E. 725; People ex rel. Cant v. Crossley, 261 Ill. 78, 103 N. E. 537. On the other hand, even though an act professes to be an independent act and does not purport to amend any prior act, still if, in fact, it makes changes in an existing act by adding new provisions and mingling the new with the old on the same subject so as to make of the old and the new a connected piece of legislation covering the same subject, the latter act must be considered an amendment of the former and as within the constitutional prohibition. Badenoch v. Chicago, 222 Ill. 71, 78 N. E. 31; Brooks v. Hatch, 261 Ill. 179, 103 N. E. 745. The case at bar, however, is not governed by the rules laid down in either of the two lines of cases above mentioned, for the reason that House Bill 231 did not purport to be an independent act or to be complete in itself, but both in the title and in the body of the act it was stated that the purpose of the act was to "amend" the Fees and Salaries Act "by adding thereto § 9a." An examination of the provisions of House Bill 231 in connection with the other provisions of the Fees and Salaries Act discloses the fact that the only purpose of the new act was to amend § 8 of the prior act by changing the beneficiary of the fees authorized by said § 8 to be taxed as costs in favor of state's attorneys in counties of the third class. Under the Fees and Salaries Act as it existed at the time of the adoption of House Bill 231, state's attorneys in all of the counties of the state were the beneficiaries of all the fees enumerated in said § 8. The effect of House Bill 231, if valid, was to take away from state's attorneys in counties of the third class the right to the beneficial enjoyment of such fees and to make the county the beneficiary thereof. House Bill 231 therefore amended a prior law by reference to its title only, and the section amended was not inserted at length in the new act. This was a clear violation of § 13 of article 4 of the Constitution (People ex rel. Breckon v. Election Comrs. 221 Ill. 9, 77 N. E. 321, 5 Ann. Cas. 562), and rendered said House Bill 231 inoperative and void.

The situation here is, in principle, the same as that disclosed in Lyons v. Police Pension Bd. 255 Ill. 139, 99 N. E. 337. The title of the act there held to violate the provision of the Constitution above quoted was:

"An Act to Amend an Act Entitled 'An Act to Provide for the Setting Apart, Formation, and Disbursement of a Police Pension Fund in Cities, Villages, and Incorporated Towns.'" Laws 1911, p. 170.

The nature of the amendment was the addition to the former act of a new section, to be known as § 3a, extending the benefit of the act to police matrons in the police department of a city upon the terms specified in such additional section. In holding that the amendatory act violated the provision of § 13 of article 4 of the Constitution above quoted we said: "The title gives no intimation of the character of the amendment or the section or part of the act to be amended. The amendatory act was, in fact, an amendment of § 3 of the original act, where, only, it is declared who may become entitled to pensions. . . . The amendatory act changes that section by adding to the persons who may receive pensions, police matrons appointed and sworn, of twenty years' service, and it also contains many provisions applying to L.R.A.1917B.

pensions to police matrons which do not appear in original § 3 and which might have appeared as amendments to other sections or as additional sections. Section 3 as amended is not inserted at length in the new act. In order to ascertain the extent of the provisions of that section to-day, it is necessary to examine not only the amendatory act, but to go back to the former statute and by reading the two together ascertain what persons may become pensioners. This is the condition which § 13 of article 4 of the Constitution was intended to prevent by the provision that 'no law shall be revived or amended by reference to its title only, but the law revived, or the section amended, shall be inserted at length in the new act.' Calling the amendment an additional section does not change its character and cannot evade the constitutional requirement."

In this case, as in the Lyons Case, the purpose of the act was expressly stated to be to amend a prior act by adding thereto a new section. The new section added by amendment in the Lyons Case increased the beneficiaries who might participate in the fund provided for in the original act, by adding thereto a new class of beneficiaries. The new section added by amendment in this case took away from one class of beneficiaries the right to the fees and commissions allowed them by § 8 of the Fees and Salaries Act and substituted another class of beneficiaries therefor. In this case, as in the Lyons Case, the title gave no intimation of the character of the amendment or the section or part of the act to be amended. The amendatory act was, in fact, an amendment of § 8 of the original act, and changed that section by substituting for the beneficiaries specified in said § 8 other beneficiaries designated in the amendatory act. Section 8, as amended, was not inserted at length in the new act; and in order to ascertain the extent of the provisions of that section as it existed after the adoption of House Bill 231, it was necessary to examine not only the amendatory act, but to go back to the former statute, and by reading the two together ascertain the disposition made by law of the fees provided for in said § 8 and the rights of the county with reference to those fees. This case, therefore, as well as the Lyons Case, presents a condition which § 13 of article 4 of the Constitution was intended to prevent by the provision that "no law shall be revived or amended by reference to its title only, but the law revived, or the section amended, shall be inserted at length in the new act."

Section 13 of article 4 of the Constitution also provides: "No act hereafter passed shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title."

With reference to this provision we said in Rouse v. Thompson, 228 Ill. 522, 81 N. E. 1109: "The title of an act formerly was of little importance. Of recent years, however, by reason of the adoption by most of the states of constitutional provisions similar to the one above quoted, the title to an act in such states is now of very great importance. Some of the reasons which led to the adoption of such constitutional provisions are said to be: First, to prevent 'log-rolling' legislation; second, to prevent surprise or fraud upon the legislature by inserting provisions into bills of which the titles give no intimation and which might by oversight be carelessly and unintentionally adopted; and, third, to fairly apprise the people, through such publication of legislative proceedings as is usually made, of the subjects of legislation being considered, so they might be heard thereon, if they so desire, by petition or remonstrance. And while such constitutional provisions are to be liberally construed in order that a legislative enactment may be sustained, the courts cannot permit such provisions to be disregarded or overridden in the enactment of legislation."

The title of said House Bill 232 was: "An Act Providing for the Payment by the County of Cook of Further Compensation to the State's Attorney of Said County."

This was a companion bill of House Bill 231, and was evidently passed by the legislature on the supposition that House Bill 231 was a valid enactment. Had House Bill 231 been valid, then the objection made by the Wayman estate that the subject of House Bill 232 was not expressed in the title of the act could not be sustained, because, had House Bill 231 taken away the right of the state's attorney to the fees specified in § 8 of the Fees and Salaries Act, the effect of House Bill 232 would have been merely to provide additional compensation for the state's attorney of Cook county. If, however, House Bill 232 be considered alone and without regard to House Bill 231 (and it must now be so considered), then it must be held that it violated that provision of the Constitution last above quoted, because, when so considered, its effect, if enforced, would have been not merely to provide for the payment of further compensation to the state's attorney of Cook county, but also to take away from him the right to the fees and commissions allowed him by § 8 of the Fees and Salaries Act. The title of the act, professing to be the title to an act providing for the payment of further compensation to the state's attorney, gave no intimation of the provisions of the act depriving the state's attorney of the right to the beneficial enjoyment of the fees and commissions allowed him by § 8 of the Fees and Salaries Act. "Further compensation" means compensation in addition to that already provided for, and it requires no argument to show that provisions in the act which, instead of providing for the payment of further compensation to the state's attorney, attempted to take away from him the compensation then provided for by law, were not within the title of the act and were therefore inoperative and void. It is therefore clear that House Bill 232 must fall with House Bill 231, because, if House Bill 232 be considered as the legislation depriving the state's attorney of Cook county of the fees allowed him by § 8 of the Fees and Salaries Act and requiring the payment into the county treasury of all fees collected by him, the subject of the act was not expressed in the title.

For the reason that the two acts under which the county of Cook claims the fund in controversy were void, it necessarily follows that the county has no valid claim to the fund or to any part thereof, and the decree of the circuit court, in so far as it awards a portion of the fund to the county, is erroneous. Each of these acts has been repealed by a later act, which has been held valid in Hoynes v. Danisch, 264 Ill. 467, 106 N. E. 341, Butzow v. Kern, 264 Ill. 498, 106 N. E. 338, and Hoynes v. Ling, 264 Ill. 506, 106 N. E. 349. The matters determined in those cases have no bearing upon the questions here involved, and the decision in this case does not affect the questions there decided.

From the stipulation upon which the cause was heard in the circuit court it appears that Wayman stated publicly during his campaign for election in October, 1908, that if elected state's attorney he would accept an annual salary of $10,000 and pay into the county treasury all fees. It further appears that Wayman received from the county treasurer of Cook county, upon warrants drawn by the county comptroller, each of which warrants recited that it was for Wayman's salary as state's attorney, the sum of $800 per month during his entire term of office, and that during such period he paid to the county treasurer a total of $62,970.75, which sum he reported to the board of commissioners of Cook county represented the fees received by him as state's attorney during his term of office. It is contended by the various parties, whose claims conflict with that of the Wayman estate, that by reason of this conduct on Wayman's part his estate is now estopped from claiming any portion of the fund in controversy. With this contention we cannot agree. The fees or salary of an officer, having been fixed by law, become an incident to the office, and it is contrary to public policy for candidates to attempt to attain such office by promises made to the electors to perform the duties of the office for any other or different compensation than that fixed by law. Such promises being illegal, they cannot be enforced. Abbott v. Hayes County, 78 Neb. 729, 111 N. W. 780; People ex rel. Satterlee v. Board of Police, 75 N. Y. 38. Whether, as held by some courts of last resort, such conduct on the part of a successful candidate is sufficient to invalidate his election it is not necessary or proper here to determine, as that question could only be properly presented in a proceeding brought against the officer to test his right to office. It cannot be raised where, as here, the officer's term has expired and the controversy concerns only his right to the fees of his office.

Neither was Wayman estopped from claiming the compensation fixed by statute for his services as state's attorney. In Holcomb v. Boynton, 151 Ill. 294, 37 N. E. 1031, we said: "It is a novel idea in the law of estoppel that the doctrine should be applied to a person who has been guilty of no fraud, simply because, under a misapprehension of the law, he has treated as legal and valid an act void and open to the inspection of all. As we understand the doctrine of estoppel in pais, it is based upon a fraudulent purpose and a fraudulent result. Before it can be invoked to the aid of a litigant, it must appear that the person against whom it is invoked has, by his words or conduct, caused him to believe in the existence of a certain state of things and induced him to act upon that belief. If both parties are equally cognizant of the facts, and one has acted under a mistaken idea of the law, the other party cannot say he has been deceived thereby, and is entitled to an application of the rule, but will be considered as having acted upon his own judgment solely."

To the same effect is Finch v. Theiss, 267 Ill. 65, 107 N. E. 898.

In order to clearly understand the nature of the claims to the fund made by the various claimants other than the county of Cook, it will be necessary to mention the sources from which this fund came into the hands of the clerk of the municipal court.

From the stipulation upon which the cause was heard by the chancellor it appears that the fund in controversy represents the fines and penalties received by the clerk of the municipal court during the four-year period beginning December 8, L.R.A.1917B.

1908, and ending December 1, 1912, and interest thereon; that the receipts from fines in criminal and quasi criminal cases amounted to $109,369; that the receipts from penalties imposed for violations of the provisions of an act entitled "An Act to Promote Attendance of Children in Schools and to Prevent Truancy," approved June 11, 1897, in force July 1, 1897, and §§ 274 and 275 of an act entitled "An Act to Establish and Maintain a System of Free Schools," approved and in force June 12, 1909, amounted to $1,222.50; that the receipts from penalties imposed for violations, within the jurisdiction of the city of Chicago, of an act entitled "An Act Defining Motor Vehicles," etc., approved May 28, 1907, in force July 1, 1907, and an act of like title approved June 10, 1911, in force July 1, 1911, amounted to $230.50; that the receipts from penalties imposed in proceedings instituted by the South Park commissioners for violations of South Park ordinances amounted to $40,866.50, of which $17,508 was collected prior to July 1, 1911, and $23,358.50 on or after that date; that the receipts from penalties imposed for violations, within the jurisdiction of the South Park commissioners, of the Motor Vehicle Acts of May 28, 1907, and June 10, 1911, amounted to $8,889; that the receipts from penalties imposed in proceedings instituted by the commissioners of Lincoln Park for violations of Lincoln Park ordinances amounted to $1,324, of which $405 was collected prior to July 1, 1911, and $919 on or after that date; that the receipts from penalties imposed for violations, within the jurisdiction of the commissioners of Lincoln Park, of the Motor Vehicle Acts of May 28, 1907, and June 10, 1911, amounted to $7,949; that the receipts from penalties imposed in proceedings instituted by the West Chicago Park commissioners for violations of West Chicago Park ordinances amounted to $9,046.50, of which $4,954 was collected prior to July 1, 1911, and $4,092.50 on or after that date; that the receipts from penalties imposed for violations, within the jurisdiction of the West Chicago Park commissioners, of the Motor Vehicle Acts of May 28, 1907, and June 10, 1911, amounted to $11,115; that the receipts from penalties imposed in proceedings instituted by the commissioners of North Shore Park district for violations of North Shore Park ordinances amounted to $33; that the receipts from penalties imposed for violations, within the jurisdiction of the commissioners of North Shore Park district, of the Motor Vehicle Acts of May 28, 1907, and June 10, 1911, amounted to $20, that the receipts from penalties imposed in proceedings instituted by the commissioners of Ridge Avenue Park district for violations of Ridge Avenue Park ordinances amounted to $5; that the receipts from penalties imposed for violations of the provisions of an act entitled "An Act to Regulate the Practice of Pharmacy in the State of Illinois," etc., approved May 11, 1901, in force July 1, 1901, amounted to $145; that the receipts from penalties imposed for violations of the provisions of an act entitled "An Act to Regulate the Practice of Dental Surgery and Dentistry in the State of Illinois," etc., approved June 11, 1909, in force July 1, 1909, amounted to $335; that the receipts from penalties for violations of the provisions of an act entitled "An Act Relating to Employment Offices and Agencies," approved and in force May 11, 1903, amounted to $599; and that the receipts from penalties imposed for violations of the provisions of an act entitled "An Act for the Protection of Game, Wild Fowl, and Birds," etc., approved April 23, 1903, in force July 1, 1903, in actions in which complaints were filed by E. A. Rust, Charles Hagenbucher, Christ Heiser, Joseph Obornij, and Matt A. Berkholz, deputy game wardens, amounted to $57.50. The interest which accrued in the hands of the clerk of the municipal court upon the respective sums above mentioned aggregated $5,998.10. The clerk also received $5,272.30 interest on funds in his hands other than the funds above mentioned. The item of interest last mentioned was awarded to the city of Chicago, and no complaint is made of the action of the chancellor in that regard.

The Wayman estate claims that the uncollected fees to which Wayman, during his term of office, was entitled by virtue of § 8 of the Fees and Salaries Act amounted to $416,729.90; that no part of the same has been paid; and that by virtue of said § 8, considered in connection with § 239 of the School Law, the Wayman estate is entitled to all the moneys received by the clerk of the municipal court from fines and penalties, and the interest accrued thereon, to apply on these uncollected fees. The other claimants contend that the uncollected fees to which Wayman was entitled by virtue of said §§ 8 and 239 do not amount to as much as the fund in controversy, so that in any event the Wayman estate would not be entitled to the entire fund. This controversy over the amount of uncollected fees arises from the following state of facts:

Section 8 of the Fees and Salaries Act, as amended in 1907 and as in force when Wayman became state's attorney of Cook county, after providing a fee of $30 for each conviction for offenses punishable by death or imprisonment in the penitentiary, allowed a fee of $15 for each conviction in other cases in courts of record. Laws of 1907, p. 239. In 1909 the legislature amended said § 8 of the Fees and Salaries Act by providing, with reference to the class of cases in which a fee of $15 was allowed, that "no such fees shall be allowed in any such case tried in the municipal court of Chicago, unless the same be tried by jury or unless the trial thereof shall occupy more than one full day, and then only in case the court shall expressly order such fees to be allowed." Laws 1909, p. 231.

After this act became effective 16,955 convictions were had in criminal cases in the municipal court of Chicago for violations of provisions of the Criminal Code wherein no state's attorney's fees were taxed as costs and wherein no order was entered that any such fees be allowed. The claim for uncollected fees by the Wayman estate includes $254,325, on account of the 16,955 convictions in the municipal court in which no state's attorney's fees were taxed as costs against the defendants. It also includes $19,120.65 as a commission of 10 per cent on the principal sum of $191,206.50 received by the clerk of the municipal court from fines and penalties imposed by the municipal court of Chicago during Wayman's term of office.

It is not necessary to determine whether the provision, added by the amendment of 1909 that no state's attorney's fees should be allowed in certain cases tried in the municipal court of Chicago, violated some provision of the Constitution, or whether, because enacted during Wayman's term of office, it could be enforced against him or against his estate, for the reason that as no such fees were taxed as costs against the defendants in such cases they were not included within the provision of said § 8, authorizing the payment of fees that are not collected from the parties tried or examined, out of any fines and forfeitures collected by the state's attorney. This conclusion necessarily follows from a consideration of the various provisions of said § 8, as amended in 1907 and as again amended in 1909. During all of Wayman's term it was provided by said § 8 that "all the foregoing fee shall be taxed as costs to be collected from the defendant, if possible, upon conviction," and that "the fees provided for herein that are not collected from the parties tried or examined" shall be paid out of any fines or forfeitures collected by them. The intention of the legislature, as thus clearly expressed, was to provide certain fees as compensation for the state's attorney which should be taxed as costs and should be collected from the persons convicted, if possible; but if in any case it should not be possible to collect the fee from the person convicted, then the same should be paid out of any fines and forfeitures collected by the state's attorney. The state's attorney did not become entitled to any of the fees allowed by said § 8 until the same had been taxed as costs, and it was only when such fees had been taxed as costs and the same could not be collected from the persons against whom they were taxed that the state's attorney had the right to apply fines and forfeitures collected by him to the payment of such fees. In Galpin v. Chicago, 249 Ill. 554, 94 N. E. 961, considering what is included within the term "uncollected costs," as used in the Municipal Court Act, where the clerk is authorized to apply moneys received from fines and penalties to the payment of the uncollected costs in criminal and quasi criminal cases, we said: "The phrase 'uncollected costs' as used here was intended to include only costs collectable by means of legal process; that is, costs for which judgment had been rendered but which the proper officer had been unable to collect. Where the law does not provide for a judgment for costs and no judgment therefor is rendered, we are of the opinion that the statute was not intended to authorize the taking of any amount from the fund involved herein, thereby diminishing it to the detriment of the several governmental agencies or governmental purposes to which it might otherwise be applied."

If the provision inserted in said § 8 by the amendment of 1909, taking away from the state's attorney his right to fees in certain cases tried in the municipal court, was invalid as applied to Wayman, it was his duty to have his fees in each case taxed as costs against the defendant, in order that the same might be collected, if possible, from the person convicted. Having failed to pursue that course, his estate is not entitled to have any portion of the fund derived from fines and penalties applied to the payment of such fees.

Said § 8 as amended in 1907 and as again amended in 1909 provided that the state's attorney should be entitled to 10 per cent of all moneys, except revenue, collected by him and paid over to the authorities entitled thereto, and that the same should be paid out of any fines and forfeitures collected by him. As hereinbefore stated, the Wayman estate claims that these commissions amounted to $19,120.65, being 10 per cent of all fines and penalties received by the clerk of the municipal court from all sources. Whether this contention is to be sustained depends upon whether all of these fines and penalties were "collected" by Wayman, within the meaning of the statutes allowing such commission. In our judgment fines and penalties paid to the clerk of a court were "collected" by the state's attorney, within the meaning of § 8 of the Fees and Salaries Act, (1) when the prosecution of the case which resulted in the imposition of the fine or penalty was conducted by the state's attorney; and (2) when the law made it the duty of the state's attorney to collect fines and penalties imposed in suits not prosecuted by him. This was assumed, without discussion, in Galpin v. Chicago, supra. It must be presumed, there being no evidence to the contrary, that Wayman prosecuted all suits which, under the statute, it was his duty to prosecute. In order to determine upon what fines and penalties a commission of 10 per cent for collection was allowed the state's attorney by said § 8, it is therefore necessary to determine what cases, under the statute, it was Wayman's duty to prosecute and what fines and penalties imposed in suits not prosecuted by him it was his duty, under the statute, to collect. It is conceded by the appellees that it was Wayman's duty, as state's attorney, to prosecute all suits from which the fines and forfeitures in question were derived, except those brought to recover penalties for the violation of the Pharmacy Act, the Dentistry Act, and the Employment Offices and Agencies Act, and those brought to recover penalties for the violation of park ordinances.

Among the duties of state's attorneys, as prescribed by § 5 of the act entitled "An Act in Regard to Attorneys General and State's Attorneys," approved March 26, 1874, in force July 1, 1874, are: "First, to commence and prosecute all actions, suits, indictments and prosecutions, civil and criminal, in any court of record in his county, in which the people of the state or county may be concerned. Second, to prosecute all forfeited bonds and recognizances, and all actions and proceedings for the recovery of debts, revenues, moneys, fines, penalties and forfeitures accruing to the state or his county, or to any school district or road district in his county. . . . Tenth, to perform such other and further duties as may, from time to time, be enjoined on him by law." Rev. Stat. 1874, p. 173.

Section 16 of the Dentistry Act of 1909 provides that "any person who shall practise dentistry in this state without being registered or without a license for that purpose, or violates any of the provisions of this act, shall be subject to prosecution before any court of competent jurisdiction upon complaint, information or indictment, and shall, upon conviction, be fined for each offense in any sum not less than fifty dollars ($50) nor more than two hundred dollars ($200). All fines imposed and collected under this act shall be paid to the Illinois state board of dental examiners for its use."

This is identical with the provision contained in the Dentistry Act of 1905.

Section 7 of the Employment Offices and Agencies Act provides that "any superintendent, assistant superintendent or clerk, who shall accept, directly or indirectly, any fee or compensation from any applicant or from his or her representative, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction, shall be fined not less than twenty-five nor more than fifty dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than thirty days."

Section 10 of the same act provides: "It shall be the duty of the commissioners of labor, and the secretary thereof, to enforce this act. When informed of any violation, it shall be their duty to institute criminal proceedings for the enforcement of its penalties before any court of competent jurisdiction. Any person convicted of a violation of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not less than fifty dollars (50) nor more than one hundred (100) dollars for each offense, or by imprisonment in the county jail for a period not exceeding six (6) months, or both, at the discretion of the court." Laws 1903, p. 198.

Prosecutions against persons violating the provisions of either of these acts are criminal suits or prosecutions in which the people of the state are concerned, and therefore come within the duties of state's attorneys as prescribed by the first subdivision of the said § 5; and § 15 of the Pharmacy Act expressly provides that "it shall be the duty of the state's attorney of the county where such offense is committed to prosecute all persons violating the provisions of this act upon proper complaint being made."

That portion of the fund derived from fines and penalties imposed for violations of these acts was therefore "collected" by the state's attorney, and he was entitled to a commission of 10 per cent thereon.

It is not made the duty of the state's attorney to prosecute suits for the violation of park ordinances, but it does not necessarily follow that Wayman was not entitled to a commission of 10 per cent upon the fines and penalties received by the clerk of the municipal court from such sources. As early as 1865 the School Law of this state (Laws 1865, p. 124) provided that all fines, penalties, and forfeitures imposed or incurred in any of the courts of record or before any justice of the peace, except fines, forfeitures, and penalties incurred or imposed in incorporated towns or cities, for the violation of the by-laws or ordinances thereof, should, when collected, be paid to the school superintendent of the county wherein such fines, forfeitures, and penalties have been imposed or incurred, for distribution in the same manner as the common school funds of the state are disbursed, and that it should be the duty of the state's attorneys to enforce the collection of all fines, forfeitures, and penalties imposed or incurred in courts of record, and pay the same over to the school superintendents of the counties wherein the same have been imposed or incurred, retaining therefrom the fees and commissions allowed them by law. These provisions have been included in each revision of the School Law since 1865 and were in force during Wayman's term of office.

It appears from the evidence herein that the South Park commissioners, the commissioners of Lincoln Park, and the West Chicago Park district were created by private acts passed by the legislature in 1869 (Laws 1869, pp. 342-378); and although they were, respectively, empowered to pass ordinances for the regulation and government of the districts over which they were given jurisdiction and control, no provision was made for the collection of fines and penalties imposed for the violation of such ordinances nor for the disposition of moneys arising from such fines and penalties. It therefore followed as a necessary consequence, under the provisions of the School Law, that it was the duty of the state's attorney to collect all such fines and penalties imposed in courts of record for the violation of park ordinances, and to pay the same over to the superintendent of schools after retaining therefrom the fees and commissions allowed him by law. No attempt was made by the legislature to otherwise dispose of such fines and forfeitures until the amendment, in 1907, of § 58 of the Municipal Court Act of 1905. By the said amended § 58 it was provided with reference to fines and penalties imposed in the municipal court of Chicago in quasi criminal cases instituted in the name of any board of park commissioners situated, in whole or in part, within the city of Chicago, that the same should be paid to the clerk of the court and that the clerk should pay over the same as follows: "One half of all fines and penalties to the city of Chicago and one half of the fines and penalties to the . . . board of public park commissioners, . . . in whose favor such judgment shall have been entered."

It is contended that this section of the Municipal Court Act, in so far as it attempted to dispose of the fines and penalties imposed in the municipal court of Chicago, violated that portion of § 13 of article 4 of the Constitution which provides that no act hereafter passed shall embrace more than one subject and that shall be expressed in the title. The title of the Municipal Court Act is: "An Act in Relation to a Municipal Court in the City of Chicago."

In Riggs v. Jennings, 248 Ill. 584, 94 N. E. 32, we said: "The subject of legislation is a municipal court in the city of Chicago. . . . The title of this act covers everything in relation to the creation, organization, jurisdiction, and procedure of the municipal court, and it is not necessary that it should mention the details of the legislation dealing with the various subdivisions of the subject."

Legislation concerning the disposition of fines and penalties imposed by the municipal court do not relate to the creation, organization, jurisdiction, or procedure of the court, and cannot, therefore, be said to relate to a municipal court unless such disposition is incidental to legislation providing for the maintenance of such court. Provisions for the support of park systems or for general city purposes have no relation to the maintenance of a municipal court; neither does the fact the provision in question relates only to fines, penalties, and forfeitures imposed in the municipal court of Chicago bring the provision within the title of the act. Provisions relating to the procedure in the municipal court for the recovery of fines and penalties for the violation of park ordinances, and for the collection of such fines and penalties after they have been imposed, relate to the municipal court, but a provision as to the disposition of moneys collected from fines and penalties imposed in the municipal court no more relates to the municipal court than the disposition of moneys collected from fines and penalties imposed in other courts. In People v. Roth, 249 Ill. 532, 94 N. E. 953, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 100, we said: "The purpose of the constitutional provision under consideration is to prevent legislation being enacted of which the title gives no hint. The requirement is for the benefit of the members of the general assembly and of the people who are to be governed by such statutes."

The title of the Municipal Court Act gives no hint that the act contains any provision relating to the payment of moneys derived from fines and penalties to the city of Chicago for general corporate purposes or to certain boards of park commissioners. It follows that so much of § 58 of the Municipal Court act as amended in L.R.A.1917B.

1907, as provided for the payment to the city of Chicago of one half of all moneys collected upon judgments of the municipal court in cases for the violation of park ordinances, and for the payment of the remaining one half of such moneys to the board of park commissioners in whose favor such judgments were rendered, was not within the title of the act and was therefore void.

On May 31, 1911, the legislature passed an act entitled: "An Act to Provide for the Setting Apart, Formation, Administration, and Disbursement of a Park Police Pension Fund."

This act became effective July 1, 1911. Section 1 of the act provides that "whenever any persons have been or may be appointed or otherwise selected as commissioners or officers and constitute a board of park commissioners for any one or more towns, whether said towns have heretofore existed or now exists under and in pursuance of any act or acts of the general assembly of this state, for the purpose of locating, establishing, inclosing, improving or maintaining any public park, boulevard, driveway, highway or other public work or improvement, and such board of park commissioners shall have established a police force or department of police under the employ of such board of park commissioners, there shall be set apart the following moneys to constitute a police pension fund: . . . All fines and penalties collected for violations of any of the ordinances of such board of park commissioners or of any of the laws of the state of Illinois as now in force, within the territory under the control of such board of park commissioners, in all cases in which arrests for violation of such law shall be made by officers of such police department." Laws 1911, p. 445.

By the adoption of this act the right of the superintendent of schools to have the moneys collected from fines and penalties imposed for the violation of the ordinances passed by the boards of park commissioners specified in the Park Police Pension Fund Act ceased and determined, and as a necessary consequence it ceased to be the duty of the state's attorney of Cook county to collect such fines and penalties. He therefore had no right to a commission upon the moneys derived from fines and penalties imposed for the violation of park ordinances subsequent to July 1, 1911.

The Wayman estate contends that it has a prior right over all other claimants to so much of the fund in controversy as is required to satisfy the claim for uncollected fees of the state's attorney. Section 8 of the Fees and Salaries Act as amended in 1883 provided that the commission of 10 per cent upon all moneys (except revenue) collected by the state's attorneys and paid over to the authorities entitled thereto, together with the fees provided for therein that should not be collected from the parties tried or examined, "shall be paid out of any fines and forfeited recognizances collected by them," and that "state's attorneys shall have a lien for their fees, on judgments for fines or forfeitures procured by them for their fees and earnings, until they are fully paid." [Rev. Stat. 1883, p. 684.] This provision, in substance, has been embodied in all of the subsequent amendments of said § 8, and it must therefore be regarded as having been continuously in force since 1883. Hurds' Rev. Stat. 1913, chap. 131, § 2; Merlo v. Johnson City & B. M. Coal & Min. Co. 258 Ill. 328, 101 N. E. 525; People ex rel. Tarman v. Cairo, V. & C. R. Co. 285 Ill. 634, 197 N. E. 246. The various statutes under which the claimants other than the Wayman estate and the county superintendent of schools claim portions of the fund were all passed subsequent to 1883; and in order to hold that their claims (except the claims of the trustees of the various police pension funds) take precedence over the claim of the Wayman estate, it would be necessary to hold that the acts under which they claim were so repugnant to the provisions of said § 8 that those acts could not operate together with said § 8. Hoynes v. Danisch, 264 Ill. 467, 106 N. E. 341. Such, however, was not the case. The interest of the state's attorney in the fines and penalties collected by him is in the nature of a lien, and it might not be necessary for him to divert to the payment of his fees and commissions any of the moneys derived from fines and penalties imposed under such subsequent acts. Section 8 can, therefore, operate together with the subsequent acts, and it will consequently not be presumed that the legislature, by adopting the subsequent acts, intended to repeal the provisions of § 8 of the Fees and Salaries Act, giving state's attorneys the right to apply any fines and penalties collected by them to the payment of their uncollected fees. Such, in effect, was our holding in Galpin v. Chicago, supra.

So far as the fines collected for the violation of park ordinances since July 1, 1911, are concerned, as it was not the duty of the state's attorney either to prosecute the cases in which such fines or penalties were imposed or to enforce the collection of such fines and penalties, he had no right, under said § 8, to have the moneys derived from such fines or penalties applied towards the payment of his uncollected fees, and his estate is not entitled to any portion of the fund derived from such fines or penalties.

After awarding to the city of Chicago

$5,272.82 and to Hale Gossart $75 of the fund, and to the boards of trustees of the various police pension funds all that portion of the fund collected since July 1, 1911, from fines or penalties imposed for the violation of park ordinances, and the interest received thereon by the clerk of the municipal court, the decree of the circuit court should have awarded to Elizabeth C. Wayman as administratrix of the estate of John E. W. Wayman, so much of the fund as is necessary to satisfy the claim for uncollected fees of John E. W. Wayman as state's attorney. Wayman had a vested interest in this fund at the time of his death, and upon his death the same passed to his personal representative. The case of Galpin v. Chicago, supra, controls with reference to the disposition of the remainder of the fund. The various claimants under the Truancy Act, the Motor Vehicle Act, the Pharmacy Act, the Dentistry Act, the Employment Offices and Agencies Act, and the Game Act have equal rights to the balance of the principal of the fund remaining after the claim of the Wayman estate has been satisfied; and as such balance will not be sufficient to satisfy their claims in full, it should be prorated among them in accordance with their respective claims.

A controversy exists between the city of Chicago and the superintendent of schools as to the validity of § 57 of the Municipal Court Act, which provides that all moneys collected upon judgments of the municipal court in criminal and quasi criminal cases shall be paid to the clerk, who shall first apply the same to the payment of the uncollected costs in criminal and quasi criminal cases. The claim of the city under this section of the Municipal Court Act is subordinate to that of all other claimants herein, except the superintendent of schools (Galpin v. Chicago, supra); and as the fund will be entirely consumed in satisfying the demands of claimants whose claims are superior to that of the city, there will be no portion of the fund upon which this section can operate. It will therefore not be necessary to consider the validity of said § 57 of the Municipal Court Act.

With reference to the interest which accumulated in the hands of the clerk of the municipal court upon the moneys derived from fines and penalties, it should be divided into parts proportionately the same as the principal, and distributed accordingly among those claimants found to be entitled to the principal. Galpin v. Chicago, supra.

The county of Cook urges that, if we determine that the Wayman estate is entitled to that portion of the fund necessary to satisfy the claim of the state's attorney for uncollected fees, the $38,400 paid to Wayman by the county as a salary during his term of office should be deducted from that portion of the fund awarded to the Wayman estate, and should be ordered repaid to the county. The Wayman estate contends that as Wayman during his term of office paid into the county treasury, from fees collected by him, a sum in excess of the amount paid him as salary, the county has no claim upon this fund or against the Wayman estate for any portion of the moneys paid Wayman as salary, and that in any event the question cannot be determined in this suit. If, as contended by the county, it has a valid claim against the Wayman estate for the salary paid to Wayman under an invalid law, notwithstanding the fact that Wayman under the same law paid a larger sum to the county, it is strictly a legal claim, which can be enforced against his estate. The relief sought by the county in this respect cannot be awarded in this suit; the only question here being: "Who is entitled to the identical property brought into court?" Dyas v. Dyas, 231 Ill. 367, 83 N. E. 229.

The decree of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause is remanded to that court, with directions to enter a decree in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Petition for rehearing denied October 7, 1915.

Annotation—Agreement to accept less than amount of appropriation, salary, or fee.

This note is supplementary to the note appended to Lukens v. Nye, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 244, in which the earlier cases are collected.

For the effect of a promise by a candidate for office to accept less than the compensation fixed by law as affecting his right to hold office, see Prentiss v. Ditmer, post, 191.

GALPIN v. CHICAGO, ante, 176, is in accord with the weight of authority in holding that an agreement by a candidate, in consideration of his election or appointment to a public office, that he will accept less than the compensation provided by law for such office, does not estop him from subsequently recovering the legal amount.

Thus, in State ex rel. Kercheval v. Nashville (1885) 15 Lea (Tenn.) 697, 54 Am. Rep. 427, it is held that, when an office has a salary attached, it is against public policy to permit agreements by a candidate for the office that he will serve without compensation or for a lesser compensation than that provided by law, and that, although such an agreement might be a ground for removal of the officer after election, it furnishes no legal reason to prevent him from receiving the salary of the office.

In Purdy v. Independence (1888) 75 Iowa, 356, 39 N. W. 641, it was held that a contract by a city treasurer to collect and disburse the proceeds of a bond issue for a fixed sum which was smaller than his legal fees for such collection and disbursement would have been, was in violation of a statutory provision that the emoluments of an officer should not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed L.R.A.1917B.

and he was entitled to retain his legal fees regardless of the contract.

In Daniels v. Des Moines (1899) 108 Iowa, 484, 79 N. W. 269, the court recognized the general principle that a contract by a public officer to accept a smaller compensation than that fixed by law is contrary to public policy and void, but held that in that particular case the appointment of plaintiff as temporary matron for the city jail was under and by virtue of a municipal ordinance, and was not the appointment of a police matron as provided for by statute.

In Pittsburg v. Goshorn (1911) 230 Pa. 212, 79 Atl. 505, it was held that a contract made by an appointee to the office of collector of delinquent taxes with the mayor who appointed him, that he would accept a certain sum as his compensation instead of the fees fixed by the council, was invalid, not only because in making it the mayor exceeded his powers, but also because it was in conflict with public policy as declared by a constitutional provision that every public officer, before entering upon the discharge of the duties of his office, shall be required to make oath that he has not paid or contributed or promised to pay or contribute, either directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing to procure his nomination, election, or appointment.

In Hoffman v. Chippewa County (1890) 77 Wis. 214, 8 L.R.A. 781, 46 N. W. 1083, it is held that where a statute expressly declares that a printer shall receive a certain sum for certain printing, the compensation could not be diminished by any arrangement or contract which the county clerk might make in respect to it, and the existence of such a contract did not prevent a printer from recovering the statutory amount.

In Russell v. Cordwent (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 152 S. W. 239, the court held that a contract between the county commissioners and the county clerk providing for reindexing the county records for a stated sum as compensation, instead of the fees provided for such work, came within a statute making it a misdemeanor for certain officials to fail to charge the fees of their office, and sustained the lower court in enjoining the execution of the contract, saying: "A most excellent reason for the laws forbidding county officers in any county from remitting their fees or any part of them is apparent. It is unjust that a citizen of any county should be required to pay more for the performance of an official act than another citizen in another county is required to pay for precisely the same service. Moreover, such a practice if permitted might tend to favoritism amongst litigants and residents paying costs and fees, even in the same county."

The fact that an appointed officer accepts a smaller salary than that provided by law, and acquiesces in such reduction of salary for several years, does not preclude him from recovering the arrears due him. Pitt v. Board of Education (1915) 216 N. Y. 304, 110 N. E. 612.

So, one who is a municipal officer, and not a mere employee, is not estopped from recovering the full amount of salary provided by law for the office which he holds, by the fact that he has accepted a lesser amount and receipted therefor in full. Grant v. Rochester (1903) 79 App. Div. 460, 80 N. Y. Supp. 522, affirmed without opinion in (1903) 175 N. Y. 473, 67 N. E. 1083 (commissioner of public works); Moore v. Board of Education (1907) 121 App. Div. 862, 106 N. Y. Supp. 983, affirmed in (1909) 195 N. Y. 614, 89 N. E. 1105 (public school teacher); McGrade v. New York (1908) 126 App. Div. 362, 110 N. Y. Supp. 517 (clerk in fire department); Golding v. New York (1912) 140 N. Y. Supp. 1020 (draftsman); Carman v. New York (1912) 140 N. Y. Supp. 1023 (draftsman).

But one who does not hold an office to which his compensation attached as an incident, but was merely a per diem employee, could bind himself to accept a reduction of salary in order to avoid a possibility of loss of his position because of the exhaustion of the appropriation made for his services. Downs v. New York (1902) 75 App. Div. 423, 78 N. Y. L.R.A.1917B.

Supp. 442, affirmed without opinion in (1903) 173 N. Y. 651, 66 N. E. 1107; Collins v. New York (1912) 151 App. Div. 618, 136 N. Y. Supp. 648; Robb v. New York (1912) 151 App. Div. 621, 136 N. Y. Supp. 650; Kirk v. New York (1910) 136 N. Y. Supp. 1061.

And, in O'Hara v. Park River (1890) 1 N. D. 279, 47 N. W. 380, it was held that, while it is true that a party cannot, before election to office, bind himself by an agreement to receive less salary if elected for the performance of the duties of the office than the law fixes, he may, after the performance of the services, receive less compensation therefor than the legal salary; so, where one appointed marshal of a city agreed to accept less than the salary fixed for such office, he could not, after receiving and accepting such smaller salary for two months, recover the difference between the amount received and the legal salary, but he was not thereby estopped from recovering the legal salary thereafter. To the same effect is De Boest v. Gambell (1899) 35 Or. 368, 58 Pac. 72, 353.

Also in Harvey v. Tama County (1880) 53 Iowa, 228, 5 N. W. 130, it was held that a deputy county treasurer could not, in an action by him for compensation for his services as deputy, set up the invalidity of a release made by him and the treasurer and filed in the auditor's office, by which the treasurer agreed to pay the deputy out of his own compensation and relieve the county from such payment, on the ground that such release was made for the purpose of influencing the voters at an election at which the treasurer was a candidate for re-election, but that if at the time he executed the release he knew the purpose for which it was executed to be such as set forth by him as the ground for its invalidity, he was particeps criminis to an immoral and unlawful act, and could not set it up as a reason for relieving him from its effect.

R. L. S.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

P. C. PRENTISS, Plff. in Err.,
v.
H. R. DITTMER.

(93 Ohio St. 314, 112 N. E. 1021.)

Officer — offer to abate salary — effect.
1. An offer by a candidate for common pleas judge, made for the purpose of effecting his election to office, that in the event of his election he will accept for his judicial services only the stipulated salary payable by the state, and that he will accept nothing that may be due and payable to him from the local or county treasury, is against public policy, and an offense within the purview of § 5175-26, General Code, which, if proven, invalidates his election.

Headnotes by the COURT.

For other cases, see Elections, III. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Election — contest — offer to abate salary.

2. By virtue of that section, such an offense may be set forth as a ground of contest within the terms of § 5138, General Code, and it is not necessary to prove, in such election contest based on that sole ground, that a sufficient number of voters were so influenced by such offer as to change the election result.

For other cases, see Elections, V. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Constitutional law — right to question validity of act.

3. In a case where the law provides for the payment of the judicial salary, in part from the state treasury and in part from the local treasury, the candidate cannot, in an election contest based on the infringement of the above section of the Corrupt Practices Act, raise the question of the constitutionality of the Salary Act, concerning which such illegal offers were made.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. c, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Election — contest — conviction of offense.

4. Elections and election contests are controlled by specific sections of the Ohio Constitution, the grant of legislative power for their control is absolute, and under such provisions the legislature had full power to, and did, impose conditions under which elections might be invalidated; and where the proceeding is one involving a contested election, a prior conviction of the offenses named in § 5175-26, General Code, is not required as a condition precedent to such invalidation.

For other cases, see Elections, V. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 11, 1916.)

ERROR to the Court of Appeals for Henry County to review a judgment in favor of contestant in a proceeding to contest the validity of an election. Affirmed.

Statement by the Court:

At the November 3, 1914, election, there were four candidates for the office of common pleas judge of Henry county. Prentiss received the highest number of votes there-

Note. — For promise to accept less than compensation fixed by law as affecting right to hold office, see annotation following this case, post, 196.

L.R.A.1917B.

at, the canvassing board certified his election to the secretary of state, and a certificate of his election to such office was transmitted to Prentiss. Before the induction of Prentiss into office, an appeal was taken from the finding and declaration of the result of the election to the court of appeals by the filing of a petition by Dittmer, under the provisions of the statute, contesting the validity of the election. The petition declared that Prentiss had received over Dittmer a plurality of forty-four votes; that there was submitted to the voters of Henry county, to be voted upon at that election, the question of combining the common pleas and probate courts of that county, resulting in a favorable vote thereon; that Prentiss, as such candidate and prior to the election, printed and widely published and circulated, by mail and otherwise, various circulars, promising to accept smaller salaries than would be legally due; that he would accept, in the event of his election, only the portion of the salary payable out of the state treasury; that he would perform his official duties for such sum, and would decline to accept any portion of the statutory portion of the salary payable out of the county treasury. Other statements in the circulars were in support of the combination of the common pleas court with the probate court at a saving of $2,150 to the county by the abolishment of the latter court; and if the courts should not be combined by the popular vote at such election he agreed not to accept the $625 lawfully payable out of the local treasury, nor the additional amount of $1,000 payable from the same source in the event of combination, but to accept only the $3,000 remuneration per annum payable out of the state treasury, and to perform, in the event of his election, his judicial duties for that sum.

There is no allegation that any or a sufficient number of voters were induced by these alleged promises to avoid the declared result, but the allegation is that these published statements "were used as an argument by said Prentiss and by his friends, at his request, for the purpose of inducing the electors" to vote for him for such office. These circulars were numerous, widely circulated, and contained vigorous attacks upon the judicial salary system, and repeated promises to decline all local salaries if the voters should elect him to this office. On November 12th, before Prentiss's induction into office, the petition for contest was filed. On the trial, the contestee admitted the authorship of the circulars and testified that he supplemented them by similar statements in his campaign speeches. No evidence was offered that any voter was actually induced to vote by reason of the promises made. The court of appeals adjudged the election invalid, that Prentiss had no right and title to the office, and ousted him therefrom, and refused to order the induction of the contestor. This proceeding is to reverse that judgment.

Messrs. Smith W. Bennett, Brown, Hahn, & Sanger, Holland C. Webster, and James Donovan for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Smith, Beckwith, & Ohlinger for defendant in error:

The facts set forth in the petition invalidate the election of Prentiss both at common law and under § 5175-26 of the Corrupt Practices Act.

State ex rel. Newell v. Purdy, 36 Wis. 213, 17 Am. Rep. 485; State ex rel. Bill v. Elting, 29 Kan. 397; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Collier, 72 Mo. 13, 37 Am. Rep. 417; Carrothers v. Russell, 53 Iowa, 346, 36 Am. Rep. 222, 5 N. W. 499; Bush v. Head, 154 Cal. 277, 97 Pac. 512.

This proceeding is exactly appropriate to the nature of the case and is the proceeding provided for testing, or contesting, the validity of an election.

State ex rel. Grissell v. Marlow, 15 Ohio St. 114; State ex rel. Conrad v. Patterson, 84 Ohio St. 89, 95 N. E. 780; Dalton v. State, 43 Ohio St. 652, 3 N. E. 685; State ex rel. Wetmore v. Stewart, 26 Ohio St. 216.

Prentiss cannot question the constitutionality of judicial salary laws.

Newman v. People, 23 Colo. 300, 47 Pac. 278; State v. O'Brien, 94 Tenn. 79, 26 L.R.A. 252, 28 S. W. 311; Bishop, Crim. Law, § 367; Wilkinson v. Children's Guardians, 158 Ind. 1, 62 N. E. 481; State v. Nebraska Telephone Co. 127 Iowa, 194, 103 N. W. 120; Re Terrett, 34 Mont. 325, 86 Pac. 266; Cofer v. Riseling, 153 Mo. 633, 55 S. W. 235; 9 Cyc. 787; State v. Rouch, 47 Ohio St. 478, 25 N. E. 59; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 196, 197; McCabe v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 235 U. S. 151, 59 L. ed. 169, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 69.

Messrs. Bailey & Leasure also for defendant in error.

Jones, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Section 26 of the Corrupt Practices Act (102 Ohio Laws p. 327), now § 5175-26, General Code, provides that any person is guilty of a corrupt practice if he, in connection with or in respect of any election, contributes, or offers to contribute, any money or valuable consideration for any other purpose than those detailed therein. It provides further that any offer to contribute or expend any money or thing of value for L.R.A.1917B.

any purpose whatever, except as therein provided, "is hereby declared to be corrupt practice and invalidates the election of any person guilty thereof." The acknowledged action of the plaintiff in error in connection with his campaign for common pleas judge of Henry county, in the distribution and circulation of the circulars in question, fell within the inhibition of that section of the Corrupt Practices Act of this state. In the event of his election to the office of common pleas judge, the law had made express provision for a stipulated salary, part of which was to be paid him by the state and part by the county. It is but little less reprehensible that, for the purpose of inducing election, he should promise to refund to the community as a whole that portion of the salary he should receive from the county, than to offer to contribute to the taxpayers individually their pro tanto proportion of the amount of salary forgiven. In the latter event the taxpayer is required to pay less taxes, irrespective of the personal fitness of the candidate. In States ex rel. Bill v. Elting, 29 Kan. 397, a keen analysis of promises of this character, made for the purpose of inducing election, was made by Judge Brewer, afterwards a member of the Supreme Court of the United States. He said: "The theory of popular government is that the most worthy should hold the offices. Personal fitness—and in that is included moral character, intellectual ability, social standing, habits of life, and political convictions—is the single test which the law will recognize. That which throws other considerations into the scale, and to that extent tends to weaken the power of personal fitness, should not be tolerated. It tends to turn away the thought of the voter from the one question which should be paramount in his mind when he deposits his ballot. It is, in spirit, at least, bribery, more insidious, and therefore more dangerous, than the grosser form of directly offering money to the voter."

There is a wide difference between a promise of this character and those multifarious pledges made by candidates in the interest of reform, economy, and a rigid and effective administration of office, in compliance with their official oaths. The latter are made in the public interest, and are consistent with personal fitness; the former savors of vicious tendencies, involving a personal pecuniary consideration offered by the candidate in order to accomplish his election, in which the test of fitness is not an element.

At common law, practices involving the sale or purchase of public office were condemned as subversive of government and against public policy. Our legislation, in the interest of purity of elections, has stamped the common-law policy upon our election laws. Promises of a character similar to those made by the plaintiff in error have been held in other jurisdictions to be an offense invalidating the election of the promisor. State ex rel. Bill v. Elting, supra; Carrothers v. Russell, 53 Iowa, 346, 36 Am. Rep. 222, 5 N. W. 499; State ex rel. Newell v. Purdy, 36 Wis. 213, 17 Am. Rep. 485; Bush v. Head, 154 Cal. 277, 97 Pac. 512.

Owing to the severe penalties imposed by the act, inflicting punishment by way of fines and imprisonment, the forfeiture of office, and invalidating the election of the person offending, the whole scope and intent of the act is to impose such penalties on those who wilfully commit the offenses named. If intention is absent, no offense has been committed. In the present case, the plaintiff in error did wilfully offend against the act, and rested his defense on the claim that he had a lawful right to do what he did.

2. It is insisted, however, by counsel for plaintiff in error, that the "ground" set forth in the petition for contest is not of such character as may be invoked under the election contest statutes of our state. Section 5137, General Code, provides for an appeal to the court of appeals from the decision of the canvassing board, "which finds and declares the result of the election." Section 5138, General Code, provides that the appeal shall be by petition, which shall set forth "upon what grounds the election is contested." Section 5143, General Code, provides that the courts shall determine the contest without the intervention of a jury, and may render such judgments and make such orders as the law and facts warrant, including judgment of ouster and induction. It will be observed that the statutes of this state do not enumerate any specific grounds upon which a contest may be undertaken. Many of the states provide in detail the nature and character of the grounds upon which the contest may be based, but it is not so in this state. However, under the statutes noted, any grounds may be set forth in the petition which have the effect of determining the actual result of the election, in order to determine who received the highest number of votes thereat. While no provisions have been made in our law as to the specific grounds of contest, their character may be gleaned from those employed in the case of Howard v. Shields, 16 Ohio St. 184. The contest act under consideration there (1 S. & C., p. 540, §§ 39-42), in its requirement to state the "points" of contest, was substantially similar to the one in this case, simply requiring generally the statement of the "grounds" of contest. L.R.A.1917B.

And in regard to the nature of the "points" or "grounds" on which the contest was based, Judge Welch, page 189, said: "We think the notice was sufficient. It contains all that the statute requires,—notice that the election will be contested, and a specification of the 'points' relied upon. . . . The 'points' to be specified are not required for the purpose of setting forth a 'good case,' not for the purpose of informing the contestee that the attack will be successful, but to advise him at what points the attack will be made, in order that he may fortify, and not be taken by surprise. . . . We think the points specified in this notice were stated with sufficient particularity and definiteness to subserve the object of the statute, which was to limit the evidence of the contestor and to apprise the contestee of the general nature of the objections to be made, so as to enable him to meet them without unnecessary expense and labor."

The rule is stated in the syllabus of State ex rel. Ingerson v. Berry, 14 Ohio St. 315, that "a contest, on appeal to the court of common pleas, is the specific remedy provided by statute for the correction of all errors, frauds, and mistakes which may occur in the process of ascertaining and declaring the public will as expressed through the ballot boxes."

The only adequate and specific remedy provided for this purpose is the contest statutes. Neither quo warranto nor mandamus can ordinarily be invoked to determine the issue involved in contested election cases, for the reason that such issues involve the validity of the election, and not the title to office. State ex rel. Grisell v. Marlow, 15 Ohio St. 114; State ex rel. Wetmore v. Stewart, 26 Ohio St. 216. It has been held, however, that if no adequate remedy is provided by law, quo warranto might be invoked in order to ascertain the legality or illegality of the election. State ex rel. Conrad v. Patterson, 84 Ohio St. 89, 95 N. E. 780. Section 5175—26, General Code, adds a specific ground upon which an election may be invalidated or contested. By the adoption of that section, the legislature, in effect, determined that an offense committed against the Corrupt Practices Act, as enumerated therein, was a ground for invalidating the election of the persons committing the offense, irrespective of the proof usually required, showing that officers actually induced a sufficient number of voters to change their votes so as to affect the result. And since the question was raised in a case involving the election itself, and not in a case wherein the title was involved after the induction into office, the proper remedy available would be by contest proceedings under the statutes.

3. The plaintiff in error seeks to avoid the consequences of his offense by a claim that the salary acts are unconstitutional. He does not attack the constitutionality of the Corrupt Practices Act itself. He cannot thus escape the punishment of an act which is not made dependent on the validity of the salary acts.

"It is a firmly established principle of law, that no one can be allowed to attack a statute as unconstitutional who has no interest in it and is not affected by its provisions." 8 Cyc. 787.

A law is assumed to be valid until set aside. Only those directly interested may question its validity, and such are not here before the court as parties in interest for that determination. The breach of the Corrupt Practices Act is made an offense, irrespective of the question whether the salary acts are valid or otherwise. The wrong sought to be corrected was one affecting the purity of elections, and the constitutional feature, if conceded, could not even remotely affect that question.

4. Finally, it is insisted that before the election can be invalidated, or the office forfeited, there must be a prior conviction of the offense committed under the Corrupt Practices Act; and in that behalf, counsel for plaintiff in error cite the case of State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Ganson, 58 Ohio St. 313, 50 N. E. 907, wherein it is held: "Where the causes of removal from office are prescribed by statute which also provides a special mode of procedure for such removal, the statutory remedy is the exclusive one, and quo warranto will not lie."

Section 13323—1, General Code (formerly § 32 of the Corrupt Practices Act), provides that "any person convicted of a corrupt practice under this act shall be fined . . . and if he shall have been elected to office, he shall, in addition thereto, forfeit such office."

Since this section of the statute has provided for punishment by fine and imprisonment and by forfeiture of office in case of election, it is claimed that a special method is provided by the act itself by which such office should become vacant, and that conviction by jury is a condition precedent to the forfeiture; and this seems to find support in § 4, art. 5, of the Constitution, which provides: "The general assembly shall have power to exclude from the privilege . . . of being eligible to office, any persons convicted of bribery, perjury, or other infamous crime."

An important distinction must be noted between the case of State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Ganson, supra, and the instant case, and that distinction is found in the different functions imposed by the Constitution upon the judicial and legislative departments of the state. One who has been inducted into office and convicted of bribery or other infamous crime forfeits his office under the aforesaid section, and as a predicate to his removal, he must first be tried and convicted by a jury. By reason of this trial, the power is committed wholly to the judicial department; but it is otherwise where the election or election contest is concerned, for, by other provisions of the Constitution, elections and election contests are not committed to the courts eo nomine as courts, but to such tribunal as the legislature may see fit to provide. By those provisions, there has been granted to the legislature the sole power to determine all matters incidental to the procedure and validity of elections. Section 21, art. 2, of the Constitution provides: "The general assembly shall determine, by law, . . . in what manner, the trial of contested elections shall be conducted;"—and § 27 of art. 2, of that instrument provides: "The election . . . of all officers . . . not otherwise provided for by this Constitution, . . . shall be made in such manner as may be directed by law."

Under these provisions of the Constitution, the legislature undoubtedly had the right to impose, as a condition precedent to the validity of a candidate's election, that he should not commit any of the offenses named in § 5175-26, General Code, and that if the candidate did so offend, his election would be invalidated. This in no wise conflicts with § 32 of the act, because, on the one hand, the election is invalidated by a tribunal exercising quasi judicial functions, which invalidation may be accomplished without either conviction or trial by jury. The election only is involved. On the other hand, the title to office, and not the election itself, is in question, and in such case, where either bribery or other infamous crime has been committed, conviction must first be had before a forfeiture of office. In such cases, judicial functions of the court are invoked. As emphasizing the distinction between the Ganson Case and the present one, attention is called to the case of Mason v. State, 58 Ohio St. 30, 41 L.R.A. 291, 50 N. E. 6. In that case, which is very analogous to this, Chief Justice Spear, at page 52 used the following language: "A question much discussed is as to whether the statute should be treated as imposing a test of eligibility, or as providing a method of removal. The matter may not be free from doubt. Possibly the provision involves both characteristics. But the better conclusion, we think, is that the intent of the legislature was not to provide a method by which a person lawfully elected to an office may be removed therefrom, but rather a method by which the title of one to an office, which he has obtained possession of in violation of the terms of the statute upon which his claimed right vests, may be inquired into. It is therefore a challenge of the title to the office, resting upon charges of misconduct in procuring it, rather than a process to remove, resting upon charges of misconduct in office."

This language is very pertinent to the case that we have. While there is little distinction between the invalidation of an office and the forfeiture of an office under the Corrupt Practices Act, since both have the effect of devesting the candidate of his office, one rests upon the provision of misconduct in its procurement and the other rests upon offenses committed prior to or after the election, and which are not involved in a contest proceeding.

However, it is easily assumed that if the legislature had intended to rely upon a prior conviction as a full and complete remedy for political misconduct, it would not have expressly provided for invalidation of office in a separate section of the same act, for forfeiture after conviction was specifically imposed in another section. Evidently the legislative intention was to provide two distinct remedies, one affecting the election and the other the title to the office after induction.

We are therefore constrained to the view that the legislature has simply imposed upon the candidate a condition under which his election would be invalidated, and that, since no specific grounds are mentioned which are required to be stated and set forth in the contest petition, the commission of any of the offenses invalidating the election may be set forth in the petition and heard on appeal by the trial court, and judgment rendered and orders made as the law and facts warrant, under the provision of our Code relating to contests of election.

The refusal to induct the contestor was proper. The proceeding simply resulted in invalidating the election of the contestee. This did not invest the contestor with a majority of the legal votes cast. Renner v. Bennett, 21 Ohio St. 431; State ex rel. Clawson v. Bell, 169 Ind. 61, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1013, 124 Am. St. Rep. 203, 82 N. E. 69.

Judgment affirmed.

Johnson, Donahue, Wanamaker, and Newman, JJ., concur. Matthias, J., not participating.

Annotation—Promise to accept less than compensation fixed by law as affecting right to hold office.

For the validity of an agreement to accept less than the amounts of an appropriation, salary, or fee, see notes to Lukens v. Nye, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 244, and Galpin v. Chicago, ante, 176.

PRENTISS v. DITTMER, ante, 191, in holding that a candidate for office invalidates his election by a promise to the electors that if elected he will serve for a smaller compensation than that provided for by law, is in accord with the weight of authority.

Thus a promise to pay into the treasury the fees established by law as compensation for an office and to accept a less amount, was held in Carrothers v. Russell (1880) 53 Iowa, 346, 36 Am. Rep. 222, 5 N. W. 499, to constitute the offering of a bribe which would disqualify a candidate making such a promise from holding the office, under a statute providing that an election to an office may be contested "when the incumbent has given or offered to any elector . . . any bribe or reward in money, property, or thing of value for the purpose of procuring his election," the court saying: "It is true, an offer to pay money into the public treasury is not, in one sense, an offer to pay money to an elector, the money in the treasury being public and not individual property. But nearly all electors are taxpayers, and an offer to pay money into the public treasury with the intent by such offer to influence the electors to elect to office the person making such offer has all the effect of the offer of a bribe."

So, in Diehl v. Totten (1915) 32 N. D. 131, 155 N. W. 74, it was held that the publication by a candidate, in a newspaper and by means of personal letters to voters, of a pledge that, if elected, he would turn back into the treasury all of the salary of the office above a certain amount, was a violation of the Corrupt Practice Act, which provided for the removal from office of an officer where it was made to appear that he was guilty of any corrupt practice, illegal act, or undue influence in or about his election.

And in Bush v. Head (1908) 154 Cal. 277, 97 Pac. 512, where an act of the legislature had provided for an additional judge of a court, it was held that a promise by a candidate for such judgeship, that if elected he would not qualify, and the office would thereby be left vacant, and the taxpayers would be relieved of the expense of maintaining it, amounted to an offer or promise to pay "any money or other valuable consideration" to induce voters to vote in a particular way which under the statute authorized a contest of the election.

But in People ex rel. Bush v. Thornton (1881) 25 Hun (N. Y.) 456, the contention, that an officer who promised to accept less than the legal salary for the office, if elected, was disqualified from holding the office, because of the requirement that he take an oath that he had not, directly or indirectly, paid, offered, or promised to pay any money or other valuable thing as a consideration or award for the giving or the withholding of a vote at the election, was not adopted by the court because, while the law required the taking of such an oath, it did not further declare that the office should be deemed vacant if the officer did not swear to the truth, or that he should in that case be disqualified from holding the office.

And in State ex rel. Clements v. Humphries (1889) 74 Tex. 466, 5 L.R.A. 217, 12 S. W. 99, which was a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto to oust respondent from office on the ground that he had, by circular sent to the voters, offered to perform the duties of the office for less than the legal compensation, the court held that, although the Constitution of the state required an oath similar to that shown in the preceding case, it did not warrant the removal of the respondent from office in the absence of some other constitutional or statutory provision making such a promise a ground for removal from office. These cases are not, however, necessarily in conflict with those first cited, in which it appears that some such provision was in force.

In some cases it is held that, in order to invalidate the election of an officer because of promises to accept a reduced salary, it must be shown that such promise affected enough votes to have changed the result of the election.

Thus, in People ex rel. Bush v. Thornton (N. Y.) supra, it was held that the fact that a candidate for office made promises to the electors, that, if elected, he would serve for less than the salary provided by law, would not invalidate his election in the absence of a showing that a sufficient number of votes were influenced thereby in his favor to have changed the result of the election.

L.R.A.1917B.

And in State ex rel. Church v. Dustin (1875) 5 Or. 375, 20 Am. Rep. 746, it was held that, while a promise by an officer that if elected he would turn part of the salary of the office back into the treasury was a violation of a statute providing that "every person shall be disqualified from holding office during the term for which he may have been elected who shall have given or offered a bribe, threat or reward to procure his election," a complaint making such a charge, and setting out the names of a sufficient number of voters who were influenced thereby in favor of the candidate to have changed the result of the election, was insufficient, in that it failed to allege that the voters named were taxpayers.

In State ex rel. Dithmar v. Bunnell (1907) 131 Wis. 198, 110 N. W. 177, 11 Ann. Cas. 560, a promise by a candidate for county judge to give advice and draw papers free of charge in probate cases which would come before him, such services not constituting part of the duties of the office, was disapproved, but was held to be insufficient to sustain an action of quo warranto to oust him from the office under a statute providing that "any person who shall obtain any office by bribery or shall have been elected to any office at any election at which election he shall have induced or procured any elector to vote for him for such office by bribery shall be disqualified," etc., where the record failed to show any proof that any voter was induced or procured to vote for him because of such promises.

In State ex rel. Newell v. Purdy (1874) 36 Wis. 213, 17 Am. Rep. 485, a contest for an office between the two candidates receiving the highest number of votes therefor, it was held that if the one receiving the second highest number of votes could show that a number of the electors, exceeding the majority of the successful candidate, were influenced to vote for him solely by reason of his offer that if elected he would serve for a smaller salary than that fixed by law, such votes should be rejected and the other party adjudged entitled to the office.

In State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Collier (1880) 72 Mo. 13, 37 Am. Rep. 417, an information in quo warranto to oust respondent from office, which alleged that respondent promised to the electors as a reason for his election that, if elected, he would take, as salary only a certain sum part of a larger aggregate of fees for the office, and that a sufficient number of voters and taxpayers of the county were influenced thereby to vote for him to establish a majority over his rival for the office, and that but for such offers and their acceptance by such electors respondent would not have been elected, was held to be good upon demurrer.

R. L. S.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF IOWA, Appt.,
v.
HUTCHINSON ICE CREAM COMPANY
et al.

SAME, Appt.,
v.
SANDERS ICE CREAM COMPANY et al.

(168 Iowa, 1, 147 N. W. 195.)

Statute — sufficiency of title — amendment standardizing ice cream.

1. Provisions of a statute fixing a standard for ice cream are covered by a title, An act to amend a specified section relating to food values.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. c. 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Food — ice cream standard — constitutionality.

2. To prevent fraud the police power extends to the fixing of a standard for ice cream without unconstitutional impairment of liberty or property rights.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. c. 4, d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — forbidding the sale of mixture as ice cream — effect.

2. The mere fact that a frozen mixture containing less than a certain percentage of butter fat cannot be sold as ice cream does not prevent its sale so as to deprive the owner of his property without due process of law.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. b, 4, d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — reasonableness of regulation.

4. Fixing the standard for ice cream at a mixture containing 12 per cent of butter fat for plain cream and 10 per cent for fruit or nut cream is not so unreasonable as to render the statute void.

For other cases, see Food, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(May 12, 1914.)

APPEAL by the state from a judgment of the District Court for Polk County sustaining demurrers to information charging defendants with selling, exchanging delivering, and having in possession with intent to sell, exchange, and expose and offer for sale and exchange, adulterated food, in violation of statute. Reversed.

Note.—As to regulations affecting ice cream, see annotation following this case, post, 207.
L.R.A.1917B.

Statement by Preston, J.:

Two informations were filed by a state food and dairy commissioner before a justice of the peace in the two cases, one against the Hutchinson Ice Cream Company and C. J. Hutchinson, manager, and the other against the Sanders Ice Cream Company and L. R. Sanders, president.

The defendants were accused of the crime of selling, exchanging, delivering, and having in possession with intent to sell, exchange, and expose and offer for sale and exchange, adulterated food, in violation of chapter 166, Laws of the 31st General Assembly, as amended (Supp. to the Code, §§ 4999-a15 to 4999-a43), for that the defendants did have in possession, with intent to sell, exchange, and expose and offer for sale and exchange and did sell, exchange, and deliver a certain food product called ice cream, which was adulterated, in that it did not conform to the standards established by law, being deficient in butter fat, etc.

Demurrers were interposed by the defendants on the following grounds:

First. The acts charged as constituting the offense charged constitute no crime, under the statutes, upon which the prosecution is based; i. e., chapter 166, Laws of the Thirty-First General Assembly, §§ 4999-a15 to 4999-a43.

Second. If the prosecution is claimed to be based in any respect upon the provisions of chapter 175, Acts of the Thirty-Fourth General Assembly, said act of the thirty-fourth general assembly is unconstitutional and void, in view of § 29, article 3, of the Constitution of Iowa, which provides that every act shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title; moreover, said act provides no penalty, and, being a separate act, is not included within the prohibition of §§ 4999-a15—4999-a43, Supplement to Code.

Third. The legislature had no power to fix the standard of butter fat in ice cream at 12 per cent, because: (a) Said standard and the statute fixing the same are unreasonable; (b) it invades the individual rights of defendant, and is not a mere police regulation, having no relation in fact to the comfort, safety, and welfare of the public; (c) said statute is in violation of § —, art. —, of the Constitution of the state of Iowa, in that it arbitrarily interferes with personal liberty and private property without due process of law, having, in fact, no relation to the public health, comfort, or welfare; (d) that said statute is in violation of § 1, 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that it arbitrarily interferes with personal liberty and private property without due process of law, having, in fact, no relation to the public health, comfort, or welfare.

The demurrers were overruled by the justice, evidence was taken, and the defendants were found guilty. An appeal was taken to the district court, where the demurrers were again interposed and sustained. The state appeals. The cases are submitted together.

Mr. George Osson, Attorney General, for the State:

The legislature under its police power may enact laws for the purpose of preventing fraud in the sale of food products.

State v. Schlenker, 112 Iowa, 642, 51 L.R.A. 347, 84 Am. St. Rep. 360, 84 N. W. 698; State v. Snow, 81 Iowa, 642, 11 L.R.A. 355, 47 N. W. 777; Schmidinger v. Chicago, 226 U. S. 578, 57 L. ed. 364, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 182, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 284; Hipolite Egg Co. v. United States, 220 U. S. 45, 55 L. ed. 364, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 364; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 39 L. ed. 223, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 590, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 49, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; State v. Crescent Creamery Co. 83 Minn. 284, 54 L.R.A. 466, 85 Am. St. Rep. 464, 86 N. W. 107; State v. Campbell, 64 N. H. 402, 10 Am. St. Rep. 419, 13 Atl. 585; Board of Health v. Vandruens, 77 N. J. L. 443, 72 Atl. 125; People v. Bowen, 182 N. Y. 1, 74 N. E. 489; State v. Co-operative Store Co. 123 Tenn. 399, 131 S. W. 867, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 248; Chicago v. Bowman Dairy Co. 234 Ill. 294, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 634, 84 N. E. 913, 14 Ann. Cas. 700; People v. Worden Grocer Co. 118 Mich. 604, 77 N. W. 315; Com. v. Crowl, 245 Pa. 554, 91 Atl. 922; State v. Smyth, 14 R. I. 100, 51 Am. Rep. 344.

As to the authority of the legislature to fix standards and prohibit the sale of articles not complying with the standard, see—

Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Deselms, 212 U. S. 159, 53 L. ed. 453, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 270; Standard Stock Food Co. v. Wright, 225 U. S. 540, 53 L. ed. 1197, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 784; Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 56 L. ed. 1182, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715; Crossman v. Lurman, 192 U. S. 190, 48 L. ed. 401, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 234; Heath & M. Mfg. Co. v. Worst, 207 U. S. 338, 52 L. ed. 236, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 114.
L.R.A.1917B.

If the act bears relation to the object to be accomplished, the method of its accomplishment is for the legislature.

Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 49 L. ed. 643, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358, 3 Ann. Cas. 765; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 295, 52 L. ed. 1068, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616, 21 Am. Neg. Rep. 464; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Deselms, 212 U. S. 159, 53 L. ed. 453, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 270.

Laws enacted under the police power to promote the general welfare may be sustained although they interfere with the freedom of contract.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 210 U. S. 549, 55 L. ed. 328, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259; McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, 550, 53 L. ed. 315, 320, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206; Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 44 L. ed. 725, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 633; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Barrett v. Indiana, 229 U. S. 26, 57 L. ed. 1050, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 692.

The title is sufficient even though the words "ice cream" are not specifically set forth in the title.

State v. Fairmont Creamery Co. 153 Iowa, 702, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 821, 133 N. W. 895.

Messrs. John Fletcher, Assistant Attorney General, O. S. Thomas, Thomas J. Guthrie, and George A. Wilson also for the State.

Mr. R. L. Parrish, for appellees:

The statute on which the prosecution is based is unconstitutional in view of § 29, art. 3, Constitution of Iowa, in that the subject is not expressed in its title.

State v. Bristow, 131 Iowa, 664, 100 N. W. 199; Fish v. Stockdale, 111 Mich. 46, 69 N. W. 92; West Point Water Power & Land Improv. Co. v. State, 49 Neb. 223, 68 N. W. 507; Rex Lumber Co. v. Reed, 107 Iowa, 111, 77 N. W. 572; Williamson v. Keokuk, 44 Iowa, 88; Iowa Sav. & L. Asso. v. Selby, 111 Iowa, 402, 82 N. W. 968; State v. Fairmont Creamery Co. 153 Iowa, 702, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 821, 133 N. W. 895.

Legislative acts passed in pursuance of the police power must have some relation to the ends sought to be accomplished. Where the ostensible object of an enactment is to secure the public comfort, safety, or welfare it must appear to be adapted to that end, and it is the province of the court to determine whether it is really adapted to that end.

Freund, Pol. Power, §§ 15, 20; Tiedeman, Pol. Power, §§ 1, 3, 85; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L.R.A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, 40 N. E. 454; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; 1 Kent, Com. 450; Health Dept. v. Trinity Church, 145 N. Y. 32, 27

L.R.A. 710, 45 Am. St. Rep. 579, 39 N. E. 833; Crawford v. Topeka, 51 Kan. 756, 20 L.R.A. 692, 37 Am. St. Rep. 323, 33 Pac. 476; State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 68 Minn. 381, 38 L.R.A. 672, 64 Am. St. Rep. 482, 71 N. W. 400; Colon v. Lisk, 153 N. Y. 188, 60 Am. St. Rep. 609, 47 N. E. 302; Lake View v. Rosehill Cemetery, 70 Ill. 191, 22 Am. Rep. 71; Frost v. Chicago, 178 Ill. 250, 49 L.R.A. 657, 69 Am. St. Rep. 301, 52 N. E. 869.

Mr. Walter Jeffreys Carlin also for appellees.

Preston, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. One of the objections to the statute on which this prosecution is based is that the act is invalid for noncompliance with § 29, art. 3, of the Constitution of Iowa, in that its subject was not expressed in the title. This constitutional provision, or that part of it relating to the points raised in this case, is that "every act shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith; which subject shall be expressed in the title."

Chapter 166, Acts of the 31st General Assembly (Code Supp. §§ 4999-a15 to 4999-a30), was an act to prevent the adulteration of foods, etc. This was amended by chapter 178, Acts of the 32d General Assembly, by adding at the end of chapter 166, § 18, now appearing as § 4999-a31 of the Supplement to the Code, relating to food standards, which establishes standards for certain articles therein enumerated. That § 4999-a31 was amended by chapter 175 of the 34th Session of the Legislature, the act in question, and fixes a standard for ice cream, in addition to the other articles for which the standard had been fixed in § 4999-a31. The title to chapter 175, just referred to, is: "An Act to Amend Section Four Thousand Nine Hundred and Nine-nine-a-thirty-one (4999-a31) of the Supplement to the Code, 1907, Relating to Food Standards."

The provisions of the act establishing an ice cream standard, after the enacting clause, are:

"1. Ice-cream. Ice-cream is the frozen product made from pure wholesome sweet cream, and sugar, with or without flavoring, and if desired, the addition of not to exceed one per cent (1%) by weight of a harmless thickener, and contains not less than twelve per cent (12%) by weight of milk fat, and the acidity shall not exceed three-tenths ( $\frac{3}{10}$ ) of one per cent (1%).

"2. Fruit ice cream. Fruit ice cream is the frozen product made from pure wholesome sweet cream, sugar, and sound, clean, mature fruits, and, if desired, the addition of not to exceed one per cent (1%) by weight of a harmless thickener, and contains not less than ten per cent (10%) by weight of milk fat.

"3. Nut ice cream. Nut ice cream is the frozen product made from pure wholesome, sweet cream, sugar, and sound, nonrancid nuts, and, if desired, the addition of not to exceed one per cent (1%) by weight of harmless thickener, and contains not less than 10 per cent (10%) by weight of milk fat."

Some of the other provisions of these statutes which have some bearing upon the points argued will be here referred to. Section 4999-a20 provides in part that "no person, firm or corporation, by himself, officer, servant or agent, or as the officer, servant, or agent of any other person, firm or corporation, shall manufacture or introduce into the state, or solicit or take orders for delivery, or sell, exchange, deliver or have in his possession with the intent to sell, exchange or expose or offer for sale or exchange, any article of food which is adulterated or misbranded, within the meaning of this act."

Section 4999-a21 provides in part: "The word 'food,' as herein used, shall include all articles used for food, drink, confectionery or condiment, by man or domestic animals, whether simple, mixed or compound."

Section 4999-a22 defines adulteration, and states in part that:—

"For the purpose of this act an article of food shall be deemed to be adulterated:

"First. If any substance or substances has or have been mixed and packed with it so as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect its quality, strength or purity.

"Second. If any substance or substances has or have been substituted wholly or in part for the article.

"Third. If any valuable constituent of the article has been wholly or in part abstracted.

"Fourth. If it be an imitation of, or offered for sale, under the specific name of another article, or if it does not conform to the standards established by law."

The purpose of the constitutional provision contained in § 29, art 3, was, as stated in some of the cases, to prohibit the insertion in an act of incongruous matter having no connection or relation with the general subject as expressed in the title. It has been held that the title is sufficient, although confined to general terms, if it answers as a key to the subject matter of the act. Sisson v. Buena Vista County, 128 Iowa, 452, 70 L.R.A. 440, 104 N. W. 454; State v. Fairmont Creamery Co. 153 Iowa, 715, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 821, 133 N. W. 895.

It is not necessary that the details of the subject matter or reasons which brought about the enactment by the legislature should be set out in the title. If it refers in a general way to the subject, and is reasonably germane, and calculated to advise the members of the legislature, and the people, of the nature of the pending legislation, or changes in the laws by amendment, it is sufficient. The requirement that the act shall embrace but one subject, and matters properly connected therewith, was intended to prevent the evils of omnibus bills, and surreptitious legislation. It is not claimed in this case that the act in question does contain more than one subject, but that the subject is not expressed in the title. This, of course, must be done, under the terms of the provision, at least to the extent already indicated.

The authorities seem to agree that such provisions are to be given a reasonable construction. As some of them state it, they should be construed liberally to uphold proper legislation, all parts of which are reasonably germane, on the one hand, and to prevent trickery on the other.

Appellees rely on State v. Bristow, 131 Iowa, 664, 109 N. W. 199. In the Fairmont Creamery Case, supra, it was shown that in the Bristow Case there was nothing in the title to indicate the contents of the act; that the title related only to the act which was repealed, and did not refer to the act which was a substitute for the act which was repealed.

Section 4999-a31 established standards of more than twenty articles. The essential subject was food standards. The act in question is amendatory to § 4999-a31, and the title recites that it is "an act relating to food standards."

The act in question adds ice cream to the list for which standards had already been established. In our opinion, it was germane, and the act does not offend against the constitutional provision quoted. The point is ruled by the holding in McGuire v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 181 Iowa, 340, 346, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 706, 108 N. W. 902, and the Fairmont Creamery Co. Case supra. See also Santo v. State, 2 Iowa, 165, 63 Am. Dec. 487; State ex rel. Weir v. County Judge, 2 Iowa, 280; Morford v. Unger, 8 Iowa, 82; Davis v. Woolnough, 9 Iowa, 104; Porter v. Thomson, 22 Iowa, 391; Martin v. Blattner, 68 Iowa, 286, 25 N. W. 131, 27 N. W. 244, 6 Am. Crim. Rep. 148; Christie v. Life Indemnity & Invest. Co. 82 Iowa, 360, 48 N. W. 94; Iowa Sav. & L. Asso. v. Selby, 111 Iowa, 402, 82 N. W. 968.

2. The principal point in the case is whether the act in question, fixing a standard for ice cream, is within the police power of the state. The contention of defendants, L.R.A.1917B.

as they state it, is substantially that the act is not within the police powers of the state, for that it, in fact, has no relation to the comfort, health, and welfare of the public, and hence violates both the state and Federal Constitutions by interfering with the personal liberty and private property of the citizen, without due process of law; that it is arbitrary, unreasonable, and an unwarranted interference with a lawful business, depriving manufacturers of ice cream of property rights of great value, and depriving both manufacturers of ice cream and the people of their liberty.

The contention of the state is, in substance, that the act is clearly within the police power of the state, and hence does not offend against the Federal or state Constitution, unless it has no reasonable relation to the purposes which it is designed to effect. It is conceded by the state that, to be a valid exercise of such power, the act must have relation to the comfort, safety, or welfare of the public, but that the welfare of the public involves or includes the right of the legislature to protect the public from fraud and deception; that the Constitution does not secure to anyone the privilege of defrauding the public; that it is impossible for consumers of ice cream to determine by any ordinary diligence the ingredients of the product; and that, without a standard, opportunity is afforded unscrupulous manufacturers of ice cream to palm off upon the public a much cheaper and inferior article for a higher quality, at the price of the better and more costly product.

There seems to be no serious controversy between counsel for either side in regard to many of the fundamental propositions of law involved, but they agree that the difficulty lies in their application. Defendants concede the validity of the police power in its fullest extent; admit that it is within the power of the legislature to enact laws for the purpose of preventing fraud in the sale of food products; that ordinarily the propriety of passing an act of this character is a question for the determination of the legislature; that there are many restraints to which every person is necessarily subject for the common good; and that laws enacted under the police power to promote such purpose may be sustained, although they interfere, to some extent, with the liberty of the citizen and the freedom of contract. On the other hand, it is conceded by the state that such laws, to be valid, and within the police power, must not be arbitrary or capricious, but reasonable, and have a reasonable relation to the object to be accomplished. Such concessions render it unnecessary for us to discuss at length some of the points, or to review the many cases cited.

It is said by counsel for appellees that the only debatable ground in the case is whether this statute comes within the police power as a measure tending to prevent the liability to fraud and deception; that this is the real question. The wisdom or expediency of such a measure is not for the determination of the court.

The presumptions are in favor of the exercise of the power in the enactment. We are to overthrow the act, if at all, only when it violates the Constitution "clearly, palpably, plainly, and in such manner as to leave no reasonable doubt." The question is whether there is any reasonable ground upon which the legislature, acting within its conceded powers, could pass such a law as that now in question. The courts have not attempted to accurately define the limit of the police power, nor is it advisable to do so, because of changing conditions. The power is broad, but subordinate to the Constitution. The courts may, and will, interfere in a proper case, where the legislature has clearly exceeded the constitutional limitations. It is not enough that the case is a doubtful one. Though we might be of the opinion that an 8 per cent or some other standard should have been established, still we ought not to interfere with the standard fixed by the legislature, unless such standard is clearly arbitrary and unreasonable. We shall not take the space to give definitions of police power. The question is discussed at length in the following, among other, of our own cases: McGuire v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 131 Iowa, 340, 354, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 706, 108 N. W. 902; State v. Schlenker, 112 Iowa, 642, 51 L.R.A. 347, 84 Am. St. Rep. 360, 84 N. W. 698; State v. Armour Packing Co. 124 Iowa, 323, 100 N. W. 59, 2 Ann. Cas. 448.

It is not claimed by either side, as we understand it, that the act in question is a health law. The claim of the state is that the purpose of the legislature was to prevent the perpetration of fraud upon the public.

The public welfare embraces a variety of interests calling for public care and control. These are: "The primary social interests of safety, order, and morals, economic interests, and nonmaterial and political interests." Freund, Pol. Power, §§ 9, 15.

The claim here is that the act fixing a standard for ice cream deals with economic interests, the purpose being, as already stated, to prevent fraud. It was said in one of the milk cases (State v. Schlenker, 112 Iowa, 642, 51 L.R.A. 347, 84 Am. St. Rep. 360, 84 N. W. 698): "It is not enough to L.R.A.1917B.

show that defendant did not intend to defraud, or that the milk he sold was wholesome. . . . It is enough that adulteration such as prescribed by the statute may defraud or prove deleterious to the public health or comfort. The legislature may well determine that the adulteration of milk tends to facilitate vicious practices, and that it ought to be prohibited."

Laws tending to prevent fraud and to require honest weights and measures in the transaction of business have been frequently sustained in the courts. McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, 550, 53 L. ed. 315, 320, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206.

The Constitution does not secure to any one the privilege of defrauding the public. Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 479, 39 L. ed. 223, 229, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 590, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154.

As bearing upon the question as to whether this statute, fixing a certain standard for ice cream, is so manifestly arbitrary and unreasonable as that the legislature was not justified, under the police power, in enacting it, and whether fraud might have been practised upon the public in the sale of ice cream, we should here refer to conditions and some of the facts which we ought to presume were known to the legislature when the statute was enacted. We say this because some of the facts and conditions called to our attention existed and were of more or less notoriety at the time of the passage of this law. We are asked to consider these facts and conditions for the purpose of determining whether the act is so manifestly arbitrary and unreasonable as to require us to hold it invalid.

If, under any possible state of facts, the act would be constitutional and valid, the court is found to presume that such conditions existed; whether a state of facts existed which called for the enactment of this legislation was for the determination of the legislature. McGuire v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. supra.

An authority is cited to the effect that, when a question of fact is debated, or debatable, and the extent to which a constitutional limitation goes is affected by the truth in respect to that fact, the court will take judicial cognizance of all matters of general knowledge, and will consider expressions of opinion from other than judicial sources given by those qualified by their skill and experience to express such opinions. Muller v. Oregon, 208 U. S. 412, 52 L. ed. 551, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324, 13 Ann. Cas. 957.

Just how far we should go in regard to such matters, where, as in this case, the decision was on demurrer, we need not determine, for the reason that we are asked by both sides, without objection from either, to consider depositions taken for use, had the case been tried on the merits, reports, trade journals, cookbooks containing a great many formulas for making ice cream, circulars, and the like. These have been abstracted and certified. We shall not attempt to set out all these matters, but enough to illustrate in a general way the points made.

It appears that in seventeen states the standard fixed for ice cream to be sold is 14 per cent; five states have fixed the standards at 12 per cent butter fat, the same as our own; but five states which have legislated have a lower standard than Iowa. The Federal government fixes the standard for ice cream at 14 per cent. It should be said, as to the 14 per cent standard fixed by the Federal government, that it is not claimed that such standard has been fixed by law, but by the United States Department of Agriculture. But, even though not law, it would be a circumstance proper to be considered as the opinion of that department. The legislature would not be bound entirely by the conflicting opinion of any of the persons we shall refer to. From these documents it appears that there is a difference of opinion as to the advisability of establishing a standard for ice cream, or, if it is established, the per cent of butter fat the product should contain. Some think a high standard of butter fat is injurious to health, especially for children and invalids; others object to high butter fat contents during the summer months on account of the shortage in the supply. It is contended by some that ice cream should be made from cream, sugar, and flavor solely. An article in a trade journal says: "Commissioners have agitated a high butter fat standard, and we have the significant controverting fact that nowhere is there a great ice cream business built up on a high butter fat formula. The ice cream manufacturers know what the public wants. It does not want an overrich product because it cannot eat enough of it."

The same article states: "The moral support of the dairyman, the creamery men, and the cheese manufacturer and the milk dealer in these matters will help greatly. They have only to remember that, when the ice cream man cuts his butter fat content, he adds condensed, and that one is about as valuable as the other, if anything, condensed is more valuable because it allows the use of all the milk."

Large manufacturers of ice cream from different parts of the country gave testimony, and gave their opinions from their standpoint. They state that they would not attempt to define ice cream, because it covers a large number of frozen substances; that there is an unlimited number of formulas; cream should be a part of the mix, the same as sugar or flavor. When condensed milk is used, the purpose is to add solids, thereby giving the cream better body. The purpose of the cream is to add to the flavor and to add to the body. The largest dealers in the United States are not so-called high butter fat men; butter fat is not the best solid to provide body for ice cream; there are manufacturers who make a high butter fat ice cream, and cater only to exclusive trade, and get a long price for it.

One witness says: "Speaking in a commercial sense, I do not believe raising the standard to 12 per cent would materially affect the price of ice cream. It would diminish the amount of other solids which would be put in it; the milk producers' skim milk would go to waste. The use of condensed milk has very much increased during the last few years, because of the increased demand for ice cream, and the extensive use of milk solids in ice cream. Millions of gallons of skim milk used to be thrown away which is now converted into condensed milk, and there is a ready market for it. My experience is that the public prefers 8 per cent ice cream to 12 per cent. The 8 per cent standard was arrived at in Illinois by a commission which investigated the matter and arrived at the standard of 8 per cent. I do not think there should be any standard at all."

Other witnesses gave similar testimony. One manufacturer of many years' experience says that years ago ice cream would test so low in butter fat that you would not know how to find it; that it was then made out of milk, eggs, and cornstarch, but that later "we enlarged the butter fat in it." He says that the man who makes high butter fat ice cream will have to demand more money for it; that normal butter fat ice cream runs from 6 per cent to 10 per cent; that the per cent of butter fat has no relation to its wholesomeness.

Defendants show that consumers would eat a less quantity of ice cream which is rich in butter fat. This would decrease the consumption by the public, and the output and profits of the manufacturers. This would not, perhaps, be a reason for fixing a standard, but may bear on the motive of those who oppose it, and affect their claims as to whether the standard is unreasonable. As stated, there are many formulas for making ice cream. Here is one: "Vanilla ice cream without cream or milk. One vanilla bean, 8 gills of syrup at 20 degrees, 18 egg yolks. (To be cooked and frozen.) Then work in a meringue made of 2 egg whites and  $\frac{1}{4}$  lb of sugar."

It is shown that the cost to manufacture ice cream containing 20 per cent butter fat is 45 cents per gallon; containing 7.7 per cent, 29 cents; and that, where condensed milk is used and the product contains 1.9 per cent butter fat, the cost is 15 $\frac{1}{2}$  cents per gallon.

We have set out these matters somewhat in detail for the purpose of showing that the consumer may be defrauded, and as showing the propriety or necessity for fixing a standard, or, rather, to show that the legislature might properly so determine. We quote at some length from one of the documents submitted:

"Ice cream is one of the delights of the food adulterator, for ice cream is a mixture of various things in which each one more or less loses its identity. The adulterator is able, therefore, to inject all manner of inferior, and often dangerous, cheapeners into his product, and to compete successfully with the honest manufacturer who makes clean, wholesome ice cream.

"The honest ice cream maker to-day is working at a decided disadvantage when he is obliged to compete with the dishonest one, since the dishonest one need not label his product so that the ingredients will be shown to the consumer, or even to the retailer. This fact was strikingly shown at a recent meeting of ice cream manufacturers in New York, at which one man present declared that it was impossible for a competitive ice cream maker to be honest. This man asserted, and with much reason, that there were three things that make manufacturers dishonest. These three things were the Federal government and the state and municipal departments of health, all of which encourage the dishonest manufacturer at the expense of the honest one. As a basis of his argument, this man presented three formulas for making commercial ice cream which speak for themselves. Here they are:

"Formula No. 1.

"Sells to retailer at $1.25 per gallon.

11 quarts 40 per cent of cream at 45c	$4.95
5 quarts grade B milk at 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ c	.33
4 quarts condensed milk at 20c	.80
9 pounds sugar	.45
4 ounces extract	.40

$6.93

"When expanded by freezing, this quantity of ingredients produces forty quarts of ice cream, containing 20 per cent butter fat, at a cost of less than 80 cents per gallon. L.R.A.1917B.

"Formula No. 2.

"Sells to retailer at 90 cents per gallon.

3 quarts 40 per cent cream at 45c	$1.35
13 quarts grade B milk at 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ c	.85
4 quarts condensed milk at 20c	.80
4 ounces gelatin at 24c per lb	.06
4 ounces extract	.40
7 $\frac{1}{2}$ pounds sugar	.38

$3.84

"These ingredients, expanded by freezing, yield forty quarts of ice cream, containing 7 $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent butter fat, at a cost of 38 cents a gallon.

"Formula No. 3.

10 gallons of condensed milk	$8.00
10 gallons grade B milk	2.60
60 gallons plain water	0.00
4 pounds gelatin at 20c	.80
Color	.01
Flavor	1.00
60 pounds sugar at 5c	3.00

$15.41

"These ingredients, expanded by freezing, yield one hundred twenty gallons of ice cream, at a cost of 13 cents a gallon.

"What the ice cream makers, and consumers as well, need is the creation of ice cream standards and laws which would compel the manufacturers who make 'cheap' ice cream to correctly label their product. A law is needed in New York and other places which will state how much butter fat must be contained in ice cream before it can be called ice cream, and which will prevent the use of gelatin reeking with millions of bacteria and of coal tar dyes, unless these ingredients are labeled.

"Ice cream is a commercially manufactured commodity, and as such should be adequately regulated by the health authorities, both for the benefit of the honest manufacturers and the innocent consumers."

Notwithstanding these conflicting opinions, it was a question for the legislature to say whether this legislation was called for. The legislature was not compelled to take the view of either those who favor or oppose a standard. Taking one view of it, conditions were such as to clearly sustain the action of the legislature. We are not entirely satisfied that this would not be so if conditions were as claimed by the defendants. We are not to say, and do not, of course, determine, that these defendants, or the association appearing in argument, or any particular person, is or has been guilty of any fraud or deception. The question is whether, without a standard, dishonest or unscrupulous manufacturers may do so. It is not practicable by any ordinary inspection for the purchaser to distinguish cheaper, low grade ice cream from the better quality. Because of this, it is apparent from the matters which we have detailed that an opportunity is afforded for deception by selling an inferior quality of ice cream at the price of a better or more expensive grade. This was the case in the sale of oleomargarin. State v. Armour Packing Co. 124 Iowa, 323, 100 N. W. 59, 2 Ann. Cas. 448. In this respect it differs from the case of Frost v. Chicago, 178 Ill. 250, 49 L.R.A. 657, 69 Am. St. Rep. 301, 52 N. E. 869, where it was held that a person who is ordinarily careful and intelligent could not be deceived by a netting covering for baskets of fruit. In such case the purchaser could still see and know what he was buying.

The purpose of the act in question was to prevent just such deception and fraud as would be possible without a standard, and it seems to us it cannot be seriously claimed that the statute will not accomplish the end sought.

It is said by defendants that they are deprived of the right to sell their product if it contains a less per cent of butter fat than that prescribed by the statute, and that the sale of such is entirely prohibited. This, we think, is an assumption not warranted. They may sell it for what it really is. Possibly it would sell as readily if it is named and sold as frozen skim milk; if not, this would be an additional argument for prohibiting the sale of so-called ice cream made from evaporated skim milk as ice cream.

The state contends that every point in this case is decided against the contentions of defendants in State v. Schlenker, 112 Iowa, 642, 51 L.R.A. 347, 84 Am. St. Rep. 360, 84 N. W. 698, and State v. Snow, 81 Iowa, 642, 11 L.R.A. 355, 47 N. W. 777. They are very closely in point.

The only case called to our attention, in which the question of fixing a standard for ice cream was decided, is Rigbers v. Atlanta, 7 Ga. App. 411, 66 S. E. 991. In that case, under an ordinance, the prohibition was not against selling ice cream of less than the prescribed percentage as ice cream, but against selling it at all. The provision of the ordinance is: "Ice cream sold or kept for sale must contain at least 10 per cent butter fats, for fruit ice cream, and 12 per cent for plain ice cream." Under this ordinance, ice cream could not be sold or kept for sale unless it contained the required per cent of butter fat. As already stated, our statute does not prohibit the sale of such product.

In the Georgia case the court said: "It might be permissible to say that the term L.R.A.1017B.

'ice cream' . . . should relate only to ice cream of a certain prescribed richness and that whoever sold ice cream of poorer quality should, either by calling it under some other name, or by indicating on the vessel in which it is delivered, or otherwise, disclose the inferiority of its quality,"—thus recognizing the distinction which we make between that ordinance and our statute, and holding that the sale of ice cream may be regulated by fixing a standard. Our statute fixes a standard for ice cream, and prohibits the sale of anything else as ice cream; but the sale of a product formerly known as ice cream, but containing a lower per cent of fat than that prescribed by the statute, is not prohibited. It may be sold for what it is. It may be sold under some other name, and the consumer will not be deceived, for he now knows that when he buys ice cream he is getting an article containing a certain per cent of butter fat, and that this may not be so if he buys something not as ice cream, but as something else.

Defendants say their case comes within the doctrine of People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29. This must be on the erroneous assumption that the Iowa statute prohibits absolutely the sale of their product if it contains less than the specified per cent of fat. The New York statute referred to in the Marx Case did prohibit the sale of oleomargarin, which was shown to be a wholesome article, and not injurious, and the statute was held invalid. That statute was amended so as to regulate the sale, and held valid in People v. Arensberg, 105 N. Y. 128, 59 Am. Rep. 483, 11 N. E. 277. As amended, the statute was entitled, "An Act to Prevent Deception in the Sale of Dairy Products," etc. It prohibited: (1) The manufacturer out of any animal fat, or animal or vegetable oils not produced from unadulterated milk, or cream from the same, of any product in imitation or semblance or designed to take the place of any natural butter produced from milk, etc.; (2) mixing, compounding with, or adding to milk, cream, or butter, any acids or other deleterious substances, or animal fats, etc., with design or intent to produce any article in imitation or semblance of natural butter; (3) selling, or keeping, or offering for sale, any article manufactured in violation of the provisions of the section.

The defendant was convicted of selling the article manufactured in violation of the provisions of the act. The court said: "Assuming, as is claimed, that butter made from animal fat or oil is as wholesome, nutritious, and suitable for food as dairy butter, that it is composed of the same elements, and is substantially the same article, except as regards its origin, and that it is cheaper, and that it would be a violation of the constitutional rights and liberties of the people to prohibit them from manufacturing or dealing in it, for the mere purpose of protecting the producers of dairy butter against competition, yet it cannot be claimed that the producers of butter made from animal fats or oils have any constitutional right to resort to devices for the purpose of making their product resemble in appearance the more expensive article known as dairy butter, or that it is beyond the power of the legislature to enact such laws as they may deem necessary to prevent the simulated article being put upon the market in such a form and manner as to be calculated to deceive. If it possesses the merits which are claimed for it, and is innocuous, those making and dealing in it should be protected in the employment of liberty in those respects, but they may legally be required to sell it for, and as what it actually is, and upon its own merits, and are not entitled to the benefit of any additional market value which may be imparted to it by resorting to artificial means to make it resemble dairy butter in appearance. It may be butter, but it is not butter made from cream, and the difference in cost or market value, if no other, would make it a fraud to pass off one article for the other."

Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636, is cited. In that case the statute purported to be an act to improve the public health by prohibiting the manufacture of cigars in tenement houses. It was held that it was not a health law; that cigar making had no relation to the health of the public; and that the act was not intended to protect the health of the occupants of the tenement. In that case it was held, and the proposition is not disputed by the state, that the constitutional guaranty that no person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law may be violated without physical taking of property for public or private use, and that any law which destroys it or its value, or takes away any of its essential attributes, deprives the owner of his property.

People v. Biesecker, 169 N. Y. 53, 57 L.R.A. 178, 88 Am. St. Rep. 534, 61 N. E. 990, is also cited. It was there held that the statute under consideration could not be justified as an exercise of power to prevent fraud or imposition on buyers and consumers.

We have referred to these New York cases more fully than necessary, perhaps, but, because of the claim made for the Marx Case, we have thought it proper to refer L.R.A.1917B.

briefly to the others as well. The Marx Case is cited and distinguished in State v. Snow, 81 Iowa, 642, 11 L.R.A. 355, 47 N. W. 777.

In Schmidinger v. Chicago, 226 U. S. 578, 57 L. ed. 364, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 182, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 284, it was held that a city ordinance fixing the weight of the standard loaf of bread to be sold in the city, and prohibiting the making or selling of loaves not up to the weight of the standard loaf, is not such an unreasonable and arbitrary exercise of the police power as to render the ordinance void under the Constitution, prohibiting the taking of property without due process. It was shown in that case that there was a considerable demand for loaves of different size, and that so fixing the size produced some inconvenience. The ordinance was sustained, upon the theory that it tended to prevent fraud in the sale of bread. The court said: "Furthermore, laws and ordinances of the character of the one here under consideration and tending to prevent frauds, and requiring honest weights and measures in the sale of articles of general consumption, have long been considered lawful exertions of the police power." And that "this court has had frequent occasion to declare that there is no absolute freedom of contract. The exercise of the police power fixing weights and measures and standard sizes must necessarily limit the freedom of contract which would otherwise exist. Such limitations are constantly imposed upon the right to contract freely, because of restrictions upon that right deemed necessary in the interest of general welfare." And that "so long as such action has a reasonable relation to the exercise of the power belonging to the local legislative body, and is not so arbitrary or capricious as to be a deprivation of due process of law, freedom of contract is not interfered with in a constitutional sense."

That the legislatures of the states may in the exercise of the police power regulate a lawful business, see Barrett v. Indiana, 229 U. S. 26, 57 L. ed. 1050, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 692.

The following cases may be cited as bearing upon the proposition that the legislature, under its police power, may enact laws for the purpose of preventing fraud in the sale of food products: State v. Campbell, 64 N. H. 402, 10 Am. St. Rep. 419, 13 Atl. 585; Board of Health v. Vandruens, 77 N. J. L. 443, 72 Atl. 125; People v. Bowen, 182 N. Y. 1, 74 N. E. 489; Chicago v. Bowman Dairy Co. 234 Ill. 294, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 684, 123 Am. St. Rep. 100, 84 N. E. 913, 14 Ann. Cas. 700; People v. Worden Grocer Co. 118 Mich. 604, 77 N. W. 315;

State v. Crescent Creamery Co. 83 Minn. 284, 54 L.R.A. 466, 85 Am. St. Rep. 464, 86 N. W. 107.

All points raised by the demurrers have been noticed. We are of opinion that the statute is within the police power of the state, and is not unreasonable; that it has a reasonable relation to the object to be effected, and does not offend against either the Federal or state Constitution in any of the particulars mentioned. It follows that the court erred in sustaining the demurrers.

Both cases are reversed and remanded.

The Justices all concur.

Affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, December 4, 1916, 242 U. S. 153, 61 L. ed. —, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28.

Annotation—Regulations affecting ice cream.

A case similar to STATE v. HUTCHINSON ICE CREAM Co. ante, 198, arose in Pennsylvania under a statute providing "no ice cream shall be sold within the state containing less than 8 per centum of butter fat, except where fruits or nuts are used for the purpose of flavoring when it shall not contain less than 6 per centum of butter fat," and the validity of the statute was sustained, although the court did not expressly hold, as did the court in STATE v. HUTCHINSON ICE CREAM Co., that the statute did not prohibit the sale, under some other name than ice cream of wholesome products formerly sold as ice cream, which did not come up to the required standard. In fact, in the Pennsylvania case the court said: "It is not a successful denial of the exercise of these powers to say that the prohibited article is wholesome and not injurious to the consumer. The wholesomeness of the prohibited thing will not render the act unconstitutional. The temptation to fraud and adulteration may be a consideration leading to regulative or prohibitive legislation. If it were not so, the courts would become the triers of the expediency of such legislation, and the authority which the people committed to the legislature would be transferred by judicial action to the courts." Com. v. Crowl (1914) 245 Pa. 554, 91 Atl. 922.

Both the HUTCHINSON CASE and the Crowl Case were appealed to the United States Supreme Court, and considered together in a single opinion, both being affirmed, the court taking the view of the Iowa court, that the acts do not arbitrarily prohibit the sale of a large variety of wholesome compounds theretofore included under the name of ice cream, but that they merely prohibit the sale of such compounds as ice cream. The court calls attention to such interpretation, placed upon the Iowa statute by the courts of that state, and says that L.R.A.1917B.

it cannot assume, in the absence of a definite and authoritative ruling, that the supreme court of Pennsylvania would construe the law of that state otherwise, and points out that it is not called upon to determine whether a state may in the exercise of police power prohibit the sale even of a wholesome product. (1916) 242 U. S. 153, 61 L. ed. —, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28.

The case of Rigbers v. Atlanta (1910) 7 Ga. App. 411, 66 S. E. 991, which is referred to in STATE v. HUTCHINSON ICE CREAM Co., arose under a statute which provided that "ice cream sold or kept for sale must contain at least 10 per cent butter fat for fruit ice cream and 12 per cent for plain ice cream;" this ordinance was held to be invalid, the court taking the view that it amounted to a prohibition, not only against selling ice cream of less than the prescribed percentage as ice cream, but against selling it at all, and recognizing that it might be permissible to say that the term "ice cream" should relate only to ice cream of a certain prescribed richness, and that whoever sold ice cream of a poorer quality should, "either by calling it under some other name, or by indicating on the vessel in which it is delivered," or by some other means, disclose the inferiority of its quality.

While the ordinance involved in the Rigbers Case differs in phraseology from the statutes involved in the other two cases considered by the Supreme Court, it does not appear that this is to any greater extent than those statutes a prohibition against the sale of products formerly sold as ice cream, but which do not come up to the standard required by the ordinance, under some other name; but such distinction seems to be, rather, a difference of interpretation, placed upon statutes essentially the same by different courts. R. L. S.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

JULIA A. FRIEND, Plff. in Err.,
v.
SOUTHERN STATES LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

(— Okla. —, 160 Pac. 457.)

Pleading — policy attached.

1. Where an action is brought on a policy of life insurance, and a copy of the policy is attached to the petition and made a part thereof, such copy should be considered as a part of the petition when construing the allegations thereof on demurrer.

For other cases, see Pleading, I. a and h, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Insurance — life — duration of policy.

2. A policy of life insurance, without any qualifying provisions, is not a contract of insurance for a single year, with a privilege of renewal from year to year by paying the annual premiums. It is an indivisible and continuous contract of insurance for life, subject, when so stipulated, to discontinuance and forfeiture for nonpayment of any instalment of premium. Such premium instalments are not intended as the consideration for the respective years for which they are paid, but each instalment is part consideration of the entire insurance for life. For other cases, see Insurance, III. d, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — default in premium — effect.

3. The consequence of a default in payment of one annual premium, due under an indivisible and continuous contract of insurance, is determined by common-law principles where the contract does not otherwise provide.

For other cases, see Insurance, III. h, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — premium — condition precedent.

4. Ordinarily the payment of an annual premium on a policy of life insurance, after the policy has become effective by payment of the first year's premium, is not a condition precedent to the continuance of the policy, but, on the contrary, is a condition subsequent only, the nonperformance of which may incur a forfeiture of the policy, or may not, according to the circumstances. For other cases, see Insurance, III. f, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — provision of policy.

5. A clause in a policy of life insurance which provides only that "this policy is incontestable after one year from date of the breach of any of the provisions thereof, except failure to pay premiums as required," and which further provides that upon payment of the policy the company may deduct any sum or sums due the company, does not forfeit the policy for failure to pay the annual premium when due; but the insurance continues in force, subject to the right of the company to terminate it, if after due notice the insured shall fail to pay the premium in arrears with interest, and the further right to retain out of any settlement arising under the policy the unpaid premium and interest thereon.

For other cases, see Insurance, III. f, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — forfeiture — construction.

6. Forfeitures are looked upon by the courts with ill favor, and will be enforced only when the strict letter of the contract requires it. On the question of forfeiture of a life insurance policy, which is so framed as to be fairly open to construction, the view should be adopted, if possible, which will sustain rather than forfeit the contract of insurance.

For other cases, see Insurance, III. f, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 10, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court for Oklahoma County to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to a petition filed to recover the amount alleged to be due on a life insurance policy. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Everest, Smith, & Campbell and Hunt C. Hill, for plaintiff in error:

Forfeitures are not favored, and where a policy is capable of two constructions, that one is to be adopted which gives validity to the policy.

Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Deckard, 3 Ind. App. 361, 28 N. E. 868; Hamann v. Nebraska Underwriters Ins. Co. 82 Neb. 429, 118 N. W. 65; Kennedy v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 21 S. D. 145, 110 N. W. 116; Vance, Ins. p. 227; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Noble, 34 Okla. 103, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 391, 124 Pac. 612; Nielsen v. Providence Sav. Life Assur. Soc. 139 Cal. 332, 96 Am. St. Rep. 146, 73 Pac. 168; Stark v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 176 Mo. App. 574, 159 S. W. 758; McMaster v. New York L. Ins. Co. 183 U. S. 25, 46 L. ed. 64, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Allen v. St. Louis Ins. Co. 85 N. Y. 473; Union Acci. Co. v. Willis, 44 Okla. 578, L.R.A.1915D, 358, 145 Pac. 812; Taylor v Insurance Co. of N. A. 25 Okla. 92, 138 Am. St. Rep. 906, 105 Pac. 354; Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. Carroll, 26 Okla. 286, 109 Pac. 535; Standard Acci. Ins. Co. v. Hite, 37 Okla. 305, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 986, 132 Pac. 333.

The company, having agreed to give Mr. Friend extended insurance up to the amount of the loan value of his policy, cannot escape that agreement by reason of another clause inserted in the policy for regulating

Headnotes by SHARP, J.

Note.—For effect of failure to pay periodical premium on policy of life insurance to terminate the same in the absence of a provision for forfeiture, see annotation following this case, post, 214. L.R.A.1917B.

the terms under which a cash loan may be secured.

United States L. Ins. Co. v. Ross, 159 Ill. 476, 42 N. E. 859; Head v. New York L. Ins. Co. 241 Mo. 403, 147 S. W. 827; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Van Meter, 137 Ky. 4, 136 Am. St. Rep. 282, 121 S. W. 438; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. O'Brien, — Ky. —, 116 S. W. 750.

Where the policy contains no provision for forfeiture of the insurance by reason of nonpayment of premium, such policy does not lapse on that account. It continues in force until the contract is terminated by some affirmative action; and if the insured dies while the policy is thus in force, notwithstanding the failure of the insured to pay one or more premiums, the company will be required to pay the face of the policy, less such credit as it may be entitled to for the lapsed premiums.

Woodfin v. Asheville Mut. Ins. Co. 51 N. C. (6 Jones, L.) 558; 25 Cyc. 850; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 44; Perry v. Bankers' L. Ins. Co. 47 App. Div. 567, 62 N. Y. Supp. 553; McMaster v. New York L. Ins. Co. 183 U. S. 25, 46 L. ed. 64, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Haas v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 84 Neb. 682, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 747, 121 N. W. 996, 19 Ann. Cas. 58; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Golson, 159 Ala. 508, 48 So. 1034; Titlow v. Reliance L. Ins. Co. 246 Pa. 503, 92 Atl. 747; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Morrow, 7 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 118; Gruwell v. National Council, K. L. S. 126 Mo. App. 496, 104 S. W. 884; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 24, 23 L. ed. 789, 19 Am. Rep. 512; Nederland L. Ins. Co. v. Meinert, 62 C. C. A. 377, 127 Fed. 651; Keeton v. National Union, — Mo. App. —, 182 S. W. 798; Arkansas Ins. Co. v. Cox, 21 Okla. 873, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 775, 129 Am. St. Rep. 808, 98 Pac. 552.

Where any form of notice is provided for by the contract from the company to the insured, that notice must be given before any forfeiture of the policy can be insisted upon.

Eddy v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 65 N. H. 27, 23 Am. St. Rep. 17, 18 Atl. 89; Meyer v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 516, 29 Am. Rep. 200; Nall v. Provident Sav. L. Assur. Soc. — Tenn. —, 54 S. W. 109; Merriman v. Keystone Mut. Ben. Asso. 138 N. Y. 116, 33 N. E. 738.

Messrs. Wilson, Tomerlin, & Buckholts, for defendant in error:

Time of payment of premium is of the essence of the contract.

2 Cooley, Briefs on Ins. p. 990; Worthington v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 41 Conn. 372, 19 Am. Rep. 495.
L.R.A.1917B.

Policies containing no forfeiture clause for failure to pay premiums are void.

Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hill, 193 U. S. 559, 48 L. ed. 794, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 538; Lone v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 33 Wash. 577, 74 Pac. 689; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Adler, 38 Ind. App. 530, 73 N. E. 835, 75 N. E. 1088.

The policy was suspended if not forfeited.

Washington Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Rosenberger, 84 Pa. 373.

Sharp, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case presents error from the district court of Oklahoma county, and involves the sufficiency upon demurrer of plaintiff's petition, charging liability to her of the Southern States Life Insurance Company upon a policy of insurance issued by it on the life of Joseph A. Friend September 7, 1907. The policy provides that in consideration of $483.90, and the annual payment of a like sum at or before noon on or before the 7th day of September in every year during its continuance, the company covenants to pay at its general office in the city of Atlanta, Georgia, $10,000, less any sum or sums due it, to Julia A. Friend, wife of the insured, immediately upon receipt and approval of proofs of death of the insured, Joseph A. Friend, of Tulsa, Indian Territory, while said policy was in full force, provided, however, that if no beneficiary should survive the insured, then such payment should be made to the executors, administrators, or assigns of said insured. It was provided that the policy should be incontestable after one year from the date of the breach of any of the provisions thereof, except failure to pay premiums as required. A clause of the policy provided that it should be automatically nonforfeitable; that, if any premium thereon should not be paid when due, any withdrawable surplus should first be applied to pay the same, and the remainder of the premium, if any, should be charged against the policy as a loan if the respective loan value be sufficient to enable such advance after providing for the existing loans and accrued interest, provided that, if not sufficient to cover the entire remainder, a premium for a shorter period, but not less than a monthly premium, should be provided for, if the available loan value be sufficient; that notice of such application of surplus and advance should be mailed to the insured, and at any time while the policy was thus sustained in force the payment of premiums might be resumed. Another clause made the benefits, privileges, or provisions written or printed on other pages of the policy a part thereof. These benefits, privileges, and provisions found on the additional pages of the policy concern different subjects pertaining to said insurance policy, under appropriate headings as follows: (1) Account with policy holder; (2) policy paid up by surplus; (3) policy matured as an endowment by surplus; (4) policy paid up with sum insured; (5) withdrawal of surplus; (6) change of beneficiary; (7) assignment of policy; (8) errors of age; (9) time and place of payment of premiums; (10) occupation, travel, residence, mode, and place of death; (11) authority of agents; (12) distribution of surplus; (13) loans and surrender privileges; (13a) surrender; (13b) table of cash loans, paid-up insurance, and periods of extensions, at different anniversaries of said policy, referred to in the policy and in sections 13 and 13a.

The petition charged that, notwithstanding the failure of the insured to pay the second year's premium, still the policy by its terms was in full force on March 1, 1909, the date of the death of the insured. A copy of the policy was attached to the petition as an exhibit, and made a part thereof by reference. The judgment of the trial court was that the petition failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The limit of our inquiry therefore is: Did the court err in sustaining the demurrer?

At the outset it may be said that, where suit is brought on an instrument in writing for the payment of money, and a copy of such instrument is attached to the petition and made a part thereof, such instrument should be considered as a part of the petition when construing the allegations thereof on demurrer. Grimes v. Cullison, 3 Okla. 268, 41 Pac. 355; Whiteacre v. Nichols, 17 Okla. 387, 87 Pac. 865; Long v. Shepard, 35 Okla. 489, 130 Pac. 131; Davis v. Choctaw County, — Okla. —, L.R.A.1916F, 873, 158 Pac. 294.

As the court's action in sustaining the demurrer is defended upon the ground that the nonpayment of the premium for the second year automatically worked a forfeiture of the policy, it is proper that we consider the nature and character of a policy of insurance made payable at the death of the insured, as is the policy before us. The leading case wherein the rule defining the character of a contract of insurance is stated is New York L. Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 24, 23 L. ed. 789, 19 Am. Rep. 512, where the court said, speaking through Mr. Justice Bradley: "We agree with the court below that the contract is not an assurance for a single year, with a privilege of renewal from year to year by paying the annual premium, but that it is an entire contract of assurance for life, L.R.A.1917B.

subject to discontinuance and forfeiture for nonpayment of any of the stipulated premiums. Such is the form of the contract, and such is its character. It has been contended that the payment of each premium is the consideration for insurance during the next following year, as in fire policies. But the position is untenable. It often happens that the assured pays the entire premium in advance, or in five, ten, or twenty annual instalments. Such instalments are clearly not intended as the consideration for the respective years in which they are paid; for, after they are all paid, the policy stands good for the balance of the life insured, without any further payment. Each instalment is, in fact, part consideration of the entire insurance for life. It is the same thing where the annual premiums are spread over the whole life. The value of assurance for one year of a man's life when he is young, strong, and healthy is manifestly not the same as when he is old and decrepit. There is no proper relation between the annual premium and the risk of assurance for the year in which it is paid. This idea of assurance from year to year is the suggestion of ingenious counsel. The annual premiums are an annuity, the present value of which is calculated to correspond with the present value of the amount assured, a reasonable percentage being added to the premiums to cover expenses and contingencies. The whole premiums are balanced against the whole insurance."

The doctrine of the Statham Case was reaffirmed in Thompson v. Knickerbocker, L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 252, 26 L. ed. 765, and McMaster v. New York L. Ins. Co. 183 U. S. 25, 46 L. ed. 64, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10. In the former case it is announced that the court did not accept the position that the payment of the annual premium was a condition precedent to the continuance of the policy, but, on the contrary, said that the payment constituted a condition subsequent only, the nonperformance of which may incur a forfeiture of the policy, or may not, according to the circumstances. It is also said that, while prompt payment and regular interest constitute the life and soul of the life insurance business, and that the sentiment long prevailed that it could not be carried on without the ability to impose stringent conditions for delinquencies, more liberal views had obtained on this subject in recent years, and that a wise policy now often provides express modes for avoiding the odious result of forfeitures.

In the latter opinion, citing both of the earlier opinions, it was said: "The contracts were not assurances for a single year, with a privilege of renewal from year to year on payment of stipulated premiums, but were entire contracts for life, subject to forfeiture by failure to perform the conditions subsequent of payment as provided."

The initial premium having been paid, and the policy therefore having become effective, and being for the life of the insured, it remains to inquire whether it has been forfeited. As there was at the time no statute controlling the rights of the parties, the policy has not been forfeited unless by virtue of some express provision contained in it, providing for forfeiture, for without a forfeiture clause the policy is not terminated merely for nonpayment of the premium when due. A well-considered case upon this question, and in which many authorities are reviewed, is Haas v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 84 Neb. 682, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 747, 121 N. W. 996, 19 Ann. Cas. 58, where the rule is announced in the syllabus as follows: "A life insurance policy, when once it takes effect by payment of the first year's premium and delivery of the policy, does not terminate at the end of the year, but it is a contract for the life of the assured. If the policy contains no provision for a forfeiture thereof by reason of a failure of the assured to pay subsequent premiums annually, a failure to pay such premiums on the day named will not constitute a forfeiture of such policy. All that the company can demand in such case is the right to set off against the amount of indemnity it has bound itself to pay the amount of the premiums remaining unpaid, with interest thereon."

In the note to the above case it is said by the annotator that the rule that a failure to pay the premium on a life insurance policy does not of itself avoid the policy, unless the policy so provides, finds support in almost all of the authorities. Such has been the result of our own investigation.

In Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Golsen, 159 Ala. 508, 48 So. 1034, it was held that, while the policy may contain a valid condition that it may be terminated or forfeited upon a failure to pay any premium or installment at the time specified in the contract, which would be a condition subsequent, and the nonperformance of which would avoid the policy, unless waived by the insurer, yet such a condition, being for the benefit of the company, is to be strictly construed, and a forfeiture will be enforced only when it appears that such is the plain intent and meaning of the contract; and, if there are repugnant conditions, the court will enforce such as are in favor of the insured, and will prevent a forfeiture. Titlow v. Reliance L. Ins. Co. 246 Pa. 503, 92 Atl. 747, is another recent case in point. There it was said that, the contract of insurance having provided for no forfeiture, the law visited no such penalty; that, where the policy contained no such provision (forfeiture for nonpayment of premium), though the charter and by-laws required the payment of annual premiums, the failure to pay the annual premium when due did not work a forfeiture; that such a policy insured for the number of years stipulated absolutely, leaving the annual payment of the premium to be enforced, not as a condition, but as a part of the consideration agreed to be paid. The syllabus reads: "A contract of life insurance providing for the payment of a definite sum to the insured at a definite period, or to his legal representatives at his decease before the end of the period, in consideration of certain annual premiums to be paid by the insured during the continuance of the policy, without qualifying provision of any kind whatever, is not a contract of insurance for one year in consideration of an advance payment with the right of the insured to continue it from year to year upon payment of the stipulated premium, but a contract indivisible and continuous, and the consequence of a default in the payment of one of the premiums is to be determined by common-law principles, parties themselves having failed to provide otherwise."

In Union Central L. Ins. Co. v. Morrow, 7 Ohio Dec. 118, it was said that, where a policy of life insurance contained no condition of forfeiture or lapse for nonpayment of premiums, the payment of the first premium was a condition precedent to the validity of the policy, but the payment of subsequent premiums was not, and that default did not forfeit the policy in the absence of notice by the company of the maturity of the notes, or demand of payment, or notice that upon nonpayment the company would elect to forfeit the policy. In Sanford v. California Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Asso. 63 Cal. 547, it was held that a policy of insurance issued to a member of a mutual insurance company was not forfeited or suspended by failure of the insured to pay an assessment thus levied, unless such forfeiture or suspension was provided for as a part of the contract of insurance. Another well-considered case is Nederland L. Ins. Co. v. Meinert, 62 C. C. A. 377, 127 Fed. 661, where the conclusion was reached that the policy had not been forfeited unless it was by virtue of an express provision contained therein providing for forfeiture. It is said in the course of the opinion: "Without a clause providing for a forfeiture, the policy is not forfeited for nonpayment of the premium, any more than a land contract is forfeited by nonpayment of principal or interest when due. The rule is laid down in 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 44, as follows: 'Since forfeitures are odious in the eyes of the law, a default in the payment of a premium on life insurance does not forfeit the policy where there is no stipulation to that effect in the policy.' This is the well-settled rule. The reason why forfeitures are odious in the eyes of the law, and are said to be abhorred is that they are not equitable. Nevertheless, if a policy of insurance provides in express terms for forfeiture for nonpayment of the premium when due, the law will enforce it. But before the court will declare a forfeiture, the conditions of the policy upon which a forfeiture is founded must be strictly complied with."

See also Woodfin v. Asheville Mut. Ins. Co. 51 N. C. (6 Jones, L.) 558; Perry v. Bankers' L. Ins. Co. 47 App. Div. 567, 62 N. Y. Supp. 553; Gruwell v. National Council K. & L. S. 126 Mo. App. 496, 104 S. W. 884; Keeton v. National Union, — Mo. App. —, 182 S. W. 798.

In 25 Cyc. 824, the rule pertaining to the nonpayment of premiums or assessments and the effect thereof upon the policy is thus stated: "A condition in the policy that it shall terminate or be avoided on failure to pay any premium or instalment thereof at the time specified in the contract is valid, and constitutes a condition subsequent, the nonperformance of which avoids the policy, in the absence of waiver or estoppel on the part of the company. . . . But where there is in the policy no stipulation or condition for forfeiture on account of nonpayment of premiums, a default in payment will not operate in itself as a forfeiture, nor can it be insisted upon by the company as constituting a forfeiture in the absence of any notice."

Speaking of forfeitures in policies of life insurance, it is said in May, Ins. 4th ed. § 343: "If, however, the policy contains no such proviso, though the charter and by-laws require the payment of annual premiums, the nonpayment of the annual premium when due does not work a forfeiture. Such a policy of insurance is for the number of years stipulated absolutely, leaving the annual payment of the premium to be enforced, not as a condition, but as a part of the consideration agreed to be paid."

Other authorities in point are Cookey, Briefs on Ins. 2259, 2260; Vance, Ins. p. 212; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 44.

Turning to the policy, we fail to find any express provision of forfeiture for the nonpayment of the annual premium. There is, as already shown, the clause making the policy incontestable after one year, from the date of the breach thereof, except failure to pay premiums as required. There is the further provision making the premiums payable either annually or in semiannual or quarterly instalments, according to the company's rule, with the right in the company, in the settlement of the policy, to deduct out of the sums due any unpaid portion of the year's premium, or any sum or sums due the company. Unless it be that the clause making the policy incontestable be held to constitute an express forfeiture, clearly the policy is without such a provision, for no other clause or part of the policy, except by possible inference, would authorize us in holding that the policy was forfeited on account of nonpayment of premiums. Forfeitures in law, not being favored will not be sustained upon mere inference. Joliffe v. Madison Mut. Ins. Co. 39 Wis. 111, 20 Am. Rep. 35; Meyer v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 516, 29 Am. Rep. 200; Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Norton, 96 U. S. 234, 24 L. ed. 689. Being looked upon by the courts with ill favor, they will be enforced only where the strict letter of the contract requires it. Hence, even though the contract contains a stipulation of forfeiture, it will not be aided or given effect by construction, unless the plain meaning of the language used requires it. It has become a well-recognized rule in the construction of contracts of insurance that they will be liberally construed to uphold the contract, and conditions contained in them which create forfeitures will be construed most strongly against the insurer, and will never be extended beyond the strict words of the policy. In Ingersoll v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 156 Ill. App. 569, it was provided in the policy: "If this policy shall become void by nonpayment of premiums, all payments previously made shall be forfeited to the company, except as hereinafter provided."

The court, in referring to the common practice of insurance companies, in providing that policies shall be null and void, and all premiums forfeited, subject only to surrender rights or reinstatement if default be made in the payment of any premium, held that the provision was insufficient to cause a forfeiture, and said: "To sustain defendant's contention that the failure to pay the ninth premium absolutely and automatically nullified the insurance, subject only to the right to secure a paid-up policy, would compel us to hold, as the Nebraska court says [Haas v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 84 Neb. 682, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 747, 121 N. W. 996, 19 Ann. Cas. 58], 'that a forfeiture of an insurance contract may be created by construction, and need not be provided for by the strict terms of the contract. Such is not the law.'"

In Swander v. Northern Cent. L. Ins. Co. 25 Ohio C. C. 3, 11, the policy contained no provision that if the payment of premium was not made when due the policy should become void and terminate. It was observed, however, that there were some expressions in the policy which, it was urged, indicated that the nonpayment of dues might be regarded as a forfeiture of the policy, and that the policy might under certain circumstances lapse; but there was no express provision of forfeiture, and it was said that, in view of the authorities holding that, where there is a provision of absolute forfeiture, it is to be construed strictly in favor of the insured, and may be waived by the insurance company by its conduct, it would seem as though a court ought not to import into an insurance policy a contract which does not there exist. And in Webster v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 53 Ohio St. 558, 30 L.R.A. 710, 53 Am. St. Rep. 658, 42 N. E. 546, it was held that provisions for forfeiture are to receive, where the intent is doubtful, a strict construction against those for whose benefit they are introduced. Another case of the same kind is Hull v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 39 Wis. 397, where it was said that forfeitures are only enforced when it appears that such is the plain intent and meaning of the contract, and that words of a policy must be construed most strongly against the insurer, and if the policy contains repugnant conditions, the court must enforce those which are in favor of the insured and will prevent a forfeiture. In Ferguson v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 187 Mass. 8, 72 N. E. 358, it was held that a provision for forfeiture in a policy of life insurance, being inserted for the benefit of an insurer, is not to be extended by implication, and, if it is susceptible of more than one meaning, that which is most favorable to the insured should be adopted.

As the insurance company in its policy failed to specifically provide and declare that a failure to meet the annual payments when due should forfeit all claims under the policy, and as we cannot by construction create a forfeiture, even though such may have been intended, or may be inferred from the language used, it follows that the failure to pay the second year's premium at maturity, the policy not being a divisible contract, did not of itself end and terminate the policy.

What we have said is apart from any rights that may have attached under the provisions of the policy declaring it, in capital letters, to be automatically nonforfeitable. L.R.A.1917B.

able; for, if we are correct in our conclusion that the failure to pay the premium did not forfeit the policy, then it becomes immaterial whether in point of fact the policy at the end of the first year had either a withdrawable surplus or a cash loan value, within the meaning of said provisions of the policy. The automatically nonforfeitable provision of the policy would not serve to take the case out of the general rule respecting forfeitures, but must, on the other hand, be strictly construed against the insurer. Such was the holding of the court in Chase v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 67 Me. 85, in a case containing a "nonforfeiting" policy, where the insured neglected to surrender the policy and apply for a reduced paid-up policy, and where it was said: "Stipulations for a forfeiture in a policy thus labeled should be strictly construed." In Franklin L. Ins. Co. v. Wallace, 93 Ind. 7, as in the case at bar, at a prominent place in the policy, and in large type, were printed the words, "Nonforfeiting policy." In the opinion attention is called to this fact, and it is said that the contracting parties did not intend that the failure to pay premium note should work a total forfeiture, as was manifested by the statement that the policy was a nonforfeiting one.

The well-nigh universal rule that, if the wording of a policy of insurance is such as to be fairly open to construction, that view should be adopted, if possible, which will sustain, rather than forfeit, the contract of insurance, has been accepted as a canon of construction in this branch of our jurisprudence, as evidenced by the opinions in Taylor v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 25 Okla. 92, 138 Am. St. Rep. 906, 105 Pac. 854; Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. Carroll, 26 Okla. 286, 109 Pac. 535; Southern Surety Co. v. Tyler & S. Co. 30 Okla. 116, 120 Pac. 936; Standard Accel. Ins. Co. v. Ilite, 37 Okla. 305, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 986, 132 Pac. 333; Union Accel. Co. v. Willis, 44 Okla. 578, L.R.A.1915D, 358, 145 Pac. 812; Oklahoma Nat. L. Ins. Co. v. Norton, 44 Okla. 783, L.R.A.1915E, 695, 145 Pac. 1138.

From what has been said it is obvious that the learned trial court erred in sustaining the defendant's demurrer and dismissing plaintiff's cause of action, for which the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to overrule the defendant's demurrer, and set aside the order of dismissal, with leave to defendant to answer.

All the Justices concur, except Kane, Ch. J., absent and not participating.

Annotation—Effect of failure to pay periodical premium on policy of life insurance to terminate the same in the absence of a provision for forfeiture.

The earlier cases on this question are discussed in the annotation to Haas v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 747. As to applicability of incontestable clause to nonpayment of premiums, see Thompson v. Fidelity Mut. L. Ins. Co. 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1039.

The general statement in the earlier annotation that a failure to pay the premium on a life insurance policy will not of itself avoid the policy unless the policy so provides is supported by subsequent decisions on the question.

This was the conclusion reached in FRIEND v. SOUTHERN STATES L. INS. CO. ante, 208, where the policy contained no provision for forfeiture in case of the nonpayment of premiums, although it provided that the policy should be incontestable after one year except for failure to pay premiums as required, and also provided that upon payment of the policy the company might deduct any sum or sums due to it.

The decision in Haas v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1909) 84 Neb. 682, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 747, 121 N. W. 996, 19 Ann. Cas. 58, was followed in Ingersoll v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1910) 156 Ill. App. 568, where a ten payment life policy on which eight of the annual payments had been made was held not to have been terminated by the nonpayment of the ninth and tenth annual premiums, there being no provision in the policy that it should become void for the nonpayment of premiums, but merely a provision that "if this policy shall become void by a nonpayment of a premium, all payments previously made shall be forfeited to the company except as hereinafter provided." The court said: "Many companies expressly provide, and this defendant company has, in many of its policies, as shown by reported cases, expressly provided, that the policy shall be null and void and all premiums forfeited, subject only to certain rights of reinstatement, if default be made in the payment of any premium. Such is not the language used in this policy. It provides that 'if this policy shall become void by nonpayment of a premium' payments made shall be forfeited: not 'that it shall become void in that event and thereupon the payments made shall become forfeited.' To sustain defendant's contention that the failure to pay the ninth premium absolutely and automatically nullified the insurance, subject only to the right to secure a paid-up policy, would compel us to hold, as the Nebraska court says, 'that a forfeiture of an insurance contract may be created by construction, and need not be provided for by the strict terms of the contract. Such is not the law.' (Haas Case (Neb.) supra). The language of an insurance policy is to be construed strictly against the insurer. We are therefore of the opinion that in this case as in the Nebraska case mere nonpayment of a premium did not avoid the policy and forfeit the premiums paid; that the insurance continued in full force, subject to a lien for the unpaid premiums, and to a right on the part of the company to terminate the contract if after due notice the insured should fail to comply with the condition, that is, to pay the premium. In the event of such a termination, however, the right to a paid-up policy as provided for would arise."

The decision in Gruwell v. National Council, K. L. S. (1907) 126 Mo. App. 496, 104 S. W. 884 (set out in the prior annotation), was followed in Keeton v. National Union (1916) — Mo. App. —, 182 S. W. 798, where, in the absence of any provision in the by-laws, rules, or regulations of the insurer authorizing the declaration of a forfeiture for nonpayment of assessments, it was held that the failure to pay premiums or assessments allowed no other recourse to the insurer in a case where the insured died delinquent than to deduct the unpaid premiums from the amount of the insurance, and this conclusion was reached although the application provided that a suspension for nonpayment of assessments should forfeit the rights of the insured and his beneficiary.

And in the absence of a clause in a life insurance policy providing that it shall be void in the event the premium is not paid at the maturity of notes given for the premium, a default in the payment of the notes will not work a forfeiture of the policy. United States L. Ins. Co. v. Ross (1896) 159 Ill. 476, 42 N. E. 859; Columbian Nat. L. Ins. Co. v. Mulkey (1913) 13 Ga. App. 508, 79 S. E. 482; Arnold v. Empire Mut. Annuity & L. Ins. Co. (1907) 3 Ga. App.

685, 60 S. E. 470; Fidelity Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Goza (1913) 13 Ga. App. 20, 78 S. E. 735.

In Titlow v. Reliance L. Ins. Co. (1914) 246 Pa. 503, 92 Atl. 747, a policy which agreed, in consideration of the payment in advance of a specified sum and the annual payment of a like sum on a certain date each year or until premiums for twenty-four years should have been paid, to pay a certain sum to the insured's executors, administrators, or assigns upon acceptance of proofs of death, or, if the insured should be living at a specified date, to the insured himself, and which contained no provision for the lapsing of the policy in consequence of a default in the payment of premiums, was held a contract indivisible and continuous; and it was held that, upon default in the payment of premiums, it was open to the insurer either to waive the breach and accept payment of the premiums or to regard the default as indicating a desire on the part of the insured to rescind the contract, in which case it could join in the rescission and thereby relieve itself from further liability upon refunding what it had received for premiums; but that no absolute forfeiture resulted from the nonpayment of premiums.

But in Jackson v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1911) 108 C. C. A. 369, 186 Fed. 447, where a life insurance policy provided for payment of the benefit upon condition that the annual premium should be paid in advance on the delivery of the policy and thereafter on specified dates in every year during the continuance of the contract, although the policy contained no provision for forfeiture upon nonpayment of premium, it was held that a default in the payment of the premium defeated the right to recovery. The court denied the beneficiary's contention that the covenant to pay the premium was independent, and that its violation entitled the insurer to an action to recover the premium, or upon the maturity of the policy to deduct it from the amount paid, and with relation to the condition for the payment of the premium said: "It is thus seen the promise to pay is conditioned upon the premiums being paid as and when due. The fact that no express provision of forfeiture is made is of no importance; the obvious and necessary interpretation of the contract, if the business of insurance is to be conducted at all, is that the obligation of the company to pay the amount promised depended upon the payment of the premiums reserved; if the premiums were not paid the obligation, according to the plain import of the contract, ceased."

In Pope v. New York L. Ins. Co. (1916) 192 Mo. App. 383, 181 S. W. 1047, it was argued that because the policy stipulated that it was to be incontestable and there was no express provision of forfeiture it continued in force notwithstanding a default in the payment of premiums. The court stated that the case was not tried on such theory, but that where, as in the case before them, the payment of the amount of the policy was conditional on the payment premiums when due, such payments became conditions precedent, and the stipulation of incontestability did not apply to a failure to pay premiums.
J. T. W.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

CHARLESTON & WESTERN CAROLINA RAILWAY COMPANY, et al., Appts.

v.

REUBEN GOSNELL, Resp't.

(— S. C. —, 90 S. E. 264.)

Commerce — Interstate — seizure of liquor in possession of carrier.

The state may seize, in possession of the carrier, intoxicating liquor shipped from one state to another, consigned to the consignee, with directions to notify a particular person, who intends it for unlawful use, if it is left in possession of the carrier for an unreasonable time.

For other cases, see Commerce, IV. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Watts, J., and Prince, Shipp, and De Vore, Circuit Judges, dissent.)

(October 14, 1916.)

Note. — The question as to what is sufficient to terminate interstate transportation of intoxicating liquor so as to subject it to the power of the state under the Wilson Act is discussed in the notes to State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 550; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 23 L.R.A.1917B.

L.R.A.(N.S.) 1020; and State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 745. This question is of less importance than formerly, since the passage of the Webb-Kenyon Act, the operation of which is not dependent upon the termination of interstate transportation.

APPEAL by plaintiff and certain defendants from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Greenville County in favor of defendant Gosnell in an action of claim and delivery brought to recover possession of certain liquors which were seized by him under regularly issued process. Affirmed.

Statement by Gary, Ch. J.:

This is an action of claim and delivery, and was commenced on the 14th day of December, 1914, to recover possession of certain liquors described in the complaint, which were seized by the defendant Reuben Gosnell. The complaint contains three causes of action, as the respective consignors and the parties to be notified of the shipments were different.

The defendant Gosnell denied that the seizure of the liquors was unlawful, and interposed two defenses, the first of which is as follows: "That on November 24, 1914, this defendant, being informed that the liquors described in the complaint were illegally stored in a car of plaintiff's after same had arrived at their destination, and a reasonable time for the delivery thereof had elapsed, and that deliveries were being illegally made from said car, from time to time, to consignees, who are all notorious violators of the liquor laws of the state, obtained from Samuel Stradley, Esq., a duly appointed magistrate for Greenville county, legal process, under and by virtue of which he made search of plaintiff's premises, and seized and took possession of the liquors described in the complaint, stored in said car as aforesaid, and that in so doing he acted under legal process, issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, and is entitled, under the laws of this state, to hold possession of said liquors."

The second defense is as follows: "That upon the arrival of the liquors described in the complaint, plaintiff, as the defendant is informed and believes, duly notified consignees thereof, and thereafter unloaded said shipments from the cars in which they had been transported, transferred them to a local car in plaintiff's railroad yard in the city of Greenville, placed on said car a local seal, and from time to time thereafter made delivery to consignees from shipments contained in said car; that said liquors had arrived at point of destination before seizure by this defendant; the consignees had been duly notified of their arrival, and, after such notification, permitted them to remain in car of carrier, who held them for an unreasonable length of time; that as to said shipments plaintiff, as this defendant is informed and believes, had, before the seizure of said liquors, ceased to L.R.A.1917B.

hold them as a carrier, and at such time held them as a warehouseman; that said liquors were purchased for an unlawful purpose, and that plaintiffs, by their conduct as above set forth, aided and abetted and assisted the various consignees in carrying out said unlawful purpose."

The following statement appears in the record, as to the shipment by the defendant Corning & Company to the defendant Tom Harrison: "On November 9, 1914, Corning & Company, at Peoria, Illinois, shipped 25 cases of whisky, consigned to themselves at Greenville, South Carolina, order notify Tom Harrison. The shipment was delivered to the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway Company by the Georgia Railroad Company, a connecting carrier, on November 17, 1914, and arrived at destination on November 20, 1914, four days before the seizure on November 24th. The party to be notified was mailed written notice that the shipment had arrived at the depot. The shippers drew a draft upon Tom Harrison for the invoice price of the liquor, $153.25, and attached same to the bill of lading, forwarding through regular commercial channels for collection. Tom Harrison did not take up the draft with bill of lading, and did not pay the freight, $15.50, which was 'Collect.' Between the arrival of the shipment at the depot and the seizure by the defendant Gosnell, the agent of the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway Company (acting upon the advice of the local counsel of that railway company at Greenville), as he states, for safe-keeping, stored the liquor in a box car standing upon a side track near the warehouse door, where it was seized by the defendant Gosnell under a search warrant issued by Magistrate Stradley on November 24, 1914, charging that the liquor was being stored in the car by 'Tom Harrison, consignee.'"

Similar statements appear in the record as to the shipments by the defendants Heyman & Baron and H. C. Myers Company to the defendants W. J. Goodlett and D. F. Belcher, respectively.

The following shipments were made by Heyman & Baron, of Augusta, Georgia, consigned to themselves, with instructions to notify W. J. Goodlett: (1) Five cases whisky shipped September 22, 1914, arrived September 28, 1914; (2) fifteen cases whisky shipped September 25, 1914, arrived September 28, 1914; (3) five cases whisky shipped September 29, 1914, arrived October 1, 1914; (4) five cases whisky shipped October 6, 1914, arrived October 7, 1914. These shipments were seized November 25, 1914.

The following shipments were made by H. C. Myers Company from New York, consigned to themselves, with instructions to notify D. F. Belcher: (1) One case whisky shipped July 9, 1914, arrived July 16, 1914; (2) one case whisky shipped July 9, 1914, arrived July 16, 1914. These shipments were seized August 13, 1914. All the bills of lading were marked, "For personal use."

H. C. Harvley testified as follows in behalf of the plaintiff:

Agent of Charleston & Western Carolina Railway Company at Greenville continuously since March 3, 1913. On November 24, 1914, Reuben Gosnell, chief of rural police, searched for liquor in the warehouse, and in a car standing on side track near warehouse. Seized 45 cases of whisky and 15 or 18 barrels of beer. The liquor was placed in the car for safe-keeping, to keep it from being stolen. Had had trouble with losing whisky; cases had been broken up, and sometimes an entire case would be stolen. The liquor was in the car with other freight.

Cross-examination:

We were using the car practically as a warehouse. Don't think there was any liquor in the warehouse. The car was under a local seal of the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway Company. Harrison and Goodlett received shipments probably every week on an average. Belcher not so often.

Q. What was the reputation of Harrison and Goodlett in reference to being engaged in the lawful sale of liquor?

A. Their general reputation was that they were engaged in the unlawful sale of liquor. Harrison and Goodlett frequently got several shipments, at the same time, from the same party, covered by separate bills of lading. When such shipments would come in that way, I would put them in the car. When they would pay a draft attached to a bill of lading, covering a particular shipment, I would deliver that shipment to them. It made no difference how often they came, or for how much they came, the liquor would be delivered to them, if they presented the bill of lading covering that particular shipment or those particular shipments. It frequently happened that Harrison or Goodlett would send a bill of lading by someone, with an order on me to deliver to them, which I would honor, and deliver the liquor accordingly. On all order notify shipments we promptly notify the party to be notified of the receipt by us of the shipment. This is done with both order notify and straight shipments. Storage would be charged on shipments not called for. I don't recollect an instance where we charged storage against Harrison, Goodlett, or Belcher. In the car there were boxes which had been broken into and some of the contents abstracted. This was done before arrival here. It was not done by the intended consignees. They knew absolutely nothing about it.

On cross-examination Tom Harrison declined to answer questions as to his being engaged in the unlawful sale of liquor, upon the ground that the answers might incriminate him. And, on the cross-examination W. J. Goodlett testified:

Had agency for near beer for Augusta Brewing Company. Have been engaged in the liquor business in Greenville for several years. Was so engaged in November, 1914. I had a Federal license, up to July, 1915, wholesale and retail.

It was admitted as a fact that the storing of the liquor in the box car was in consequence of advice given by T. P. Cothran, Esq., local counsel of Charleston & Western Carolina Railway Company at Greenville, to the agent, to protect the same from theft in the warehouse.

Two motions were made for the direction of a verdict,—one by the plaintiff and the other by the defendant,—but both were refused.

The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant Gosnell, and the plaintiff appealed.

Messrs. Cothran, Dean, & Cothran and Mauldin & Turner for appellants.

Messrs. McCullough, Martin, & Blythe, for respondent:

The liquor was not exempt from seizure because protected as interstate commerce.

Kirmeyer v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 568, 59 L. ed. 721, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 419; Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 206 U. S. 129, 51 L. ed. 987, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606; Jaro v. Holstein, 73 S. C. 111, 52 S. E. 870; Atkinson v. Southern Exp. Co. 94 S. C. 444, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 349, 78 S. E. 516; Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 238 U. S. 190, 59 L. ed. 1267, L.R.A.1916C, 273, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1167.

Gary, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There are numerous exceptions, but it will not be necessary to consider them in detail, as the appellant's attorneys state that the main question raised by them may thus be formulated: "Is an 'order notify' shipment of liquor, interstate in character, intended by the party to be notified for unlawful use, subject to seizure under the laws of South Carolina, before actual or constructive delivery to the party for whom, upon certain conditions, it is designed?"

In the case of Smith v. Lafar, 67 S. C.

491, 46 S. E. 332, it is said: "Liquor purchased in another state and shipped to the purchaser in this state is not contraband, being protected as an article of interstate commerce until it is delivered to the purchaser. Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 42 L. ed. 1088, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664; State v. Holleyman, 55 S. C. 244, 45 L.R.A. 567, 31 S. E. 362, 33 S. E. 366. The fact that the purchaser to whom it is consigned is engaged in the illicit sale of liquor, and purchases it for the purpose of resale, can make no difference; the liquor is none the less an article of interstate commerce, and cannot be legally seized until it is delivered to the consignee."

The carrier, however, cannot claim the protection of the interstate commerce laws if it aids and abets the shipper or the consignee in evading the laws of the state against the sale of intoxicating liquors. The court uses this language in the case of Jaro v. Holstein, 73 S. C. 111, 52 S. E. 870: "The prime object of the Federal commerce power is to protect the freedom of legitimate trade among the states. This great power is acknowledged to be paramount as to all matters not reserved to and inherent in the police power of the states, but it ought never to be so extended as to become an aid and shield for unlawful traffic. The police law of the state, which is designed to uproot illicit traffic in intoxicating liquors by seizure within the state of liquors intended for such traffic, does not materially or injuriously affect legitimate interstate commerce. . . . Interstate commerce will not protect intoxicating liquors imported into this state for an unlawful purpose, if the importation is in such a way as to make the carrier an aider and abettor in the scheme to violate state laws."

This proposition is also sustained by the case of Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 206 U. S. 129, 51 L. ed. 987, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606, in which the court says: "We do not mean to intimate that an express company may not also be engaged in selling liquor in a state, contrary to its laws, or that the fact that the consignee did not order a shipment might not be evidence for a jury to consider upon the question whether the company was not, in addition to its express business, also selling liquor contrary to the statutes. It is enough to hold, as we do, that under the averments of this indictment such testimony is immaterial. It is, of course, a question of fact whether a carrier is confining itself strictly to its business as a carrier or participating in illegal sales. The consignor alone may be trying to evade the statute. He may forward the liquors in the expectation that the consignee will, when informed of their arrival, take and pay for them. So the fact that there is no previous order by the consignee may not be conclusive of the carrier's wrongdoing, but still it is entitled to consideration in determining that question."

In regard to the question of delivery, the court uses the following language in the case of Heyman v. Southern R. Co. 203 U. S. 270, 51 L. ed. 178, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 104, 7 Ann. Cas. 1130: "Of course, we are not called upon in this case, and do not decide, if goods of the character referred to in the Wilson Act, moving in interstate commerce, arrive at the point of destination, and after notice and full opportunity to receive them, are designedly left in the hands of the carrier for an unreasonable time, that such conduct on the part of the consignee might not justify, if affirmatively alleged and proven, the holding that goods so dealt with have come under the operation of the Wilson Act, because constructively delivered. We say we are not called upon to consider this question, for the reason that no facts are shown by the record justifying passing on such a proposition."

Subsequently, however, the question was decided in the case of Kirmeyer v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 568, 59 L. ed. 721, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 419, in which the court used this language: "The instant cause arose before passage of the act of Congress approved March 1, 1913 (37 Stat. at L. 699, chap. 90, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8739), known as the Webb-Kenyon Bill; consequently neither its construction or application is now involved; and what is said herein, of course, has reference to conditions existing prior to that enactment. Former opinions of this court preclude further discussion of these propositions: Beer is a recognized article of commerce. The right to send it from one state to another and the act of doing so are interstate commerce, the regulation whereof has been submitted to Congress; and a state law which denies such right or substantially interferes with or hampers the same is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States. Transportation is not complete until delivery to the consignee or the expiration of a reasonable time therefor, and prior thereto the provisions of the Act of Congress approved August 8, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 313, chap. 728, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8738)—the Wilson Act,—have no application."

It is within the province of the court, and, indeed, it is its duty, to render such an interpretation of the laws as will best subserve the ends of justice and the protection of the public, in so far as this may be done in accordance with well-established rules of construction. This may be accomplished at one time by a liberal and at another time by a strict interpretation. In construing the Wilson Act the Supreme Court of the United States ruled that liquors transported from one state into another did not lose their character as an interstate shipment, and become subject to the laws of the state, until arrival at their destination and delivery to the consignee. Many dealers in liquors took advantage of the opportunity to leave such shipments in the custody of the carrier for as long a time as they saw fit, whether reasonable or unreasonable, for the purpose of evading the laws of the state against the sale of intoxicating liquors. The Federal Supreme Court, recognizing that it was injurious to the morals, the health, and welfare of the public for liquors to remain in the hands of the carrier for a length of time limited only by the action of the dealer in supplying his customers, interpreted the word "delivery" to include not only an actual transfer of the liquors to the consignee, but likewise a constructive delivery, from the fact that they had remained in the custody of the carrier an unreasonable time after arrival at their destination. The proposition for which the appellant contends would defeat this construction. The liquors were consigned to the shipper, but it was never contemplated that they were to be delivered to him, but it was the expectation of the parties that the one who was to be notified would become the consignee. The consignor conferred upon him alone the power and authority of determining when the liquors should be delivered. He was the agent of the shipper to the extent of deciding when the liquors were to be removed, in so far as their delivery within a reasonable time was involved. The ruling that liquors were subject to the laws of the state, after they had remained a reasonable time in the hands of the carrier, was based upon public policy, which is paramount to the rights of private parties. McConnell v. Kitchens, 20 S. C. 430, 47 Am. Rep. 845; Lanahan v. Bailey, 53 S. C. 489, 42 L.R.A. 297, 69 Am. St. Rep. 884, 31 S. E. 332.

It would be against public policy for anyone, even the carrier, to enter into a contract that the liquors should not be subject to the laws of the state after arrival at their destination and the expiration of a reasonable time thereafter, as such a contract would be inconsistent with the ruling adopted by the Federal Supreme Court hereinbefore mentioned. The consignors are presumed to know the law, and that it is against public policy for liquors to remain in the custody of the carrier after a reasonable time for their removal. The important fact to be determined in all these cases is whether the liquors were allowed to remain an unreasonable length of time, and not the fact as to which of the parties, as between themselves, was responsible for the failure to remove them. The question under consideration is not to be determined by principles regulating the relations between the consignor and consignee, but by the laws fixing the time within which the liquors shall become subject to the laws of the state. The exceptions raising this question are overruled.

There are two other exceptions, but they cannot be sustained, for the reason that, if there was error, it was not prejudicial; as there is no reasonable ground for supposing that the result would have been different if the error had not been committed.

Affirmed.

Gage, J., and Moore, Sease, Rice, Bowman, Gary, Wilson, Peurifoy, and Smith, Circuit Judges, concur.

Watts, J., and Prince, Shipp, and DeVore, Circuit Judges, dissent.

Hydrick, J., concurring:

Plaintiff brought this action of claim and delivery December 12, 1914, to recover from defendant Gosnell the possession of certain intoxicating liquors which had been seized by him under and by virtue of warrants duly issued by a magistrate and directed to him. The liquors seized were shipped in 1914, and were consigned by the several consignors to themselves, "order notify" the respective individuals named as defendants, for whom intended, and in each case a draft for the purchase price was drawn on the person to be notified, and forwarded with the bill of lading attached through regular commercial channels for collection, and plaintiff duly notified the intended consignees of the arrival of the respective shipments, which were as follows: Two by Myers & Company from New York, New York, for defendant Belcher, each a case of whisky at $10, shipped July 9th, arrived July 16th, seized August 13th; five by Heyman & Baron from Augusta, Georgia, for defendant Goodlett, as follows: September 22d, five cases of whisky, $36; September 23th, fifteen casks of beer, $150; September 29th, five cases of whisky, $36; October 6th, five cases of whisky, $45; October 6th, five cases of whisky, $49.50. These arrived from September 25th to October 7th; and one by Corning & Company from Peoria, Illinois, for defendant Harrison November 9th, twenty-five cases of whisky, $153.25, which arrived November 20th. The Goodlett and Harrison shipments were seized November 24th. Each shipment seized was marked, "For personal use," on bill of lading and box or cask containing the liquor, and the freight on each was prepaid, except that for Harrison, which was $15.59, "Collect." The seizures were made while the liquor was in plaintiff's possession, having been stored in its warehouse awaiting delivery to the respective persons for whom it was intended.

The undisputed evidence shows that each of the individual defendants, Belcher, Goodlett, and Harrison, intended to use the liquor shipped to him in violation of the law of this state. Each had a license from the Federal government to sell intoxicating liquors, and by § 838 of the Criminal Code the possession of such license is made prima facie evidence that the holder thereof was engaged in selling such liquors in violation of the state's laws. There was no evidence to rebut the prima facie case so made against each of them, but much to corroborate it.

It will be observed that these liquors were all shipped from other states and transported into this state in 1914, after the passage of the Act of Congress of March 1, 1913, known as the Webb-Kenyon Act (Act March 1, 1913, chap. 90, 37 Stat. at L. 699, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8739), which provides, in substance: That the shipment or transportation of any intoxicating liquor from one state into another, which said liquor is intended by any person interested therein to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used in violation of any law of such state, is prohibited.

As it conclusively appears that these liquors were intended to be received, possessed, sold, and used in violation of the law of this state, their shipment and transportation into this state were prohibited by the act of Congress above mentioned, which devastated them of their interstate character. They were not, therefore, entitled to the protection which, before the passage of that act, had been afforded to such liquors, as lawful subjects of commerce between the states, under the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, giving Congress the power to regulate commerce. It follows that the transactions involved in this passage of the act of March 1, 1913, and also that the decisions of this court and those of the Supreme Court of the United States which interpreted and applied the law as it then stood to commerce in such liquors are not entirely applicable to the transactions now being considered; for, as they occurred after the Webb-Kenyon Act became effective, they are L.R.A.1917B.

subject to its provisions, and must be solved under it. Against this conclusion the decision of this court in Atkinson v. Southern Exp. Co. 94 S. C. 444, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 349, 78 S. E. 516, is invoked. There are some expressions in the opinion of the court in that case which favor the contention of appellant that state legislation after the passage of the Webb-Kenyon Act was necessary to make that act applicable to the shipment or transportation of liquor into the state subsequent to its passage. But there are several answers to that contention. The first is that the language quoted from the opinion in that case, which is relied upon by appellant, went further than was necessary to the decision of the question before the court. The passage quoted is as follows: "It was not the intention of the Webb Act to interfere with the policy of the state in regard to the importation of liquors, but merely to provide that the enforcement of a state statute would not be interfered with or hampered by the interstate commerce law. In other words, the act in this respect is passive, while it is incumbent on the states to enact legislation of an active nature if they are desirous of prohibiting the importation of liquors for personal use or other purposes. [Italics added.] But, even if Congress had undertaken to give validity to an unconstitutional state statute, it would have been beyond its powers. While the legislature cannot pass an act validating the provisions of the dispensary statute, which we have declared to be unconstitutional, so as to give it a retroactive effect, it nevertheless has the power to adopt a statute with similar provisions, having a prospective effect, prohibiting alcoholic liquors from being imported into this state."

The case then before the court involved nothing more than Atkinson's right to import liquor admittedly for his personal use. Hence the words "or other purposes" italicized in the excerpt above quoted were clearly obiter, for the right to import for an unlawful purpose was not involved. In using the words "or other purpose" the court evidently had in mind only a lawful purpose. Certainly the court did not intend to hold, nor is such intention reasonably inferable from the language used, that any person in the state had the right to import liquor for the purpose of selling it. If that were true, the numerous convictions for storing, transporting, and selling such liquors that have been sustained since that time were all wrong. Furthermore, it was not necessary in the Atkinson Case to decide anything relative to the necessity of subsequent state legislation to make the Webb-Kenyon Act effective. For, as the opinion clearly shows, under the law as it stood prior to the Webb-Kenyon Act, it was lawful for any person in the state to import liquor for his personal use, because the Supreme Court of the United States has held, in the cases cited and quoted from in the opinion, that the provision of our dispensary law prohibiting importation for personal use was void and ineffective in so far as it was attempted to make it applicable to interstate commerce, on the ground that it was unlawful discrimination against the products of other states which were recognized by the law of this state as being subjects of lawful commerce, as the state itself was then engaged in the sale of them through the dispensaries for profit.

When the Atkinson Case was decided, in 1914, the state was still engaged in selling such liquors for profit through dispensaries; hence the same unlawful discrimination still existed, and that was all that was necessary to give Atkinson, or any other person in the state, the right to import such liquors for a purpose recognized by the state law to be lawful. And as the state, by virtue of the decisions of the Federal Supreme Court, was compelled to recognize the importation of such liquors for personal use to be lawful so long as it was engaged in selling them for profit, the Webb-Kenyon Act did not apply, because by its terms it prohibits shipment or transportation of such liquor only when it is to be received, possessed, sold, or used in violation of a law of the state. Of course, that means a valid law. It was not the intention of Congress to enable the state to enforce a law making an unlawful discrimination in what was recognized to be lawful subjects of interstate commerce. But the Supreme Court did not hold that liquors could be lawfully sold in the state otherwise than in conformity with the state law; that is, through the dispensaries. While it did hold, construing the Act of Congress of August, 1890, known as the Wilson Act (Act Aug. 8, 1890, chap. 728, 26 Stat. at L. 313, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8738), that liquors imported even for unlawful purposes could not be interfered with by state authority until after delivery thereof to the consignee, it as distinctly held that after such delivery they were subject to the state law, and could not be lawfully sold by the consignee, even in the original packages. Therefore, when the Webb-Kenyon law became effective, it was unlawful to sell intoxicating liquor in this state, except through the dispensaries; and the shipment or transportation of such liquor into the state for sale by private individuals was prohibited by that act, because such sale was in violation of existing valid laws of the state. So that, even if full force and effect be given to the language of this court in the Atkinson Case upon this point, it would not control the decision of this case, because the facts are different. In Atkinson's Case the court was considering the necessity of re-enacting a state law that had been declared void as to interstate commerce, while in this case we are considering a state law that has been adjudged to be valid. So that our dictum that it was necessary to re-enact a state law that had been declared to be unconstitutional, after the constitutional objection was removed, was not only not necessary to the decision of Atkinson's Case, but it is not applicable to the facts of this case.

But there is another answer to appellant's contention that is conclusive in any event. For, even if it should be conceded that subsequent state legislation was necessary to give effect to the Webb-Kenyon law, we have had such legislation. At the session of 1914 the legislature passed several acts which distinctly recognized and directed the enforcement of the liquor laws of the state existing when the Webb-Kenyon law became effective. By the Act of February 14, 1914 (28 Stat. at L. 754), it is made the duty of the rural policeman of Greenville county, in which the city of Greenville, the destination of the liquors herein sued for, is situated, "to patrol and police the county, and to prevent or detect offenses against the criminal law, and prosecute all persons for violation of the criminal law of every kind, making arrests upon their own initiation, as well as upon complaint or information, and to seize without warrant, and hold all alcoholic liquors in possession of any person for unlawful use, and if no action to recover the same is begun within thirty days from such seizure, or if such action be begun and the judgment of the court be adverse to the plaintiff, then such liquors shall be destroyed publicly by the chief of rural police." (Italics added.)

The legislature evidently had in mind in the language above quoted all the criminal laws of the state, common and statutory, including the liquor laws, as set out in chap. 29 of the Criminal Code, in which special duties in respect to the enforcement thereof are imposed upon all constables and magistrates. The same observation is true of another act passed at the same session (28 Stat. at L. 546), amending the law relating to magistrates and their constables, which provides in the first section that the law as to magistrates and their constables, their powers, duties, etc., shall be as now provided by law. Numerous sections of the liquor law then on the books required magistrates and their constables to enforce it upon pain of summary suspension for neglect to do so. The defendant Gosnell was chief of the rural policemen for Greenville county. It was therefore made his duty by the express language of the statutes to seize the liquors in question.

It follows that by the terms of the Webb-Kenyon Act the liquors here in question, being intended for use in violation of the state's laws, were devoted of their interstate character, and their shipment and transportation into the state were prohibited. They became subject to the law of the state upon their arrival within its borders, and were therefore subject to seizure before delivery thereof to the consignees. Gosnell was not only authorized, but required, by the valid laws of the state, to seize them, and therefore his act was justified by law. It follows that neither the plaintiff nor any of the defendants can recover the possession thereof from him. The judgment below is, therefore, right; in fact, Gosnell's motion for a directed verdict should have been granted. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to consider the assignments of error in the rulings and charge, except, perhaps, those which make the point that the rights of the carrier and consignors, who are alleged to have been innocent of any intended violation of the state laws, should be protected.

The language of the Webb-Kenyon Act extends the prohibition thereof to the intention, with regard to such liquors, of any person interested therein. Therefore it is not necessary, to make the prohibition effective, that all persons interested therein shall have the unlawful intent; nor does it make any difference that there may be some person interested therein who has no such intent. The consignor may be innocent of it; but if the consignee has it, shipment and transportation are prohibited. Consignors and carriers of such liquors may protect themselves from loss by requiring payment of purchase price and freight charges before shipment and transportation thereof. Both are bound to know that they are dealing in and with an article which may be contraband, dependent upon the intention of the consignee, or any other person interested therein.

For these reasons, I think the judgment below should be affirmed.

Fraser, J., concurs.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 2.)

MABEL LE VETTE, Appt.,
v.

HARDMAN ESTATE et al., Respts.

(77 Wash. 320, 137 Pac. 454.)

Landlord and tenant — stipulations against liability.

1. Stipulations in a lease exonerating the lessor from liability for damage from leaky pipes, etc., cannot be enlarged to include any damage not expressly waived.

For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, III. c, 2, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — act of trespassers.

2. A stipulation in a lease that the lessee shall hold the lessor harmless from all damages occasioned by the bursting, leaking, or running of any washstand, etc., in, above, upon, or about the building in which the demised premises are situated, or by water coming in through the walls, will not include an injury occasioned by the tearing out of a washstand by trespassers upon a portion of the premises vacated by another tenant, causing a breakage of the water pipes.

For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, III. c, 2, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — For liability of landlord to tenant for damage by water, see annotation following this case, post, 225.
L.R.A.1917B.

Same — vacant upper story — landlord's duty.

3. Although a landlord is under no obligation to repair the demised premises, it is his duty so to control and preserve the upper stories of a building, which have been vacated by a tenant, as to keep them in a condition of reasonable safety in so far as such a condition affects the tenant of the lower story, notwithstanding the tenant of the upper story has vacated within the term covered by his lease, so that, as between him and the landlord, the legal right of possession still remains in him.

For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, III. c, 2, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Trial — evidence of landlord's negligence — question for jury.

4. Where it appears that the breaking of water pipes in the vacant upper story of a building, causing damage to the tenant on the floor below, was the act of evilly disposed persons breaking into the building through windows on an alley, that these windows had been broken on three previous occasions, that the landlord knew that the upper story and a dwelling in the rear of the premises were connected with the same service pipe, and permitted the water to be turned on for the purpose of supplying the dwelling without first investigating the condition of the pipes in the upper story, the question whether the landlord was negligent is for the jury.

For other cases, see Trial, II. c, 8, e, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Principal and agent — action against principal.

5. One who elects to proceed against a known principal as owner of leased property, for injury to his property through leaky water pipes upon premises in possession of the landlord, cannot also hold the agent.

For other cases, see Election of Remedies, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 8, 1914.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from an order of nonsuit and dismissal of the Superior Court for King County in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to goods caused by leakage of water from an upper story of a building a portion of which was leased by plaintiff. Affirmed in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McCafferty, Robinson, & Godfrey, for appellant:

The lease itself does not contain a clause or provision which waives any damages or which was ever intended to waive such damages, occasioned by the wrongful acts or the negligence of the owners of the premises from which the plaintiff leased.

1 Thomp. Neg. § 1143; Mitchell v. Plaut, 31 Ill. App. 148; Lathers v. Coates, 18 Misc. 231, 41 N. Y. Supp. 373.

The words of the contract are insufficient to relieve the Hardman estate or its agents from damages suffered by plaintiff by reason of its or their negligence or wrongful acts.

Railton v. Taylor, 20 R. I. 279, 39 L.R.A. 246, 38 Atl. 980; Jones v. Millsaps, 71 Miss. 10, 23 L.R.A. 155, 14 So. 440; Dollard v. Roberts, 130 N. Y. 260, 14 L.R.A. 239, 29 N. E. 104.

The law imposed no obligation on plaintiff to guard against or anticipate danger from some other part of the building not under her control, resulting from the negligent acts of the owner or its agent.

Jones v. Millsaps, 23 L.R.A. 155, note; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. § 829.

If there was no negligence, the defendant needed no contract to exempt him from liability; if he was negligent, the contract set out in the answer will be of no value.

Roeaner v. Hermann, 10 Biss. 486, 8 Fed. 782; Hill v. Northern P. R. Co. 33 Wash. 697, 74 Pac. 1054, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 729; Black v. Goodrich Transp. Co. 55 Wis. 310, 42 Am. Rep. 713, 13 N. W. 244; Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 331, 28 L. ed. 717, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151; Magnin v. Dinsmore, 56 N. Y. 168; Hull v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 41 Minn. 510, 5 L.R.A. 587, 16 Am. St. Rep. 722, 43 N. W. 391; Shriver v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. 24 Minn. 506; 31 Am. Rep. 353; Liverpool & L.R.A.1917B.

L. & G. Ins. Co. v. McNeill, 32 C. C. A. 173, 59 U. S. App. 499, 89 Fed. 131; The Manitou, 116 Fed. 60.

Messrs. Reed & Hardman, for respondent Hardman Estate:

Plaintiff was bound by the terms of the written lease, in which she agreed to hold harmless the lessor "from any damage done or occasioned by or from plumbing, gas, water, steam, or other pipes, or sewage, or the bursting, leaking, or running of any cistern, tank, washstand, water-closet, or waste pipe in, above, upon, or about said building or premises."

Fera v. Child, 115 Mass. 32; Taylor v. Bailey, 74 Ill. 178; Jones v. Millsaps, 71 Miss. 10, 23 L.R.A. 155, 14 So. 440.

The landlord cannot be charged with the result of acts committed by trespassers, even though in control of the hotel portion of the building.

Jones, Land. & T. ¶ 361; 24 Cyc. 1057; Talbott v. English, 156 Ind. 299, 59 N. E. 857; Branger v. Manciet, 30 Cal. 624; Goodrich v. Sanderson, 35 App. Div. 546, 55 N. Y. Supp. 881; Rosenfield v. Newman, 59 Minn. 156, 60 N. W. 1085; Bernhard v. Reeves, 6 Wash. 424, 33 Pac. 873.

Mr. Robert F. Booth for respondent Davis & Company.

Morris, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appeal from an order of nonsuit and dismissal, in an action brought by a tenant to recover damages for injuries to her goods caused by leakage of water from an upper story. The facts, so far as they are pertinent to our inquiry, are about these: The Hardman estate is the owner of a building on Yealer way in Seattle, the lower portion of which is divided into storerooms, and the upper is used as a hotel. Appellant, who was engaged in the millinery business, occupied one of the storerooms under a written lease. Some time in August, 1911, the lessee of the hotel portion, although his lease had not expired, vacated the upper stories, and they continued vacant until after the damage complained of. This lessee not having paid his water rent, the city turned off the water from the hotel portion of the building some time in September. This water service so turned off, it appears, did not affect the storeroom occupied by appellant. There was, however, a dwelling on the rear of the lot which was supplied with the same service pipe as the hotel and which had been vacated for some time. This vacant dwelling in the rear was rented on November 15th and orders given the city to turn on the water, which was done on November 16th. Soon after the water was turned on, it began to flow through the ceiling and into the room occupied by appellant, causing the damage complained of. An examination of the premises disclosed the fact that, in one of the rooms over the storeroom occupied by appellant, a washstand had been torn from the wall and the water pipes broken, making quite a hole through which the water was escaping. It was also discovered that a large rear window opening on the alley had been broken, making an opening large enough for a person to enter the building. It was also shown that, on three other occasions during the vacancy of the hotel portion, the windows on the alley had been broken, supposedly by boys getting into the building. The lease contained the following clause: "That the said lessee shall hold harmless the said lessor and the said lessor's agents from all damages of every kind or nature whatsoever that may occur by reason of any accident on said premises, and from any damage done or occasioned by or from plumbing, gas, water, steam, or other pipes, or sewerage; or the bursting, leaking, or running of any cistern, tank, washstand, or waste pipe in, above, upon, or about said building or premises; and from any damage occasioned by water, snow, or ice being upon or coming through the roof, skylight, wall, trapdoor, or otherwise, and from damages arising from acts of neglect of cotenants or other occupants of the same building, or of any owners or occupants of the adjacent or contiguous property." This stipulation, in the judgment of the lower court, exempted the respondents from any responsibility in the matter, and was the basis of the ruling complained of. Stipulations of this character cannot be enlarged upon to include any damage not expressly waived, and it is generally held that such a stipulation will not excuse an injury occasioned by the negligence of the landlord in the management and use of any part of the premises remaining under his control. Levin v. Habicht, 45 Misc. 381, 90 N. Y. Supp. 349; 1 Thomp. Neg. § 1143. It has also been held that such stipulations cover only ordinary wear and tear, or sudden action of the elements which could not be guarded against, or negligent acts of other tenants. Randolph v. Feist, 23 Misc. 650, 62 N. Y. Supp. 109; Worthington v. Parker, 11 Daly, 645.

It is clear from the facts that the damage to appellant was not caused by any breaking of water pipes on the premises leased to her, nor was it due to any negligence of cotenants nor of owners or occupants of adjacent property, but was due to the bursting or breaking of water pipes on premises not covered by the lease, but within the building, and falls within that L.R.A.1917B.

clause of the waiver exempting damage occasioned by bursting or leaking of washstands in, above, upon, or about the building, or by water coming through the walls. We think it also is clear that the cause of the damage was not an ordinary leak due to defective plumbing or usual wear, such as might be anticipated in any building, and thus be within the contemplation of the parties when entering into a stipulation of this character, but was an unusual and unexpected happening, due to other than natural and anticipated defects or lack of repair in any fixture forming part of the water system of the building. There was no evidence that the proximate cause of this damage was any act of the landlord, and, if appellant's cause must rest upon some positive act of the landlord, it must fail. Negligence, however, may be predicated upon the failure to act where the law imposes a duty, and as between the appellant and the landlord the occupancy and possession of the upper stories, with all the duties flowing from such a relation, were with the landlord. The landlord could not excuse itself from this duty to appellant because of the fact that, as between it and the lessee of the upper stories, the possession and occupancy was that of the latter. And this, we think, is so notwithstanding the tenant of the upper story had vacated within the term covered by the lease, and the legal right of possession still remained in him. This might be and doubtless was true as between the landlord and the upper tenant, and as between them the upper tenant was still bound under his lease. But, whatever may have been the legal fiction, the facts were the upper tenant had vacated the premises and thus occasioned an actual, if not a legal, vacancy. Possession and control must rest somewhere, and as between the landlord and appellant, who was no party to the lease held by the upper tenant and not bound by any contract between this tenant and the landlord, this possession and control was, we think, with the landlord. It therefore seems to us, conceding the rule to be that the landlord is under no legal obligation to repair the demised premises, that it was the duty of the landlord to so control and preserve the upper stories as to keep them in a condition of reasonable safety in so far as such a condition affected the tenant of the lower story; that, if it negligently suffered the upper story to be out of repair to such an extent as to damage the tenant of the lower story, it must respond in damages; and that the ordinary rule we have just referred to does not cover such condition as the facts here present. Priest v. Nichols, 116 Mass. 401.

So far as we can gather from the facts, the injury was caused by evilly disposed persons breaking into the building through the windows in the alley and outside of the premises covered by the lease to appellant. But the duty to guard the premises, so that such persons could not break into the building and injure the fixtures in the upper story, rested with the landlord, and not with the appellant; and as it also appeared that these rear windows had been broken on three previous occasions, thus affording entrance to the upper stories, the landlord is chargeable with knowledge of the fact, and having knowledge it was its duty to guard against any recurrence and the natural consequences of such a trespass by either protecting the premises from such a breaking or investigating as to any harm that might have been occasioned thereby. The landlord also knew that the hotel section and the house in the rear were connected with the same water service pipe, and, before the water was turned on, should have made an investigation of the upper floors to ascertain whether or not such an act could be done with safety to the premises occupied by appellant. Such failure to properly exercise superintendence over the upper story might, it seems to us, within the facts of this case, be held negligence. Rosenfield v. Newman, 59 Minn. 156, 60 N. W. 1085. At least we are not so clear it was not negligence as to say the question should not have been submitted to the jury. This disposes of the dismissal as to the Hardman estate.

John Davis & Company was only the rental agent of the owner. Appellant, having dealt with a known owner and having sought to enforce her cause of action against the principal, cannot hold the agent, and as to this respondent the dismissal is sustained.

The judgment is affirmed as to John Davis & Company and reversed as to the Hardman estate.

Crow, Ch. J., and Parker, Fullerton, and Mount, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Annotation—Liability of landlord to tenant for damage by water.

This note includes cases involving the lessor's liability for injury to the goods or property of the lessee by escaping water, except cases where the injury is due to defective construction or to bursting pipes, which are covered respectively in Levine v. McClenathan, post, 235, and Moroder v. Fox, post, 238.

General rule.

As to the duty of the landlord to keep the plumbing in leased premises in proper repair, see note in 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 907. And as to his duty with regard to sinks, water pipes, etc., see note in 14 L.R.A. 241. And as to water from the roof, etc., see notes in 23 L.R.A. 159, 160, and 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1142. And as to the duty and liability of a landlord who leases premises on which there has existed a contagious disease, see note in 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 977.

Where lessee is in possession.

It is the general rule that, where there is no duty resting upon the landlord to keep the roof of the leased premises in repair, he is not liable for injury to the goods of a tenant caused by leakage of water through the roof due to its being out of repair. Klausner v. Herter (1902) 36 Misc. 869, 74 N. Y. Supp. 924.

In Georgia the lessor is required to keep the demised premises in repair, and in that state it has been held that, where a store is leased for the purpose of selling goods therein, it will be presumed, in the absence of the tenant's knowledge to the contrary, to be in a condition suitable for that purpose; and if it is not, and, because of the leaky condition of the roof either existing at the time of the lease or subsequently developing, the lessee's goods are damaged, the lessor is liable therefor, where he fails to repair the roof within a reasonable time after receiving notice of its defective condition. Whittle v. Webster (1875) 55 Ga. 180.

The important matter, of course, is to determine whether or not in a given case the duty rests upon the lessor to keep in repair the demised premises. While, as pointed out, the rule is different in Georgia, in most states, in the absence of fraud, concealment, or a special agreement to repair, the rule of caveat emptor applies to leases of property the possession of which is surrendered to the lessee. He takes it in the condition in which it is at the time of the letting, and the lessor is under no duty of making any repairs during the term of the lease, and hence cannot be held responsible for any damage to the lessee's property from escaping water due to defects in the roof, water pipes, and other appliances going with the premises for the use and benefit of the tenant.

Chicago Teleph. Co. v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. (1907) 131 Ill. App.

248, holding that, where a tenant is in the exclusive control and possession of a wash room in which an overflow occurs in consequence of the negligence of the tenant or his employees, who had free access to the wash room, such tenant, and not the landlord, is responsible for injuries thereby resulting to the property of other tenants;

Fowler Cycle Works v. Fraser (1903) 110 Ill. App. 126, holding that, where the lessee covenants that he receives the premises in good repair and that he will keep them in that condition, he cannot hold the lessor liable for an injury to his goods due to water leaking through the roof;

Klausner v. Herter (N. Y.) supra; Margolius v. Muldberg (1904) 88 N. Y. Supp. 1048, holding that, in the absence of an agreement to repair, the lessor is not liable for damage to the lessee's goods due to a leaky roof;

Spicer v. Machette (1915) 59 Colo. 214, 147 Pac. 657, holding that, in the absence of a special agreement of the lessor to repair, the tenant cannot recover for injury to his goods by rain coming through a defective skylight in the roof, where the defect developed some time after the tenant took possession of the leased premises.

So, where the roof of a building leased to different tenants was injured by fire, the lessor is not liable, in the absence of a covenant to repair, for injuries to goods of one of the tenants due to the leaking of the roof, owing to the lessor's delay in repairing it. Doupe v. Genin (1871) 45 N. Y. 119, 6 Am. Rep. 47.

— where damage is due to some act of lessor.

Where the lessor of a building deposited wet hair on the floor of the upper story and water therefrom leaked down upon the machinery of a tenant of the lower floor, damaging the machinery, he is liable for the damage thus resulting. Hysore v. Quigley (1872) 9 Houst. (Del.) 348, 32 Atl. 960.

— agreement of lessor to pay loss.

Even assuming that the owner of a building leased to different tenants is not liable to one of them for injury to his goods caused by the frequent leaking of water from other portions of the building, due to the negligence of other tenants, yet an agreement by the lessor to make good the damage thus caused is valid where the consideration was an agreement by the tenant not to vacate the premises, as he was threatening to do. Dunn v. Robins (1892) 65 Hun, 625, 48 N. Y. S. R. 45, 20 N. Y. Supp. 341. And to the same effect, see Beakes v. Holzman (1905) 47 Misc. 384, 94 N. Y. Supp. 33.

— agreement to repair.

If the lessor covenants to keep in repair the demised premises, it is, of course, his duty to do so, and if he is negligent in this regard either in failing to repair or, as hereafter pointed out, in making the repairs he undertakes to make in compliance with his agreement in this respect, and as the proximate result of his negligence the tenant's property is damaged by escaping water, the lessor is liable for the loss resulting.

Rife v. Reynolds (1909) 137 Mo. App. 290, 117 S. W. 652, holding that, where the landlord contracts to keep the roof of the leased premises in repair, he is liable for damage to the tenant's goods by rain leaking through owing to his failure to make the repairs;

Phillips v. Ehrmann (1894) 8 Misc. 39, 28 N. Y. Supp. 519, holding that, where the lease contains a covenant on the part of the lessor to repair, he is liable for injury to the goods of the lessee due to a leaky roof which he promised to, but did not, repair;

Levy v. Roosevelt (1909) 131 App. Div. 8, 115 N. Y. Supp. 475, holding that the lessor is liable for damage to the tenant's goods due to the defective condition of the roof, which he had expressly agreed, but neglected, to repair.

Where the lessor retains possession.

The rule heretofore referred to, relieving the lessor of the duty of keeping in repair the demised premises, the possession of which he surrenders to the tenant, is generally limited and held applicable only where the lessee has the possession of the premises. Where the lessor expressly or impliedly reserves the possession and control of the leased premises or portions thereof, and through a defect in the portion reserved, due to his negligence, water escapes therefrom to the leased portion and injures the goods or property of the lessee, the lessor is answerable for the loss thus resulting.

Pike v. Brittan (1886) 71 Cal. 159, 60 Am. Rep. 527, 11 Pac. 890, holding that, where an overflow which caused the damage complained of by the tenant of a lower floor was due to the negligence of the janitor of the building employed by the lessor, in leaving open the basin cock and failing to remove the plug in the bottom of the basin, the latter is liable for the injury resulting therefrom;

Florence v. Northcutt, (1916) — Ga. —, 88 S. E. 933, holding that the lessor is liable to the lessee of a lower floor for an injury to the latter's goods by the leaking of water from the upper floor due to a defective water-closet in a room occupied by the lessor's agent;

Toole v. Beckett (1878) 67 Mo. 544, 24 Am. Rep. 54, holding that, where the lessor of a block, who retains control of the roof for the benefit of himself and all his tenants, fails to exercise ordinary care and prudence in its oversight, and permits it to get out of repair so that it leaks and injures the goods of one of the tenants, he is liable for the damage thus resulting;

Hidden v. Naylor (1916) 223 Mass. 290, 111 N. E. 848, holding that, where the owner retained control of the roof of premises a portion of which was leased, he was liable for an injury to the goods of one of the lessees caused by the escape of water from the roof, if due to his negligence in permitting to get out of repair or obstructed the pipe intended to carry the water from the roof to the cellar;

Priest v. Nichols (1874) 116 Mass. 401, holding that, where the tenant's goods are injured through the escape of water from a pipe carrying waste water and material from a manufactory operated by the lessor in the upper portion of the leased premises, he is liable for the damage thus resulting;

Sheridan v. Forsee (1904) 106 Mo. App. 495, 81 S. W. 494, holding that, where the lessor of a building leased to different tenants was in control of the water-closets maintained on an upper floor for their common use, he is liable for an injury to the goods of a tenant of the lower floor due to the overflow of the bowls and closets, caused by a waste pipe being out of condition, which the lessor failed to repair after he was notified of the need thereof;

Lorefice v. Sardella (1915) 88 Misc. 522, 150 N. Y. Supp. 980, holding that, in order to render the landlord liable for injury to the goods of a tenant of the first floor of a building, caused by the leakage of water from a defective pipe in an upper floor which was vacant, it must be shown that he was the owner of the entire building or in possession of that portion of it in which the defective pipes were located;

Levin v. Habicht (1904) 45 Misc. 381, L.R.A.1917B.

90 N. Y. Supp. 349, holding that, where the owner of premises permitted waste pipes to become leaky and out of repair and to overflow, and these pipes are located in rooms in his possession, he is liable for damage to goods of the lessee of the lower floor due to water leaking from these pipes through the ceiling;

Rubenstein v. Hudson (1904) 86 N. Y. Supp. 750, holding that, where the lessor negligently failed to repair a water pipe under his control, which ran through the ceiling of a portion of the premises occupied by a tenant, he is liable for an injury to the goods of the latter cause by water escaping from the pipe;

Levine v. Baldwin (1903) 87 App. Div. 150, 84 N. Y. Supp. 92, holding that, where water on the roof of a building leased to different tenants was carried off by means of a pipe running to the cellar, and this pipe was under the control of the lessor, he is liable for an injury to the goods of a tenant due to the escape of water therefrom, owing to the defective condition of the pipe, which he had negligently failed to repair;

Harris v. Boardman (1902) 68 App. Div. 436, 73 N. Y. Supp. 963, 11 Am. Neg. Rep. 311, holding that, where a water-closet and its appurtenances were under the control of the lessor, he is responsible to the lessee of the lower floor for injury to the goods of the latter caused by a leakage therefrom which he negligently failed to prevent by making necessary repairs;

Levy v. Korn (1899) 30 Misc. 199, 61 N. Y. Supp. 1109, holding that, where the lessor was in possession and control of a portion of premises leased to different tenants, and negligently permitted a water-closet therein to get out of order, and a sink to become obstructed, causing water to overflow and leak down on the goods of a tenant of the lower floor, he is liable for the damage thus resulting. And to the same effect, see Stapenhorst v. American Mfg. Co. (1873) 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 355;

Woodward v. Jones (1895) 15 Misc. 1, 36 N. Y. Supp. 775, holding that, where the landlord reserves the roof to demised premises, he is liable for damage to the goods of the lessee due to its leaky condition, owing to his failure to keep it in repair;

Kneeland v. Beare (1902) 11 N. D. 233, 91 N. W. 56, 12 Am. Neg. Rep. 539, holding that, where the lessor negligently permitted to become obstructed a conductor pipe which carried away the water falling on the roof, which was under his control, he is liable for injury to the goods of a tenant caused by water backing up during a storm and falling through a scuttle in the roof;

Levinson v. Myers (1904) 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 481, holding that, where an upper floor was under the exclusive control of the lessor, he is liable for injury to the goods of a tenant of the lower floor caused by water escaping from a defective boiler on the upper floor where the defect was due to the negligence of the defendant;

Hargroves v. Hartopp [1905] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 472, 92 L. T. N. S. 414, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 233, 53 Week. Rep. 262, 21 Times L. R. 226, holding that, where the owner of a building leased to different tenants, was in possession and control of the roof, and he failed and neglected to clean the rain water or gutter pipes within a reasonable time after receiving notice that they were filled up, and a tenant's goods were injured by the escape of water from the roof due to the stoppage of these pipes, the landlord is liable for the injury.

Where a portion of the premises where bath tubs were situated was in the joint possession of the lessor and lessee, the former is liable to the lessee of a lower floor for injury to his goods caused by the tubs overflowing, although due to the negligence of the lessee of that portion of the premises where the tubs were located. Freidenburg v. Jones (1879) 63 Ga. 612, s. c. subsequent appeal (1881) 66 Ga. 505, 42 Am. Rep. 86.

The lessor of an apartment house is liable to the lessee of an apartment for damage to the latter's goods due to steam escaping from radiators and pipes connected with the heating apparatus installed in the building, where the lessor had contracted to heat the apartments, and had reserved the right to enter the premises at any hour to make any necessary repairs to the heating apparatus. Iowa Apartment House Co. v. Herschel (1911) 36 App. D. C. 457, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 206. And where the rule of an apartment house provided that the lessor should examine the steam radiators in each apartment before starting the steam plant in the fall, and he started the plant without examining one of the apartments, and as a result the furniture therein was damaged by escaping steam, he is responsible therefor to the tenant, and the latter need not show at what point the leak occurred or what the defect was. Strong v. Woodrow Investing Co. (1916) 158 N. Y. Supp. 513. And the lessor of an apartment is liable to the lessee for damage to furniture due to steam escaping from a radiator which the employee of the former had neglected to connect. Le Pichard v. George N. Thurber Co. (1913) 84 N. J. L. 193, 86 Atl. 953, 4 N. C. C. A. 606.

Where the control of a heating apparatus in a steam-heated apartment was in the landlord, and he had disconnected the radiator until repaired, and had notified the tenant not to open the valve, which prevented the steam from going into the disconnected pipe, but some third person, apparently someone calling upon the tenant, turned the valve after the radiator had been disconnected for some time, the landlord, having negligently delayed to repair and connect the radiator, is liable for the injury resulting from the escaping steam; but he is not liable if the valve was turned on by the tenant. Isaacs v. New Haven & N. Y. Realty Corp. (1913) 141 N. Y. Supp. 338.

Where the lessor makes repairs.

The general rule is that where it is the duty of the lessor to keep the leased premises in repair, and he undertakes to do so, and as a result of his or his employee's negligence in making the repairs the tenant's goods or property is injured by water escaping, the lessor is liable for the damage resulting.

Mumby v. Bowden (1899) 25 Fla. 454, 6 So. 453, holding that, where the lessor occupies the upper story of a building, the lower story of which is leased, and he contracts for the repair of the roof and the person employed negligently leaves an aperture therein through which water flows during a rainstorm, injuring the goods of the lessee of the lower floor, the lessor is liable for the damage thus caused;

Dempsey v. Hertzfield (1860) 30 Ga. 866, holding that the lessor is liable for injury to the goods of the lessee due to a leaky roof, if the lessor failed properly to repair it, although he attempted to make the repairs;

Glickauf v. Maurer (1874) 75 Ill. 289, 20 Am. Rep. 238, holding that, where a mechanic was employed by the lessor to put a skylight in the roof of a building, of which the latter occupied the upper and a tenant the lower floor, the lessor is liable for damage to the goods of the lessee caused by rain coming through the roof due to the negligence of the mechanic in leaving it exposed while putting in the skylight;

Bernauer v. Hartman Steel Co. (1889) 33 Ill. App. 491, holding that the lessor is liable for injury to the goods of a lessee due to the overflow of a water tank maintained on the leased premises, where the overflow was caused by the negligence of a plumber employed by the lessor to make repairs thereto;

Sulzbacher v. Dickie (1876) 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 500, 6 Daly, 469, holding that, where the landlord contracted with some third person to repair the roof on demised premises, he is liable for damage to the goods of the tenant due to the failure of the contractor to protect the unroofed portion of the house from rains during the time he was putting on a new roof;

Ara v. Rutland (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 172 S. W. 993, holding that the lessor is liable for injury to the goods of a tenant of a portion of the building, where in reroofing the building he carelessly left unprotected the unroofed portions, and a heavy rain fell causing the damage complained of.

Where the possession and control of the roof of a building are in the landlord, he is liable for injury to the goods of a tenant of a lower floor due to water escaping from an opening in the pipe which carried off the water from the roof, the opening being caused by the failure of employees of the lessor properly to shift the pipe in making repairs and changes. Worthington v. Parker (1885) 11 Daly (N. Y.) 545. And it has been held that, where a fire made it necessary to repair the roof and the lessor agreed with the tenant to repair the same, but did not sufficiently protect the building against rain while he was having such repairs made, he is liable for injury to the latter's goods due to a heavy rain. Ebersson v. Continental Invest. Co. (1908) 130 Mo. App. 296, 109 S. W. 62, s. c. prior appeal (1906) 118 Mo. App. 67, 93 S. W. 297. And see Tuller v. Davis (1855) 4 Duer (N. Y.) 187, holding that, where the lessor agreed to finish in a designated manner the demised premises then in the course of construction, but did not finish the roof in the manner agreed upon, and as a result of its defective construction it leaked, damaging the lessee's goods, the lessor is liable for the loss thus resulting.

Although under no obligation to repair the leased premises, nevertheless where the landlord gratuitously undertakes to repair the roof, he is liable for damage to the tenant's goods caused by the leaking of the roof due to the negligence of an independent contractor employed to make the repairs. Dalkowitz Bros. v. Schreiner (1908) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 110 S. W. 564. And see Tarnogurski v. Rzepski (1916) 252 Pa. 507, 97 Atl. 697, holding that, although the lessor is not bound to make repairs to the demised premises, nevertheless where he gratuitously undertakes and agrees to do so, he is liable for an injury to the goods of the lessee due to water escaping from pipes as a result of his negligence and carelessness in making the repairs.

Where the lessor is under no legal obligation to repair the roof to the demised premises, it is competent for him and the lessee to agree that the lessor employ an independent contractor to make such repairs for their mutual benefit and accommodation. In such case the lessor is not liable for damage to the lessee's goods due to the negligence of the contractor in repairing the roof. Lasker Real-Estate Asso. v. Hatcher (1894) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 28 S. W. 404.

— where lessor employed a competent workman.

As heretofore stated, the general rule is that a lessor who attempts to repair the leased premises is liable for defects therein due to his negligence or the negligence of his employee, where, by reason of such defects, water injures the goods of the lessee. In some cases, however, the character of repairs may be such that only a skilled artisan would be able to know whether or not the repairs had been properly made. In such case this rule apparently does not obtain. Thus, it has been held that, where the lessor is required to make repairs of a character requiring skilled labor, and because of the mechanical character of the work he has no way of knowing that it has not been properly performed, he is not liable for the negligence of the employee, if he exercised due care in securing a person skilled in the kind of work to be done. For example, a tenant of a lower floor who consented to water being kept in a cistern located on an upper floor, and used water therefrom, cannot hold the landlord liable for damage to his goods caused by an overflow from the cistern due to the negligence of a plumber employed by the landlord to remedy a leakage in the cistern, where the plumber employed was skilled in his trade. Blake v. Woolf [1898] 2 Q. B. (Eng.) 426, 62 J. P. 659, 67 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 813, 79 L. T. N. S. 188, 47 Week. Rep. 8. To the same effect is Meany v. Abbott (1867) 6 Phila. (Pa.) 256, holding that, where the lessor employs competent workmen to construct a water-closet in an upper story of a house, he is not liable for damage to goods of the tenant of a lower floor due to the improper construction of the water tank.

Necessity of showing that lessor was negligent.

Even where it is the duty of the lessor to keep the demised premises in repair, his mere failure to do so, or the mere fact that water escapes and injures a tenant's goods or property, due to some defect in the roof, water pipes, or other appliances maintained for the use and benefit of the lessee, does not render the lessor liable for the damage resulting. To hold him responsible it must appear that the defect complained of was due to his negligence either in repairing or failing to repair.

Squire, V. & Co. v. Ryerson (1909) 150 Ill. App. 255, holding that the lessor of a building who installed a sprinkler system in it to protect the tenants from fire is not liable to a tenant for injury to his goods due to the opening of one of the sprinkler heads, which permitted water to escape, where in inspecting the system the lessor was not guilty of negligence and it was not claimed that the system was not properly constructed and installed.

Mitchell v. Plaut (1889) 31 Ill. App. 148, holding that, where the lessee's goods were injured by water leaking through a roof, the lessor is not liable therefor, unless this leakage was due to his negligence in obstructing water pipes when repairing the roof;

Mendel v. Fink (1881) 8 Ill. App. 378, holding that, in the absence of an express agreement, the lessor is not liable to the lessee of a lower floor for injury to his goods by water leaking from a water-closet located on the next floor above, unless the negligence of the lessor is shown either in the construction of the closet or in its use;

S. W. Noggle Wholesale & Mfg. Co. v. Sellers & M. Roofing Co. (1916) — Mo. App. —, 183 S. W. 659, holding that, where the lessee seeks to hold the owner of the building for damage to his goods by rain leaking through the roof, and alleges that the defendant is negligent with reference to certain matters relating to the roof, recovery cannot be had without proving such negligence; L.R.A. 1917B.

Tennant v. Hall (1888) 27 N. B. 499, holding that, where rain water was conducted from the roof to the cellar for the benefit of all the tenants of the building, the landlord is not liable for injury to the goods of one of the tenants due to the leaking of water through the roof, owing to the water pipes being of insufficient size to carry off the water during an unusually heavy rain storm, it, however, being found as a fact that the landlord was not guilty of negligence either in the plan of carrying off the water or in the construction of the pipe.

The mere fact of an overflow from water pipes and the injury to the goods of a tenant therefrom does not establish a cause of action against the lessor; but to be entitled to hold the latter responsible, the lessee must also show that the overflow was due to some negligence on the lessor's part. Becker v. Bullowa (1901) 36 Misc. 524, 73 N. Y. Supp. 944; Tentzer v. Erlanger (1909) 117 N. Y. Supp. 158.

Unless the lessor of a building was actually at fault in the construction of the drain connecting with the sewer, or in failing to repair it after notice that it was out of condition and permitted water from the sewer to backup and overflow the leased premises, he is not liable to a tenant for injury to goods of the latter caused by such overflow. Scott v. Simons (1874) 54 N. H. 426. And the owner of a building leased to different tenants is not liable for injury to the goods of one of the tenants caused by the overflow of water from a lavatory located on the top floor of the building and maintained for the use in common of the different tenants, where the overflow was not due to any negligence of the landlord, but to the malicious act of some third person in turning on the tap of the lavatory and stopping the drain pipes. Rickards v. Lothian [1913] A. C. (Eng.) 263, 82 L. J. P. C. N. S. 42, 108 L. T. N. S. 225, 57 Sol. Jo. 281, 29 Times L. R. 281, 50 Scot. L. R. 666, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 804. Nor is he liable for damage from the leakage of water from a water-closet, merely on the ground that he did not install the best known kind of closet when he installed the closet in question. Bernhard v. Reeves (1893) 6 Wash. 424, 33 Pac. 873. Neither is the lessor liable for an injury to the goods of the occupant of the lower floor of a building caused by water coming through the ceiling, where it does not appear that the water escaped through the pipes running through the ceiling, and an investigation disclosed no leaks in such pipes, and it was possible for the water to come from a tub or lavatory on the next floor, although when examined the next day these floors were dry. Narbonne v. Storer (1913) 121 Minn. 505, 141 N. W. 835. And although the landlord retained control of the roof of the building, he is not liable for damage to the goods of the tenant of a lower floor caused by the escape of water from the roof, due to the act of rats making a hole in a box which received the water from the gutters, where the landlord exercised reasonable care in examining from time to time the gutters in this box, and found them in good condition only a few days before the time in question. Carstairs v. Taylor (1871) L. R. 6 Exch. (Eng.) 217, 40 L. J. Exch. N. S. 129, 19 Week. Rep. 723. And see O'Connor v. Gouraud (1886) 14 Daly, 64, 3 N. Y. S. R. 555, holding that, where the landlord used due care in making repairs to the roof, and made repairs whenever requested by the tenant, he cannot be held to have breached his covenant to repair, although it is claimed that his attention was called to the particular defect complained of; hence he is not liable for injuries to goods of the tenant due to the roof leaking during a severe rain some time after he had made repairs.

But where the landlord knew that water had been turned off from pipes in the demised premises until repairs could be made thereto, and before he made the repairs he turned on the water, he is liable to a tenant for injury resulting from water escaping from the defective pipes, if under the circumstances his conduct was not prudent and he was not justified in assuming that repairs had been made. Tarnogurski v. Rzepaki (1916) 252 Pa. 507, 97 Atl. 697. So, where, after the upper floor of a building was vacated by the tenant, it was broken into at different times and a washstand torn out, the water pipes connected therewith broken, and an opening left therein, it is a question for the jury whether or not the lessor was negligent in having the water turned on in these pipes without making an investigation of the upper floor, and hence liable for injury to the goods of the tenant of a lower floor due to the escaping water. LE VETTE v. HARDMAN ESTATE, ante, 222.

Where the only ground for holding the infant owner of a building liable for damage to goods of a tenant is the negligence of the janitor of the building, he cannot be held liable therefor, since he is without power to authorize agents or servants to act for him. Robbins v. Mount (1867) 4 Robt. (N. Y.) 553, 33 How. Pr. 24.

Necessity of notice.

In order to hold the landlord liable for damages by water escaping, due to his failure to make repairs which it was his duty to make, he must have received notice to repair, or the defect must have existed for a sufficient time to charge him with constructive notice.

Brooks v. Schlernitzauer (1908) 113 N. Y. Supp. 484; Gutman v. Folsom (1908) 61 Misc. 304, 113 N. Y. Supp. 691, holding that notice on Friday is not sufficient to make the landlord liable for injury from a storm on the following Sunday;

Pratt, H. & Co. v. Tailor (1909) 135 App. Div. 1, 119 N. Y. Supp. 803, holding that, where the lessor agreed to keep in repair the roof on the demised premises, in order to hold him liable for damage to goods of the lessee by the roof leaking, it requires notice from the lessee of the need therefor, unless the lessor had actual notice of the defective condition;

Goldberg v. Besdine (1902) 76 App. Div. 451, 78 N. Y. Supp. 776, holding that, where the leaky condition of the roof developed so recently as to preclude the landlord from being charged with notice of the defective condition, and he was without actual knowledge thereof, he is not liable for an injury resulting from the leakage;

Cohen v. Cotheal (1913) 156 App. Div. 784, 142 N. Y. Supp. 99, affirmed in (1915) 215 N. Y. 659, 109 N. E. 1070, holding that, where there is no evidence of actual notice to the landlord of a defect in the cylinder of a pump which cracked permitting the water to escape, constructive notice cannot be predicated without evidence of the existence of a defect discoverable by reasonable inspection for such a length of time that it would have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable care.

But where the lessor occupied rooms directly over the rooms leased, he is presumed to have better knowledge of the condition of the roof than the lessee; hence he is not entitled to notice from the latter to repair. Guthman v. Castleberry (1873) 49 Ga. 272. And where the lessee's goods were injured by water escaping through the roof during a storm, and the defect in the roof was due to the negligence of the lessor in permitting its use for a purpose that would necessarily make holes in it, the latter is not entitled to notice to repair in order to be held responsible for the injury, and he cannot avoid liability under a provision in the lease relieving him from liability for any damage caused by the leakage of the roof, unless he neglects to make necessary repairs within a reasonable time after receiving written notice of such leakage. Pratt, H. & Co. v. Tailer (1906) 186 N. Y. 417, 79 N. E. 328, affirming (1906) 114 App. Div. 574, 100 N. Y. Supp. 16.

Where damage is due to negligence of another tenant or third person.

Where the injury complained of was due to the negligence of some other tenant, to whom the lessor had surrendered possession of that portion of the leased premises from which came the water that caused the injury, the lessor is not responsible for the loss resulting, if he has been free from negligence in the matter.

Lebensburger v. Scofield (1907) 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1025, 86 C. C. A. 105, 155 Fed. 85, holding that the owner of a block leased to different tenants is not responsible to a tenant of the lower floor for injury to his stock of goods caused by the overflow of a lavatory on the upper floor, which was under the control of another tenant, where it was in good repair when the premises were leased and the tenant was under obligation to keep the premises in repair;

Haizlip v. Rosenberg (1897) 63 Ark. 430, 39 S. W. 60, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 399, holding that, in the absence of a statute or a covenant to repair, a person leasing the upper story of a building equipped with a water-closet and water fixtures properly constructed and in good condition when leased, and giving the tenant possession and control of the portion of the premises where such fixtures are located, is not liable to the tenant of a lower floor for injury to his goods due to the overflow of the pipes connecting with the closet;

Friedenburg v. Jones (1879) 63 Ga. 612, holding that, where bath fixtures are properly constructed and the lessee of a portion of the premises where they are situated is in control and possession of them, the lessor is not liable to the lessee of a lower floor for injury to his goods due to the overflow of the tubs; him from the negligence of another tenant in the use of such fixtures as stoves, furnaces, water-closets, and other water fixtures; hence, although damage results to the tenant of the lower floor by the overflow of water from a water-closet on an upper floor, due to the negligent act of a tenant of that floor in leaving the water running in the sink and permitting the water-closet to become clogged, the landlord is not liable therefor;

Allen v. Smith (1884) 76 Me. 335, holding that a landlord is not responsible to one tenant for injuries resulting to L.R.A.1917B.

Kenny v. Barns (1887) 67 Mich. 336, 34 N. W. 587, holding that the lessor is not liable for an injury to the lessee's goods caused by the overflow of a water-closet under the general control of a tenant of an upper floor, to which the complaining tenant also had a key, the lessor, however, having no key, and the overflow being due to obstructions deposited in the closet by unknown persons, and not to any defect in its construction;

Robbins v. Mount (1867) 4 Robt. (N. Y.) 553, 33 How. Pr. 24, holding that, where the injury to the tenant's goods was due to the overflow of a water-closet in an upper apartment in the possession and control of another tenant, and the overflow was caused by tobacco leaves obstructing the waste pipe and the failure of someone using the flusher to turn off the stopcock, the lessor is not liable for the injury;

Pembroke Stationery Co. v. Rogers (1912) 41 Utah, 411, 125 Pac. 866, holding that the owner of premises leased to different persons is liable for an injury to the goods of an occupant of a lower floor caused by the overflow of a bath tub in rooms on the second floor, only on proof that a tub or the water system connected therewith was improperly constructed, or that at the time the premises were leased they were in such a defective condition as to render their ordinary use injurious to the possession and use of the premises by the complaining tenant; and the lessor is not liable if the injury was due to the negligence of the tenant of the upper floor in failing to maintain the tub in proper repair, or if such tenant was negligent in the use of the tub, or if the defects originated during the occupancy of such tenants.

Even where the lessor reserved possession, for the use and benefit of different tenants, of that portion of the leased premises from which came the water that caused the injury complained of, it has been held that he is not liable for an injury due to the negligence of another tenant or a third person, and not to any negligence of the lessor.

Rosenfield v. Newman (1894) 59 Minn. 156, 60 N. W. 1085, holding that, where a water-closet and sink were reserved and maintained on an upper floor for the common use of the tenants of that floor, who each had a key thereto, the lessor is not liable for an injury to the goods of a tenant of a lower floor due to the overflow of the sink caused by some person negligently or wilfully obstructing the drainpipe from the sink and leaving open the faucet opening into it.

It has, however, been held that the owner of a three-story building is liable for injury to the goods of a tenant of the lower floor caused by the leaking of water from the roof, due to the accumulation of trash thrown on the roof by a tenant of the upper floor. Center v. Davis (1869) 39 Ga. 210. Compare with White v. Montgomery (1877) 58 Ga. 204, holding that the owner is not liable to the tenant of a lower floor for injury to his goods due to the overflow of a water-closet in that portion of the premises leased to another tenant, where the overflow was due to the tenant or his guests depositing obstructions in it. The court distinguished Marshall v. Cohen (1871) 44 Ga. 489, 9 Am. Rep. 170, on the ground that the lessor had notice of the defective condition of the closet and neglected to repair it, while in the case under consideration the lessor had no notice of its bad condition, and the proof showed that he examined the water-closet and kept it in repair. In the Marshall Case it was held that the lessor was liable to the lessee of a lower floor of a building for injury to the latter's goods caused by the overflow of a water-closet located on the third story and maintained for the benefit of all the tenants, although the overflow was not due to any defect in the construction or condition of the closet, but to the act of tenants or outsiders in throwing obstructions into it.

Effect of limitation of liability provision.

Stipulations exempting the lessor from liability for injuries of every kind or nature whatsoever that may occur by reason of any accident, or for any damage done or occasioned by or from plumbing, gas, water, steam, or other pipes, or the bursting, leaking, running of any cistern, tank, washstand, or waste pipe, etc., do not relieve the lessor of liability for damage from the escape of water from a pipe, due to his negligence. LE VETTE v. HARDMAN ESTATE, ante, 222. So, where the leakage of pipes which caused the injury complained of was due to the negligent manner in which they had been put together upon readjusting them after the execution of the lease, and not to any act of the elements, the lessor cannot escape liability under a provision in the lease exempting him from liability for damage caused by the elements or by leakages in the roof or piping. Worthington v. Parker (1885) 11 Daly (N. Y.) 545. And where the lessor negligently repaired a manhole cover to a water tank located in the upper part of the building, and the water overflowed and injured the goods of a tenant, he is liable for the damage resulting, notwithstanding a provision in the lease exempting the lessor from liability for any damage or injury caused by leakage of gas, steam, or water pipes, or leakage or overflow of any other kind whatsoever. Eugene C. Lewis Co. v. Metropolitan Realty Co. (1906) 112 App. Div. 385, 98 N. Y. Supp. 391, affirmed in (1907) 189 N. Y. 534, 82 N. E. 1126. Compare with Drescher Rothberg Co. v. Landeker (1913) 140 N. Y. Supp. 1025, holding that under a provision in a lease exempting the lessor from liability for damage caused by bursting pipes, etc., or leakage about the building, he is liable for damage to goods of a tenant by the leaking of rain through the roof, due to its defective condition, if he retained control of the roof and had knowledge of such condition and neglected to make the necessary repairs; but he is not liable for failure merely to discover the defective condition during a period when he could not reasonably be expected to discover the same.

But where the lease contains a provision exempting the landlord from the duty of making repairs, he is not liable for damage to the lessee's goods due to a leaky roof. Erikson v. Propp (1908) 106 Minn. 238, 119 N. W. 390. And in an action to recover the rental of premises, the tenant cannot counterclaim for damage to his goods by water leaking from pipes, where the lease contains a provision that the landlord shall not be liable for any damage or injury to the tenant due to the breakage, leakage, or obstruction of water pipes in or about the building. Sonn v. Weissmann (1899) 29 Misc. 622, 61 N. Y. Supp. 78, affirming (1899) 27 Misc. 845, 58 N. Y. Supp. 1149.

And see Chapman & S. Co. v. Crown Novelty Co. (1912) 175 Ill. App. 397, holding that under a lease exempting the lessor from liability for any damage done or occasioned by leakage or the running of any cistern, tank, washstand, or drainpipe, the lessee cannot claim damage to his goods due to the alleged bursting, leaking, or running of any tank, washstand, or water pipe on or about the premises.

Contributory negligence of lessee.

Where a tenant with knowledge that the roof leaked permitted his goods to remain in the building, he took upon himself the risk of injury from such leakage, and cannot hold the lessor responsible for the damage suffered therefrom. Klausner v. Herter (1902) 36 Misc. 869, 74 N. Y. Supp. 924. Nor can the lessee hold the lessor responsible where he knew that his goods would be exposed to injury from an overflow of a water-closet which the lessor had negligently failed to repair, and he did not remove them. Huber v. Ryan (1901) 57 App. Div. 34, 67 N. Y. Supp. 972. Where, however, the landlord had made repairs to prevent further leakage and the pipes had ceased to leak for some time, the tenant is not guilty of negligence in placing goods where the leakage had formerly occurred. Lamport v. Continental Art Glass & Brass Co. (1911) 132 N. Y. Supp. 330.

Where the clothing of a tenant mildewed in a trunk kept in the basement after it had been flooded, no recovery for such damage can be had since it was due to the failure of the tenant to remove the goods. Ordemann v. Manson (1911) 127 N. Y. Supp. 1026. And it has been held that a tenant cannot stand quietly by and voluntarily allow his property to remain exposed to injury from rain, owing to the defective condition of a roof of the demised premises, but he should make the repairs himself and charge the expense to the landlord, unless prohibited from so doing by the latter. Cantrell v. Fowler (1890) 32 S. C. 589, 10 S. E. 934. So, where the tenant caused, or proximately contributed in causing, the roof of the demised premises to be repaired at an improper time, he cannot recover for damages thus brought upon himself. Lasker Real-Estate Asso. v. Hatcher (1894) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 28 S. W. 404. And see Rudolph v. Fuchs (1872) 44 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 155, holding that where the cause of the overflow complained of was the negligence of the defendant in maintaining in a defective condition the packing box of a pump located on an upper floor, and also the failure of the plaintiff to turn off the water so as to prevent it rising and escaping through this box, as he was in the habit of doing, he cannot hold the defendant liable for the damage resulting, since the overflow was due to the negligence of both parties.

Measure of damages.

The measure of damages for injury to the goods of a tenant by escaping water is the difference between the market value of the goods just prior to the injury, and such value after the flooding complained of. K. B. Koosa & Co. v. Warten (1909) 158 Ala. 496, 48 So. 544. For a breach of covenant by the lessor to repair, the measure of damages is not what it would have cost the lessee to make the repairs or the difference in the rental value of the use of the premises caused by the neglect to repair, but it is the actual damage to the tenant's property as a result of the breach. Woodward v. Jones (1895) 15 Misc. 1, 36 N. Y. Supp. 775; O'Hanlon v. Grubb (1912) 38 App. D. C. 251, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1213.

Counterclaim of damages.

It has been held that in an action for rent the tenant may counterclaim damages to his property caused by a leaky roof which the landlord had agreed but neglected to repair. Cook v. Soule (1874) 56 N. Y. 420. So, where the flow of water from other pipes in the building under the control of the lessor was such as to make the portion leased to the complaining tenant unfit for the purpose for which it was hired, and injurious to his goods, it justifies him in abandoning the premises, and, on the theory of a breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment, he may recoup his damage in an action against him to recover the rent. Vann v. Rouse (1884) 94 N. Y. 401. But where the lessee retains possession of the premises so that a leakage of water does not constitute an eviction, even though due to the wrongful act of the landlord, and it does not amount to a breach of the contract created by the lease, the injuries sustained by the tenant do not constitute a matter for counterclaim, within the Practice Code relative thereto, for they are not connected with the subject of the action by the lessor to recover the rent. Edgerton v. Page (1859) 20 N. Y. 281, affirming (1857) 1 Hilt. 320. A. G. S.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

MAX LEVINE, Appt.,
v.

J. C. McCLENATHAN.

(246 Pa. 374, 92 Atl. 317.)

Landlord and tenant — liability for faulty construction of building.

A property owner is not, in the absence of covenant or warranty, liable for injury to his tenant's goods by a leak in the roof, due to faulty construction of the building.

For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, III. c, 2, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(July 1, 1914.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Fayette County, overruling a motion to take off a nonsuit in an action to recover damages for injuries to a stock of merchandise, alleged to have been caused by a leak in the roof, due to faulty construction of the building. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. C. Higbee, of Sterling, Higbee, & Matthews, and John Duggan, for appellant:

Even where an entire building is let and leased, the landlord is liable in an action of trespass to injured tenants, where he has constructed unskillfully and negligently.

Godley v. Hagerty, 20 Pa. 387, 59 Am. Dec. 731, 26 Pa. 111, 67 Am. Dec. 404.

Where an owner of a building divides it up and rents it in different parts and parcels, he is liable to the tenants for his failure to maintain the parts and portions of the building which remain in his control and possession, in proper condition, so as not to injure them.

Toole v. Beckett, 67 Me. 544, 24 Am. Rep. 54; Glickauf v. Maurer, 75 Ill. 289, 20 Am. Rep. 238; Rauth v. Davenport, 60 Hun, 70, 14 N. Y. Supp. 69; Dollard v. Roberts, 130 N. Y. 269, 14 L.R.A. 238, 29 N. E. 104; O'Hanlon v. Grubb, 38 App. D. C. 251, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1213; Farley v. Byers, 106 Minn. 260, 130 Am. St. Rep. 613, 118 N. W. 1023; Sawyer v. McGillicuddy, 81 Me. 318, 3 L.R.A. 458, 10 Am. St. Rep. 260, 17 Atl. 124; Looney v. McLean, 129 Mass. 33, 37 Am. Rep. 295; Railton v. Taylor, 20 R. I. 279, 39 L.R.A. 246, 38 Atl. 980; Stenberg v. Willcox, 96 Tenn. 163, 34 L.R.A. 615, 33 S. W. 917, 96 Tenn. 148, 34 L.R.A. 824, 54 Am. St. Rep. 823, 33 S. W. 914, 100 Tenn. 538, 41

L.R.A. 278, 66 Am. St. Rep. 770, 46 S. W. 297.

Messrs. D. M. Hertzog and H. G. May for appellee.

Elkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of trespass for damages to a stock of merchandise, caused by water leaking through the roof of the demised premises, or, as appellant contends, through the bottom of light wells which served to furnish light to the second and third stories of the same building. At the conclusion of the testimony introduced by appellant, the learned court below directed a compulsory nonsuit to be entered, and subsequently overruled the motion to take it off. The two assignments of error relate to these matters.

It is well settled in one state that no implied covenant arises, out of the relation of landlord and tenant, upon the part of the landlord to repair; nor is there any implied warranty that the leased premises are tenantable. In the absence of a covenant in the lease requiring the lessor to repair, no such duty rests upon the landlord; and, if damages result to the tenant by reason of failure to make repairs, there can be no recovery against the landlord. Moore v. Weber, 71 Pa. 429, 10 Am. Rep. 708; Barns v. Wilson, 116 Pa. 303, 9 Atl. 437; Reeves v. McComeskey, 168 Pa. 571, 32 Atl. 96. There is a long line of cases to the same effect. These cases hold that the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to leases of real property. The tenant takes the property as it is, and he must be the judge of its tenantable condition. If the tenant wants the landlord to make repairs, he must require such a covenant to be inserted in the lease; and failure to so provide by a covenant in the lease relieves the landlord from any such duty. The landlord, having no duty to repair, cannot be charged with negligence in failing to make repairs; and hence, in an action for damages charging negligence, there can be no recovery against the landlord, if the damage resulted from failure to make repairs, or because of the untenable condition of the demised premises. The tenant took the premises as they were, and is bound by his bargain.

The negligence charged in the present case was "that the said building was defectively, imperfectly, and improperly constructed, and that, at the date of the making of the said lease, the storeroom and premises demised to the plaintiff had not yet been occupied, and, in consequence of the defective, improper, and negligent construction aforesaid the roof of said building, and the party wall and cornices around the sky-light, leaked," and in times of rain the water percolated into the demised premises and caused some damage to the stock of merchandise owned by appellant. In other paragraphs of the statement of claim the same character of negligence is charged, and the case is made to turn by the pleadings upon the question of faulty construction of the building. We know of no case in Pennsylvania, and none has been called to our attention, in which a tenant was permitted to recover damages against the landlord upon the ground that the demised premises had been defectively or improperly constructed. If a tenant could recover damages upon the ground that the demised premises had not been properly constructed, all that has been said in our cases about the rule of caveat emptor would be meaningless. Appellant is bound by his pleadings, and his right to recover, if any such right exists, depends upon proving the negligence charged; but even if he proves the negligence charged, there can be no recovery, if that negligence is not actionable under the law.

Note. — For liability of landlord to tenant for damage by water, due to faulty construction, see annotation following this case, post, 236.
L.R.A.1917B.

As we view the present record, this is a sufficient answer to the very able argument of learned counsel for appellant, in which a number of cases from other jurisdictions are cited to support the contention that the negligence charged in the case at bar is actionable. It is not our purpose to discuss these cases, because most of them are based upon exceptional facts, which do not arise under the pleadings in the present case. It might very well be that a landlord would be held liable for negligent acts committed in and around the demised premises, and most of the cases from other jurisdictions cited here relate to acts of this character; but the negligence charged in the present case is the defective and improper construction of the building itself. No case decided in our state can be cited in support of the contention that there can be a recovery of damages by the tenant against the landlord, when the negligence charged was faulty construction of the original building. We might add that in the present case there was no covenant to repair, nor was there any warranty that the demised premises were tenantable.

Assignments of error overruled and judgment affirmed.

Annotation—Liability of landlord to tenant for damage by water, due to faulty construction.

As to the liability of the landlord for injury to the tenant's property due to escaping water, see note to Le Vette v. Hardman Estate, ante, 222. And as to his liability where water or steam, escaped from bursting pipes, see note to Moroder v. Fox, post, 238. The present note deals only with the question of the lessor's liability where the escaping water was due to defective construction.

Where tenant is in possession.

In the absence of a covenant to repair, or a warranty that the demised premises are tenantable, or where there is no fraud or concealment, the rule of caveat emptor applies to leases of real property, and the lessee takes the property as it is, and no duty rests upon the landlord to repair defects therein. He is not liable to the tenant for damage to the goods of the latter, resulting either from his failure to repair, or from defects in the construction of the building; hence, where the premises were leased with defectively constructed skylights which permitted the water during rainstorms to leak through them, to the injury of the goods of the tenant, the landlord is not responsible therefor. LEVINE v. McCLENATHAN, ante, 235.
L.R.A.1917B.

An action of tort cannot be maintained against the lessor for an injury to the goods of the lessee, alleged to be due to the imperfect and defective construction of the cellar, so that, as a result of a heavy rainstorm and a high tide in the bay nearby, water backed up in the main sewer in the street, and was forced under the sidewalk and into the cellar. Loupe v. Wood (1877) 51 Cal. 586.

And where defective water pipes are located outside of premises leased to the injured tenant, and water constantly escapes from them and flows upon the premises of the tenant, injuring his goods, and the defect in these pipes was due to their faulty construction, and the defective pipes were a part of the premises demised to the tenant, the liability of the lessor for the damage caused thereby is to be measured by the terms of the lease. Ingwersen v. Rankin (1885) 47 N. J. L. 18, 54 Am. Rep. 109.

It has, however, been held that where damage results to a tenant of a lower floor from the escape of water from bathtubs, due to their improper construction, the lessor is liable, although a tenant was in possession of the rooms where the bathtubs are located. Freidenburg v. Jones (1879) 63 Ga. 612.

—rule as to obvious defect.

It has been held that where the escape of the water is due to an obvious defect in the construction of the building, the landlord is not responsible for the damage to the goods of the tenant, due thereto. For example, where the goods of a tenant of a lower floor were injured by the fall of plaster from the ceiling, due to a leakage from the roof, caused by water entering an open fanlight,—an obvious defect, existing in the building at the time of the lease,—the landlord is not liable for the injury. Rogers v. Sorell (1903) 14 Manitoba L. R. 450.

Where lesser retains possession.

Where the owner has the possession and control of the roof of a building leased to different tenants, he is liable to the lessee of a lower floor for damage to the latter's goods, caused by water leaking from the roof, down the skylight, although this skylight was maintained for the benefit of the lessee, the lessor, however, being negligent in failing to provide proper and sufficient means for the escape of water from the roof during storms. H. C. Capwell Co. v. Blake (1908) 9 Cal. App. 101, 98 Pac. 51. So, where the lessor was in possession of that part of a building directly over the portion leased, and the plumbing and fittings in the part in his possession were so defectively constructed that water overflowed the sinks and closets and ran down into the leased portion, damaging the goods of the tenant, and the lessor refused to remedy the defect, it amounted to a constructive eviction, entitling the tenant to claim damages for the violation of the lease, which were properly set up by him in counterclaim in an action for the rent. York v. Steward (1898) 21 Mont. 515, 43 L.R.A. 125, 55 Pac. 29.

—necessity of use of ordinary appliances.

Where the defect in the construction was due to the failure of the lessor to make use of the ordinary and necessary appliances to prevent an overflow of water, he is liable for an injury to the property of a tenant, due to such an overflow. For example, the lessor is liable to the lessee for damage to the latter's goods caused by an overflow of water due to the defective construction and maintenance of a water tank on the leased premises, in that it was not provided with a valve cock which was necessary to control the flow of water, and which was customarily attached and used for that purpose. Citron v. Bayley (1899) 36 App. Div. 130, 55 N. Y. Supp. 382. Where, however, the landlord did not construct the building, but acquired it after it had been constructed, he is not liable for loss caused by bursting pipes, due to their freezing, although they froze because not properly protected; this defect, however, not being obvious, as the unprotected portion was underneath the roof and above the ceiling. Queeney v. Willi (1916) 171 App. Div. 588, 157 N. Y. Supp. 642.

Where waterpipes are installed in a building for the benefit of different tenants, the landlord, with reference to the construction and condition of such pipes, owes to the tenants the duty merely of seeing that they are reasonably fit and proper for the purpose for which they are intended; and it is only where he fails in this regard that he can be charged with negligence and held liable to a tenant for injury resulting from the bursting of a pipe. Anderson v. Oppenheimer (1880) L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. (Eng.) 602, 49 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 708.

The mere fact that water leaks through the roof of a building, although due to the construction of the waste pipe to carry off the water falling thereon, does not necessarily establish the negligence of the landlord, or his liability for the resulting injury. Thus, it has been held that pipes placed in the building to carry off rain water from the roof are for the benefit of all the tenants of the building; and that, although these pipes failed to take care of the water during an unusually heavy storm, causing it to back up and leak through the roof, the landlord is not liable for injury resulting where the jury find, as a matter of fact, that he was not negligent, either in the plan for carrying off the water, or in the construction of the pipe. Tenant v. Hall (1888) 27 N. B. 499.

Where the landlord had no control over the supply of water to a tank on the leased premises, and it was fitted with an overflow pipe of the usual size, which proved adequate for a number of years, and there was no evidence to show that there were any appliances which would have been effective under existing conditions, the landlord is not liable for damage to the tenant's goods, caused by the overflow of the tank. Bertsch v. Unterberg (1904) 88 N. Y. Supp. 983. So, where the roof of a building was sufficient protection against ordinary storms, the lessor is not liable for injury to the goods of the lessee, caused by the roof leaking, due to an extraordinary fall of snow. Guthman v. Castleberry (1873) 49 Ga. 272.

—negligence of another tenant.

Where the tenant of an upper floor negligently left open a water faucet and it overflowed the bowl into which it emptied and the water escaped and leaked through to the lower floor, injuring the goods of the occupant, the lessor is not liable therefor, although the drain pipe was not of sufficient size to carry off water if permitted to run from the faucet under full pressure. McCarthy v. York County Sav. Bank (1883) 74 Me. 315, 43 Am. Rep. 591. A. G. S.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

ALPHONS J. MORODER, Appt.,

v.

ABRAHAM FOX, Respt.

(155 Wis. 503, 143 N. W. 1040.)

Landlord and tenant — duty to care for water pipes — liability for injuries.

1. A provision in a printed lease of the ground floor of a building, over which are tenements, requiring the lessee to use all necessary precautions to prevent damages to any water pipes upon said premises by frost or otherwise, and to pay all damages done to said premises by reason of bursting of water pipes, and to shut the water off of the premises whenever it shall be necessary to do so to prevent freezing, does not, where there is only one shut-off for the entire property, require the lessee to turn off water to prevent freezing on other floors, or prevent his holding the landlord liable in case, through his negligence, the pipes burst on an upper floor, to the injury of his property.

For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, III. c, 2, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — freezing of pipes — injury to tenant's property — liability.

2. The owner of a tenement building who permits the water to remain in the pipes of a vacant tenement without precautions to prevent freezing when the temperature is such as to endanger it is liable to the tenant of a lower floor whose property is injured by the freezing and bursting of a water pipe.

For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, III. c, 2, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Timlin and Kerwin, JJ., dissent.)

(November 18, 1913.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County reversing a judgment of the Civil Court in his favor in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's property by the bursting of water pipes, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Note.—For liability of landlord to tenant for loss due to bursting water pipes, see annotation following this case, post, 244. L.R.A.1917B.

Statement by Vinje, J.:

Action to recover damages sustained by reason of the bursting of water pipes above plaintiff's premises, resulting in damage to goods contained therein. On the 18th day of June, 1911, the plaintiff leased from the defendant for a period of two years from May 1, 1911, the first floor and part of the basement of a three-story building situated in the city of Milwaukee. The printed portion of the lease contained this agreement on the part of the lessee: "To take and use all necessary precautions to prevent damages to any of the water pipes and waterworks upon said premises, or to any part of said demised premises, by frost or otherwise, and to pay all damages done to said premises by reason of bursting of water pipes, and to turn and let the water out of the pipes in said premises whenever it shall be necessary to do so to prevent it from freezing or injuring said pipes and property." Plaintiff occupied the first floor as a store and workshop, and directly above it were two flats, one in the second and one in the third story, which, at the time the lease was executed, were occupied by other tenants of the defendant. At the time the damages were sustained only the third floor of said building was occupied as a flat. There was but one water meter and one set of water pipes for the use of the first floor and the two flats above, and the turn-off was located in the basement, so that, if the water had been turned off there, the tenants on the other floors would have had their water supply shut off. In September the flat on the second floor was vacated, and remained so until the 5th day of January, 1912, when, owing to severe cold, the pipes in the second flat burst, large quantities of water escaped through the floor and ceiling of the premises occupied by the plaintiff and directly upon his stock of goods, a greater portion of which was water-soaked and damaged. At the time the pipes burst there was no heat in the second floor, and the pipes were not protected from frost in any way.

The case was first tried in the civil court, and the judge thereof held the defendant liable, and assessed plaintiff's damages in the sum of $250, and entered judgment accordingly. An appeal was taken to the circuit court, which resulted in a reversal of the judgment, on the ground that plaintiff, by the provision of the lease quoted, had agreed to become responsible for any damage done by the freezing or bursting of the water pipes in question. From a judgment entered accordingly, the plaintiff appealed.

Messrs. Alexander & Burke, for appellant:

Defendant cannot escape liability because his act was one of misfeasance, and not malfeasance; he is liable for damage resulting from his failure to perform a known duty.

Jones v. Freidenburg, 66 Ga. 505, 42 Am. Rep. 86; Rosenfield v. Arrol, 44 Minn. 395, 20 Am. St. Rep. 584, 46 N. W. 768; Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Rees, 69 Wis. 442, 2 Am. St. Rep. 748, 34 N. W. 732; 2 Wait, Act. & Def. 745; Kneeland v. Beare, 11 N. D. 233, 91 N. W. 56, 12 Am. Neg. Rep. 539.

Plaintiff's lease, which imposed upon him the duty to protect the water pipe against freezing, should not be construed as extending to other than the room or rooms actually leased by him.

Conneaut Lake Ice Co. v. Quigley, 225 Pa. 605, 74 Atl. 648; Reinhardt v. Holmes, 143 Mo. App. 212, 127 S. W. 611; Levin v. Habicht, 45 Misc. 381, 90 N. Y. Supp. 349; Randolph v. Feist, 23 Misc. 650, 52 N. Y. Supp. 109; Worthington v. Parker, 11 Daly, 545; Goldberg v. Lloyd, 110 N. Y. Supp. 530; Levy v. Korn, 30 Misc. 199, 61 N. Y. Supp. 1109; Levine v. Baldwin, 87 App. Div. 160, 84 N. Y. Supp. 92.

Messrs. Houghton, Neelen, & Houghton, for respondent:

The defendant landlord was not guilty of negligence which proximately caused plaintiff's injury.

Cole v. McKey, 66 Wis. 500, 57 Am. Rep. 293, 29 N. W. 279; Dowling v. Nuebling, 97 Wis. 350, 72 N. W. 871; Kuhn v. Sol. Heavenrich Co. 115 Wis. 447, 60 L.R.A. 585, 91 N. W. 994; Krueger v. Ferrant, 29 Minn. 385, 43 Am. Rep. 223, 13 N. W. 158; Buckley v. Cunningham, 103 Ala. 449, 49 Am. St. Rep. 42, 15 So. 826.

In an action ex delicto, brought by a tenant against a landlord, the tenant cannot recover if the landlord is guilty of a nonfeasance.

Cole v. McKey, 66 Wis. 500, 57 Am. Rep. 293, 29 N. W. 279; Dowling v. Nuebling, 97 Wis. 350, 72 N. W. 871; Kuhn v. Sol. Heavenrich Co. 115 Wis. 447, 60 L.R.A. 585, 91 N. W. 994; Krueger v. Ferrant, 29 Minn. 385, 43 Am. Rep. 223, 13 N. W. 158; Buckley v. Cunningham, 103 Ala. 449, 49 Am. St. Rep. 42, 15 So. 826; 18 Am. & L.R.A. 1917B.

Eng. Enc. Law, 218, 219; 24 Cyc. 1072; Ward v. Fagin, 101 Mo. 669, 10 L.R.A. 147, 20 Am. St. Rep. 650, 14 S. W. 738.

The plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to turn off the water.

24 Cyc. 1121; Taylor v. Bailey, 74 Ill. 178; Buckley v. Cunningham, 103 Ala. 449, 49 Am. St. Rep. 42, 15 So. 826; McGinn v. French, 107 Wis. 54, 82 N. W. 724.

The plaintiff assumed the risk of damage from bursting pipes.

24 Cyc. 1121; McGinn v. French, 107 Wis. 54, 82 N. W. 724; Buckley v. Cunningham, 103 Ala. 449, 49 Am. St. Rep. 42, 15 So. 826.

The express terms of the lease bar the right of the plaintiff to recover.

Taylor v. Bailey, 74 Ill. 178.

Vinje, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It appears that plaintiff rented the first story and part of the basement of a three-story building, and that at the time the lease was executed the second and third stories were used as flats. His lease required him to "take and use all necessary precautions to prevent damages to any of the water pipes and waterworks upon said premises, or to any part of said demised premises, by frost or otherwise, and to pay all damages done to said premises by reason of bursting of said water pipes, and to turn and let the water out of the pipes in said premises whenever it shall be necessary to do so to prevent it from freezing or injuring said pipes and property." Do these provisions of the lease obligate the plaintiff to so care for the water pipes that they shall not burst in those portions of the building not leased or used by him?

The provisions are in the printed form of the lease, and we think it quite clear that they were intended to make the tenant responsible only for the pipes in the portion of the premises leased by him; that the words "said premises" refer to the premises leased, and not to the whole building in which they are situated. In the instant case there was a flat in the second story and one in the third story occupied by other tenants of the landlord. It could not have been the intention of the parties that the plaintiff should become responsible for the water pipes in those two flats, to which he had no access, and over which he could exercise no control. True, there was but one shut-off for the store occupied by the plaintiff and the two flats, which was located in the basement, and to which both the plaintiff and defendant had access. But plaintiff could not shut off the water for the second, or vacant, flat without at the same time shutting it off for the third flat, which was occupied. The only way to prevent the pipes from freezing in the second flat was to heat it, or sufficiently wrap the pipes, as found by the civil court. However, that is immaterial, since, under the terms of the lease, as we construe it, he was chargeable with the condition of the water pipes only in the premises leased by him.

From the time the tenant of the flat on the second floor vacated the same in September up to and including the time the damage was done, the defendant was in possession of it, as was found by the civil court, and as the fact was. Being in possession thereof, irrespective of the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties, it became his duty to exercise ordinary care to so use the same as not to injure plaintiff in the enjoyment of his premises. Knowing that the premises were vacant and unheated, and that the water pipes running through the same to supply the flat on the third story with water were uncovered and unprotected from frost, it was negligence to allow them so to remain during the winter time. For such negligence he became liable to plaintiff, who sustained damage as a proximate result thereof. The case of Priest v. Nichols, 116 Mass. 401, is very much in point. The facts and ruling thereon are thus stated by the court: "The plaintiffs occupied as tenants the lower floor of a building belonging to the defendants. The defendants occupied the floor above. There was a pipe leading through the plaintiffs' premises which conveyed the waste water and material from the manufactory, sinks, and water-closet of the defendants to the sewer below. This pipe was alleged to be in charge of the defendants, and evidence was offered that they had so treated it, and had, from time to time, upon notice, made repairs upon it. But they negligently suffered it to be out of repair, whereby the water damaged the goods of the plaintiffs. It was a question of fact for the jury whether the pipe was in charge of the defendants, and was out of repair through their negligence. The rule that a landlord is not bound to keep the premises of his tenant in repair, and therefore cannot be held responsible for negligence, if out of repair, has no application to the facts presented in this case." It was held that plaintiff was entitled to recover. In Buckley v. Cunningham, 103 Ala. 449, 49 Am. St. Rep. 42, 15 So. 826, the contrary was held under somewhat similar facts. In the following cases recoveries have been had for the negligent escape of water by a tenant or owner, causing damage to another tenant: Warren v. Kauffman, 2 Phila. 259; Rosenfield v. Arrol, 44 Minn. 395, 20 Am. L.R.A. 1917B.

St. Rep. 584, 46 N. W. 768; Killion v. Power, 51 Pa. 429, 91 Am. Dec. 127; Curran v. Weiss, 6 Misc. 138, 26 N. Y. Supp. 8; Greco v. Bernheimer, 17 Misc. 592, 40 N. Y. Supp. 677; Simon-Reigel Cigar Co. v. Gordon-Burnham Battery Co. 20 Misc. 598, 46 N. Y. Supp. 416; Miller v. Benoit, 29 App. Div. 252, 51 N. Y. Supp. 368, affirmed in 164 N. Y. 590, 58 N. E. 1090; Pike v. Brittan, 71 Cal. 159, 60 Am. Rep. 527, 11 Pac. 890; Freidenburg v. Jones, 63 Ga. 612. See also valuable note in 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 545 et seq., where most of these and other cases are collected. For additional cases, where it has been held that the landlord is liable to a tenant for the negligent use of part of the premises retained by him, see Railton v. Taylor, 20 R. I. 279, 39 L.R.A. 246, 38 Atl. 980; Hysore v. Quigley, 9 Houst. (Del.) 348, 32 Atl. 960; Defiance Water Co. v. Olinger, 54 Ohio St. 532, 32 L.R.A. 736, 44 N. E. 238; Glickauf v. Maurer, 75 Ill. 280, 20 Am. Rep. 238; Jackson v. Eddy, 12 Mo. 209; Stapenhorst v. American Mfg. Co. 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 355.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to affirm the judgment of the Civil Court.

Siebecker, J., took no part.

Timlin, J., dissenting (November 21, 1913):

The civil court for Milwaukee county held the lessor liable to the lessee for damages caused to the goods of the latter by a water pipe freezing and bursting in the vacant apartments next above those of the lessee. This liability was predicated upon negligence of the lessor. The circuit court upon appeal, apparently without investigating the question of negligence, reversed this judgment, on the ground that a covenant in the lease imposed upon the lessee the duty to prevent this freezing. Neither the civil court nor the circuit court passed upon the real questions in the case, nor has this court done so in the majority opinion, whereby the judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and that of the civil court affirmed.

All will concede, I think, that, if the lessor was guilty of negligence which was the proximate cause of the lessee's damage, the lessor would be liable; also that, if the law imposed a duty upon the lessor to cover the water pipes in or heat the vacant apartment, and he failed in that duty, thus causing damage to the lessee, he would be liable, although on this latter proposition there is a distinction made and observed in the law between acts of misfeasance on the part of the lessor and mere nonfeasance on his part. In the latter case he would ordinarily not be liable. In this state it seems well settled that there is no liability on the ground of implied contract, and that the lessor, if liable at all, must be held liable on the ground of negligence. McGinn v. French, 107 Wis. 54, 57, 82 N. W. 724; Kuhn v. Sol. Heavenrich Co. 115 Wis. 447, 60 L.R.A. 585, 91 N. W. 994; Fellows v. Gilhuber, 82 Wis. 639, 17 L.R.A. 577, 52 N. W. 307. The rule is the same whether the whole or only part of the premises is leased. Fellows v. Gilhuber, supra; Cole v. McKey, 66 Wis. 500, 57 Am. Rep. 293, 29 N. W. 279; Dowling v. Neubling, 97 Wis. 350, 72 N. W. 871. An exception to this rule is found where the defect is a concealed one, known to the landlord, and not known to the tenant, and not discoverable by the tenant in the exercise of that degree of care which the law demands of him. Anderson v. Hayes, 101 Wis. 538, 70 Am. St. Rep. 930, 77 N. W. 891, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 504. The lessor is entitled to no immunity merely because he is lessor, and in all cases in which by law he owes a duty to the lessee, and negligently performs or negligently omits to perform that duty, he will be liable like other persons. Thus in the Georgia cases cited in the majority opinion there was a statute imposing upon the landlord the duty to repair, although this statute is not expressly referred to. (Ga. Code 1868, § 2258; Ga. Code 1883, § 2284; Ga. Code 1895, § 3123; also Ga. Code 1868, § 2949. Where there is no duty imposed by law, there can be no breach of duty, and, where there is no breach of duty, there can be no actionable negligence. Goff v. Chippewa, River & M. R. Co. 86 Wis. 237, 245, 56 N. W. 465; Dowd v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 84 Wis. 105, 116, 20 L.R.A. 527, 36 Am. St. Rep. 917, 54 N. W. 24, 10 Am. Neg. Cas. 486; Peake v. Buell, 90 Wis. 508, 48 Am. St. Rep. 946, 63 N. W. 1053.

"To constitute actionable negligence, the defendant must be guilty of some wrongful act or breach of positive duty to the plaintiff." Cole v. McKey, 66 Wis. 500, 57 Am. Rep. 293, 29 N. W. 279. The facts are established by admissions in the pleadings and by the uncontroverted evidence. The findings of the civil court are not important, because they cannot be invoked in support of the judgment appealed from. But, aside from conclusions, they contain nothing in conflict with the uncontroverted facts. The case was before the circuit court for review upon these facts. The testimony is not contained in the printed case, but is in the record, and was before the learned circuit court. There is no material controversy upon the facts. The leased premises were "the first floor and part of basement of the three-story brick-veneered building, No. 910, Third street, in the thirteenth ward of the city of Milwaukee, same to be used for manufacturing of church goods and retailing." There was a flat or apartment on the second floor, and another on the third floor. Each tenant did his own heating. The basement and first floor were heated by a furnace, fed and attended to by the plaintiff lessee; the second and third floors by stoves, apparently furnished and fed by the lessees of these apartments. There was a water pipe running up from the basement through the first floor and second floor premises, and supplying each of these and the third floor tenant with water. The water-closet mentioned in the lease was in the basement. The only place at which the water could be shut off was in the basement, and was accessible to all tenants; but the water could not be shut off from one tenant without shutting it off from all. The water pipes were everywhere in good condition, but not protected by any covering material. There is no evidence tending to show that the water pipe which burst was near a window or in any way unusually exposed. The tenants each claimed or held a separate part of the basement, and potatoes and other vegetables and coal were kept there; but the shut-off was near the back stairway entrance, and accessible to all. The plaintiff lessee had occupied the same premises at and before the time when the defendant became owner by purchase from Strauss, the former lessor of plaintiff. Upon the defendant's purchase the plaintiff surrendered the lease he had from Strauss, which had several months to run, and the lease in question was made by defendant to plaintiff for the same premises, but at a reduced rental, and the plaintiff had from defendant the key to the second floor apartment and other keys for the purpose of giving the keys to the prospective tenants who might call with a view to renting. The plaintiff lessee, therefore, knew the situation for a longer time than the lessor; he actually occupied the leased premises, while the lessor lived at some distance, but in the same city. Both the lessor and lessee knew when the lease was made that the upper apartments were occupied; both knew that the second floor became vacant some time in the fall, and continued vacant until after the damage occurred; both knew it was cold weather during the first days of January; and both had access to the vacant apartments while they were so vacant. The plaintiff testifies that he did not know where the water shut-off was in the basement; but he agreed in the covenants of his lease to close it for some purposes, and the evidence is entirely silent with reference to the lessor having any knowledge that the tenant he found in the premises when he bought the property, and who agreed to shut off the water for some purposes, did not know where the shut-off was. The evidence is entirely silent with reference to whether the lessee kept his premises heated during the cold spell, or at what temperature he maintained the air in his first-floor store or room, and is also silent with reference to the knowledge of the lessor concerning the heat maintained by lessee with his furnace in the part of the building occupied by the lessee. But we must, I think, assume that both knew of the diffusion of heat, of the slow cooling of water, of the tendency of heated air and warm water to ascend, and the lessor, being absent, would probably have the right to presume that the lessee, by means of the furnace, maintained in his rooms a temperature of about 70 degrees Fahrenheit, and the upper apartment something about the same. Both knew that the water could not be shut off in the basement from one tenant without shutting it off from the first, second, and third floors, and the lessee knew that in his manufacturing he had occasion to use water 30 times a day, for so he testifies. The water froze in the pipe near the sink in the second floor apartment; but we do not know exactly when this happened. We do know that this caused the pipe to break, and allowed the water to escape upon the second floor on January 3d or January 5th (it makes no difference which), and from thence came through the ceiling upon the goods of the lessee on the first floor, and damaged them. The ceiling seems to have been one which would let water through, but not heat. This must have been some days or hours after the water froze in the pipe and burst it, because ice does not break a pipe until it forms solid in it, and the water escapes some time thereafter.

Now, where is the negligence on the part of the lessor? It seems to be held that he must set up and keep fire in a stove in the vacant second floor apartment in anticipation of the water freezing in the pipe, or that he must go further than to furnish a pipe in good repair and of good quality, and put some kind of a frost-proof cover thereon; and not only this, but he owed this duty to a tenant who, he had reason to believe, knew all about the physical condition and much more than he did about the temperature of the house, and who had it in his power to shut off the water, and to heat his own apartments, and to investigate conditions and temperature in the vacant apartments. Whether or not there was likelihood of the water freezing in and bursting the pipe was largely a matter of L.R.A.1917B.

judgment, depending upon the temperature of the rooms below and above, how long that temperature had been maintained, how cold it might become, and whether the pipes were emptied. He who lived at a distance could not be said to be careless in leaving these things to those in immediate contact with conditions as they existed, especially when he had in his lease the covenants hereinafter noticed. There was simply inaction—nonfeasance—on the part of the defendant, and in a particular in which he owed no duty of diligence to the tenant, unless such duty is imposed on him by a sort of judicial legislation. I think the case deserves the comment found in Buckley v. Cunningham, 103 Ala. 449, 49 Am. St. Rep. 42, 15 So. 826: "To declare as matter of law, growing out of the relationship of landlord and tenant, independent of contractual obligation, that the landlord owed a duty to his tenants, in anticipation of a freeze, to see, for the protection of his tenants, that the water was cut off from the pipes, when the facts show that the tenants have equal authority and privilege to shut the water off, or cause it to be shut off at their request, as the landlord, would be to lay down a rule of law, unwarranted by any just principle, or any precedent which we have discovered."

I have found no case amongst the numerous cases cited in the majority opinion which tends to uphold liability of the lessor under the circumstances of the instant case; but the discerning lawyer will find, I think, most of the cited cases make against such liability. This lease, like other written instruments, must be construed with reference to the known physical condition of the property which is leased. It is quite a mistaken notion of law that we must look into this lease for some covenant on the part of the lessee to absolve the lessor from negligence. Negligence might exist or be absent independently of such covenant. We may consider the covenants of the lease in order to determine whether there was within contemplation of the parties thereunto any duty on the part of the lessor such as the majority opinion imposes upon him.

The lessee covenanted "to keep said premises, including the sewer, outhouse, or water-closet, sidewalk, street, and gutter, clean, and observe all the ordinances of the city," etc. The premises here expressly include more than the demised portion of the building. Immediately following this, and relating to it as the nearest antecedent, is the covenant "to take and use all necessary precautions to prevent damages to any of the water pipes and waterworks upon said premises." This must be taken to mean the premises just said. This view is:

strengthened by the next following part of the sentence, which has no office or meaning unless it refers to something different, "or to any part of said demised premises." So that a fair reading of this covenant is that the lessee shall take and use all necessary precautions to prevent damage to any of the water pipes and waterworks upon said premises, including the sewer, outhouse, or water-closet in the basement, and also to any part of the demised premises, by frost or otherwise, and to pay all damages done to said premises by reason of the bursting of said water pipes. This, as I understand it, casts the duty upon the lessee to protect and prevent damage to any and all water pipes or waterworks which are in the basement or in the first floor.

When we reflect that this shut-off was in the basement, and accessible to the lessee, and that necessary precautions must include shutting off the water when necessary, we have the duty cast upon the lessee of shutting off the water at least for the purpose of preventing certain damage to the pipe "by frost or otherwise." This is made more clear by the following words: "And to turn and let the water out of the pipes in said premises whenever it shall be necessary to do so to prevent it from freezing or injuring said pipes or property." The parties must be held to have known that these pipes of the demised premises could not have been emptied of water or the water shut off without shutting off the water from all above. Therefore, so far as the lessor could grant, and the lessee could undertake, the latter was authorized to shut off the water not only from his own premises, but from those premises on the second and third floor above his. This removes the objection of lack of authority to do so on the part of the lessee. But its most important bearing is upon the question of the diligence of the lessor. The latter knows that the lessee has so undertaken, and is also aware of the superior advantages of the lessee for determining when it might be prudent or necessary to shut off the water. Can it be said that under such circumstances there was contemplated by the parties to this lease any duty on the part of the lessor, living at a distance, to visit the place whenever there was prospect of a cold spell, ascertain the temperature of the lower rooms, estimate the probabilities of the water freezing in the pipes on the second floor, and shut the water off from all the tenants, including the plaintiff? I think not. Under such circumstances was there any duty resting upon the lessor to keep the vacant second floor apartments heated? This would require putting in a stove, furnishing coal, and employing someone to keep up a fire. No known rule of diligence requires this. There was nothing to suggest the necessity of so doing in the instant case. I do not think it can be said there was any duty of diligence which called upon the lessor to visit the premises in order to ascertain the temperature, or to keep a fire in the vacant apartments, or to furnish frost-proof covering for the pipes. The mode of preventing damages to the pipe in the premises of the lessee was provided for; that is to say, to shut off the water to prevent freezing; and it was not contemplated that any other mode of protection was necessary. It was apparent that the lessee would always be in a better position to determine the chances of freezing than the lessor, because that must always depend in great measure upon whether the water was flowing, upon the temperature of lessee's rooms below, and upon the probability of a fall in temperature; and it would require the lessor not only to foresee these things, but to come a distance in order to perform a duty which the lessee, on the ground, in contact with the appliances in question, and as well able to judge of the probabilities of a fall in temperature, and better able to judge of its effect upon the pipes, undertook to do so far as the part demised to him was affected. The undisputed evidence shows it was not customary for lessors not residing in any part of the leased premises to do such things, and the rule that an ordinarily prudent person under like circumstances would have kept a fire in this vacant room, or covered the pipe passing through such room with some frost-proof covering, is wholly artificial, arbitrary, and unsound. Buckley v. Cunningham, supra; Taylor v. Bailey, 74 Ill. 178; McKeon v. Cutter, 156 Mass. 296, 31 N. E. 389; Cheeseborough v. Green, 10 Conn. 318, 26 Am. Dec. 396; Cole v. McKey, 66 Wis. 500, 57 Am. Rep. 293, 29 N. W. 279; Peake v. Buell, 90 Wis. 508, 48 Am. St. Rep. 946, 63 N. W. 1053; Fellows v. Gilhuber, 82 Wis. 639, 17 L.R.A. 577, 52 N. W. 307; Dowling v. Nuebling, 97 Wis. 350, 72 N. W. 871. See also other cases cited in majority opinion.

Negligence cannot be inferred from the fact that the lessor did not put into the premises the latest or best known appliances. Bernhard v. Reeves, 6 Wash. 424, 33 Pac. 873.

Then, upon the question of contributory negligence. It must be manifest, I think, from the foregoing résumé of the uncontroverted facts that it could not be held that the lessor was negligent without at the same time and upon the same evidence convicting the lessee of contributory negligence. Indeed, the negligence of the lessee was much the greater of the two, if, we assume that there was negligence on the part of the lessor. The civil court seems to have got over this question of contributory negligence by finding that the covenants of the lease did not require the lessee to preserve that part of the continuous water pipe which extended in and through the second floor apartment. This is not a question of negligence, but a question of covenant. Also by ignoring the fact that the lessee had access to the vacant apartment on the second floor. Also the fact that the lessee knew them to be vacant, and by finding that the lessor had full knowledge that the weather was extremely cold and severe, and omitting to find that the lessee had also such knowledge, and by finding that the lessor knew that the water pipes would freeze and burst if they were not so protected, and omitting to find that the lessee had the same opportunity for knowledge and greater familiarity and longer and more constant contact with the conditions existing in and about the leased premises. I presume it is intended that it shall become a rule of law in this state that the lessor owes such duty to the lessee under the circumstances herein detailed, and, if this is true, I think it furnishes a sufficient justification for this dissent.

I am authorized to say Mr. Justice Kerwin concurs in this dissent.

Petition for rehearing denied, February 3, 1914.

Annotation—Liability of landlord to tenant for loss due to bursting water-pipes.

As to liability of the landlord for injury to tenant's property by escaping water, see note appended to LeVette v. Hardman, ante, 222. And as to his liability for escaping water, due to defective construction, see note to Levine v. McClenathan, ante, 235. The present note is confined to cases involving loss to a tenant's property by water or steam escaping from bursting pipes.

Where lessee in possession.

A tenant whose goods are injured by the bursting of water pipes in a portion of the premises leased by him cannot hold the landlord responsible merely on the ground that the bursting of the pipe was due to the latter's neglect to keep the plumbing in repair, where there is nothing alleged showing any duty on the part of the lessor to make such repairs. Simons v. Seward (1887) 22 Jones & S. 407, 7 N. Y. S. R. 55. And on the ground that the lessor was under no duty to repair, in the absence of a covenant to repair, or fraud or deceit, it has been held that the owner of a building is not liable to a tenant of a portion of it for injuries to the latter's stock of goods, caused by a water pipe bursting, due to the failure of the lessor to repair the same after notice of its defective condition. Charlie's Transfer Co. v. Malone (1909) 159 Ala. 325, 48 So. 705. Without reference to the question of negligence, the lessor is not liable for an injury to the property of the lessee, due to the bursting of a water pipe located in the lessee's portion of the premises, where there was no other use made of the pipe except to supply water to him, and this is true although the landlord, at the request of the lessee, undertook to repair it, since such act was gratuitous on his part, and imposed upon him no liability. McKeon v. Cutter (1892) 156 Mass. 296, 31 N. E. 389.

As a matter of law the relation of landlord and tenant, independent of contractual obligation, does not impose upon the former the duty to see, for the protection of the tenant, that water is cut off from pipes running through the tenant's apartments to an upper floor, in order to prevent their freezing, where the tenant is equally authorized and privileged to shut the water off or cause it to be shut off. Buckley v. Cunningham (1893) 103 Ala. 449, 49 Am. St. Rep. 42, 15 So. 826. And it has been held that the lessee cannot recover for damage to his goods from a bursting water pipe, due to its freezing, although there was a provision in the lease that the lessor should do inside repairs, including plumbing. Baldwin v. Cohen (1909) 132 App. Div. 87, 116 N. Y. Supp. 510. Neither is the lessor liable for the freezing and consequent bursting of water pipes attached to a water-closet located in the rooms of a tenant of the upper floor where the escaping water injured the goods of the tenant of the lower floor, if the tenant of the upper floor was in the exclusive possession and control of the rooms wherein the pipe was located, except that the lessor had contracted to remove any obstructions to the pipes and repair the same if they froze and burst. Dudley v. Lewis Shoe Co. (1912) 113 Va. 41, 78 S. E. 433.

Where lessor in possession.

Where water pipes were installed in a building as a protection from fire, and not for the use of the tenants, and they were in the lessor's possession, he is liable for injury to the goods of a tenant through whose rooms the pipes run, due to their freezing and bursting, owing to his negligence in failing to take reasonable precautions to prevent such freezing. Adams Grain & Provision Co. v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1916) 118 Va. 500, 88 S. E. 171. And it has been held that where the landlord has control of water pipes conducting water to different parts of the building for the use of different tenants, he is liable for injury to the goods of a tenant, caused by water escaping from a bursting pipe, where he negligently failed to cut off the water pipes on an unusually cold night, and the pipes froze and burst. Keoughton Lodge v. Steiner (1907) 106 Va. 589, 56 S. E. 569, 10 Ann. Cas. 256. So, where the landlord, having possession and control of a hall, negligently left open a door and transom, knowing of the danger of water pipes freezing, he is liable to a tenant of a portion of the premises whose property was damaged by the water escaping from a pipe which froze and burst. Dreeves v. Schoenberg (1912) 82 N. J. L. 335, 82 Atl. 530. And where the lessor was in possession of vacant flats on the second floor of a building, it was negligence on his part to leave waterpipes in an unprotected condition during freezing weather, and where, as a result thereof, they froze and burst and the escaping water injured the goods of a tenant of a lower floor, the lessor is liable for the loss resulting. Morover v. Fox, ante, 238.

The lessor of an apartment house is liable to the lessee of an apartment for an injury to his goods, caused by the bursting of a steam radiator, due to its defective condition, owing to the negligent failure of the former to keep it in repair, although the lease was silent as to the lessor heating the apartment. O'Hanlon v. Grubb (1912) 38 App. D. C. 251, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1213.

— necessity of showing negligence.

Merely showing that water had escaped from a pipe which had burst does not show negligence on the part of the defendant, but it must also appear that the bursting of the pipe was due to some defect in it for which the defendant is answerable, or that it was through some neglect on his part that it burst. Rudolphy v. Fuchs (1872) 44 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 155. Even where the landlord retains possession and control of the roof of the building, his duty to the tenants is merely to keep in a reasonably safe condition the appliances for carrying off rain water therefrom, and for an injury caused by the bursting, during a storm, of a drain pipe used to carry off the rain water, he is not liable, where there is no evidence to show a prior defective condition of the pipe, or any reasonable omission on his part to ascertain its condition. Clifton v. Mackauf (1914) 87 Misc. 105, 150 N. Y. Supp. 555. So, where, by means of a cistern located on an upper floor, water is stored for the benefit of the different tenants of the building, the landlord is not liable for damage to the goods of one of the tenants, caused by the bursting of a service pipe connecting with the cistern, where the pipe was reasonably fitted and proper for the purpose for which it was intended, and no negligence on the part of the landlord is shown. Anderson v. Oppenheimer (1880) L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. (Eng.) 602, 49 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 708.

The landlord, however, is liable for damage by water escaping from bursting pipes, which burst because of his negligence. And a count is sufficient to support a default judgment where it avers that the plaintiff is the lessee of the defendant, that his goods were injured by bursting water pipes maintained by the defendant, and that the latter knew of the defective condition of such pipes, and negligently failed to repair the same or cut off the water. Werten v. K. B. Koosa & Co. (1910) 169 Ala. 258, 53 So. 98. So, where the lessor of premises demised to different tenants, in calling to the attention of the tenant of an upper floor cut-off for water pipes, to be turned off in the winter time to prevent their freezing, neglected to call his attention to one of these cut-offs, and its existence was not suspected by the tenant, and in turning off the water he did not turn it off from this pipe, with the result that it froze and burst and the escaping water injured the goods of a tenant of the lower floor, the question of the negligence of the lessor is for the jury. Martindale Clothing Co. v. Spokane & E. Trust Co. (1914) 79 Wash. 643, 140 Pac. 909, 6 N. C. C. A. 993.

— as affected by limitation-of-liability provision.

Under a lease providing that all merchandise, furniture, and property of every kind which may be on the premises during the continuance thereof is to be at the sole risk and hazard of the lessee, and if the whole or any part thereof shall be destroyed or damaged by fire, water, or by the leaking or bursting of water pipes, or in any other way or manner, no part of such loss or damage is to be charged to or borne by the lessor in any case whatsoever,—the lessee cannot hold the lessor responsible for damage resulting to him from the bursting of water pipes in that portion of the premises leased to another tenant. Fera v. Child (1874) 115 Mass. 32; Henry H. Tuttle Co. v. Phipps (1914) 219 Mass. 474, 107 N. E. 354. Compare with MORODER v. Fox, ante, 238, holding that a provision obligating the lessee of the first floor of a building to take all necessary precautions to prevent damage to any of the water pipes upon the said premises, or to any part of the demised premises by frost or otherwise, and to pay all damages done to the premises by bursting water pipes, and to let the water out of the pipes when necessary to prevent their freezing, did not impose upon the lessee the duty of turning the water off of pipes running through his portion of the premises to upper floors, although there was but the one set of pipes for the entire building; and that hence, where the pipes located in an upper flat in the possession of the lessor froze and burst, injuring the goods of the covenanting lessee, he could nevertheless hold the lessor responsible for the damage resulting where the latter negligently failed to protect these pipes against freezing while the flat was vacant and unheated.

Negligence of another tenant.

Where a water supply pipe was not dangerous when the premises were demised, but it subsequently burst and water escaped therefrom, due to the failure of a tenant to keep the rooms sufficiently warm to prevent the pipe from freezing, the lessor is not liable to another tenant for injury to his goods, caused by the escaping water. Leonard v. Gunther (1900) 47 App. Div. 194, 62 N. Y. Supp. 99. So, where the injury to the goods of the lessee of a lower floor of a block was caused by a water pipe bursting, due to the negligence of a tenant of an upper floor, the lessor is not liable therefor. Greene v. Hague (1882) 10 Ill. App. 598.

Contributory negligence.

Where the lessee of a building neglected to turn off the water in pipes leading to a water-closet, and the pipes froze and burst, he cannot hold the lessor liable for the resulting injury to his goods. Taylor v. Bailey (1874) 74 Ill. 178. Compare with MORODER v. Fox, ante, 238.

The failure of the tenant of an apartment to have repaired a small leak in a steam radiator, or to turn off the steam when temporarily leaving the apartment, does not constitute contributory negligence. O'Hanlon v. Grubb (1912) 38 App. D. C. 251, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1213.

Counterclaim or set-off.

When sued for rent, the lessee, who remains in possession of the premises, cannot set up as a defense that his goods were damaged by water pipes bursting in a portion of the leased premises under the control of the landlord, and which burst because not properly protected from freezing. Dimmock v. Daly (1880) 9 Mo. App. 354.

A. G. S.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

RACHEL YORK

v.

HERBERT L. WYMAN.

(— Me. —, 98 Atl. 1024.)

New trial — prejudicial statement in presence of juror.

1. A new trial will be granted in case a relative of plaintiff states in the hearing of a juror that material witnesses for defendant had lied and that plaintiff should get the case, whether the juror was influenced or not.

For other cases, see New Trial, III. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. 8.

Same — prejudice of juror.

2. Bias on the part of a juror sufficient to justify a new trial is shown where, in response to a statement in his hearing that material witnesses for defendant had lied and that plaintiff should have the case, he stated that he thought so to, and that so far as he was concerned he would.

For other cases, see New Trial, III. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. 8.

Note. — For attack out of court, in presence of jurymen, upon credibility of witness as ground for new trial, see annotation following this case, post, 248. L.R.A. 1917B.

(November 6, 1916.)

ON MOTION by defendant to set aside a verdict rendered in the Supreme Judicial Court for Somerset County in plaintiff's favor and to grant a new trial for misconduct of a juror. Motion granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George W. Gower, for defendant:

If the juror prejudged the case, or if his conduct or that of Tuskin "might have influenced his mind," or "was of such a nature as to have any tendency to influence it,"—the verdict should be set aside; it not appearing "that there is no possibility that the juror was unaffected" by such misconduct.

Driscoll v. Gatcomb, 112 Me. 289, L.R.A. 1915B, 702, 92 Atl. 39; Heffron v. Gallupe, 55 Me. 563; Belcher v. Estes, 99 Me. 314, 59 Atl. 439; Shepard v. Lewiston, B. & B. Street R. Co. 101 Me. 591, 65 Atl. 20; Harrington v. Worcester, L. & S. Street R. Co. 157 Mass. 579, 32 N. E. 955; 29 Cyc. 799; 1913 Cyc. Ann. 3249; Tomlinson v. Derby, 41 Conn. 269; Bennett v. Howard, 3 Day, 219; Cooper v. Carr, 161 Mich. 405, 126 N. W. 468; Luttrell v. Maysville & L. R. Co. 18 B. Mon. 291; Norcross v. Willard, 82 Vt. 185, 72 Atl. 320.

Messrs. Merrill & Merrill for plaintiff.

Philbrook, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes to us upon a special motion by the defendant, who asks that the verdict against him be set aside, and a new trial granted, because of the misconduct of a member of the jury which rendered that verdict.

From the testimony presented in support of the motion it appears that while the case was still pending, and before the arguments of counsel had been made or the presiding justice had delivered his charge to the jury, a member of the panel was at a livery stable in the town where the trial was in progress, for the purpose of stabling his horse. While there, a man, related to the plaintiff by marriage, stated to or in the presence and hearing of this juror, according to the testimony of one witness, that the defendant and his wife, both being material witnesses, had "lied like hell and that he hoped the woman (meaning the plaintiff) would get the case." To which the juror replied "that he thought so too, and as far as he was concerned they would." According to the testimony of another witness the man stated "that Wyman and his wife had sworn to a lie, or to that effect, and that the case should be decided to the woman" (meaning the plaintiff); and that the juror replied, "I think so too."

This incident did not come to the knowledge of the defendant, or his attorney, until after the verdict had been rendered.

More than once, and in no uncertain language, we have placed the seal of condemnation, not alone upon the attempts of parties by word or deed to influence or prejudice jurors outside the court room, but also upon the indiscretion of their friends along the same line. And we have not stopped to inquire whether the attempt was successful, nor whether the mind of a juror was actually influenced, but only whether or not the mind of a juror might have been influenced by the attempt, or whether the attempt might have any tendency to influence the mind of a juror. Heffron v. Gallupe, 55 Me. 563; Bradbury v. Cony, 62 Me. 223, 16 Am. Rep. 449; Belcher v. Estes, 99 Me. 314, 59 Atl. 439; Shepard v. Lewiston, B. & B. Street R. Co. 101 Me. 591, 65 Atl. 20; Driscoll v. Gatcomb, 112 Me. 289, L.R.A. 1915B, 702, 92 Atl. 39. In a sister jurisdiction we find Nesmith v. Clinton F. Ins. Co. 8 Abb. Pr. 141, cited in Bradbury v. Cony, 62 Me. 223, 16 Am. Rep. 449, where it was proved that during the trial of an action in which there was much conflicting evidence, a juror listened to the statements of a third party, attacking the credibility of the defendant's witnesses. The court held that when it appears that the jury have been approached in such a manner as might have influenced the verdict, it should be set aside, without reference to the source or the motive of the interference. This latter case bears strong resemblance to the one at bar. In Cilley v. Bartlett, 19 N. H. 312, one of the parties, in the presence and hearing of one or more of the jury, asserted in the most positive terms that the testimony of one of the most material witnesses for his opponent was utterly and absolutely false. He claimed that he did not know any one of the jury was present at the time, but the justice who announced the opinion of the court said: "Whether he knew this fact or not, is not a matter that can be readily proved. But there will be no security for the proper administration of justice, if a party, while his case is on trial, can be permitted to make statements denouncing his opponent's witnesses, during the adjournment, after the jury have separated, whether he is aware of the presence of a juror or not. . . . The presumption is that when jurors hear such statements they are more or less affected by them."

In that case new trial was granted for the reasons just given.

But we do not stop with the phase of the case already discussed. The testimony shows statements made by the juror which should not be overlooked. In Cooper v. Carr, 161 Mich. 405, 126 N. W. 468, it was stated as a well-known rule that where, during the progress of the trial, and before the submission of the case, a juror has made statements outside the jury room concerning the case, or evidence offered therein, indicating a fixed opinion unfavorable to the moving party, or ill will towards him, it is ground for a new trial. In Tomlinson v. Derby, 41 Conn. 268, a new trial was ordered because one of the jurors sitting on the case assented to a statement made to him outside the jury room, by a person other than a juror, to the effect that if the trial should continue fifteen or twenty days, and the plaintiff should recover $5,000, he would have nothing left after paying the expenses of the suit. The same juror, at another period of the trial, said substantially to another person, not a juror, that if the plaintiff should recover $5,000 there would be nothing left after paying the expenses of the case. In Wightman v. Butler County, 83 Iowa, 691, 49 N. W. 1041, a juror informed one not connected with the case "that he had made up his mind how he should decide it, and that the lawyers could not change him." This statement was made before the evidence was closed, and the court ordered a new trial.

Many other authorities might be cited, but we deem it unnecessary to go farther. Either the possible influence upon the mind of the juror by the statements made in his hearing as to the credibility of the defendant and his wife, or his own statement indicating a fixed purpose on his part as to how he would vote when the verdict was under consideration, would afford grounds for sustaining the defendant's motion.

Motion granted.

New trial ordered.

Annotation—Attack out of court in presence of jurymen, upon credibility of witness as ground for new trial.

Cilley v. Bartlett (1849) 19 N. H. 312, is set out with sufficient detail in YORK v. WYMAN, ante, 246, and fully supports the holding in that case.

And in Nesmith v. Clinton F. Ins. Co. (1858) 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 141, which is also cited in YORK v. WYMAN, a verdict was set aside and a new trial ordered where it appeared that a certain person made himself very active in the case, and had several conversations with one of the jurors during which he told the juror that he knew that some of the witnesses for one of the parties would swear to anything for a dollar, the court saying: "When a jury has been improperly approached, it is not easy to prove who or what moved the person to tamper with them. It is enough that they have been tampered with in such manner as might have influenced their verdict, and in every such case the court will set the verdict aside without hesitation."

These cases are also supported by cases in which an attack is made in the presence of a juror, upon one of the parties to a case, which tends to affect his credibility. Thus, in Welch v. Taverner (1889) 78 Iowa, 207, 42 N. W. 650, a new trial was ordered because one who was not a member of the jury slept in the room with the jurors and had conversations with one or two of them in which he made statements reflecting upon the character of the plaintiff and tending to affect prejudicially his credibility.

And in State v. Landry (1903) 29 Mont. 218, 74 Pac. 418, it was held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting a motion for a new trial on the ground that at a view by the jury of a mare which defendant was accused of stealing but which he claimed to own, persons present indicated to the jury by their actions, or by sounds of derision uttered, a belief as to the ownership of the mare, whether such persons intended their actions to influence the jury or not.

In State v. Ayer (1851) 23 N. H. 301, it appears in the statement of facts that a witness for the prosecution, while in the presence of one of the jury, said to others that he had come to testify against some of the lying scamps that defendant had for witnesses, and made other remarks derogatory to defendant; but in its opinion the court mentioned only the remarks derogatory to the defendant and refused to set aside the verdict, it appearing that the witness ceased speaking when he saw that the juror was present, and stated that he did not know that any juror was present when he made the remarks, and that the juror told him afterward that he did not take any notice of the conversation; and it further appeared that the witness was not attempting to influence the juror and that he was not employed to do so. R. L. S.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

ROLLO S. HEWITT, Employee.

JOHN HANCOCK MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Employer.

CASUALTY COMPANY OF AMERICA, Insurer, Appt.

(— Mass. —, 113 N. E. 572.)

Master and servant — injury to insurance agent — arising out of employment.

Injury to an insurance agent by the overturning of the automobile of a prospective customer, in which he had taken passage because of the opportunity afforded him of pressing the claims of the policy which he offered, does not arise out of his employment within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, where he was not acting under direct orders, but on his own initiative.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II, a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(September 14, 1916.)

APPEAL by the insurer from a judgment of the Superior Court for Suffolk County affirming an award of compensation by the Industrial Accident Board to an insurance agent in a proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act to recover compensation for personal injuries received by him. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Peabody, Arnold, Batchelder, & Luther, for appellant:

The injury was not one arising "out of" Hewitt's employment.

Trim Joint Dist. School v. Kelly [1914] A. C. 667, 83 L. J. P. C. N. S. 220, 111 L. T. N. S. 305, 30 Times L. R. 452, 58 Sol. Jo. 493, 48 Ir. L. T. 141, 7 B. W. C. C. 274, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 104; Weekes v. Stead [1914] W. N. 263, 83 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1542, 111 L. T. N. S. 693, 30 Times L. R. 586, 58 Sol. Jo. 633, 7 B. W. C. C. 398, 6 N. C. C. A. 1010; Mitchinson v. Day Bros. [1913] 1 K. B. 603, 82 L. J. K. B. N. S. 421, 108 L. T. N. S. 193, 29 Times L. R. 267, 57 Sol. Jo. 300, 6 B. W. C. C. 190; Clayton v. Hardwick Colliery Co. 7 B. W. C. C. 643; Milliken's Case, 216 Mass. 293, L.R.A.1916A, 337, 103 N. E. 898, 4 N. C. C. A. 512; Fumiciello's Case, 219 Mass. 486, 107 N. E. 349; Slade

v. Taylor, 8 B. W. C. C. 65; Plumb v. Cobden Flour Mills Co. [1914] A. C. 62, 83 L. J. K. B. N. S. 197, 109 L. T. N. S. 750, 30 Times L. R. 174, 58 Sol. Jo. 184, 51 Scot. L. R. 861, 7 B. W. C. C. 1, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 495; Sheldon v. Needham, 111 L. T. N. S. 729, 30 Times L. R. 590, 58 Sol. Jo. 652, 7 B. W. C. C. 471; Williams v. Smith, 108 L. T. N. S. 200, 6 B. W. C. C. 102; Edwards v. Wingham Agri. Implement Co. [1913] 3 K. B. 596, 82 L. J. K. B. N. S. 998, 109 L. T. N. S. 50, 6 B. W. C. C. 511; Kinghorn v. Guthrie [1913] S. C. 1155, 50 Scot. L. R. 863, 6 B. W. C. C. 887; Warner v. Couchman [1912] A. C. 35, 81 L. J. K. B. N. S. 45, 105 L. T. N. S. 676, 28 Times L. R. 58, 56 Sol. Jo. 70, 49 Scot. L. R. 681, 5 B. W. C. C. 177; Craske v. Wigan [1909] 2 K. B. 635, 78 L. J. K. B. N. S. 994, 101 L. T. N. S. 6, 25 Times L. R. 632, 53 Sol. Jo. 560, 2 B. W. C. C. 35.

The injury was not one arising "in the course of" Hewitt's employment.

Jibb v. Chadwick [1915] 2 K. B. 94, [1914] W. N. 52, 84 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1241, 112 L. T. N. S. 878, 31 Times L. R. 185, 8 B. W. C. C. 152; Whitfield v. Lambert, 84 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1378, 112 L. T. N. S. 803, 138 L. T. Jo. 292, 8 B. W. C. C. 91; Lee v. The St. George, 7 B. W. C. C. 85; R. & J. McCrae v. Renfrew [1914] S. C. 539, 51 Scot. L. R. 467, 7 B. W. C. C. 898; Butt v. Provident Clothing & Supply Co. 6 B. W. C. C. 18; Everitt v. Eastaff, 6 B. W. C. C. 184.

Messrs. H. F. Hathaway and J. E. Warner for the employee.

Pierce, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The findings of the Industrial Accident Board in substance are: That Rollo S. Hewitt was in the employ of the John Hancock Life Insurance Company as an insurance agent attached to its office in Taunton, Massachusetts, previously to and on September 23 and 24, 1913; that it is customary for insurance agents to see prospective customers whenever and wherever it is most convenient and agreeable for such persons to be seen by them; that Hewitt at different times had talked with one Pierce on life insurance; that Pierce, having occasion to go in his automobile to Providence, Rhode Island, and desiring further to discuss the policy, invited Hewitt to accom-cifically, as to recovery of compensation for an injury to employee while on the street, see annotation following Hopkins v. Michigan Sugar Co. L.R.A.1916A, 314.

Note. — The American cases on the question as to what injuries are deemed to arise out of and in the course of the employment are discussed at pages 232 et seq. of the annotation in L.R.A.1916A, 23, covering the general subject of workmen's compensation acts; the English cases on the question being discussed at pages 40 et seq. Spe. L.R.A.1917B.

For later cases and annotation, consult the L.R.A. Digests and Indexes to Notes covering volumes subsequent to L.R.A.1916A, under the title "Workmen's Compensation."

pany him; that the trip, in the going and returning, was expected to be made in three hours; that Hewitt went, believing that he could further the interests of his employer and have another chance to close the contract of insurance; that as a result of the discussion had during the night of September 23, 1913, Pierce decided to take out a policy; that shortly before reaching Providence the machine broke down; that the machine was repaired during the forenoon of September 24, 1913; that after some slight delay they started back; that at about 1:15 A. M., just after passing the Taunton line, the machine "turned turtle," throwing out and injuring both Hewitt and Pierce. The only question is whether this accident was one arising out of and in the course of the employment of Hewitt.

The field of Hewitt's employment, measured and limited, not by material space, but by his ability to find, interest, and retain as customers, persons interested in providing for the whole or partial future independence of themselves and of those dear to them, in a sense was boundless. The time for work and the manner and method to be followed in its successful pursuit necessarily rested in the judgment of the agent, founded upon his experience and skill. In going to Providence, Rhode Island, the agent plainly did not leave the field within which he was authorized to work for his employer; nor, in availing himself of the opportunity for legitimate persuasion granted to him by Pierce, did he violate any express or implied condition of his employment.

In the prosecution of the business of soliciting insurance Hewitt was independent. While authorized and expected to go where there was any reasonable prospect of securing a customer, his time and his method of procedure were his own. He might travel on foot, on horseback, by trolley, train, or automobile. He might write, telephone, or telegraph. He was wholly free as to time, place, or weather. Under such circumstances, when one accepts an invitation to ride an injury received is not "occasioned by the nature of the employment."

The danger incident to the use of an automobile is not a "causative danger" "peculiar to the work," but is a risk which is common to all persons using one. The injury cannot be said reasonably to have been contemplated as the result of the exposure of the employment. Sheldon v. Needham [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 274, 30 Times L. R. 590, 58 Sol. Jo. 652, 7 B. W. C. C. 471; Slade v. Taylor [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 53, 8 B. W. C. C. 65; McNicol's Case, 215 Mass. 497, L.R.A.1916A, 306, 102 N. E. 697, 4 N. C. C. A. 522. Compare Pierce v. Provident Clothing & Supply Co. [1911] 1 K. B. 997, 80 L. J. K. B. N. S. 831, 104 L. T. N. S. 473, 27 Times L. R. 299, 55 Sol. Jo. 363, 4 B. W. C. C. 242.

It becomes unnecessary to decide whether Hewitt was an employee within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

The decree of the Superior Court appealed from is reversed, and a decree must be entered declaring that the employee has no claim against the insurer.

So ordered.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

C. A. P. TURNER, Appt.,
v.

FRANK A. RANDALL et al., Respts.

(— Minn. —, 159 N. W. 958.)

Witness — protection from suit.

1. A resident of another state who comes into this state as a witness in a cause pending in one of our courts, and who is entitled to protection from the service of process while attending, does not lose the protection by not departing from the state on the first train after the termination of his service as such witness.

For other cases, see Writ and Process, II. d, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Headnotes by BROWN, Ch. J.

Note. — As to privilege of suitor or witness from service of process as affected by route taken or time consumed, see annotation following this case, post, 252. L.R.A.1917B.

Same — delay in leaving state.

2. Whether by taking a later train, within nine hours after the termination of his service, when other trains direct to the home of the witness left the state at an earlier hour, he unreasonably delayed his departure from the state, presented a question of fact, and it is held that the court below did not err in holding that the delay was not unreasonable.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. l, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 17, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Hennepin County setting aside the service of process on defendants in an action brought to recover damages for alleged conspiracy to defraud plaintiff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Booth & McDonald, for appellant:

Defendants delayed their departure from the state for an unreasonable time.

Woodruff v. Austin, 15 Misc. 450, 37 N. Y. Supp. 22; Chaffee v. Jones, 19 Pick. 260; Finucane v. Warner, 60 Misc. 336, 112 N. Y. Supp. 137; Linton v. Cooper, 54 Neb. 438, 69 Am. St. Rep. 727, 74 N. W. 842; Strong v. Dickinson, 1 Mees. & W. 487, 150 Eng. Reprint, 527, 5 Dowl. P. C. 86, 2 Gale, 83, 1 Tyrw. & G. 683, 5 L. J. Exch. N. C. 231; Mullen v. Sanborn, 79 Md. 364, 25 L.R.A. 72, 47 Am. St. Rep. 421, 29 Atl. 522.

Messrs. Benton & Morley, for respondent Jensen:

A witness need not take the first train in order to be exempt from service of process.

Barber v. Knowles, 77 Ohio St. 81, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 663, 82 N. E. 1065, 11 Ann. Cas. 1144; Wilbur v. Boyer, 1 W. N. C. 154; Tyrone Bank v. Doty, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 558; Hatch v. Blisset, Gilb. L. & Eq. Rep. 309, 93 Eng. Reprint, 338.

The holding of the lower court is in accord with sound public policy.

Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118, 33 N. W. 549.

Mr. A. B. Darellus for respondent Randall:

Taking all things into consideration, defendant Randall did not waive his exemption from service by staying in Minneapolis from 11 o'clock A. M. to 8 o'clock P. M. when he left for his home in Chicago by the usual route of travel.

Northwestern F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co. 105 Minn. 483, 117 N. W. 825; Cochran v. Toher, 14 Minn. 385, Gil. 293; Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118, 33 N. W. 549; First Nat. Bank v. Ames, 39 Minn. 179, 39 N. W. 308; Wilbur v. Boyer, 1 W. N. C. 154; Hayes v. Shields, 2 Yeates, 222; Tyrone Bank v. Doty, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 558; Kinne v. Lant, 68 Fed. 436; Ex parte Hall, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 274; Parker v. Marco, 136 N. Y. 585, 20 L.R.A. 45, 32 Am. St. Rep. 770, 32 N. E. 989; Parker v. Hotchkiss, 1 Wall. Jr. 269, Fed. Cas. No. 10,739; Pitt v. Coomes, 5 Barn. & Ad. 1078, 110 Eng. Reprint, 1091, 3 Nev. & M. 212; Lightfoot v. Cameron, 2 W. Bl. 1113, 96 Eng. Reprint, 658; Ex parte Clarke, 2 Deacon & C. Bankr. Cas. 99; Mahon v. Mahon, 2 Ir. Eq. Rep. 440; Hatch v. Blisset, Gilb. L. & Eq. Rep. 308, 93 Eng. Reprint, 338.

Brown, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendants both reside at Chicago, in the state of Illinois. They came to this state, one as a party and witness, the other solely as a witness, in attendance upon the trial of an action pending in the district court of Hennepin county. The trial of the action ended by an order of dismissal on February 18, 1916, at 11 o'clock A. M. Immediately thereafter defendants proceeded directly to a railroad ticket office and purchased tickets for their return to Chicago, making reservations upon a train leaving Minneapolis at 8 o'clock in the evening of that day, upon which train they departed from the state. During the afternoon of the 18th, and subsequent to the dismissal of the action, defendants were both served with the summons in this action. Thereafter upon motion the service was set aside upon the ground that defendants were exempt therefrom by reason of the fact that their presence in the state was for the sole purpose to attend the trial as witnesses of the action referred to. Plaintiff appealed.

Plaintiff does not question the rule that the resident of another state who has in good faith come into this state as a witness in a cause pending in one of our courts is exempt from the service of process in a civil action brought against him, providing he acts reasonably and does not delay his departure from the state for an unreasonable time after the termination of his service as such witness. Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118, 33 N. W. 549. The claim is that the court below erred in not holding that defendants delayed their departure from the state for an unreasonable time. In this we do not concur. The claim of delay is predicated upon the fact that other trains upon the same and other railroads by regular schedule left for Chicago much earlier on the day the trial ended than the train selected by defendants, and that by not taking one of them defendants lost the protection of the rule. There were other trains over this and other roads, with leaving time all the way from 3 o'clock in the afternoon to 6:45 in the evening. But the rule requiring a departure from the state within a reasonable time is not so exacting as to impose upon the party the duty of making hot pursuit of the first train out of the state. No hard and fast requirements attend the rule, and no precise time for departure can be stated as applicable alike to all cases. Much necessarily depends upon the situation and surroundings of each case, and the question resolves itself into one of fact. Linton v. Cooper, 54 Neb. 440, 69 Am. St. Rep. 727, 74 N. W. 842. And though there were earlier trains which defendants in this case could have taken, we are clear that the court was not required to find that their failure to do so was unreasonable within the proper meaning and purpose of the rule. Parker v. Marco, 136 N. Y. 585, 20 L.R.A. 45, 32 Am. St. Rep. 770, 32 N. E. 989; Barber v. Knowles, 77

Ohio St. 81, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 663, 82 N. W. 1065, 11 Ann. Cas. 1144, and cases there cited.

The other question suggested by counsel for plaintiff on the oral argument is not presented by the record, and is not therefore considered.

Order affirmed.

Annotation—Privilege of suitor or witness from service of process as affected by route taken or time consumed.

This note is a continuation of the one to Barber v. Knowles, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 663.

As to exemption of suitor or witness from service while in an intermediate state en route to or from trial, see annotation following Sofge v. Lowe, L.R.A. 1916A, 734.

Generally as to exemption of nonresident party from service of civil process while in state in connection with case, see notes to Long v. Hawken, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1101; Vaughn v. Boyd, L.R.A. 1915A, 694; and Burroughs v. Cocke, L.R.A.1916E, 1173.

As to right of nonresident to exemption from service of process while within a jurisdiction pursuant to condition of bail bond, see notes to Netograph Mfg. Co. v. Scrugham, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 333, and Ex parte Hendersen, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 328.

As to privilege of suitor or witness in Federal court from arrest or service of summons issued out of state court, see note to Chanler v. Sherman, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 992.

The rule, set out in the earlier note, that the amount of time which a witness or suitor may consume and still retain the benefit of his privilege, covers a reasonable time for both going to and returning from the place of trial, is sustained by the following later cases, which show what constitutes a reasonable time:

After necessity for presence of party or witness has ceased.

Supplementing note in 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 664.

In TURNER v. RANDALL, ante, 250, it was held that a delay by a nonresident witness of nine hours after the termination of the trial in leaving the state was not unreasonable, although a number of trains direct to his home left before the one which he took.

The service of an order of arrest in a civil action upon a nonresident very shortly after the close of a hearing at which he testified before a referee in involuntary bankruptcy proceedings against him, and while he was proceeding from the office of the referee to that of his attorney, will be vacated upon the ground that he was entitled to a reasonable time to return to the place from which he came, and that the delay to consult with his attorney was not unreasonable. Goldsmith v. Haskell (1907) 120 App. Div. 403, 105 N. Y. Supp. 327, appeal dismissed without opinion in (1907) 189 N. Y. 536, 82 N. E. 1126.

In Gibbons v. Tuttle, Newfoundl. Rep. (1906) 186, where a member of a United States firm doing business in Canada went to the latter place to testify in insolvency proceedings against the firm, and, upon the dismissal of the petition after the giving of his testimony, booked his passage for New York by a steamer scheduled to leave the place of trial nine days later, and before the steamer sailed was arrested upon civil process, the order for his arrest was discharged upon the ground that his delay in the city was not unreasonable or sufficient to deprive him of his privilege as a witness.

In Bunce v. Humphrey (1915) 214 N. Y. 21, 108 N. E. 95, where one voluntarily came from a foreign country for the purpose of being a witness in a prosecution by the United States, and after arrival within the jurisdiction of the court was served with a subpoena requiring him to remain in attendance until dismissed by the court or the attorney general, and, after the submission of the case to the jury, but before the rendition of a verdict, was served with a summons, it was held, upon the reversal of an order denying a motion to set aside the service of the summons, that in view of the fact that the case had not been terminated by a verdict, there was nothing in the contention of the respondent that any grace which the witness might have enjoyed during the pendency of the trial had expired, and that he should have left the state before the service was made.

But where a nonresident came from his home to redeem his property from a foreclosure sale, and exchanged his equity of redemption for other land, it was held that he lost his immunity from service of process by a delay of one day, after the consummation of the exchange, in taking the regular evening train to his home, assuming that such exchange constituted a redemption, that the immunity of a nonresident redemptioner would cover all of the time necessary to make the redemption, and that a proceeding to redeem was such a proceeding as to entitle a nonresident redemptioner to immunity from service of process while actually engaged in redeeming and for a reasonable time in coming from and returning to the state of his domicile. Groundwater v. Town (1916) — Wash. —, 160 Pac. 1055.

And in Burroughs v. Coeke (1916) — Okla. —, L.R.A.1916E, 1170, 156 Pac. 196, where a nonresident who came into a state to attend upon the taking of depositions to be used in the trial of an action instituted by him in his own state was held to have forfeited his privilege because he transacted other business than that connected with the taking of the depositions, the appellate court said that in leaving on the same day that the taking of the depositions was completed, it would ordinarily appear that he left within a reasonable time, but the trial court found to the contrary, and as it understood all of the surrounding facts and circumstances, heard all of the evidence introduced upon both sides, and doubtless knew the train schedule, they were not disposed to disturb such finding.

Before presence of party or witness has become necessary.

Supplementing note in 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 666.

In State ex rel. Wolcott v. Biedler (1916) — Del. —, 99 Atl. 278, directors who came from another state to testify in an action against their corporation and were served with process before their presence became necessary, were held not to have been at the place of trial an unreasonable time before the taking of testimony was commenced, where it appeared that they arrived on the 1st and 2d of February, and were served on the latter day at 9.30 o'clock A. M., and that at 11 o'clock on that day the taking of the testimony was begun and they were called as witnesses on the 8th, 10th, and 14th of February.

During adjournment.

Supplementing note in 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 667.

A nonresident attending before a referee in involuntary bankruptcy proceedings against him does not lose his privilege from arrest in a civil action by remaining during a three-day adjournment, where he is required to be in attendance on the adjourned day either for such cross-examination as may be desired, or to sign the testimony which has been already given on the prior hearing. Goldsmith v. Haskell (1907) 120 App. Div. 403, 105 N. Y. Supp. 327, appeal dismissed without opinion in (1907) 189 N. Y. 536, 82 N. E. 1126.

G. V. I.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.
(Division B.)

ÆTNA INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

S. L. HEIDELBERG.

(— Miss. —, 72 So. 852.)

Insurance — interest of conditional vendor — illegal use of property.

1. Insurance on the interest of a conditional vendor in household furniture is not vitiated by the fact that the vendee uses it for conducting a house of ill fame; at least, if, at the time of loss, such business had been discontinued and the furniture was in charge of a watchman.

For other cases, see Contracts, III. c, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — As to insurance on bawdyhouse or furniture therein, see annotation following this case, post, 257.
L.R.A.1917B.

Same — classification — valued policy.

2. Furniture sold under conditional sale and put in use by the vendee is classed as household furniture within the meaning of a valued-policy law, and not as part of the seller's stock in trade.

For other cases, see Insurance, VI. c, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — property of vendee.

3. A policy covering the interest of a conditional vendor in household furniture does not include property sold for cash after the execution of the policy, although it is mingled with that covered by the policy.

For other cases, see Insurance, III. d, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 13, 1916.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Forrest County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a fire insurance policy. Modified on suggestion of error.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McLaurin & Armistead, for appellant:

Neither party to an illegal contract or to a contract made in reference to conducting an illegal business can enforce it, whether that business is malum in se or malum prohibitum.

Woodson v. Hopkins, 85 Miss. 171, 70 L.R.A. 645, 107 Am. St. Rep. 275, 37 So. 1000, 38 So. 298; Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight & Sons Co. 212 U. S. 263, 53 L. ed. 505, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 280; Conithan v. Royal Ins. Co. 91 Miss. 396, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 214, 124 Am. St. Rep. 701, 45 So. 361, 15 Ann. Cas. 539; Dominion F. Ins. Co. v. Nakata, 52 Can. S. C. 204, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 1063; Bruneau v. Laliberte, Rap. Jud. Quebec, 19 C. S. 425.

Section 2592 of the Code of 1906, and the Act of 1912, amendatory thereof, were not enacted by the legislature for the purpose of protecting merchants in their title to merchandise, although the merchandise in question may perchance be furniture and household goods.

4 Cooley, Briefs on Ins. p. 3485; 1 Clement, Fire Ins. 96; Standard Sewing Mach. Co. v. Royal Ins. Co. 201 Pa. 645, 51 Atl. 354; Chippewa Lumber Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 80 Mich. 116, 44 N. W. 1055; German Ins. Co. v. Everett, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 36 S. W. 125; Germier v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. 109 La. 341, 33 So. 361.

The contract of sale made by the plaintiff to Marie Warwick, or to Nettie Wilson, was not an enforceable contract at law.

Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. v. Mason, 44 Minn. 318, 9 L.R.A. 506, 20 Am. St. Rep. 580, 46 N. W. 558; Standard Furniture Co. v. Van Alstine, 22 Wash. 670, 51 L.R.A. 889, 79 Am. St. Rep. 960, 62 Pac. 145; Hill v. Spear, 50 N. H. 253, 9 Am. Rep. 205; Wheaton v. North British & M. Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 415, 9 Am. St. Rep. 220, 18 Pac. 758; State v. Wilson, 73 Kan. 334, 117 Am. St. Rep. 479, 80 Pac. 639, 84 Pac. 737; Sun Mut. Ins. Co. v. Searles, 73 Miss. 62, 18 So. 544.

Messrs. Sullivan, Conner, & Sullivan, for appellee:

A new contract, founded on a new consideration, although in relation to property respecting which there had been unlawful transactions between the parties, is not itself unlawful.

Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258, 6 L. ed. 468; Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Pet. 157, 10 L. ed. 105; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Clay, 101 Ga. 331, 65 Am. St. Rep. 307, 28 S. E. 853; National F. Ins. Co. v. United States Bldg. & L. Asso. 21 Ky. L. Rep. L.R.A.1917B.

1207, 54 S. W. 714; Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. C. A. Hoover Distilling Co. 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 873, 105 C. C. A. 128, 182 Fed. 590; Hanover Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 48 C. C. A. 482, 109 Fed. 421; Jefferson v. Burhans, 29 C. C. A. 481, 58 U. S. App. 586, 85 Fed. 949; Kansas City Hydraulic Press Brick Co. v. National Surety Co. 93 C. C. A. 132, 167 Fed. 496.

It is no defense to a contract that has been performed by the promisee that the agreement or its performance might aid the promisee to violate the law or to defy the public policy of the state, when the promisor neither combined nor conspired with the promisee to accomplish that result, nor shared in the benefits of such a violation.

Jenson v. Toltec Ranch Co. 98 C. C. A. 60, 174 Fed. 86; Wald's Pollock, Contr 3d ed. 485; Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258, 273, 6 L. ed. 468; Armstrong v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 133 U. S. 433, 33 L. ed. 747, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 450; Hanover Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 48 C. C. A. 482, 109 Fed. 421; Waterbury v. McKinnon, 77 C. C. A. 294, 146 Fed. 737; Ingraham v. National Salt Co. 65 C. C. A. 54, 130 Fed. 676; Taylor v. North Star Gold Min. Co. 79 Cal. 285, 21 Pac. 753; Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Pacific R. Co. 117 Cal. 332, 49 Pac. 197; Holman v. Johnson, Cowp. pt. 1, p. 341, 98 Eng. Reprint, 1120; Faikney v. Reynous, 4 Burr. 2069, 98 Eng. Reprint, 79; Pellecat v. Angell, 2 Crompt. M. & R. 311, 150 Eng. Reprint, 135, 1 Gale, 187, 5 Tyrw. 945, 4 L. J. Exch. N. S. 326; Hodgson v. Temple, 5 Taunt. 181, 128 Eng. Reprint, 656, 1 Marsh. 5, 14 Revised Rep. 738; Marion Trust Co. v. Crescent Loan & Invest. Co. 27 Ind. App. 451, 87 Am. St. Rep. 257, 61 N. E. 691; Wright v. Hughes, 119 Ind. 324, 12 Am. St. Rep. 412, 21 N. E. 907; First Nat. Bank v. Dove-tail Body & Gear Co. 143 Ind. 550, 52 Am. St. Rep. 435, 40 N. E. 810; Tracy v. Talmage, 14 N. Y. 162, 67 Am. Dec. 132; Thompson v. Lambert, 44 Iowa, 239.

Defendant is bound by the contract as written, and the valued-policy law applies to it.

Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Schlenker, 80 Miss. 680, 32 So. 155; Western Assur. Co. v. Phelps, 77 Miss. 658, 27 So. 745.

Stevens, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was affirmed without opinion, but in view of the earnestness and confidence with which counsel for appellant press the suggestion of error that was filed in due time, we are stating briefly the reasons that induced us to affirm the case. The appellee in this case, a retail furniture dealer, entered into a contract of insurance with appellant, whereby appellant insured appellee against all loss or damage by fire to an amount not exceeding $2,400 "on their interest in the household furniture of every description, useful and ornamental, while contained in the two-story, frame, shingle building occupied by Marie Warwick as a female boarding house, situate on the east side of Dewey street of Hattiesburg, Mississippi. It is understood that this property is under contract of sale to Marie Warwick, title being retained by the assured until all deferred payments are made, and this policy covers only on any interest that the assured may have in the property at the time of any loss or damage by fire."

Mr. Heidelberg had, in due course of business, on June 14, 1913, sold and delivered the articles covered by this policy to the said Marie Warwick, for a total consideration of $2,630.75, and the numerous articles so sold had been delivered to and were under the control of Marie Warwick when the contract of insurance was entered into. On or about April 8, 1914, Marie Warwick having failed to pay for the goods in question, they were turned over to Heidelberg under his retained title contract, and appear to have been under Heidelberg's control from that date until about the 13th day of April, following, when they passed into the possession and under the control of one Nettie Wilson. The latter left the property in the house formerly occupied by Marie Warwick, and the house was in the care of a servant or watchman until the 18th day of April, when the property so insured was totally destroyed by fire. The proof shows that Marie Warwick was a keeper of a house of ill fame at the time she purchased the furniture. She made certain payments on the property, reducing the amount to $2,175.65. On April 13th the day that appellee resold the property to Nettie Wilson, he notified Mr. King, the agent of appellant, of the change of ownership, and also advised Mr. King that he had sold a few additional articles of household furniture and furnishings to Nettie Wilson, the total purchase price of which was $74.35, thereby making the total balance claimed against Nettie Wilson of $2,250. Appellee requested the agent to make the necessary notation on his records, and to this request Mr. King replied: "All right, I will take care of that. I will fix it all right." Mr. King is the regular local agent of the company at Hattiesburg, with authority to countersign policies, and, in fact, wrote the policy of insurance in this case. Appellant, defendant in the court below, filed several pleas. A demurrer was interposed and sustained to the third plea, in L.R.A.1917B.

which appellant submitted that "the plaintiff says that the defendant ought not to be entitled to recover anything on this contract because the purchaser or purchasers of the property in question, the subject of the insurance, and the owner of it at the time the contract of sale was made, and practically continuously thereafter until the fire, was engaged in an illegal and immoral business, to wit, she or they were the proprietresses or keepers of a house of ill fame," of which appellee had notice, etc.

This is the main point of law relied upon by counsel for a reversal of this case. Upon this question the fact must be kept in mind that the subject of this insurance, that is, the household furniture and furnishings, were purchased by Marie Warwick on credit, some fifteen days prior to the issuance of the policy in question, and at the time the contract of insurance was written the furniture no longer constituted a part of appellee's stock of merchandise, but had been set up by Marie Warwick in her dwelling house and was being used for the purposes for which the property was adapted and purchased. It therefore constituted household furniture when Mr. Heidelberg protected his insurable interest therein. This case does not involve the right of Mr. Heidelberg to collect the purchase price of the property either from Marie Warwick or Nettie Wilson. They purchased the property and were the equitable owners thereof, while Heidelberg, in the eyes of the law, simply held the contract that gave him, not the rights of an absolute owner, but security for his debt. In obtaining the insurance, Heidelberg paid the premium of $60, and the contract is one directly between Heidelberg and the insurance company. In our judgment, the illegal and immoral business conducted by the purchaser of this property cannot and does not vitiate the contract of insurance, which indemnifies the merchant, and not the keeper of the house of ill fame. It is said by the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Chief Justice Marshall, in Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258, 6 L. ed. 468: "If the promise be unconnected with the illegal act, and is founded on a new consideration, it is not tainted by the act, although it was known to the party to whom the promise was made, and although he was the contriver and conductor of the illegal act."

And: "A new contract, founded on a new consideration, although in relation to property respecting which there had been unlawful transactions between the parties, is not itself unlawful."

The case of Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Pet. 157, 10 L. ed. 105, involved a contract of insurance upon a schooner owned by Polleys and sailing under a false and fraudulent certificate of registry, in violation of the laws of the United States. It was contended that the contract of insurance was void. The Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Story, overruled this contention "upon the ground that the policy was a lawful contract in itself, and only remotely connected with the illegal use of the certificate of registry, and in no respect designed to aid, assist, or advance any such illegal purpose. We all know that there are cases where a contract may be valid, notwithstanding it is remotely connected with an independent illegal transaction, which, however, it is not designed to aid or promote."

The case of Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Clay, 101 Ga. 331, 65 Am. St. Rep. 307, 28 S. E. 853, involved a policy of insurance on a house leased by the owner to a woman of ill fame, and with knowledge that the house was being used for purposes of prostitution. The court says: "The policy was for a valuable and legal consideration and for what appears on its face to be a good and lawful purpose. It was made not to protect the business of keeping a lewd house, but to protect the property of the owner of the building. Even were the owner the person conducting this illegal business, the policy would be issued to him, not as one engaged in such business, but as the owner of the property insured; not to protect him against the consequences of the illegal business, but against accident to his property. . . . A consequence so negative in its character, so remote in its effect, is one which cannot be said in law to promote or to tend to promote the maintenance of these houses. Such policy of insurance can be said to promote the illegal business only by failing to discourage it; to aid it only by declining to throw obstacles in its way," etc.

Our own court held in the case of Conithan v. Royal Ins. Co. 91 Miss. 386, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 214, 124 Am. St. Rep. 701, 45 So. 361, 15 Ann. Cas. 539, that "a policy of fire insurance issued to the keeper of a bawdyhouse upon furniture used therein is not void because of the unlawful business conducted there."

The court, in its opinion, observes: "She could have conducted and carried on her bawdyhouse as well without the insurance policy as she could with it. The only effect of the insurance policy was that, in case her property was lost by fire, she should have an indemnity for the loss of the property; but the contract did not even remotely aid or assist her in the conduct of this business. . . . The keeping of the bawdyhouse was an independent, illegal transaction, which the insurance policy in no way aided or promoted."

If the keeper of a bawdyhouse can herself obtain a valid contract of insurance, then certainly the merchant who has a lien upon the same property should be accorded the right to protect his insurable interest. Furthermore, the proof does not show that Nettie Wilson was using the property for immoral purposes, but, on the contrary, the house in which the furniture was situated was not being occupied by Nettie Wilson at all, but was in the care of a watchman at night, and this with the full knowledge and assent of appellant's agent.

There is no merit in the contention that the property insured should not be classed as household furniture, but should be regarded as a part of appellee's stock of merchandise. The contract expressly insured the property as household furniture; the various articles had been severed from the stock, delivered to the purchaser, put in order, and were actually being used as household furniture, and must in fact be so classed. Our valued-policy law therefore applied, and appellant was not justified in attempting to show the actual cash value of the property, or its depreciation, or the amount it would cost to replace it. Appellant had the right of inspection at the time the insurance was written, and by writing the policy in question it is concluded, under the terms of our statute, on all questions of valuation, and cannot now be heard to say that the property was or is not worth the amount at which it is insured.

This record shows, however, that certain lace curtains, bedspreads, cuspidors, and other specified articles were, on April 13th, sold by appellee directly to Nettie Wilson, and constituted, therefore, no part of the subject of the insurance at the time the policy was executed. While the agent was requested to embrace these articles in the policy, no indorsement to this effect was in fact made, and the policy does not in terms cover these articles. Their value is shown to be $74.35. They were not originally subject to the retained-title contract entered into between appellant and Marie Warwick. In affirming this case without an opinion we were, as to this item, led into error by assuming that the amount of recovery did not exceed the face of the policy, and therefore appellant has no complaint. We now think, however, that inasmuch as the proof clearly shows that these articles were sold long after the policy was written, and sold not to Marie Warwick, but to Nettie Wilson, they do not come within its protection. It is our judgment that the suggestion of error should be sustained to the extent of reducing the judgment $74.35, the allowance of which constituted error on the part of the court below. We also think the costs of the appeal should be taxed against appellee.

Suggestion of error sustained in part.

Annotation—Insurance on bawdyhouse or furniture therein.

This note is supplementary to the note appended to Conithan v. Royal Ins. Co. 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214, where the earlier cases are collected.

ÆTNA INS. CO. v. HEIDELBERG, ante, 253, in taking the view that fire insurance placed upon property which is being used in conducting a bawdyhouse is not so connected with the carrying on of the illegal or immoral business as to be void on the grounds of public policy, is in accord with the weight of authority passing upon that specific question.

In Morin v. Anglo-American Ins. Co. (1910) 3 Alberta L. R. 121, the court sustained the right to recover from an insurance company on a policy of fire insurance issued in favor of the owner of a house which, at the time the policy was written, was used as a bawdyhouse, and was described in the policy as a "sporting house," the court saying: "I cannot see that the question of insurance or no insurance upon the building could have any bearing by way of encouragement or otherwise upon the business—that of a bawdyhouse—carried on in the building insured. To my mind the insurance was wholly collateral and independent of the immoral business."

In Trites-Wood Co. v. Western Assur. Co. (1910) 15 B. C. 405, it was held that a fire insurance policy in favor of a lien holder in a building which was used as a bawdyhouse, and was described in the insurance policy as a "sporting-house," and insured at a special rate provided for such buildings, in excess of the rate for ordinary dwellings, was enforceable against the insurance company after loss sustained by fire, such policy not being considered opposed to public policy, Macdonald, C. J. A.,—saying: "The insurance of property is one of the things useful for the ordinary purposes of life. Such protection is no more contributory to the immoral trade carried on by the owner of these premises than are the necessities of life. A policy of insurance is not one of those things which would appear not to be required except for an immoral purpose. It was not an inducement to the assured to build and furnish a house for immoral purposes. It was to protect their property from those risks of destruction against which those in every walk of life protect themselves. It was contended in the case L.R.A.1917B.

that the charging of a higher rate by the insurance company because of the nature of the risk amounted to a division of profits of the immoral business; but this argument was answered by Macdonald, C. J. A., upon the ground that it did not appear by the evidence that the assured was aware that she was being charged a higher rate on account of the character of her house, but that, for all that appeared from the evidence, she may have thought she was making the ordinary contract of insurance and paying the ordinary risk payable by respectable householders, and therefore the higher rate could not be urged against her; and it was further answered by Martin, J. A., with whom concurred Gallagher, J. A., who said: "I see no good reason why a higher rate should not, if necessary, be charged on a bawdyhouse solely because of an increased hazard in the risk. The owner of such property is entitled to protect herself from loss by means of a fire policy just as well as by other means, and who shall say that it would be against public policy for a shopkeeper to enter into a contract with her to supply a dozen ordinary fire extinguishers, or for a carpenter to put a row of water barrels on the roof, or for a plumber to put in water pipes or hose attachments, even though they knew what the house was being used for. Common sense dictates that such bald business transactions necessary for the protection of property and life must be upheld."

In writing his opinion in the above case, Martin, J. A., discussed the case of Morin v. Anglo-American Ins. Co. (Alberta) supra, and pointed out as differences between the two cases that while, in the case under discussion, the insurance was effected on a building "while occupied as a sporting house," and that the word "while" was absent in the Morin Case, and also in the Morin Case the unlawful use of the premises had ceased before the fire, whereas in the case under consideration it had continued until that event, stated that he did not think such differences altered the principle, but that the use of the word "while" is nothing more than a descriptive addition, and that so long as there was nothing more than a mere knowledge on the part of the insurers of the purposes for which the building was used, as distinguished from an active intent that it should be so used, the contract was valid.

In Electrova Co. v. Spring Garden Ins. Co. (1911) 156 N. O. 232, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1216, 72 S. E. 306, it was held that a mechanical piano placed in a house of ill fame by a dealer with the hope of selling it to the proprietress was covered by a floating policy of insurance upon all the pianos in certain towns, belonging to the insured, which policy would cease to cover the particular piano in question in case a sale was made to the proprietress of the house, and was enforceable against the insurance company, the public interest, under the facts, being entirely too remote to justify a court in refusing its aid to plaintiffs to enforce such payment.

The only case since the publication of the earlier note which takes a view contrary to that held in ÆTNA Ins. Co. v. HEIDELBERG, ante, 253, is Dominion F. Ins. Co. v. Nakata (1915) 52 Can. S. C. 294, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 1063, in which a majority of the court held that a policy of fire insurance upon a house and the furniture therein, which was used as a bawdyhouse, and was described in the policy as a "sporting house," was invalid as opposed to public policy, the court being divided three to two upon the question. R. L. S.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

SAMUEL J. COFFMAN

v.

MATT MALONE, Appt.

(98 Neb. 819, 154 N. W. 726.)

Evidence — that contract was not to be enforced.

Parol evidence is admissible to show that the parties to the suit had mutually agreed that a written contract which plaintiff is seeking to enforce was never to be performed, but was a mere sham, executed for the purpose of influencing the conduct of a third person.

For other cases, see Evidence, VI. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 30, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Douglas County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover an amount alleged to be due under a written contract for the sale of plaintiff's interest in a live stock commission business. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Murphy & Winters, for appellant:

Parol testimony is admissible to show the purpose for which a written instrument apparently binding on its face was executed, even though it may add to, vary, or contradict the terms of the written instrument.

Headnote by MORRISSEY, Ch. J.

Note. — For competency of parol evidence to show that a writing was not intended to create legal relations, but was executed as a sham, see annotation following this case, post, 263.
L.R.A.1917B.

Collingwood v. Merchants' Bank, 15 Neb. 121, 17 N. W. 359; Norman v. Waite, 30 Neb. 302, 46 N. W. 639; Barnett v. Pratt, 37 Neb. 349, 55 N. W. 1050; Davis v. Sterns, 85 Neb. 121, 122 N. W. 672; First Nat. Bank v. Burney, 91 Neb. 269, 136 N. W. 37; Franklin State Bank v. Chaney, 94 Neb. 1, 142 N. W. 537; Franklin State Bank v. Gettle, 96 Neb. 60, 146 N. W. 1017; Exchange Bank v. Clay Center State Bank, 91 Neb. 835, 137 N. W. 845; Musser v. Musser, 92 Neb. 387, 138 N. W. 599; Donisthorpe v. Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. 30 Neb. 142, 27 Am. St. Rep. 387, 46 N. W. 240; Williams v. First Nat. Bank, 45 App. Div. 239, 60 N. Y. Supp. 1105, affirmed in 167 N. Y. 594, 60 N. E. 1122; Garfield Nat. Bank v. Colwell, 57 Hun, 169, 10 N. Y. Supp. 864; Higgins v. Ridgway, 153 N. Y. 130, 47 N. E. 32; Burke v. Dulahey, 153 U. S. 228, 38 L. ed. 698, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 816; Miller v. Henderson, 10 Serg. & R. 290; Grierson v. Mason, 60 N. Y. 394; Pym v. Campbell, 6 El. & Bl. 370, 119 Eng. Reprint, 903, 25 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 277; Hurlburt v. Dusenbery, 26 Colo. 240, 57 Pac. 860; Cake v. Pottsville Bank, 116 Pa. 264, 2 Am. St. Rep. 600, 9 Atl. 302.

Parol testimony is admissible to show that the written instrument does not contain the full contract, but is part of a larger agreement.

Dodd v. Kemnitz, 74 Neb. 634, 104 N. W. 1069; Kelly v. Carter, 55 Ark. 112, 17 S. W. 706; Chapin v. Dobson, 78 N. Y. 74, 34 Am. Rep. 512; Wehnes v. Roberts, 92 Neb. 696, 139 N. W. 212, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 452; Collingwood v. Merchants' Bank, 15 Neb. 121, 17 N. W. 359; Ferguson v. Rafferty, 128 Pa. 337, 6 L.R.A. 33, 18 Atl. 484, approved in Wehnes v. Roberts, 92 Neb. 696, 139 N. W. 212, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 452; Barnett v. Pratt, 37 Neb. 352, 55 N. W. 1050; Reiner v. Crawford, 23 Wash. 669, 83 Am. St. Rep. 848, 63 Pac. 516; Sutton v. Weber, 127 Iowa, 361, 101 N. W. 775; Oakland Cemetery Asso. v. Lakins, 126 Iowa, 121, 101 N. W. 778, 3 Ann. Cas. 559; Golden v. Meier, 129 Wis. 14, 116 Am. St. Rep. 935, 101 N. W. 27; Holmes v. First Nat. Bank, 38 Neb. 326, 41 Am. St. Rep. 733, 56 N. W. 1011; Jasper v. Currie, 69 Neb. 4, 94 N. W. 995.

It would be a fraud to allow a party who induced another to sign a contract for a certain purpose, to insist on the contract as written, when it was not intended to be of binding force.

Miller v. Henderson, 10 Serg. & R. 290; Gandy v. Weckerly, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 434, note, 220 Pa. 285, 123 Am. St. Rep. 691, 69 Atl. 858; Ferguson v. Rafferty, 128 Pa. 337, 6 L.R.A. 33, 18 Atl. 484.

A contract will be treated as abandoned where the acts of one party, inconsistent with its existence, are acquiesced in by the other.

Hall v. Eccles, 46 Neb. 880, 65 N. W. 1058; Schultz v. Hastings Lodge, 90 Neb. 454, 133 N. W. 846; Herpolshelmer v. Christopher, 74 Neb. 352, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1127, 107 N. W. 382, 111 N. W. 359, 14 Ann. Cas. 399.

Subsequent agreement or modification of a written instrument may be proved by parol testimony.

Hurlburt v. Dusenbery, 26 Colo. 240, 57 Pac. 860; Morrissey v. Schindler, 18 Neb. 672, 26 N. W. 476; Delaney v. Linder, 22 Neb. 274, 34 N. W. 630; Sutton v. Weber, 127 Iowa, 361, 101 N. W. 775.

Messers. Smyth, Smith, & Schall for appellee.

Morrissey, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Amos Snyder, Matt Malone, and Samuel J. Coffman owned all of the capital stock in a corporation called the Snyder-Malone-Coffman Company, which was doing a live stock commission business in South Omaha. During the fall of 1912, slight differences as to the conduct of the business arose, and December 12th the following writing was drawn up and signed by the parties:

South Omaha, Neb., Dec. 12, 1912.

We, Amos Snyder, and S. J. Coffman, have this day sold our interest in the Snyder-Malone-Coffman Company to Matt Malone. The said Amos Snyder to receive $1,500 for his interest, and said S. J. Coffman is to receive $1,000 for his interest, and said business is to be turned over to Matt Malone on December 31st, at 6 o'clock p. m., and all bills to be paid up to that time, that is, owed by the firm of Snyder-L.R.A.1917B.

Malone-Coffman Company, and after the bills are all paid, each Snyder and Coffman can draw out the balance they have to their credit. Amos Snyder has received on this contract $200, two hundred dollars, and S. J. Coffman has received $100, one hundred dollars. This contract made and signed by Amos Snyder, S. J. Coffman, and Matt Malone, this 12th day of December, 1912.

Amos Snyder.

S. J. Coffman.

Matt Malone.

December 31, 1912, Snyder delivered his stock, tendered his resignation as president of the corporation, and received from Malone the balance due. Four or five days thereafter, the articles of incorporation were redrafted and Coffman and Malone signed the same. Coffman made no assignment of his stock, and neither made nor tendered his resignation as an officer of the corporation until January 15, 1913, when he made an assignment of his stock and tendered the same, together with his resignation, to Malone, and demanded the amount stipulated in this writing. Malone refused to receive the stock or resignation or to pay over the money, and Coffman brought suit upon the contract. Malone by answer alleged that the writing was executed for the sole purpose of purchasing the interest of Amos Snyder, but it was drawn in the form set out because they wanted Snyder to believe that Coffman was also retiring from the business; that there was a contemporaneous oral agreement between him and Coffman that, as between them, it was not to be performed; that there was no delivery of the writing to Coffman, and that the check which was delivered was not to be cashed, but was to be returned again by Coffman to Malone. There is an allegation, also, that after Snyder retired from the business, and after the expiration of the time fixed by this writing for the transfer of Coffman's stock, Coffman participated in the election of himself as secretary of the company, and that he continued to act for and in behalf of the company until January 15, 1913; that under their oral agreement Malone was to transfer certain of Snyder's shares of stock to Coffman, which Malone was ready and willing to do, but Coffman did not have the money to pay therefor, and upon Malone's refusal to accept Coffman's note in lieu of cash, Coffman attempted to repudiate the oral agreement and to enforce this writing. A jury was waived and the cause tried to the court. Oral testimony was admitted in support of the allegations of the answer. But at the conclusion of the trial, on motion of the plaintiff, the court struck from the record the testimony which had been received in proof of the oral agreement, and entered judgment for plaintiff for the amount due under the writing.

There are three assignments of error; but, as the one directed against the ruling of the court in striking this evidence goes to the merits of the whole controversy, it is the only one we will consider. If the ruling in that regard is correct, the judgment is warranted by the pleadings and the proof. No doubt the court relied upon the general rule laid down in Mattison v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 42 Neb. 545, 60 N. W. 925, and quoted as authority in Nebraska Land & Feeding Co. v. Trauerman, 70 Neb. 795, 98 N. W. 37, wherein it is held: "Parol evidence is incompetent to prove a contemporaneous oral agreement by which it is sought to change or alter the terms of a written contract, and the result of which would be to change the effect of the written contract in a material portion and to insert or read into it a condition or reservation not contained in it, or implied by its terms,"—while the appellant contends that the rule invoked does not apply, and that a party who has been induced to sign a written contract for a certain purpose is entitled to offer oral testimony, not for the purpose of varying its terms, but for the purpose of showing that it was never intended to be a contract, or to be of binding force between the parties. It is not contended that the contract is ambiguous or incomplete, but that plaintiff and defendant were working together for a common purpose; that in furtherance of this common purpose it was executed in its present form; that they were not dealing one with the other, but were jointly dealing with Snyder; that in the very nature of things the writing could not contain the agreement between Coffman and Malone because that would defeat its purpose. If there was no intention on the part of either party to observe the terms of this writing, as between them, this writing was not the contract. This evidence was not offered with the view of contradicting, varying, or explaining the language employed in the written instrument, but to establish a fact or circumstance collateral to the original writing, which would control its effect or operation as a binding engagement. On either theory the writing is precisely what both parties intended it to be. If there was an express agreement between Coffman and Malone that it was not to be carried out, Malone in signing was acting not alone for himself, but also for the plaintiff, and in that event, it never became a binding obligation.

"The existence of a written contract or instrument, duly executed between the parties to an action and delivered, does not prevent the party apparently bound thereby from pleading and proving that contemporaneously with the execution and delivery of such contract or instrument the parties had entered into a distinct oral agreement which constitutes a condition on which the performance of the written contract or agreement is to depend." Norman v. Waite, 30 Neb. 302, 46 N. W. 630.
L.R.A.1917B.

In Barnett v. Pratt, 37 Neb. 349, 55 N. W. 1050, in discussing a somewhat similar question, the court said: "It is settled by a considerable line of authority that, where the execution of a written agreement has been induced upon the faith of an oral stipulation made at the time, but omitted from the written agreement, though not by accident or mistake, parol evidence of the oral stipulation is admissible, although it may add to or contradict the terms of the written instrument."

The doctrine laid down in Norman v. Waite, supra, has been reiterated in Davis v. Sterns, 85 Neb. 121, 122 N. W. 672; First Nat. Bank v. Burney, 91 Neb. 269, 136 N. W. 37, and Exchange Bank v. Clay Center State Bank, 91 Neb. 835, 137 N. W. 845, and is the settled rule in this state. This evidence having been erroneously stricken from the record, it follows that the judgment of the District Court must be reversed and the cause remanded.

Fawcett and Hamer, JJ., not sitting.

Rose, J., concurring:

The question presented by the record seems to be: Is parol evidence admissible to show that the parties to the suit had mutually agreed that a written contract which plaintiff is seeking to enforce was never to be performed, but was a mere sham, executed for the purpose of influencing the conduct of a third person? The question is a sensitive one, because an error in its solution may result either in a departure from the rule which forbids the use of parol evidence to vary a written instrument, or in rewarding a wrong by closing the door to judicial scrutiny. The supreme court of Vermont has answered the question in the negative. Conner v. Carpenter, 28 Vt. 237; Grand Isle v. Kinney, 70 Vt. 381, 41 Atl. 130. The better reasoning, however, and the weight of authority, seem to be to the contrary. In 4 Wigmore on Evidence, § 2406, it is said: "Conduct which is to be given legal effects must be jural in its subject; . . . i. e., must concern legal relations, not relations of friendship or other nonlegal relations. . . . In all such cases, therefore, the conduct is legally ineffective, or void. In the traditional phraseology of the parol evidence rule, then, it may always be shown that the transaction was understood by the parties not to have legal effect. Ordinarily, the bearing of this principle is plain enough on the circumstances. It has been judicially applied to household services rendered by a member of the family, and to a writing representing merely a family understanding. It is, of course, also applicable to the signature of an attesting witness. When the document is to serve the purpose of a mere sham, this principle in strictness exonerates the makers; but a just policy would seem to concede this only when the pretense is a morally justifiable one (as, to calm a lunatic or to console a dying person), and not when it is morally beyond sanction."

In Southern Street Railway Advertising Co. v. Metropole Shoe Mfg. Co. 91 Md. 61, 46 Atl. 513, a suit upon an advertising contract, defendant pleaded that the "paper writing was not intended to create, and did not create, any legal relationship whatsoever; that said paper was signed by the defendant upon the request of the plaintiff's agent, in order that the plaintiff or its agents might show the same to other persons dealing with the plaintiff, in order to induce such other persons to pay the rates for advertising mentioned in the contract, and that it was distinctly understood that the paper writing was not a contract between the parties thereto, and that the bringing of a suit thereon is a fraud upon the defendant."

The court said: "The rule against parol evidence to vary or contradict the terms of an agreement in writing is well settled by the courts. It is earnestly insisted upon the part of the appellee that this rule has no application to this case, because the testimony was offered not for the purpose of varying or contradicting the contract, but to show that the parties to the writing never intended it to be a contract or as the binding record of a contract. We think the court below was right in admitting the evidence. . . . We come then to the evidence as set forth in the bills of exception, and we think it is clear that it was competent for the purposes offered, that is, not to vary or contradict the terms of the written instrument by parol, but to show that such contract had no force, efficacy, or effect, because it was not intended to operate as the record of a binding contract between the parties."

In Colonial Park Estates v. Massart, 112 Md. 648, 77 Atl. 275, the court approved and followed the preceding case, saying: "Although parol evidence is inadmissible to L.R.A.1917B.

vary or contradict the terms of a written agreement, it is well settled that such evidence is admissible to show that a particular written paper 'was never intended as a contract or as the binding record of a contract between the parties.' And this has been held to be true even though the paper writing in question be in the form of a contract and bear the signatures of those named in it as the contracting parties. We distinctly held this to be the law upon the authority of many cases, both English and American, cited by us in Southern Street Railway Advertising Co. v. Metropole Shoe Mfg. Co. supra. The Supreme Court of the United States in Burke v. Dulaney, 153 U. S. 228, 38 L. ed. 698, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 816, upon a review of the cases upon this subject, reached the conclusion there stated in its opinion, that 'the rule that excludes parol evidence in contradiction of a written agreement presupposes the existence in fact of such an agreement at the time the suit is brought. But the rule has no application if the writing was not delivered as a present contract, and parol evidence was admissible to show that there never was any concluded binding contract entitling the party who claimed the benefit of it to enforce its stipulations.'" See also Birely v. Dodson, 107 Md. 229, 68 Atl. 488.

In Humphrey v. Timken Carriage Co. 12 Okla. 413, 75 Pac. 528, "the defendant offered evidence to show that the order for the goods, which is made the basis of plaintiff's action, was given at the solicitation of the plaintiff's agent, Slusser, who represented that he had sold a carload of goods to B. F. Berkey, but that Berkey was involved financially, and it was feared that a shipment to Berkey would involve the Timken Carriage Company with other creditors; that if he, Humphrey, would sign the order for the goods, he would not be held liable for them; that it would be used only for the specific purpose of enabling the Timken Carriage Company to sell and ship goods to Berkey without danger of having them attached by other creditors; and that the order was signed for this and for no other purpose."

The court sustained the defense, saying: "Admitting that the order so signed was a contract in writing, was it not competent to prove that it was not intended as such, and was in fact executed and delivered for an entirely different and specific purpose? Under the law as generally accepted and enforced in this country, parol evidence is not competent to change or vary a written agreement; but when does a writing become an agreement? Certainly not until it is assented to in the sense that its tenor purports. As between the parties, a written instrument which is understood to have a particular import and meaning cannot, by one of the parties thereto, without the knowledge or consent of the other, be so diverted from the purpose of its execution as to fix other and new liabilities not contemplated when made. Such a construction of the law wholly destroys the definition which time-honored customs and rules have given to contracts, to wit, that two minds must meet and consent."

In Grierson v. Mason, 60 N. Y. 394, defendant offered proof that a contract relied upon by plaintiff was not intended to be a contract between the parties, but was executed to enable defendant to procure advances upon goods, and that the contract was delivered to the parties making the advances. The court said: "The object of the testimony was to show that the instrument was executed for a specific purpose, and that purpose, being accomplished, was of no effect in changing the contract previously made with the defendant. I think that it was competent evidence for this purpose. The defendant had made out a contract. The plaintiff proved an instrument which altered the contract, and the defendant had a right to prove that the instrument introduced was not intended as an alteration of the contract, but with a view of accomplishing a particular purpose. Such evidence was not given to change the written contract by parol, but to establish that such contract had no force, efficacy, or effect; that it was not intended to be a contract, but merely a writing to be used in inducing Woods to make advancements upon the goods. This is in avoidance of the instrument, and not to change it, and I do not see why the testimony was not as competent in this case as it would be to show that a written instrument was obtained fraudulently, by duress, or in an improper manner. Such evidence does not come within the ordinary rule of introducing parol evidence to contradict written testimony, but tends to explain the circumstances under which such an instrument was executed and delivered, or to show that it was canceled or surrendered."

In Oak Ridge Co. v. Toole, 82 N. J. Eq. 541, 88 Atl. 827, the defendant to the bill in equity answered that the contract to purchase the lands was entered into merely for "selling purposes." The court said: "He rests his defense upon the ground that the agreement, while signed by his client, was to have no binding effect upon him. I think his position is well taken, and I agree with his view of the case. In O'Brien v. Paterson Brewing & Malting Co. 69 N. J. Eq. 117, 61 Atl. 437, practically all the questions involved in this issue are thoroughly and exhaustively discussed by the learned vice chancellor. This case, it seems to me, establishes the rule that if the parties to an agreement stipulated at the time that it was made that it was to have no binding effect upon them, then, notwithstanding their execution of the agreement, such a contract is of no force and effect at law or in equity. The rule, now so well established in equity, admitting parol evidence to show for what purpose the written agreement was executed, was properly invoked by the defendant. The evidence leaves no doubt in the court's mind that in this issue the agreement between the complainant and the defendant was made for the purpose as stated by the latter and his witnesses. It is inequitable and unjust, therefore, for the complainant to enforce the agreement of April 13th."

Western Mfg. Co. v. Rogers, 54 Neb. 456, 74 N. W. 849, appears to hold that the evidence is inadmissible, but is distinguishable. This case is cited and followed in State Bank v. Belk, 56 Neb. 710, 77 N. W. 58, where Burke v. Dulaney, supra, quoted in the Maryland decisions, is distinguished on the ground that there "never was any complete, final delivery of the writing as the promissory note of the makers, payable at all events and according to its terms."

The distinction between the Nebraska cases cited and the present case is pointed out in 4 Wigmore on Evidence, § 2435, where it is said: "An extrinsic agreement, providing a condition qualifying the operation of a written obligation is, of course, equally ineffective; for an obligation absolute is plainly exclusive of a condition. So far as the present principle is concerned, there is no doubt. But by the general principle of delivery (ante, § 2410), no conduct becomes effective as a legal act if its consummation is suspended until the happening of a condition precedent; and hence such a condition precedent to the existence of the obligation may always be established, and has the effect of destroying the apparent obligation of the writing embodying the draft of the act. The difficulty is to distinguish whether, in a given case, the condition is such a precedent one, or whether it is a subsequent one, such as the present principle forbids recognizing. Here some subtlety of construction may be required."

In a note the author says: "Sometimes the illustrations of this principle, that a transaction which is a sham is without the scope of legal acts, are hard to distinguish from those cases where the transaction is in substance a legal one, but the understanding is that it shall be merely nominal; here, in effect, one party agrees to hold the other party harmless, and this involves rather the rule about varying a document's terms." 4 Wigmore, Ev. § 2406.

The opinion delivered by the Chief Justice is supported by the weight of authority, and is in harmony with the holding in Davis v. Sterns, 85 Neb. 121, 122 N. W. 672. I therefore concur.

Annotation—Competency of parol evidence to show that a writing was not intended to create legal relations, but was executed as a sham.

Evidence tending to show that a writing was not intended to effect or create legal relations, but was executed as a sham, shades almost imperceptibly into evidence of other character; for example, evidence that a written agreement was delivered upon condition,<sup>1</sup> or with the understanding that the obligor was not to be held liable.<sup>2</sup> The latter situation appears very frequently in cases involving promissory notes, a note being given with the understanding that the maker or indorser is not to be held liable thereon. Again a writing may be executed with the understanding that it does not embody the final agreement,<sup>3</sup> but is to be rewritten, or is to be delivered up, if not satisfactory to one of the parties upon rereading. Parol evidence of such fact bears some resemblance to the evidence considered herein. It may be sought to show by parol evidence that a writing which purports to be a contract was not so intended, but was intended as a receipt or evidence of an advancement.<sup>4</sup> The questions connected with the admissibility of parol evidence of such facts have

<sup>1</sup> The admissibility of parol evidence to show that a bill or note was delivered upon condition is discussed in Beach v. Nevins, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 288.

As to the admissibility of parol evidence that a written instrument for the payment of money was executed in reliance upon a parol promise that payment was subject to a condition not incorporated therein, see note to Gandy v. Weckerly, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 434.

<sup>2</sup> The difficulty of distinguishing is illustrated in the case of Humphrey v. Timken Carriage Co. (1904) 12 Okla. 413, 75 Pac. 528, where parol evidence was admitted in an action upon a writing to show circumstances which are set forth in the opinion in COFFMAN v. MALONE, ante, 258. After citing a number of authorities, the court concludes: "From these authorities it would seem clear that Humphrey had a right to show that the order was not given as a purchase or proposal for a purchase, but for the purpose stated." The situation presented in Humphrey v. Timken Carriage Co. is practically the same as that presented in a case in which a person signs a note or other contract upon the promise of the obligee that he shall not be holden thereon.

<sup>3</sup> Of this class is Colonial Park Estates v. Massart (1910) 112 Md. 648, 77 Atl. 276, in which an informal writing signed by a purchaser of land was held not to be a binding memorandum of a contract of sale, where the purchaser was shown a form of contract required by the vendor, and it was the understanding of the parties that a contract upon the same terms was to be furnished him for execution on the following day. See citation from the opinion in this case in the opinion in COFFMAN v. MALONE.

<sup>4</sup> The following cases illustrate this class:
L.R.A.1917B.

A note and receipt given by a remainderman to the life tenant, who is the mother of the remainderman, to evidence an advancement on his interest in the estate, with no intention of ever calling on the remainderman to refund the same or any part thereof, but with the understanding and agreement that the same should be an advancement, as before stated, do not create a valid obligation, and the facts may be shown by parol in an attempt to enforce it. Norman v. Norman (1858) 11 Ind. 288.

Brook v. Latimer (1890) 44 Kan. 431, 11 L.R.A. 805, 21 Am. St. Rep. 292, 24 Pac. 946 (note intended as evidence of an advancement).

Parol evidence is admissible in an action on a writing to show that it was given by a bankrupt for the purpose of enabling the creditor to prove his debt in bankruptcy, and not as an acknowledgment of the debt. Atwood v. Gillett (1846) 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 206.

In an action on a promissory note it is competent for the maker to show that it was given for the purpose of showing the interest of the payee in a joint purchase of land and personal property by the maker and payee. Davis v. Sterns (1909) 85 Neb. 121, 122 N. W. 672. This case was distinguished from State Bank v. Belk (1898) 58 Neb. 710, 77 N. W. 58, where parol evidence was held incompetent in an action on a note to show the purpose for which it was given, on the theory that in that case the note sued on in direct terms stated the purpose and the consideration for which it was given, an element that was lacking in the note sued on in the Davis case. The note involved in Western Mfg. Co. v. Rogers (1898) 54 Neb. 456, 74 N. W. 849, where parol evidence was held inadmissible, also stated the purpose for which the note was given.

been excluded, and the note has been confined to the subject indicated; i. e., the admissibility of evidence to show that a writing was intended as a sham and was not intended to create legal relations.<sup>5</sup>

The majority of decisions passing upon the point under annotation hold that parol evidence is admissible to show that the writing was not intended to create any legal obligation, but was executed as a sham.<sup>6</sup> In the case of COFFMAN v. MALONE, ante, 258, there was no oral agreement between the parties relating to a sale of the stock, the only oral agreement being that the writing should not be binding.<sup>7</sup> But the rule has been applied, and parol evidence held admissible to show that the writing was a sham, and not intended to create legal relations, where the writing relates to the same subject matter as an oral agreement admitted to exist between the parties, but fixes different terms. Such evidence does not contradict or vary the terms of the written contract so as to be objectionable under the parol evidence rule. This is true whether the action is on the writing and the parol evidence is offered as a defense,<sup>8</sup> or whether the action is upon the oral agreement and the parol evidence is

<sup>5</sup> As to the applicability of the rule excluding parol evidence to vary a written contract in favor of or against a stranger to the contract, see note in L.R.A.1916A, 592.

See notes to Galena Nat. Bank v. Ripley, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 993; Lyons v. Benney, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 105, and Skagit State Bank v. Moody, L.R.A.1916A, 1215, as to the validity of obligations given a bank as affected by concealment of illegal transactions.

<sup>6</sup> Cases cited in notes 7-12, infra.

A written agreement between husband and wife that the wife's lands may be sold and the proceeds paid to trustees upon certain trusts may be shown to have been executed with the understanding that it was not legally binding and that it was nothing more than a moral or honorary obligation. Earle v. Rice (1892) 111 Mass. 17. It was accordingly held that the wife had done nothing to affect her rights in the lands, and therefore was entitled to the proceeds in the hands of the trustees.

It may be shown by parol that a writing purporting to be a will was executed as a fake, by the testator named therein, for the purpose of influencing the action of a legatee. Fleming v. Morrison (1904) 187 Mass. 120, 105 Am. St. Rep. 386, 72 N. E. 499.

<sup>7</sup> In Hendrickson v. Evans (1855) 25 Pa. 441, infra, there was no other agreement between the parties than the written one and the oral one that the written one should not be binding.

<sup>8</sup> In an action on a sealed written agreement of apprenticeship, the master may show that the contract was never intended to be operative, but was executed only to overcome certain objections of a trades union. Robinson v. Nessel (1899) 86 Ill. App. 212. It is accordingly held that the master may show that the real contract between the parties was an oral contract and that the servant was paid in full for all services under the oral contract.

Parol evidence may be introduced in an action on a written advertising contract to show that the writing was not intended to create, and did not create, any legal relationship whatsoever, but was signed in L.R.A.1917B.

order that the advertising company or its agents might show the same to other persons dealing with it in order to induce them to pay the rates for advertising mentioned in the contract. Southern Street Railway Advertising Co. v. Metropole Shoe Mfg. Co. (1900) 91 Md. 61, 46 Atl. 513. A stipulation in the written contract that "no verbal conditions made by agents will be recognized; every condition must be specified on the face of the contract," was held not available to the plaintiff, since, the contract being itself void and nugatory, the provision can have no effect. The real agreement between the parties was one upon terms other than those stated in the writing.

So parol evidence may be introduced in an action on a written contract for the sale of goods, to show that the vendor desired a writing showing a higher price than that actually agreed upon, as he did not wish the trust from which he purchased the goods to know that he was selling below certain rates fixed by it, and that he desired a writing showing a purchase of more goods than were actually sold for the purpose of swelling his apparent sales. Birely v. Dodson (1908) 107 Md. 229, 68 Atl. 488. The action in this case was to recover the purchase price of goods sold and delivered. The correctness of the plaintiff's itemized account was admitted, but the defendant claimed that it was entitled to a rebate and a discount upon the purchase. This was denied by the vendor, who stood upon the written contract. The evidence sought to be introduced by the purchaser was that the actual contract between the parties was made by parol and that subsequently the writing was signed by them, but that neither of the parties intended it to be the real contract between them, and that it did not in fact constitute the real contract, but was signed for the purposes stated above.

Parol evidence is admissible upon an agreement by a vendor whose title to part of the land conveyed was defective, to perfect the title within a certain time or buy back the land at a stated price, to show that the agreement was signed by the parties for "selling purposes only," and was introduced by the complainant to obviate the effect of the writing introduced by way of defense.<sup>9</sup>

The parol evidence has likewise been held admissible in an action to enjoin the enforcement of a written agreement.<sup>10</sup>

So, in an action by a grantor to cancel a deed appearing of record and purporting to have been executed by the plaintiff to the defendant, conveying to her certain lands, parol evidence was held admissible to show that the deed had never been delivered by the grantor and was never intended to take effect, but was merely signed, acknowledged, and read to the defendant when she was insane and was laboring under the delusion that she and her children were to be left destitute, in order to allay her fears and soothe her mind, and had been retained by plaintiff until it was taken from his possession by some other person and placed upon record without his knowledge or consent.<sup>11</sup>

In an action ex delicto by a shipper against a carrier, in which the carrier pleaded and proved the existence of a written contract between the parties, the shipper was held not precluded from proving that the shipment in question was not carried under the terms of the written contract introduced in evidence, but that the mutual intention of the parties was to treat the written contract as nugatory, as a mere form to justify the carrier in carrying the shipment on a fast train, which otherwise it would not have done. This being proven, the written instrument was held void for want of a consideration.<sup>12</sup> The shipment in question was intended for a not to be enforced against the vendor. Oak Ridge Co. v. Toole (1913) 82 N. J. Eq. 541, 88 Atl. 827. Accordingly specific performance of the agreement was refused. The court in this case relied upon the holding in an earlier case in the same jurisdiction as to the admissibility of parol evidence that debt was not to be enforced except upon a contingency.

In an action by a firm against its agent to collect the proceeds of a sale claimed to be due it, parol evidence is competent to show that a written agreement relied upon by the firm as evidence of the contract was executed not as a contract between the parties, but at the request of one who required it as a condition of advancing money on the goods to the firm, and for the sole purpose of inducing the advancement of such money, and was delivered to the person making the advances. Grierson v. Mason (1875) 60 N. Y. 394. It does not appear that the action was brought upon the written agreement, but no point was made of this in the opinion.

In the subsequent case of Nightingale v. J. H. & C. K. Eagle (1910) 141 App. Div. 386, 126 N. Y. Supp. 339, Ingraham, P. J., dissenting from the majority opinion, states with reference to the case of Grierson v. Mason, that "the plaintiff sought to prove the contract by an instrument signed by him alone, and it was perfectly competent for the defendant, who had not signed the instrument, to prove that the instrument was not a contract and was never intended to be such."

In reliance upon Grierson v. Mason, it is held in O'Leary v. McDonough (1893) 2 Misc. 219, 23 N. Y. Supp. 665, that parol evidence is competent to show that a written contract complete in all its respects, executed and delivered by the person sought to be charged, is not in fact a contract between the parties, and thereby an action upon the written contract can be defeated.

<sup>9</sup>In an action by an employee for wages according to an oral agreement, a written agreement introduced by the employer limiting the wages to a certain amount may be shown by parol evidence to have been executed by the employee for the purpose of inducing another employee to sign a contract thinking that the plaintiff received no more than he. Nightingale v. J. H. & C. K. Eagle (N. Y.) supra. The parol evidence showed that the written contract was executed some time after the oral agreement sued upon, and at the time of signing the writing the employee was informed by the employer that the writing would have no effect whatever on their previous parol agreement by which the employee was guaranteed a higher salary than that stipulated in the writing.

Parol evidence may be introduced to show that a written contract for the sale of land upon a stated consideration was executed to avoid jealousy on the part of vendor's own children, and thereby avoid trouble to himself. Woodard v. Walker (1916) — Mich. —, 158 N. W. 846. The action in this case was by a purchaser to enforce an oral agreement by the terms of which the land was given to him by the vendor in the written agreement. The vendor relied upon the written contract and insisted that it should prevail instead of the alleged oral agreement.

<sup>10</sup>Parol evidence may be introduced to show that a mortgage was simply a form, and was executed to satisfy members of the family of the mortgagee, who had given the land mortgaged to the mortgagor for the support of the mortgagee's sister, the mother of mortgagor. Church v. Case (1896) 110 Mich. 621, 68 N. W. 424.

<sup>11</sup>McCartney v. McCartney (1900) 93 Tex. 359, 55 S. W. 310. There is an obscure statement in the opinion that indicates that the grantor had the deed recorded, but this is contradictory of other statements in the opinion that it was recorded without his knowledge or consent.

<sup>12</sup>Deierling v. Wabash R. Co. (1912) 163 Mo. App. 292, 146 S. W. 814.

point intermediate between the place of shipment and the destination of a fast freight train, and was so billed by the railroad company and the freight was paid in accord with the actual agreement, but in order to make the shipment on the fast train it had been the custom of the carrier to require the shipper to sign a written contract which on its face designated the destination of the fast train as the destination of the shipment.

On the contrary, it has been held that the parol evidence rule applies and prevents the introduction of parol evidence in such a situation.<sup>13</sup> The court in one case<sup>14</sup> makes the point that the purpose of the writing involved in that case "was to deceive and potentially to defraud." After referring to this fact, the court

<sup>13</sup> A writing between a corporation and an agent for the sale of its stock cannot be shown to have been executed to show the other stock salesmen that the agent in question was drawing no more than they were. Graham v. Savage (1910) 110 Minn. 510, 136 Am. St. Rep. 527, 126 N. W. 394, 19 Ann. Cas. 1022. The employer introduced the writing in defense to an action for compensation according to the oral agreement. This case approves and follows McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Wilson (1888) 39 Minn. 467, 140 N. W. 571, in which it was held that the parol evidence rule applies and prevents the introduction of parol evidence to show that notes that had been delivered were delivered with the understanding that they should not be operative. The purpose for which the notes involved in the latter case were executed is not stated. The court, after referring to the cases passing upon the effect of delivering a writing to become operative as a contract only on the happening of a future contingent event, continued: "But we find no case holding such [parol] evidence competent to prove that the delivered written contract was to be operative or inoperative at the will of one of the parties, or, where nothing remains to its complete execution, that the parties intended it should not be operative according to its terms. In this case it is not claimed that the notes were not as fully and completely executed as the parties intended, or that anything further was required to give them all the operation that they intended them to have. All that is claimed is that, though the execution was completed by delivery, the parties did not intend them to be operative according to their terms. A rule admitting oral evidence of such intention in such cases would go far to undermine all written contracts, and would be an invitation to fraud and perjury."

In Conner v. Carpenter (1856) 28 Vt. 237, parol evidence was held incompetent to show that a writing was agreed and understood to be a sham, and was given only to keep off creditors of one of the parties. In this case the plaintiff, desiring to purchase a span of mares, applied to the defendant to sign a note as his surety for the purchase price. It was finally agreed between the parties that the plaintiff should transfer to the vendor a horse owned by him, and the vendor should thereupon transfer the horse and the span of mares to the defendant, who thereupon should give his note for the purchase price and hold the horses as security for the payment by the plaintiff to the vendor of the note given by the defendant. The transfers were made as agreed, and thereupon the horse and mares were delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff and at the same time the plaintiff gave to the defendant the writing in question, showing that the transaction was a loan to the plaintiff and giving the plaintiff possession of the horses so long as the defendant should see fit and no longer. Subsequently, the defendant took the horse and the action was for trover to recover it.

An obligation entered into by the residents of the town to pay a certain sum of money to the town for the purpose of enabling it to enter into a contract for the construction of a bridge cannot be shown by parol evidence to have been given solely to enable the town to get the necessary certificate of the state engineer, as this is a contradiction of the plain import of the instrument. The court concludes: "In short, it is no more than an offer to show that the instrument was a sham or a cunning device to be used for the sole purpose of deceiving the state engineer." Grand Isle v. Kinney (1898) 70 Vt. 381, 41 Atl. 130.

Parol evidence cannot be introduced in an action upon a bond under seal, to show that those who signed the agreement did so merely for the purpose of inducing the wife of the obligee to join in his deed to a third person on the belief that the land was bringing what was indicated in the bond, together with the cash payment, and that at the time the agreement was entered into the obligee expressly agreed that he would not hold the defendant responsible on the same, but would deliver it up or destroy it as soon as the deed should be signed. Hendrickson v. Evans (1855) 25 Pa. 441; Evans v. Dravo (1854) 24 Pa. 62, 62 Am. Dec. 359, action on same bond. See comment on the first of these cases supra, note 7, and see Phillips v. Melly, infra, note 15.

In Blodgett v. Morrill (1848) 20 Vt. 509, one who had signed a subscription contract on an agreement that he should never be called on to pay, but that his signature was wanted to influence others to sign, was held not to be relieved thereby upon an action on his contract. While the question arose as to the admissibility of evidence of this agreement, it does not appear to have been argued upon the ground of the parol evidence rule, but rather as one of substantive law.

<sup>14</sup> Graham v. Savage (Minn.) supra.

concludes: "We think it is clear that the court should not vary the general rule as to the exclusion of evidence by making an exception in aid of such an illegitimate purpose and in violation of common honesty." In another case,<sup>15</sup> in which an action was brought upon the writing and in which the defendant attempted to show that the writing was not intended to operate as a contract, the court stated that the defendant alleged an equity which ought to restrain the action, but to make it out he was obliged to show a fraudulent transaction. The maxim that, where the parties were at equal fault, the condition of the possessor or defendant is the better, was urged upon the court as requiring the admission of this evidence on the part of the defendant, but this was answered by stating that the defendant, in order to make out his defense, was obliged to show the fraudulent transaction, and in respect to that matter he was the actor; that the maxim applied to him in the circumstances of the case, and not to the plaintiff on the record. While the element of fraud is not discussed in the cases adhering to the opposite rule, the writing was executed in those cases, with but few exceptions, for the purpose of influencing the act of a third person in the same way as was true in the cases which adhere to the rule now under discussion. Wigmore states in his Treatise on Evidence, vol. 4, § 2406, that, where a writing is to serve the purpose of a mere sham, the principle that parol evidence may be introduced to show that the writing was understood by the parties not to have legal effect "in strictness exonerates the makers; but a just policy would seem to concede this only when the pretense is a morally justifiable one (as, to calm a lunatic or to console a dying person), and not when it is morally beyond sanction."

<sup>15</sup> Hendrickson v. Evans (Pa.) supra.

The parol evidence rule, however, as ordinarily understood, does not prevail in Pennsylvania. Phillips v. Meily (1884) 106 Pa. 536. It is stated in this case that parol evidence has been allowed to contradict or vary written instruments, "first, where there was fraud, accident, or mistake in the creation of the instrument itself; and, second, where there has been an attempt to make a fraudulent use of the instrument in violation of a promise or agreement made at the time the instrument was signed, and without which it would not have been executed." In disapproving this rule, Wigmore states in his Treatise on Evidence, § 4231 (c), that "it would seem that every attempt knowingly to invoke the letter of a writing against the actual oral understanding of the parties (however different from the written terms) could properly be considered as fraudulent." W. A. E.

NEW MEXICO SUPREME COURT.

SEON LOCKE, Appt.,

v.

H. S. MURDOCH.

(20 N. M. 522, 151 Pac. 298.)

Evidence — parol to vary contract.

1. Parol testimony cannot be received to contradict, vary, add to, or subtract from the terms of a valid written contract.

For other cases, see Evidence, VI. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Contract — written — effect on negotiations.

2. A valid written contract merges all prior and contemporaneous oral negotiations concerning the subject matter embraced within the terms of the writing.

For other cases, see Evidence, VI. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Headnotes by PARKER, J.

Note. — As to competency of parol evidence of an agreement by the vendor of a business not to re-engage therein, where some part of the agreement had been reduced to writing, see annotation following this case, post, 276.
L.R.A.1917B.

Evidence — of parol contract collateral to writing.

3. Parol evidence of a distinct valid parol agreement, although prior to or contemporaneous with a written contract, is admissible unless it contradicts or varies the terms of the writing.

For other cases, see Evidence, VI. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — conditions of proof.

4. Where the terms of a written contract are silent as to the subject matter of a parol contemporaneous agreement, and the latter does not contradict the terms of the former and was the inducing cause for the execution of the written contract, proof of the contents of the parol contemporaneous agreement is admissible.

For other cases, see Evidence, VI. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Injunction — against violation of restrictive contract.

5. Courts of equity entertain jurisdiction of injunction cases, where one party to a contract seeks to restrain the other from carrying on a business or profession for a stated length of time which the party agreed not to carry on, on the ground that the parties cannot be placed in statu quo and that damages at law afford no adequate compensation to the injured party.

For other cases, see Injunction, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — findings of fact.

6. The findings of a trial court will not be disturbed where there is substantial evidence to support them.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. I, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Laches — what constitutes.

7. A delay of ten months in asserting rights in a court of equity, under the circumstances of this case, does not constitute laches of such a nature as to deprive the party of equitable relief, especially where the trial court entertained jurisdiction of the cause in the first instance.

For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — of parol contract.

8. Admission of letters, their contents, and of conversations, written and had prior to the making of a written contract, introduced and received for the purpose of supporting the truth of a contemporaneous oral agreement, and not contradicting the terms of the written contract, is proper.

For other cases, see Evidence, VI. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(July 16, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Colfax County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to enjoin defendant from opening or maintaining an office for the practice of dentistry in violation of an agreement between them. Modified.

Statement by Parker, J.:

This is an action brought in the district court for Colfax county by appellee against appellant. The complaint alleged, substantially, that the parties hereto entered into a written contract on September 23, 1910, whereby appellant agreed to sell, and appellee to purchase, appellant's dental practice and certain office furniture in the town of Springer, in consideration of $300, payable in certain monthly instalments; that at the same time appellant orally agreed that as a further consideration the appellant would execute a written contract not to open a dental office in the town of Springer for the purpose of practising dentistry for a period of five years therefrom, when appellee had paid one half of the purchase price for the sale of the said dental practice and office furniture; that, in pursuance thereof, appellee paid said one half of the purchase price, and appellant thereupon executed, in writing, the agreement not to open an office in Springer for five years for the purpose of practising dentistry therein; that appellee performed all the conditions of the L.R.A.1917B.

last-mentioned contract on his part to be performed, but that appellant, in violation of said agreement, on April 23, 1912, opened a dental office for the purpose of practising dentistry in Springer, and has continually since held himself out to the public as ready and willing to practise dentistry in Springer and is now actually engaged in such practice at said place and threatens to continue therein, to the damage of appellee; that appellee has suffered irreparable injury which cannot be measured by a money judgment; that a multiplicity of suits will be necessary to protect the rights of appellee unless the court interferes by injunction; and that appellee has been damaged on account of said acts in the sum of $1,000. Appellant interposed a demurrer to the complaint. The grounds were that the alleged contract of March 23, 1911, was nudum pactum, unilateral, void, and without any consideration. The demurrer also alleged that the cause of action set out in the complaint was ambiguous and uncertain, in that three distinct contracts are therein referred to, and that appellee was not entitled to the relief demanded, or any other relief in equity. The demurrer was overruled. Thereupon appellant answered, denying the alleged oral agreement, admitting the execution of the contract of March 23, 1911, but setting up that the same was without consideration, and alleging by way of new matter that appellant performed all the conditions of his part agreed to be performed, but that appellee, after the making of the alleged contract of March 23, 1911, agreed, in consideration of the promise of appellant to cease making professional visits to the town of Wagon Mound, that the appellant might practise dentistry in Springer in so far as the same concerned persons desiring treatment from appellant. The case came on for trial before the court without a jury, and judgment making the temporary injunction permanent and awarding damages in the sum of $250 for appellee was rendered by the court. This is an appeal from that judgment.

The record discloses that appellee proved the case made by the pleadings. Appellee was a resident of Fredericktown, Missouri, and came to Springer for the purpose of negotiating with appellant for the purchase of the latter's dental practice. An advertisement inserted by appellant in a dental magazine brought appellee and appellant together. Correspondence was had between the parties which contained representations by appellant that he had labored for twelve years over the dental chair, and that he desired to leave Springer, after selling his practice and office furniture, but retain certain instruments used in his profession, but not for the purpose of practising dentistry in Springer. Ultimately, a written contract was drawn by appellant and presented to appellee. But it contained no stipulation as to appellant ceasing the practice in Springer, and this fact was called to the attention of appellant by appellee. Thereupon appellant and appellee agreed that the appellant would execute in writing a stipulation to the effect that he would not practise dentistry in Springer for five years or words to that practical effect, when appellant had been secured in the sale of his business and furniture by the payment of one half of the purchase price. The contract of sale and purchase was then executed by the parties, the appellee relying upon the oral promise of appellant to execute the second contract. The first contract would not have been executed by appellee except for the said promise. Subsequently, half of the contract price was paid by appellee and the written agreement agreed to be executed by appellant was executed. But this agreement contained no recitation of a consideration. About April 27, 1912, appellant opened an office in Springer for the purpose of practising dentistry therein, and has since that time practised dentistry in Springer. Circular letters and advertisements were introduced showing the fact that appellant was practising dentistry in Springer in an office maintained by him, and that he was holding himself out to the public generally as a dentist of Springer. There are other facts of some importance, but we deem it unnecessary to make a further statement of them.

Mr. Francis O. Wilson, for appellant:

The complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

La Mesa Community Ditch v. Appelzoeller, 19 N. M. 75, 140 Pac. 1051; Mead v. Stirling, 62 Conn. 586, 23 L.R.A. 227, 27 Atl. 591; Schurmeier v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. 8 Minn. 113, Gil. 88, 83 Am. Dec. 770; De Witt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 463, 56 Am. Dec. 352; 2 Joyce, Inj. § 39; Harkinson's Appeal, 78 Pa. 196, 21 Am. Rep. 9; Bonaparte v. Camden & A. R. Co. 1 Baldw. 218, Fed. Cas. No. 1,617; Hart v. Hildebrandt, 30 Ind. App. 415, 66 N. E. 173; Miller v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 109 Fed. 278; Ryan v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. 89 Fed. 385; California Nav. Co. v. Union Transp. Co. 122 Cal. 641, 55 Pac. 591; Crevier v. New York, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. 340.

The agreement to refrain from doing business in Springer, New Mexico, was without consideration.

Cleaver v. Lenhart, 182 Pa. 285, 37 Atl. 811; 1 Parsons, Contr. 451; Zanturjian v. Boornazian, 25 R. I. 151, 55 Atl. 199; Hill v. Staples, 85 Ga. 863, 11 S. E. 967; Carruth L.R.A.1917B.

ers v. McMurray, 75 Iowa, 173, 39 N. W. 255; Leverone v. Hildreth, 80 Cal. 139, 22 Pac. 72; Dwelle v. Dwelle, 1 Kan. App. 473, 40 Pac. 825; Dexter Sav. Bank v. Copeland, 77 Me. 263; Morse v. Mason, 103 Mass. 560; Shoemaker v. Munn, 20 Colo. App. 1, 76 Pac. 924; Howard v. McNeil, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1394, 78 S. W. 142; Savage v. Burns, 3 Mont. 527; Swearingen v. Hartford Ins. Co. 52 S. C. 309, 29 S. E. 722; Page, Contr. § 319, p. 480; Joseph v. Catron, 13 N. M. 202, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1120, 81 Pac. 439.

The alleged promise of defendant, made at the time of entering into the first contract, to execute a further agreement not to engage in the practice of dentistry, violates the parol-evidence rule and cannot be proved.

2 Page, Contr. §§ 1189, 1356; Diven v. Johnson, 117 Ind. 512, 3 L.R.A. 308, 20 N. E. 428; Jones, Ev. 2d ed. § 434, p. 543, note 4, p. 546; Slaughter v. Smither, 97 Va. 202, 33 S. E. 544.

If there is any doubt as to the law or the facts the court will not grant an injunction.

Thayer v. Younge, 86 Ind. 259; Gallup Electric Light Co. v. Pacific Improv. Co. 18 N. M. 86, 113 Pac. 848; Caswell v. Gibbs, 33 Mich. 331; Spelling, Inj. 2d ed. § 481; American Preservers' Co. v. Norris, 43 Fed. 711; Joyce, Inj. § 445; American Cereal Co. v. Eli Pettijohn Cereal Co. 22 C. C. A. 236, 46 U. S. App. 188, 76 Fed. 372; Standard Elevator Co. v. Crane Elevator Co. 6 C. C. A. 100, 9 U. S. App. 556, 56 Fed. 718; High, Inj. § 1106; Healy v. Allen, 38 La. Ann. 867; 22 Cyc. 850, note 57; Joyce, Inj. § 448; Wood v. Dickey, 90 Va. 160, 17 S. E. 818; High, Inj. § 1109, p. 1097; Strang v. Richmond, P. & C. R. Co. 41 C. C. A. 474, 101 Fed. 511; Welty v. Jacobs, 171 Ill. 624, 40 L.R.A. 98, 49 N. E. 723; Philadelphia Ball Club v. Lajoie, 202 Pa. 210, 58 L.R.A. 227, 90 Am. St. Rep. 627, 51 Atl. 973; Jones v. Williams, 139 Mo. 1, 37 L.R.A. 682, 61 Am. St. Rep. 436, 39 S. W. 486, 40 S. W. 353.

To justify an injunction to restrain the violation of a contract, the proof must be clear and definite and the party seeking such relief must act promptly.

Pfeifer v. Rahiser, 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 355; Sanders v. Brown, 145 Ala. 665, 30 So. 732; High, Inj. § 1178; Bank of Commerce v. McAfee, 110 Ga. 302, 34 S. E. 1037; Hollis v. Shaffer, 38 Kan. 492, 17 Pac. 86; Smith v. Brown, 164 Mass. 585, 42 N. E. 101; High, Inj. § 1119, p. 1103; Spelling, Inj. 2d ed. § 486; Joyce, Inj. § 42; Holt v. Parsons, 118 Ga. 895, 45 S. E. 690; Barnard v. Sherley, 135 Ind. 547, 24 L.R.A. 568, 41 Am. St. Rep. 454, 34 N. E. 600, 35 N. E. 117; Ocean City Assn. v. Schurch, 57 N. J. Eq. 268, 41 Atl. 914; Island Heights Assn.

v. Island Heights Water, Power, Gas & Sewer Co. — N. J. Eq. —, 62 Atl. 773; Levi v. Schoenthal, 57 N. J. Eq. 244, 41 Atl. 106.

Mr. H. L. Bickley for appellee.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We discuss the questions presented by appellant according to their relative importance. The first and controlling question presented concerns the admission of certain evidence which appellant claims violates the rule that oral testimony cannot be admitted for the purpose of altering or changing the terms of a written instrument. The appellant contends, as we understand his brief, that the alleged promise of appellant to execute a written contract not to engage in the practice of dentistry in Springer for five years therefrom, made at the time of the execution of the contract of September 23, 1910, resting in parol in the first instance, cannot be proved, because such proof would tend to alter the terms of the contract of September 23, 1910. The appellee contends that the promise was collateral and independent of the written contract, and constituted the inducement for the execution of the written contract, and, being such, is not violative of the rule contended for by appellant.

The contract of September 23, 1910, contains stipulations concerning the sale of appellant's practice and office furniture in Springer, but is silent as to the stipulation contained in the oral agreement.

The courts seem to agree that the question at bar presents a recurring difficulty, not because of the rule itself, but because of the application of the exceptions which appellee invokes.

The existence of the general rule cannot be controverted. Reynolds, Trial Ev. § 74; 2 Page Contr. § 1189; 2 Elliott, Contr. § 1671; Jones, Ev. 2d ed. § 434; and 4 Wigmore, Ev. §§ 2425 et seq.

The exception to the rule which is invoked by appellee is equally well settled.

"The general rule under discussion is not violated by allowing parol evidence to be given of the contents of a distinct, valid, contemporaneous agreement between the parties which was not reduced to writing, when the same is not in conflict with the provisions of the written agreement. The exception is thus stated somewhat more guardedly by [Mr.] Stephen: The parties may prove 'the existence of any separate oral agreement as to any matter on which a document is silent, and which is not inconsistent with its terms, if, from the circumstances of the case, the court infers that the parties did not intend the document to be a complete and final statement of the whole of the transaction between them.'" 3 Jones, Ev. 2d ed. § 439.

"The rule that a written contract merges all prior and contemporaneous oral negotiations applies only to such oral negotiations as concern the subject matter embraced within the written contract." 2 Page, Contr. § 1219.

"Parol evidence of a distinct, valid, parol agreement between the parties, although prior to or contemporaneous with a written contract, is not excluded by the rule in question where it does not in any way vary or contradict the writing, and there are cases in which this is true, although the parol agreement may be collateral to the written contract and relate in some way to the same subject matter, at least where the writing is silent upon the subject and the parol agreement does not seem to be so closely connected with the matter of the written contract that it should be deemed to have entered into the negotiations or formed a part of the transaction or matter of which the writing was intended to be a complete and final statement. But a complete, valid, written contract merges all prior and contemporaneous negotiations and agreements within its purview, and if the parol agreement is not really collateral, but is an element of the written contract, or tends to vary or contradict the same, either in its express provisions or its legal import, it is inadmissible. The question usually is as to whether the parol evidence sought to be introduced contradicts or alters the written contract, or leaves it to stand unchanged, and simply tends to establish an additional collateral agreement. It is often difficult to determine this question, and there is much conflict among the authorities." 2 Elliott, Contr. § 1633.

"The most usual controversy arises in cases of partial integration, i. e., where a certain part of a transaction has been embodied in a single writing, but another part has been left in some other form. Here obviously the rule against disputing the terms of the document will be applicable to so much of the transaction as is so embodied, but not to the remainder." 4 Wigmore, Ev. § 2430.

An examination of numerous cases involving the rule and its exceptions is of no special benefit, but simply illustrates how the courts have applied the rule and its exceptions under the particular facts of each case. Whether the exception invoked by appellee is applicable depends entirely on whether the evidence clearly establishes that in fact the parol agreement is collateral to and independent of the written contract, and does not vary the terms thereof. If it is, the court will apply the exception; if not, the general rule controls and the complaint must then be dismissed.

An examination of the following cases will be found interesting, as illustrating the difference in the application by the various courts of the rule and the exception involved in this case: Allen v. Herrick Hardware Co. 55 Tex. Civ. App. 249, 118 S. W. 1159; Love v. Hamel, 59 App. Div. 360, 69 N. Y. Supp. 252; Gordon v. Parke & L. Machinery Co. 10 Wash. 18, 38 Pac. 756; Costello v. Eddy, 128 N. Y. 650, 29 N. E. 146; Hockersmith v. Ferguson, 63 Wash. 581, 116 Pac. 11; Schoen v. Sunderland, 39 Kan. 758, 18 Pac. 913; Chamberlain v. Lesley, 39 Fla. 452, 22 So. 738; Indelli v. Lester, 130 App. Div. 548, 115 N. Y. Supp. 48; Holmboe v. Morgan, 69 Or. 395, 138 Pac. 1085; Marianna Hotel Co. v. Livermore Foundry & Mach. Co. 107 Ark. 245, 154 S. W. 955; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 149, 104 S. W. 1075; Nebraska Land & Feeding Co. v. Trauerman, 70 Neb. 795, 98 N. W. 37, 39; Wessell v. Havens, 91 Neb. 426, 136 N. W. 70, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1377; Kelly v. Ellis, 39 Mont. 597, 104 Pac. 873; Canfield Lumber Co. v. Kint Lumber Co. 148 Iowa, 207, 127 N. W. 72; De Rue v. McIntosh, 26 S. D. 42, 127 N. W. 532; Ashby v. McNary, — Iowa, —, 134 N. W. 554; Milich v. Armour Packing Co. 60 Kan. 229, 56 Pac. 3; Hubbard v. Marshall, 50 Wis. 322, 6 N. W. 498; Welz v. Rhodius, 87 Ind. 1, 6, 44 Am. Rep. 747; Durham v. Lathrop, 95 Ill. App. 429; Kahn v. Kahn, 94 Tex. 114, 58 S. W. 825; Fusting v. Sullivan, 41 Md. 162, 170; Pierce v. Woodward, 6 Pick. 206-208; Brintnall v. Briggs, 87 Iowa, 538, 54 N. W. 531; Cleaver v. Lenhart, 182 Pa. 285, 292, 37 Atl. 811; Slaughter v. Smither, 97 Va. 202, 33 S. E. 545; Zanturjian v. Boornazian, 25 R. I. 151, 55 Atl. 199; Carruthers v. McMurray, 75 Iowa, 173, 177, 39 N. W. 255; Hall's Appeal, 60 Pa. 458, 100 Am. Dec. 584.

In Allen v. Herrick Hardware Co. 55 Tex. Civ. App. 249, 118 S. W. 1159, the court said: "It is the rule that, when parties reduce their contracts to writing, such writing is to be taken as embodying all the previous negotiations and understandings about its terms, and they cannot be varied by parol; but the rule does not apply where it can be made to appear that the instrument was not intended to be a complete and final settlement of the whole transaction. . . . 'A verbal promise by one of the parties at the making of a written contract, if it was used to obtain the execution of the writing, may be given in evidence.'" to parol evidence of a stipulation not contained within the contract, said: "It was outside of the contract and memorandum; contemporaneous with it, to be sure, but in no way conflicting with, altering, or changing it."

In Schoen v. Sunderland, 39 Kan. 758, 18 Pac. 913, the court speaking with reference L.R.A.1917B.

In New York L. Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 149, 104 S. W. 1075, the court said: "It is a settled rule of law that one contract may be the consideration of another, the inducement to the execution thereof, and, where an independent parol agreement has been made as an inducement to the making of a written contract, the former may be proved and enforced, though not referred to in the latter."

In Wessell v. Havens, 91 Neb. 426, 136 N. W. 70, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1377, the principal thing which controlled the decision of the court, that the parol agreement could not be enforced, was the fact that the written contract was made with much care and detail and the parol agreement was not attempted to be enforced by plaintiff until a year and a half after the execution thereof and after the plaintiff had sold the business.

The test of the question applied by the court in Kelly v. Ellis, 39 Mont. 597, 104 Pac. 873, is thus stated by the court: "The only remaining inquiry, then, is: Was the promise to employ plaintiff as local manager one of the essential terms of the oral contract itself, or was it only a collateral agreement made by the defendants as an inducement to the plaintiff to dispose of his property?"

In Canfield Lumber Co. v. Kint Lumber Co. 148 Iowa, 207, 127 N. W. 72, the court remarked: "The main contention is over the right of defendants to prove the parol agreement relied upon by them, to the effect that plaintiff was to take and pay for lumber ordered. We are constrained to hold that this testimony does not vary the contract or change any of the terms of the original agreement, and that it was admissible. A contract may be partly in writing and partly in parol, and unless there be a conflict between them, or they cover the same subject matter, parol evidence is admissible to show the entire agreement."

In De Rue v. McIntosh, 26 S. D. 42, 127 N. W. 532, the court said: "And one of the exceptions seems to be that agreements or representations made prior to the written contract under which the party was induced to sign the contract may be shown; in other words, where the parol contemporaneous agreement was the inducing and moving cause of the written contract, or where the parol agreement forms part of the consideration for a written contract, and where he executed the written contract upon the faith of the parol contract or representations, such evidence is admissible."

In Welz v. Rhodius, 87 Ind. 1, 6, 44 Am. Rep. 747, the court said: "The contract made, the promise given by either party, as expressed in the writing, cannot be modified; but further or additional consideration may be shown, even though it consist of a promise of one party to the other, if it be to do something outside of and so far distinct from the written promise or contract as that the latter is not varied or modified."

In Durham v. Lathrop, 95 Ill. App. 429, the court said: "We do not regard this oral transaction as merged in the writings. No one of the writings, nor all of them, purport to be a complete contract, embodying all the terms of the agreement. The oral agreement not to interfere with the business to which his former partner was to succeed, and for which he, Lathrop, was to be paid, is in no way inconsistent with any of the terms of any of the writings, nor does it vary them."

In Fusting v. Sullivan, 41 Md. 162, 170, the court said: "Although the good will of the store and the agreement not to set up another were, according to the statement of Shipley, material elements of the consideration to be given for the purchase of the property, yet they were not necessarily involved in the purchase, nor referred to in the contract, and were in fact incidental and collateral."

In Zanturjian v. Boornazian, 25 R. I. 151, 55 Atl. 199, the court held that the parol agreement involved therein, to the effect that defendants would not re-engage in the same business, was not within the Statute of Frauds, but that proof of the parol agreement contradicted the terms of the writing.

These cases and the quotations therefrom are set out principally for the purpose of showing how the courts have applied the general rule and the exceptions involved in this case under the peculiar facts of each case.

Mr. Wigmore, in his work on Evidence, makes the following commentary on the subject under discussion:

"But in those instances in which a negotiation concerns one general subject—such as the purchase of a single lot of land having buildings on it—and yet several more or less separable features of bargain, the relation between the writing and the whole bargain is usually difficult to ascertain, and forms a perpetually recurring controversy. To say that the question is whether the parties intended to embody 'the whole of the transaction,' or only a part, is therefore hardly correct; because by hypothesis the writing does represent the whole of what was finally done on the subject covered by L.R.A.1917B.

it, and because to assume that the subject not covered was a 'part' of the transaction covered would be inconsistent, and would involve holding that the writing which embodies the transaction does not embody that 'part' of it. More correctly, the inquiry is whether the writing was intended to cover a certain subject of negotiation; for, if it was not, then the writing does not embody the transaction on that subject, and one of the circumstances of decision will be whether the one subject is so associated with the others that they are in effect 'parts' of the same transaction, and therefore, if reduced to writing at all, they must be governed by the same writing. . . . The intent must be sought where always intent must be sought, . . . namely, in the conduct and language of the parties and the surrounding circumstances. The document alone will not suffice. What it was intended to cover cannot be known until we know what there was to cover. The question being whether certain subjects of negotiation were intended to be covered, we must compare the writing and the negotiations before we can determine whether they were in fact covered. Thus the apparent paradox is committed of receiving proof of certain negotiations in order to determine whether to exclude them; and this doubtless has sometimes seemed to lower the rule to a quibble. But the paradox is apparent only. The explanation is that these alleged negotiations are received only provisionally. Although in form the witnesses may be allowed to recite the facts, yet in truth, the facts well be afterwards treated as immaterial and legally void, if the rule is held applicable. There is a preliminary question for the judge to decide as to the intent of the parties, and upon this he hears evidence on both sides; his decision here, pro or con, concerns merely this question preliminary to the ruling of law. If he decides that the transaction was covered by the writing, he does not decide that the excluded negotiations did not take place, but merely that if they did take place they are nevertheless legally immaterial. If he decides that the transaction was not intended to be covered by the writing, he does not decide that the negotiations did take place, but merely that, if they did, they are legally effective, and he then leaves to the jury the determination of facts whether they did take place. . . . In deciding upon this intent, the chief and most satisfactory index for the judge is found in the circumstance whether or not the particular element of the alleged extrinsic negotiation is dealt with at all in the writing. If it is mentioned, covered, or dealt with in the writing, then presumably the writing was meant to represent all of the transaction on that element; if it is not, then probably the writing was not intended to embody that element of the negotiation. This test is the one used by the most careful judges, and is in contrast with the looser and incorrect inquiry . . . whether the alleged extrinsic negotiation contradicts the terms of the writing." 4 Wigmore, Ev. § 2430.

The rule announced by Mr. Wigmore appears to us to be the proper one and the one which will follow in this case. In the case at bar it will be seen that the contract of September 23, 1910, was in reference to the sale of appellant's practice and certain of his office furniture, and was entirely silent as to the subject matter contained within the parol agreement, which was subsequently put in writing. We therefore are constrained to hold that the general rule contended for by appellant has no application to the facts of this case, and that the court did not err in admitting evidence of the parol agreement made contemporaneous with the execution of the written contract, and not varying any of the terms thereof.

2. Appellant also contends that the agreement to refrain from doing business in Springer was without consideration. We take it that the point is presented on the theory that the parties expressed their entire contract in the agreement of September 23, 1910, and that when the second agreement was executed there was no obligation resting upon appellant to agree not to re-engage in the business or practise the profession in Springer, and therefore the agreement on the part of appellant was voluntary and without consideration. The complaint is rather indefinite on the question of consideration for the execution of the second contract. It alleges that as a further consideration the second agreement was made by parol at the time of the execution of the first agreement. The proof tends to establish that the consideration for the execution of the second agreement was the promise by the appellant at the time of the execution of the first contract, and that that promise was the inducing cause for the execution of the first agreement by appellee. Being such, we cannot say that it was not a "further consideration" for the execution of the first contract, but are constrained to hold that it was a further consideration therefor. The theory of appellant's argument is that at the time of the execution of the second contract the first had been performed, and that no valuable consideration moved from one to the other party for the execution of the second contract. The second written contract was executed in pursuance of the former parol agreement by the parties, so that the real question concerning the consideration would be determined by the existing facts at the time of the making of the parol agreement, if it were necessary to determine that question under this point. The cases cited by appellant bear out what we have said is his theory in this court, i. e., that the consideration for the second contract is what is termed a "past consideration." Those cases are clearly distinguished from the one at bar. There the alleged parol agreements were apparently afterthoughts, and were not a part of the original transaction either in writing or by parol. Nor do we find any merit in the appellant's contention that to permit appellee to sustain his right of recovery in this court on the theory that the consideration of the second contract was the parol inducing promise heretofore referred to would be to permit him to change the theory of his case.

3. The appellant also urges that the trial court erred in sustaining the demurrer, because it appears upon the face of the complaint that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief he demanded nor any relief in equity. Appellant argues that the complaint does not show the amount of practice done by each of the parties, nor that the business of appellee was less remunerative by reason of the breach of the agreement, but shows a doubt as to the law and the facts sufficient to justify equitable relief. The complaint alleges the making of a contract whereby appellant agreed not to open an office in Springer for five years for the purpose of practising dentistry, its breach and injury which cannot be measured in money, together with an allegation that a multiplicity of suits will follow in the event equity does not take jurisdiction of the cause, in order to recover losses suffered by appellee by way of damages.

High on Injunctions, vol. 2, § 1168, states the theory upon which courts of equity take cognizance of this class of cases: "The jurisdiction in cases of this nature is based upon the ground that the parties cannot be placed in statu quo, and that damages at law can afford no adequate compensation; the injury being a continuing one and irreparable by the ordinary process of courts of law."

We are of the opinion that, while the complaint might well have been more definite and certain in some respects, it is sufficient to warrant the action of the trial court in entertaining jurisdiction of the cause.

4. In this connection, the appellant contends that the question is whether the defendant violated his agreement or was doing that which he had a right to do when practising dentistry in Springer. The complaint clearly alleges that appellant agreed not to open an office in Springer for the purpose of practising dentistry for five years, and a breach thereof. The allegation was established by substantial evidence. The court found that appellant made such an agreement and violated it, and we will not disregard the findings of the trial court in this regard; there being substantial evidence to warrant the finding. While the second contract may have permitted appellant to treat certain patients of appellee when the latter was absent from the town of Springer, it did not permit him to open an office in Springer for the purpose of practising his profession therein.

5. Appellant also urges that the provision in the second contract as to appellant treating patients during appellee's absence from Springer could not have been specifically enforced as against the appellant, and therefore the agreement lacked mutuality, and the negative covenant not to practise in Springer for five years cannot, under such circumstances, be enforced by injunction. The consideration for the covenant not to engage in the practice in Springer, or open an office for the purpose of practising dentistry in Springer, was the inducement for the execution of the first contract. Therefore, whether the provision in the second contract concerning the appellant treating patients of appellee when the latter was absent from Springer could be specifically enforced or not is entirely immaterial in a consideration of the merits of this case, and of the point made by appellant. The covenant not to engage in the practice in Springer, or not to open an office in Springer for the purpose of practising dentistry, did not lack mutuality. There was no attempt in this case to enforce the covenant concerning appellant treating patients of appellee.

6. Appellant argues and cites authority that to support an injunction from engaging in business the proof of the contract to do so must be clear and indubitable, and, if the evidence is conflicting, an injunction is properly denied. The rule adopted by this court and followed in a great number of cases is that this court will not disturb the verdict of a jury nor the findings of the trial court where there is substantial evidence to support the same.

7. The proof in this case is substantial. Under the same heading it is claimed by appellant that it must be shown that appellee used reasonable diligence in asserting his rights and in demanding their protection, and that the evidence in this case shows that appellee delayed eleven months in asking a court of equity for relief, which constituted inexcusable delay. We assume that the question was presented to the trial court by the demurrer, though we fail to find that the question was raised during the trial of the cause.

It is a general rule of equity that he who seeks the aid of equity must show that he has used reasonable diligence in asserting his rights and demanding their protection, and unreasonable delay in seeking the aid of a court of equity will generally prove a bar to the exercise of the jurisdiction. 2 High, Inj. § 1119. The proposition is primarily addressed to the trial court, whose equitable jurisdiction is first invoked. What constitutes reasonable diligence can be determined by no established rule, for the question must be determined upon the circumstances of each case. The complaint alleges the making of the contract on September 23, 1910, and putting it in writing on March 23, 1911. It also alleges that the contractual obligation of appellant was violated on April 23, 1912, when appellant is alleged to have opened an office in Springer for the purpose of practising dentistry. This action was commenced on March 12, 1913, more than ten months after the alleged breach of the contract. The evidence also disclosed these facts. The trial court entertained jurisdiction of the cause, knowing that appellee had waited more than ten months before attempting to protect his rights; and we are not prepared to say that such time, under the circumstances of this case, constituted laches on the part of appellee sufficient to deprive him of resort to a court of equity.

8. The appellant says that the second contract, if it is a contract within the meaning of the law, "prohibited defendant from opening an office in Springer for the purpose of practising dentistry in Springer for a period of five years, except it be with the consent of the plaintiff," but did not "prohibit plaintiff from opening an office in Springer for practising dentistry for persons outside of Springer." If that be correct, the conclusion we are left to draw is that the evidence does not show that the appellant violated his contractual obligation, because it does not appear that appellant treated persons residing in Springer. It must be admitted that appellant was allowed to treat patients of appellee when appellee was absent from Springer, for such are the terms of one of the covenants in the second contract. But the distinction drawn by appellant's counsel is without any substantial foundation. The contract must be construed as it is written. It prohibits appellant from opening an office in Springer for the purpose of practising dentistry in Springer, not prohibiting appellant from opening an office in Springer for the purpose of practising dentistry among people of Springer. The literal interpretation of the words of the contract does not permit of the fine-spun distinction drawn by appellant.

9. The appellant contends that it is essential that the complaint should state facts showing a necessity for the extraordinary remedy of injunction, and that the complaint in the case at bar fails to show "in what way and for what reason plaintiff will suffer irreparable injury from the alleged violation of the written agreement." The appellant demurred to the complaint, and one of the grounds therefor was that the complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in that it did not show that the plaintiff was entitled to any equitable relief. The demurrer was overruled and defendant pleaded over. The appellee does not raise any question as to the effect of thus pleading over, but contends that the question now urged was not raised in the trial court, and therefore cannot be raised here for the first time. It is unnecessary to decide whether the matter contained within the demurrer is too general to raise the question. The Code (Comp. Laws 1897, subsec. 36, § 2685), provides that "the demurrer shall distinctly specify the grounds of objection to the pleading; unless it does so, it may be disregarded."

Prior to statehood, it was necessary, by supreme court rule, to specify the ground of demurrer as well as the reason therefor; but this particular rule no longer exists as a rule made by the supreme court. The appellant attacks the complaint before this court on the ground that equitable jurisdiction is not shown therein because the allegation of irreparable injury is alleged as a conclusion, and not as a fact. The complaint alleges that the injury cannot be measured by a money judgment, and also contains an additional allegation as to multiplicity of suits. We deem it amply sufficient to withstand the attack now made upon its sufficiency in these regards.

10. Appellant insists that the court erred in admitting evidence of certain letters and conversations written and had prior to the making of the first contract, and in admitting secondary proof in reference to the letters.

The introduction of the letters and part of their contents by secondary evidence were directed to support the oral agreement made by the parties with reference to the appellant thereafter opening an office in Springer for the purpose of practising dentistry in Springer. The appellant argues that such letters and conversations tended to vary the terms of the first written contract. The first letter to which objection was made contained statements of appellant to the effect that he did not intend to practise dentistry in Springer after the sale to appellee was perfected. The letter also contained matters concerning the sale. But the purpose of the introduction of the letter was to support the theory that the oral agreement had been actually entered into by the parties. The second letter to which appellant objects contained matters concerning the sale of the business, as well as matters pertaining to the parol agreement. The contents were proved by secondary evidence. The first objection as to the contents of the letter was that the same was secondary evidence,—not that a proper foundation for secondary evidence had not been laid. The court required further proof of facts laying the foundation for secondary evidence, and the witness testified that the letter was left in Missouri, and that the relatives of the witness had searched for it, but had been unable to find it, and that the witness has diligently searched among his papers in New Mexico and has been unable to find it. The appellant then objected to stating the contents of the letter on the ground that such proof was secondary evidence, and for other reasons not necessary to state in this particular. The objection can hardly be said to raise the question as to the proper foundation for the admission of secondary evidence. Appellant's objections to certain conversation related by the witness, occurring at a time prior to the execution of the first contract, are based upon the theory that such conversations altered the terms of the first written contract. The court has held in this opinion that oral testimony tending to prove the parol agreement was not obnoxious to the general rule upon which appellant relies, and this evidence was directed to that end. Other questions discussed in the briefs, but not specifically referred to herein, we deem are without merit.

11. Appellant says that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment for damages, and in this he is correct. While the evidence in the case shows inferentially that the appellee was damaged by the fact that the appellant opened a dental office in Springer and did considerable business, the proof fails to show the amount of damage which the appellee suffered. Just how the district court assessed the amount of damages at $250 is difficult to determine from the evidence, there being no showing whatever as to the amount of injury to the appellee.

The judgment in this case will, consequently, have to be modified by eliminating therefrom the judgment for damages, and as so modified the judgment of the lower court will be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Roberts, Ch. J., and Hanna, J., concur.

Annotation—Competency of parol evidence of an agreement by the vendor of a business not to re-engage therein, where some part of the agreement has been reduced to writing.

The parol-evidence rule, excluding parol evidence to contradict or vary the terms of a valid written instrument, does not apply, where the entire agreement of the parties has not been reduced to writing, to exclude parol evidence of the part not in writing. This exception has been stated in various ways. Greenleaf, after referring to certain other exceptions to the parol-evidence rule, says in vol. 1, § 284a: "Nor does the rule apply in cases where the original contract was verbal and entire and a part only of it was reduced to writing." Chamberlayne in his discussion in the "Modern Law of Evidence" says in vol. 5, § 3553, that "evidence of a prior or contemporaneous parol agreement or understanding is frequently received where it is consistent with the writing in question, and it is apparent that the instrument was not intended as a complete embodiment of the undertaking." See statements of the rule by other authorities in opinion in LOCKE v. MURDOCH, ante, 267.

Discussing the question farther, Greenleaf states in vol. 1, § 305f, that "even though there has been an integration, i. e., a reduction of a transaction to a final and exclusive written memorial, yet, since several transactions may be consummated by the same parties at the same time of negotiation, and since the parties may integrate one of these transactions, and not another, or may integrate one part of a transaction, and not another part, it is of course always open to show that the integration was partial only, and in such case the terms of the remainder not covered by the written memorial may be gleaned from anything said or done by the parties independently of the writing. Effect is given to the written memorial as exclusively representing the terms of the transaction, but only because the parties have so intended it, and therefore only so far [as] the parties have intended it."

It thus appears that the abstract principle applied in LOCKE v. MURDOCH, is well settled; the difficulty arises, as recognized therein, from the application of the rule to a specific state of facts.<sup>1</sup>

Contrary to the conclusion therein reached, the majority of courts have held parol evidence of an agreement by the vendor of a business not to re-engage therein inadmissible where a part of the agreement between the parties has been reduced to writing. Different courts have taken different views as to the factors determinative of the admissibility of such evidence, and these are discussed in detail. The usual writing involved in the case is a bill of sale, but the question has arisen where other writings were involved. It is of course apparent that the character of the writing is an important factor in determining the admissibility of the evidence.

In discussing the application of the rules above mentioned Greenleaf states in vol. 1, § 305f, that "since all depends thus on the parties' intention as to the extent or scope of the integration, the application of the principle will depend almost entirely on the circumstances of each case,—including the kind of transaction, the usual terms of such transactions, the scope of the writing, and the surrounding circumstances of the particular negotiation. No detailed rules can be formulated, and the working of the principle can best be understood by noticing its application in particular instances." And Wigmore, in the citation given in LOCKE v. MURDOCH, takes practically the same position. It is there expressly stated that "the document alone will not suffice" to show the intent of the parties; and again, in § 2431, this author states that the doctrine that "the writing is the sole criterion" is "untenable, both on principle and in practice."

It has been held, however, that the only evidence of the completeness of a written contract as a full expression of the terms of the agreement of the parties is the contract itself; that where parties have deliberately put their mutual engagements into writing in such language as imports a legal obligation, it is only reasonable to presume that they have introduced into the written instrument every material term and circumstance, and consequently all parol testimony of conversations held between <sup>1</sup> The right to show a parol warranty in connection with the contract of sale of personality is discussed in the note to Electric L.R.A. 1917B.

Storage Battery Co. v. Waterloo; C. F. & N. R. Co. 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1183.

Contemporaneous agreements and their them or declarations made by either of them before, or at the time of the completion of the contract, will be rejected. If the written contract purports to contain the whole agreement, and it is not apparent from the writing itself that something is left out to be supplied, parol evidence to vary or contradict its terms is not admissible.<sup>2</sup> It cannot be assumed from the mere fact that the written memorial contains nothing on the subject to which the parol evidence is directed, that the writing was designed as an imperfect expression of the agreement between the parties.<sup>3</sup> According to this theory if the writing appears to be a complete contract parol evidence is inadmissible.<sup>4</sup> If it does not purport to be the complete agreement of the parties, parol evidence is admissible.<sup>5</sup> breach as a defense to a promissory note is discussed in the note to American Gas & Ventilating Mach. Co. v. Wood, 43 L.R.A. 449.

As to the validity of an agreement by an employee not to engage in business in competition with an employer, see note to Turner v. Abbott, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 892, and see the other point in this case as to admissibility of parol evidence of an agreement on the part of the employee not to engage in business in competition with his employer, where the contract for employment is in writing.

<sup>2</sup> Osgood v. Skinner (1904) 211 Ill. 229, 71 N. E. 869; Durham v. Lathrop (1901) 95 Ill. App. 429; Slaughter v. Smither (1899) 97 Va. 202, 33 S. E. 544; Gordon v. Parke & L. Machinery Co. (1894) 10 Wash. 18, 38 Pac. 755.

<sup>3</sup> Slaughter v. Smither (1899) 97 Va. 202, 33 S. E. 544.

<sup>4</sup> In Osgood v. Skinner (1904) 211 Ill. 229, 71 N. E. 869, holding parol evidence of an agreement by the vendors of a coal mine not to re-engage in business inadmissible, the evidence was to the effect that the purchaser did not understand or intend to make a legal or binding agreement to the effect that the vendors should not re-engage in the business, but that he asked for their word of honor as business men that they would not engage in the business, and this promise was intentionally omitted from the written contract. In the opinion of the lower court it is stated that the purchaser testified that the promise of the vendors not to re-engage in the business was omitted from the written contract because of the belief that it was illegal and opposed to public policy. (1904) 111 Ill. App. 606. The court in this case apparently considers circumstances other than the writing.

In Slaughter v. Smither (Va.) supra, the purchaser, under the terms of the agreement, was to take charge of the business, and run it for the vendor. The agreement provided for the manner of refurnishing the stock, and for the keeping of accounts and sales, and then provided that when the purchaser had paid in all a certain sum he was to "receive a clear bill of sale for the business."

The agreement involved in Gordon v. Parke & L. Machinery Co. (1894) 10 Wash. 18, 38 Pac. 755, was that the vendor, his successors, and assigns "will cause to be executed by its duly authorized officers, an assignment and transfer and conveyance to the said party of the second part [the purchaser], of all its right title, and interest in and to the following named property owned by the party of the first part and now situated and being in . . . and will within ten days from the date thereof deliver the same to the second party." Then followed a description of the property and numerous details; and it was declared: "The intention and object of this agreement being to sell and deliver an aggregate value of $29,000, the foregoing amounts being subject to alteration and increase or decrease after ascertainment by inventory; total amount of said variation not to exceed $500." The court states that the contract was one of great detail, and entered minutely in all the matters undertaken by both parties and was executed by both. It covered the sale of the stock, accounts, and lease of the place of business of the vendor, with its furniture, fixtures, and books. Answering the objection that the promise not to re-engage in business was a collateral agreement not connected with the subject matter of the principal contract, and not to be performed until after the full execution of the principal contract, the court states: "The complaint says that the respondent's purpose in making the purchase was to continue business in the same line theretofore followed by appellant in Spokane with the merchandise to be sold to him, and that the object of the agreement that appellant would no longer carry on business at that place was to prevent competition with him in the disposal of the goods acquired by him. If so, then to the extent that the agreement referred to the goods which were the subject of the contract, it was certainly not collateral or independent, and we should expect to find some mention of the arrangement in a contract so precise in its terms and so formally drawn as this one. Not finding it there, the law concludes that the agreement alleged was not made, however much the appellant may have intended not to reopen business in Spokane."

<sup>5</sup> In Durham v. Lathrop (1901) 95 Ill. App. 429, the purchase and sale was here made between partners. The writings evidencing the sale were as follows: First, "I have this day sold to . . . all of my interests in the firm of. . . . Receipt of money is hereby acknowledged." Second, a receipt for the money in words, "Received of . . . $3,300 in full of all demands to date." These instruments were both dated and both signed by the

Where the promise of the vendor to discontinue the business, if made at all, is a part of the contract of sale, agreed upon at the time the agreement is reduced to writing, it cannot be contended that the promise is a distinct collateral agreement forming no part of the contract which is reduced to writing.<sup>6</sup>

It is apparently the theory of one case<sup>7</sup> that the rule admitting parol evidence when the writing on its face does not purport to contain the entire agreement of the parties, or where the matter sought to be proved by parol is independent of and collateral to the writing, has no application to the admissibility of evidence of an agreement not to re-engage in business where the agreement of sale has been reduced to writing.

In a case<sup>8</sup> in which the purchaser sought the reformation of the contract so as to include the agreement not to re-engage in business and damages for the breach of such agreement, the court in denying the relief cites from Greenleaf on Evidence, vol. 1, § 275, to the effect that "when parties have deliberately put their engagements into writing, in such terms as import a legal obligation, without any uncertainty as to the object or extent of such engagement, it is conclusively presumed that the whole engagement of the parties, and the extent and manner of their undertaking, was reduced to writing; and all oral testimony of a previous colloquium between the parties, or of conversation or declarations at the time when it was completed, or afterwards, as it would tend in many instances to substitute a new and different contract for the one which was really agreed upon, to the prejudice, possibly, of one of the parties, is rejected. In other words, as the rule is now more briefly expressed, 'parol contemporaneous evidence is inadmissible to contradict or vary the terms of a valid written instrument.'"

Some cases do not consider the manner of determining the intention of the parties; in fact the intention of the parties is not considered as a determinative factor; but the attention of the court is directed to the abstract question of the relation of an agreement not to re-engage in business to the agreement of sale. The courts are not agreed on the admissibility of the evidence when determined from this standpoint. Some cases have considered such an agreement, founded upon the same consideration and entered into at the same time with the written contract between the parties, "an additional oral stipulation," and parol evidence thereof inadmissible.<sup>9</sup> In excluding evidence of a retiring partner. Another writing was executed on the same day and signed by both of the partners as follows: "The firm of . . . is this day dissolved by mutual consent. . . . will assume all liabilities and collect all accounts, and will succeed the firm of. . . ." The oral agreement not to re-engage in business is stated to be in no way inconsistent with any of the terms of any of the writings, nor does it vary them.

See Pierce v. Woodward, infra, note 13.

<sup>6</sup> Slaughter v. Smither (Va.) supra. See Costello v. Eddy (N. Y.) infra.

But see Fusting v. Sullivan, infra, note 12.

<sup>7</sup> At least this seems to be the meaning of the court in Costello v. Eddy (1890) 34 N. Y. S. R. 565, 12 N. Y. Supp. 236, affirmed without opinion (1891) 128 N. Y. 650, 29 N. E. 146, where, after referring to these rules, the court states that the rule is not applicable in the case at bar. No explanation of why the rule is not applicable is made, and the meaning of the court is not clear.

<sup>8</sup> Brintnall v. Briggs (1893) 87 Iowa, 538, 54 N. W. 531. At the time of the execution of the written agreement the purchaser knew that there was no stipulation as to re-engaging in business in the writing, and requested it to be inserted. The vendor refused to have it inserted, but L.R.A.1917B.

orally agreed that the same should be binding upon him the same as if inserted in the written contract.

<sup>9</sup> In reliance upon Costello v. Eddy, infra, it was held in Love v. Hamel (1901) 59 App. Div. 360, 69 N. Y. Supp. 251, that parol evidence of an agreement not to re-engage in business could not be shown, where such agreement was not contained in the writing in which the vendor "hereby sells, transfers, and delivers to the parties of the second part, one Cornell Cafe, situated on Eddy street in said city . . . together with all of the fixtures and appurtenances thereto belonging and owned by said party of the first part." In this case at the time of drawing the writing, when it was read over to the parties, the purchaser mentioned the omission of the clause in regard to the agreement not to re-engage in business. It was then stated by the lawyer who drew the contract that he would draw a new contract or interline such provision. The vendor thereupon said it was not necessary, that he was in a hurry, that the purchasers had always done as they had agreed by him, and he certainly would do so by them, whereupon it was omitted; the court stating: "The statements made by the parties to this action, and advice of counsel given when the writing was being prepared, shows that the parol agreement was considered by all as one entire agreeparol agreement not to re-engage in business where the written contract signed by the parties did not show any such agreement, one court,<sup>10</sup> after remarking upon the difficulty of determining any definite boundary line between the cases in which parol evidence is admissible and those in which it is inadmissible, where the parties have made a written contract in reference to the general subject of agreement between them, states: "We are of opinion that the evidence here offered was properly excluded, inasmuch as the defendant must take the position that the sale of the fish stand and the personal property attached to it, and the stipulation that the defendant would not engage in the business within the limits of Springfield for the term of one year, were part of or formed the original consideration."

ment, all of which to be binding upon the parties should be incorporated into the written agreement."

Parol evidence of an agreement by a vendor not to re-engage in business was held inadmissible in Ordelheide v. Traube (1914) 183 Mo. App. 363, 166 S. W. 1108, where there was no issue whatever in the case touching this matter, the suit proceeding alone for damages occasioned through the breach of the vendor's contract to sign a lease. The court adds, however, that this evidence "was incompetent because it tended to vary by parol the written contract of sale, in which no such stipulation appears, by showing an additional term of the agreement contemporaneously entered into."

<sup>10</sup> Wilson v. Sherburne (1850) 6 Cush. (Mass.) 68.

In following this case in Doyle v. Dixon (1866) 12 Allen (Mass.) 576, the court states that "the alleged oral contract of the defendant was identical with the writing in every particular except that it specified the amount of rent, and added an agreement not to engage in the grocery business, or sell goods of the same description as the stock purchased by the plaintiff within five years in. . . . The evidence offered can be considered in no other light than as an attempt to ingraft upon the written instrument an additional oral stipulation founded upon the same consideration and entered into at the same time with the written contract between the parties."

<sup>11</sup> In Walther v. Stampfli (1901) 91 Mo. App. 398, the term "good will" is treated as synonymous with an agreement not to re-engage in the business. The written agreement is not set forth in the report of this case, but apparently the various items were mentioned as indicated from the above citation. See Hebert v. Dupaty (1890) 42 La. Ann. 343, 7 So. 580, infra, note 15.

Practically the same line of reasoning is adopted in Costello v. Eddy (1890) 34 N. Y. S. R. 565, 12 N. Y. Supp. 236, affirmed L.R.A.1917B.

In another case<sup>11</sup> in which the evidence was held inadmissible in an action by the purchaser for breach of the vendor's contract, the court states that the purchaser "bought at a certain price the defendant's merchandise, his business as a furniture dealer and undertaker, with other personal property mentioned [therein], and in addition, as she claims, his good will. His good will was one of the subject matters of the contract as much so as the horse and wagon or any other article mentioned in the writing. In buying his good will she was buying property. It should have been included in the written instrument. It was as necessary to have had it inserted in the writing as the furniture."

Other cases have held the evidence admissible on the theory that the agreement not to re-engage in business is not without opinion in (1891) 128 N. Y. 650, 29 N. E. 146, where in an action to recover damages for an alleged breach of the contract not to re-engage in business, parol evidence of such agreement was held not admissible where neither the written contract nor bill of sale contained any express agreement that the vendor would not again engage in the business in the town where located. The purchaser sought to separate this agreement from the agreement of sale and treat it as collateral to the sale of the business. In denying this contention the court states: "Suppose that in drawing the contract all other articles, rights, and privileges intended to be transferred by the parties had been specified in the contract except the horses and harness, could the plaintiff in an action at law for damages for a failure to deliver the horses and harness prove, notwithstanding the writing, that they were embraced in the sale and paid for by the $2,000? We think not." After stating that such a mistake might be corrected in equity, the court continues: "In an action at law the terms of the writing would prevail, and the legal rule would apply, that all the agreement of the parties as to what the defendant sold, and what was purchased by the plaintiff, was merged in the writing, and that would control."

The written contract of sale involved in Costello v. Eddy (N. Y.) supra, provided that the vendor had sold "the lease and business carried on by said Eddy as a bakery business on Broadway and Philadelphia streets, Saratoga Springs; also the horses, wagons, tools, apparatus, furniture, fixtures, stock, goods on hand (excepting bank accounts); also all the leases covering premises on Philadelphia street, the bakery on Broadway, the lease of Dr. Ford's barn in the alley, and also all the interest of said George B. Eddy of, in, and to the house on Bullard street." The writing contained covenants of warranty to warrant necessarily involved in a contract of purchase, but is merely incidental and collateral.<sup>12</sup>

In some cases the writing is of such a character as to clearly determine the question. For example, an agreement not to re-engage in business is not inconsistent with a deed of the land on which the business is conducted, nor does it affect a conveyance of real estate, hence evidence thereof is admissible.<sup>13</sup> So, parol evidence is admissible in an action for breach of the agreement, to show an agreement by the owner of a hotel, upon the sale of the furniture therein, and an agreement by the purchaser to take a lease of the building, to remain at the hotel and use her influence to aid in retaining the guests of the house and their patronage, where the only writing was a lease of the premises; since the agreement not to re-engage in business is a separate contract collateral to the lease, in no manner intending to modify or affect any stipulation in the lease or right of obligation created by it.<sup>14</sup> On the contrary, where the writing enumerates every item sold, and fixes a valuation thereon, the evidence has been stated to be inadmissible.<sup>15</sup>

Where the written contract of sale transfers the good will of the business, parol evidence of the oral agreement not to re-engage in business is inadmissible.<sup>16</sup> "Good will" is regarded in some cases as relating to the same subject matter as an agreement not to re-engage and defend the sale of the property and interest.

<sup>12</sup> Fusting v. Sullivan (1874) 41 Md. 162. The written contract provided that the vendor "has agreed to sell to the parties of the second part his store, house, lumber yards, barn, and barnyards as it now is inclosed, for the sum of — dollars." The terms of payment were then provided, purchasers agreeing to "take all the stock in trade in the store and in the lumber yard at cost on its market value, adding hauling for lumber and coal as agreed upon," the agreement being signed and dated. The court states that, "although the good will of the store, and the agreement not to set up another, were, according to the statement of [the purchaser] material elements of the consideration to be given for the purchase of the property, yet they were not necessarily involved in the purchase nor referred to in the contract, and were in fact incidental and collateral."

It is stated obiter in Webber v. Smith (1914) 24 Cal. App. 51, 140 Pac. 37, that parol evidence of an agreement by the purchaser of the tangible property of a milk route to purchase the good will of the business is admissible, in an action by the vendor to recover for the purchase price agreed to be paid therefor. The written bill of sale specified and covered the tangible property on the route, and it is stated that the subjects dealt with in the bill of sale were distinct and separate from the good will of the business.

See Slaughter v. Smither, supra, note 4.

<sup>13</sup> Pierce v. Woodward (1828) 6 Pick. (Mass.) 206. In order to induce the purchase, the owner of the store and land agreed not to engage in the same business within certain limits. The action was one for a violation of his oral agreement.

See Durham v. Lathrop, supra, note 5.

<sup>14</sup> Welz v. Rhodius (1882) 87 Ind. 1, 44 Am. Rep. 747.

<sup>15</sup> Hebert v. Dupaty (1890) 42 La. Ann. 343, 7 So. 580, stating that where the act of sale of a livery business enumerates L.R.A.1917B.

every item sold with a valuation, parol evidence is inadmissible to show that the "good will" of the business was also sold to the purchasers. Such evidence is stated to add to and contradict the written act of sale in which there is no ambiguity or uncertainty. The action here was one for damages for conducting a competing business; it was not shown that the vendor had conducted a competing business, and the court states that, admitting the good will of the business was sold, it could have no bearing on the case.

See Walther v. Stampfli, 91 Mo. App. 398, supra, note 11.

<sup>16</sup> Drake v. Dodsworth (1867) 4 Kan. 159; Wessel v. Havens (1912) 91 Neb. 426, 136 N. W. 70, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1377; Smith v. Gibbs (1862) 44 N. H. 335; Zanturjian v. Boornazian (R. L.) infra.

After holding that the evidence was insufficient to show an agreement on the part of a vendor not to re-engage in business, the court in Hall's Appeal (1869) 60 Pa. 458, 100 Am. Dec. 584, states: "Here the parties have put their contract in writing, and it must be allowed to speak for itself unless it is clearly shown that the stipulation in question was omitted through fraud or mistake."

The parol evidence that was sought to be introduced in Bassett v. Percival (1862) 5 Allen (Mass.) 345, was not that a vendor of a business would not re-engage in the business, but that he agreed "that the plaintiffs had bought his trade, and to influence his former customers to patronize the plaintiffs at store No. 763."

The good will of the business was valued separate from the stock of goods, and upon the vendor re-entering business the action was brought to recover the entire amount paid for the good will. After pointing out that the entire amount paid for the good will could not be recovered since the vendor had not re-engaged in business for over a year after the sale, the court passes to the other objection, that the written contract cannot be varied by parol evidence, and in the business,<sup>17</sup> although not necessarily synonymous.<sup>18</sup> It necessarily follows from this view that the parties having reduced this particular branch of the agreement to writing, it cannot be varied by parol evidence. But in other cases<sup>19</sup> the decision is put upon the broad ground that the law presumes the written agreement to be the contract of the parties, and to embrace all the terms and stipulations deemed material by either at the time of its execution, and not upon the theory that the term "good will" relates to the same subject matter as the agreement not to re-engage in business. The court expressly states that, when the parties to the agreement "had a bill of sale drawn up, and formally executed, which, while it did expressly specify that the good will of the business was included in the sale, made no mention of the restriction in question, to now permit the complainant to prove that the contract was something different from that contained in the bill of sale would be to permit a written agreement to be added to or varied by parol, which the law will not allow."

states: "The parties having reduced their contract to writing, their rights under it must depend on the true interpretation of its terms irrespective of any parol evidence of what took place previously to or at the time of the making of the agreement."

<sup>17</sup> Drake v. Dodsworth (1867) 4 Kan. 159. The court here states that "the parties have not only reduced their contract to writing, but have included in its terms that very branch of it which the plaintiff seeks to enlarge by parol testimony. The defendant not only sold the stock, fixtures, tools, and machinery, but also the good will of the same. Now this good will gave the plaintiff some rights, and to the exact extent of those rights the sale thereof was a restraint of the defendant's right to use them . . . to enlarge that restraint by parol testimony would be extending the right of varying a written contract by oral testimony that would be really dangerous in itself, and going farther than any well-considered case will authorize."

In a bill by the purchaser of a printing business and newspaper to enjoin the vendor from publishing another paper, the court in Smith v. Gibbs (1862) 44 N. H. 335, states that parol evidence cannot be received to show that at the time of the sale or during the prior negotiations a verbal agreement was made by the defendant that "he would not establish a competing business, if such be the fact; for the contract is not silent upon this point, but contains in effect an agreement by the defendant not to continue the particular business sold to the plaintiffs; and to allow such proof would be to receive parol evidence to change a written agreement not to continue a particular newspaper and a designated printing business into a general contract not to set up any rival newspaper or engage in any competing business."

In Dixon v. Witte (1877) 4 W. N. C. (Pa.) 213, the written agreement of sale witnessed that the purchaser purchased of the vendor "his stock, good will, and fixtures and horse and wagon in store." The vendor subsequently re-engaged in business within a few squares of the old business. A verdict for the purchaser against the vendor for breach of the written agreement was sustained. The only objection to parol evidence seems to have been that it was admitted to explain the meaning of the term "good will." There is no opinion.

<sup>18</sup> The question of substantive law as to the sale of a business and good will as a limitation upon the right of the vendor to engage in competing business is discussed in note to Gordon v. Knott, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 762.

<sup>19</sup> Zanturjian v. Boornazian (1903) 25 R. I. 151, 55 Atl. 199. The purchase of a business, in the action to enjoin the vendors from re-engaging in business, offered to show that, subsequent to the making of the bill of sale, the vendors agreed to make another writing if and whenever the complainant desire the same, in which they would set forth the agreement not to re-engage in business. The court states that, even if this position were sustained by evidence, such contract was without consideration and hence unenforceable. W. A. E.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

E. O. HAGEN, Appt.,

v.

NELS O. GRESBY, Resp't.

(— N. D. —, 159 N. W. 3.)

Writ — typewritten signature — effect.

A summons is not a nullity to which the name of the attorney for the plaintiff, together with his address, is printed by the clerk on the typewriter at his request and instruction and in accordance with a general custom of the office, and such signing is a sufficient compliance with § 8944 of the Compiled Laws of 1913, which provides that the summons "shall be subscribed by the plaintiff or his attorney, who must add to Note. — As to typewritten, printed, or stamped signature of legal process or other legal papers, see annotation following this case, post, 285.

his signature his address, specifying a place within the state where there is a postoffice." For other cases, see Writ and Process, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(June 13, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the County Court for Ward County setting aside and declaring null and void a judgment entered by default. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. F. B. Lambert for appellant.

Mr. Halvor L. Halvorson for respondent.

Bruce, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the county court of Ward county, setting aside and declaring null and void a judgment entered and obtained by default. Two questions are presented: Whether the summons to which the name of the plaintiff's attorney was printed with a typewriter, and which was not subscribed by said attorney in his own handwriting, was a nullity; and whether, if a nullity, the defendant entered a general appearance in his motion to set aside the judgment. The summons was in the regular statutory form. At the bottom there was written in typewriting.

"F. B. Lambert, Attorney for Plaintiff, P. O. Address, Minot, North Dakota."

The order setting aside the judgment was as follows: "That said judgment be opened up and vacated and set aside, and that all proceedings had thereunder be likewise vacated, annulled, and set aside, and that said judgment is void, a nullity, and of no force or effect whatsoever, the same having been entered by default in an action wherein no summons had been issued as provided by law."

On the hearing on this motion the plaintiff produced the affidavit of F. B. Lambert, his attorney, which, among other things, stated: "That both the summons and complaint in this action were properly subscribed by affiant in the usual and ordinary way; that the signature of affiant made to said summons and complaint was made in typewriting by Wade A. Beardsley, the clerk and associate of affiant at affiant's request and instruction; and the same was adopted by this affiant as his signature and acted upon as such, and was acted upon also by the defendant; that this affiant has been an active practitioner in this court, and in all the courts of the state, both state and Federal, since April, 1896, and has never during said twenty years ever signed a summons with pen and ink; that previous to that time, this affiant was employed as stenographer and clerk for the law firm of Messrs. McCumber & Bogart, at Wahpeton, North Dakota, for a number of years, and during all said time signed with a typewriter every single summons issued out of said office in the name of said firm of McCumber & Bogart; that in all proceedings in the supreme court of this state the affiant has invariably caused his name to be signed by his then clerk or stenographer in affiant's name; that numerous judgments, both default and in contested cases, have been entered in this court and in the district courts of this state on summons signed in this way by the name of this affiant; that to open up the judgment entered in this case and allow the defendant to answer would be a great injustice to the plaintiff, not only in expense, but in time and delay."

The summons was not nullity. Section 8944 of the Compiled Laws of 1913 provides that "the summons must contain the title of the action, specifying the court in which the action is brought, the name of the parties to the action, and shall be subscribed by the plaintiff or his attorney, who must add to his signature his address, specifying a place within the state where there is a postoffice. The summons shall be substantially in the following form, the blanks being properly filled."

This is the section which is applicable to procedure in the county court. The requirements in regard to the summons, however, in the district court are identically the same save for the days given in which to answer. See §§ 7421, 7422, 7423 of the Compiled Laws of 1913 and which, now, under the amendment made by chapter 102 of the Laws of 1915, are the same, even as to the days in which to answer. Under all these statutes it is required that the summons "shall be subscribed by the plaintiff or his attorney, who must add to his signature his address."

The question, therefore, is whether this statute is complied with when the name of the attorney is attached by his clerk at said attorney's request and instruction and in accordance with a general custom which prevails in such office.

We can see much in the argument that the subscription should be made in the actual handwriting of the plaintiff or his attorney, and yet the general practice which prevails in this state, the injury to business and to land titles that would follow such a holding, as well as the wording of the several statutes, must lead us, as it has lead practically all of the courts of the country that have passed upon the question, to a different conclusion. Section 10366 of the Compiled Laws of 1913 provides that "the term 'signature' [as used in the Penal Code] includes any name, mark or sign, written with intent to authenticate any instrument or writing," while § 10367 provides that "the term [writing] includes printing and typewriting." Forgery, therefore, can be committed of a printed signature as well as a written one, or by printing a signature as well as by writing it. In the case of Ligare v. California Southern R. Co. 76 Cal. 610, 18 Pac. 777, the court says: "It is said that the summons was not signed by the clerk. The statute requires that it should be so signed. Code Civ. Proc. § 407. But we think the affixing by the clerk of the seal of the court to a form to which was appended his printed name was an adoption of the printed signature, which for the purpose in hand was sufficient."

In the case of Williams v. McDonald, 58 Cal. 529, the court says: "This is an appeal from a judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial in a street assessment case. The appellant, Quackenbush, presents three points for our consideration, viz.: The resolution of intention was not signed by the clerk. Upon this point the testimony of the clerk of the board of supervisors was: 'I have adopted a form for my signature; there is a printed signature adopted by me for all resolutions and orders. The name John A. Russell is, as you see, printed at the bottom of the paper. I never actually signed it, but I adopted the printed signature. I always kept blanks for resolutions in my office with my signature printed at the bottom for convenience.' He further testified that when the resolution in question was adopted by the board he filled in the date and placed it in the proper place, and caused it to be published in the proper papers. The act in question says, 'Signed by the clerk.' We see no objection to the clerk adopting a printed signature."

In the case of Hancock v. Bowman, 49 Cal. 413, the court held without discussion that a judgment was not void or erroneous because the name of the plaintiff's attorney attached to the complaint was printed instead of being written. See also Dreutzer v. Smith, 56 Wis. 292, 14 N. W. 465.

In the case of Hamilton v. State, 103 Ind. 96, 53 Am. Rep. 491, 2 N. E. 299, the court said: "Section 1699, Rev. Stat. 1881, provides that after an indictment has been found by a grand jury, 'it must be signed by the prosecuting attorney,' and where an indictment is returned without his signature, § 1670 makes it the duty of the court to require the prosecuting attorney to sign it. L.R.A.1917B.

Section 240 of the same revision of statutes which prescribes certain rules for the construction of the statutes of this state declares that "the words 'written' and 'in writing' shall include printing, lithographing, or other mode of representing words and letters. But in all cases where the written signature of any person is required, the proper handwriting of such person, or his mark, shall be intended." The word 'sign' as a 'verb' has several shades of meaning, and hence a statutory requirement that an instrument in writing, or a pleading, shall be 'signed' by some person or officer to make it complete is much more general and comprehensive than a similar requirement that such an instrument or pleading must be 'subscribed' by the person or officer. . . . On the same principle, the 'signing' of a written instrument or pleading by a person or officer has a much broader and more extended meaning than attaching his 'written signature' to it implies. When a person attaches his name, or causes it to be attached, to a writing, by any of the known modes of impressing his name upon paper, with the intention of signing it, he is regarded as having 'signed' the writing. . . . As the prosecuting attorney is required to sign an indictment as a matter of verification merely, there is no reason for enforcing a more rigid rule as to the validity of his signature than in cases of ordinary business transactions, to which the authorities above cited mainly have reference. . . . If, therefore, the name of the prosecuting attorney be legibly attached to an indictment by his consent, whether express or implied, it is a sufficient 'signing' by him within the meaning of the statute, and when the name of the prosecuting attorney is found appended to an indictment, the presumption is that it was so appended by his authority."

In the case of Mezchen v. More, 54 Wis. 214, 11 N. W. 534, the court said: "The learned circuit court held the proceedings were void because the summons in the action was not subscribed in the handwriting of the attorney who issued the same. The statute Rev. Stat. §§ 2629, 2630, provides that a civil action shall be commenced by the service of a summons, and, after describing what it shall contain, says: 'It shall be subscribed by the plaintiff or his attorney, with the addition of his postoffice address, at which papers in the action may be served on him by mail.' It is insisted by the learned counsel for the respondent, and was held by the circuit court, that this provision of the statute requires the summons to be subscribed by the party or his attorney in his own proper handwriting, and that if not so signed, it is absolutely void. We think the learned counsel and the court erred in giving the statute this restricted construction. The summons is not a writ or process of the court, but is simply a notice to the defendant that an action has been commenced against him, and that he is required to answer to the complaint which is either attached thereto or is or will be filed in the proper clerk's office. Porter v. Vandercreek, 11 Wis. 70; Rahn v. Gunnison, 12 Wis. 528; Johnston v. Hamburger, 13 Wis. 175. It is substantially the same method of commencing an action which was long practised in the state of New York before the adoption of the Code, viz., by filing a declaration with the clerk of the court in which the action was commenced, and entering a rule requiring him to plead, and then serving upon the defendant a copy of the complaint and a notice of such rule. The summons is, in fact, a notice to the defendant that an action is commenced against him, and that he must answer the complaint within a certain time or judgment will be taken against him. The only object of requiring it to show the name of the attorney, or party who commences the action, and his postoffice address, is that the defendant may know upon whom and at what place he may serve his answer and other papers in the action. 'That this is the object is apparent from the fact that the same section provides that the summons shall state the title of the cause, the court in which the action is brought, the county where the action is to be tried, and the names of the parties.' These facts give the defendant all the knowledge necessary to enable him to plead to the action, except the knowledge of the person upon whom and the place where his answer and other papers must be served. This object is certainly as well accomplished when the name of the party or attorney is printed at the end of the summons as when it is written there; and, unless the statute is imperative in requiring the signature in the handwriting of the attorney or party, there does not appear to be any reason for giving it that construction."

We are not unmindful of the statement made by this court in the case of Mills v. Howland, 2 N. D. 30, 49 N. W. 413, that "a signature means a person's name as set down by himself." In that case, however, no question was raised as to how the signature should be made.
L.R.A.1917B.

Nor are we unmindful of the force of the argument that such signatures, if authorized in the case before us, might be inoperative as a justification for the payment of checks by banks. We have no question, however, that if a depositor authorized his name to be signed to a check by a clerk on a typewriter, a bank would be protected in paying the same when so signed. We do not, however, pass upon this question, nor is it necessary. Deeds and checks differ from summonses. A deed or a check serves to convey or assign property. A summons does not. A summons is merely a notice. It conveys nothing. It is merely a notice that at a certain time and place a judgment will be asked of a court against the defendant. If the defendant is properly informed of such hearing and has an opportunity to attend, why should he complain of the nature of the signature. Mezchen v. More, supra.

Nor does the fact that the statute of North Dakota uses the word "signature," as well as the word "subscribed," make any difference. The word "subscribed" is more restricted than the word "signature." The word "signature" in its origin involves merely a sign. The word "subscribed" involves a writing. If, therefore, we construe the word "subscribed" to include a writing by means of a typewriter as well as by the pen, we decide the whole case. The distinction indeed is clearly between a statute which provides that a notice shall be signed or subscribed and one which provides that it shall be subscribed in the personal handwriting of the party in person. Hamilton v. State, supra.

We are not unmindful of § 7311 of the Compiled Laws of 1913, which provides that the words "write" and "written" include "printing" and "printed," except in the case of signatures and when the words are used in the way of contrast to printing, and on which emphasis is laid by counsel for respondent. We do not see, however, that this statute is controlling in the case before us. The words "write" and "written" are not used in § 8944, which relates to summonses. All that that section provides is that the summons "shall be subscribed by the plaintiff or his attorney, who must add to the signature his address." See Hamilton v. State, supra. The section clearly only applies where a signature is required to be in writing.

The judgment of the County Court is reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings according to law.

Annotation—Typewritten, printed, or stamped signature of legal process or other legal papers.

As to sufficiency of printed or stamped signature under Statute of Frauds, see note to Lee v. Vaughan Seed Store, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 352.

In civil actions.

The great majority of the cases sustain the rule that a typewritten, printed, or stamped signature of a legal process or paper is a sufficient compliance with a statute requiring such a paper to be signed or subscribed, and are therefore in harmony with the holding of HAGEN v. GRESBY, ante, 281, that a summons is not a nullity to which the name of the attorney for the plaintiff is printed by the clerk on the typewriter at his request and instruction, and in accordance with a general custom of the office, and that such signing is a sufficient compliance with a statute providing that a summons shall be subscribed by the plaintiff or his attorney.

In Littleton v. Marshall (1897) 8 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 672, 6 Ohio N. P. 509, it is stated that even a strict construction of the law requiring a summons to be signed by the clerk would permit the clerk's name to be written, printed, or stamped at the end of the summons.

The affixing by the clerk of the seal of the court to a summons to which is appended his printed name is an adoption of the printed signature, which is a sufficient compliance with the statutory requirement that the summons be signed by him. Ligare v. California Southern R. Co. (1888) 76 Cal. 610, 18 Pac. 777.

The signing of a summons by the clerk's deputy with his own name after the printed signature of the clerk, with a "per," proves the adoption of the printed signature by the clerk through his deputy, and further verification is afforded by the seal of the clerk. Littleton v. Marshall (Ohio) supra.

The provision of a statute that a summons shall be subscribed by the plaintiff's attorney does not require it to be subscribed by him in his own proper handwriting, but his name may be printed thereon. Mezchen v. More (1882) 54 Wis. 214, 11 N. W. 534; New York v. Eisler (1882) 2 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. (Browne) 125.

But, in Ames v. Schurmeier (1864) 9 Minn. 221, Gil. 206, it was held that the written signature of the plaintiff or his attorney was required by a statute L.R.A.1917B.

requiring a summons to be subscribed by one of them, and that a printed signature did not fulfil such statutory requirement, because the statutory construction act provided that where the written signature of any person was required by law, it should always be the proper handwriting of such person.

This case was overruled, however, by Herrick v. Morrill (1887) 37 Minn. 250, 5 Am. St. Rep. 841, 33 N. W. 849, which held the contrary.

A printed subscription of a summons is a substantial compliance with such a statute, and an objection thereto is technical; if it is a defect it is immaterial. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Ross (1860) 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 260, note.

But such a subscription was held in Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Dickson (1859) 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 61, 17 How. Pr. 477, to be a nullity, without giving the reason for such holding. The court, however, stated that the copy served being properly signed, the defect might be cured by filing such a copy nunc pro tunc.

In Barnard v. Heydrick (1866) 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 62, 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. 47, 32 How. Pr. 97, the judge discussed the preceding case, but disagreed therewith, holding that a summons issued by an attorney, with his name printed at the end thereof, was subscribed by him, within the meaning of the Code.

By a statute requiring that an original notice be signed by the plaintiff or his attorney, no more is exacted than that the name of the plaintiff or that of his attorney be attached to the notice by any of the known methods of impressing the name on paper, whether this be in writing, printing, or lithographing, provided it is done with the intention of signing or be adopted in issuing the original notice for service. A printed signature was held sufficient in Cummings v. Landes (1908) 140 Iowa, 80, 117 N. W. 22.

A stencil signature of a justice of the peace to an original notice complies with the statute providing that such a notice must be subscribed by the justice before whom it is returnable. Such signature is sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the justice. Even if irregular, the notice would be merely voidable, and not subject to collateral attack. Loughren v. Bonniwell (1904) 125 Iowa, 518, 106 Am. St. Rep. 319, 101 N. W. 287.

A declaration may be signed by an impression thereon of the names of the plaintiff's attorneys, made by a rubber stamp, as it is ordinarily the act of making a paper one's own that is important, rather than the manner of so doing. Streff v. Colteaux (1896) 64 Ill. App. 179.

The judgment roll in an action to enforce a lien for a street assessment will not be stricken out because the name of the plaintiff's attorney is printed at the bottom of the complaint instead of being written. Hancock v. Bowman (1874) 49 Cal. 413.

The signing by a member of the law firm representing the plaintiff, of the affidavit verifying a petition, is sufficient to identify the typewritten signature of the firm attached to the petition. The court in the syllabus stated this point as follows: "Where a petition is brought for the recovery of land, and the typewritten names of plaintiff's attorneys are attached thereto, the signing of the verification of the petition by one of the attorneys is a sufficient signature to the petition itself." McTyer v. Stearns (1914) 142 Ga. 850, 83 S. E. 955.

But the printed signature of counsel to a bill in equity was held insufficient in Eveland v. Stephenson (1881) 45 Mich. 394, 8 N. W. 62.

And in Nightingale v. Oregon C. R. Co. (1873) 2 Sawy. 338, Fed. Cas. No. 10,264, upon a motion to vacate an order of continuance upon the ground that the stipulation therefor was signed by counsel without authority, where it appeared that the names of such counsel were printed at the end of the complaint, the court, on allowing the motion upon the ground that the order admitting them, as a matter of comity, to appear as counsel in the case, did not authorize them to sign the stipulation, said: "Nor does the fact that their names are printed on the complaint as 'of counsel for the complainant' affect the matter one way or the other. These printed names are not their signatures. Besides, not being counsellors of this court, they were not authorized to sign the complaint as counsel."

And the lithographed signature of the plaintiff's solicitor to the particulars was held not a sufficient signing thereof to entitle the plaintiff, in an action in a county court, to the costs of entering a plaint by a solicitor. The master of the rolls dissented from this holding, however, stating that the whole object of the rule requiring the solicitor's signature seemed to him to be to get the document authenticated as coming from a solicitor's office, and that if the solicitor authorized the issue of the lithograph form, that object was attained. Reg. v. Cowper (1890) L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. (Eng.) 533, 59 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 265, 62 L. T. N. S. 583, 38 Week. Rep. 408.

A writ to which a slip of paper bearing the name of the justice is affixed by the plaintiff's attorney is duly signed by the justice, where he authorized such act, and adopts such signature. Richardson v. Bachelder (1841) 19 Me. 82.

The signature of the clerk to a writ made by an attorney, with the former's permission, by cutting the clerk's name from another original writ and annexing it by wagers to the writ in question, is good. Stevens v. Ewer (1840) 2 Met. (Mass.) 74.

But a writ of execution, required by the Code to be subscribed by the clerk, is void where it bears the printed signature of the former clerk, followed by the name of the deputy of the clerk in office at the date of the writ. O'Donnell v. Merguire (1901) 131 Cal. 527, 82 Am. St. Rep. 389, 63 Pac. 847.

The typewritten names of the appellant's attorneys to an assignment of error is a sufficient signing by them to withstand an attack by the appellee upon the ground that such assignment is defective because not signed. Boes v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. (1915) 59 Ind. App. 271, 108 N. E. 174. Upon a denial of a rehearing of this case in (1915) 59 Ind. App. 278, 109 N. E. 411, this point was not touched upon.

In determining whether a notary's name was appended to a jurat with a rubber stamp, or written with pen and ink, the trial court, in a suit in equity, is not compelled to disregard the appearance of the name itself and accept as conclusive indefinite testimony that the name was printed with a rubber stamp. Burr v. Finch (1912) 91 Neb. 417, 136 N. W. 72.

A municipal lien on a printed form, at the bottom of which is printed the name of the city solicitor, with the words, "city solicitor, per," followed by the written signature of one who is, though not shown by the paper, in charge of the lien bureau in the city solicitor's office, is signed by the city solicitor within the meaning of an act requiring his signature to liens. Philadelphia v. Meighan (1905) 15 Pa. Dist. R. 10.

A typewritten signature to an attachment bond, if adopted by the party whose name is so signed, is good. Bridges v. First Nat. Bank (1907) 47 Tex. Civ. App. 454, 105 S. W. 1018.

The judge's signature to an order made at chambers may be affixed by the clerk by means of a stamp. Blades v. Lawrence (1874) L. R. 9 Q. B. (Eng.) 374, 43 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 133, 30 L. T. N. S. 378, 22 Week. Rep. 643.

A notice of objection to the retention of a name on a list of voters, to which the objector has affixed his name by means of a stamp, is signed by him within the meaning of a statute providing that such a notice shall be signed by the person objecting. Bennett v. Brumfit (1867) L. R. 3 C. P. (Eng.) 28, 37 L. J. C. P. N. S. 25, 17 L. T. N. S. 213, 16 Week. Rep. 131, Hopw. & P. 407.

The printing of the trustees' names on the notice of a school-bond issue election is a sufficient compliance with the statute requiring that such notice be signed by them, where they authorized the printing of their names and adopted them as their signature. Lamaster v. Wilkerson (1911) 143 Ky. 226, 136 S. W. 217.

The adoption by the clerk of a printed signature at the bottom of a blank resolution of intention in a street assessment foreclosure is a sufficient signing thereof. Williams v. McDonald (1881) 58 Cal. 527.

In criminal prosecutions.

A statute requiring the name of the district attorney to be subscribed to an information, by himself or by his deputy, is complied with by the writing of the name of the district attorney with a typewriter, followed by the signing by the deputy of his own name with pen and ink. Almond v. People (1913) 55 Colo. 425, 135 Pac. 783.

The objection to an information, that the name or signature of the district attorney is printed, and not written, relates merely to a matter of form and procedure, which is amendable. District of Columbia v. Washington Gaslight Co. (1884) 3 Mackay (D. C.) 343.

The fact that the name of the prosecuting attorney to an indictment is typewritten, and not signed with pen and ink, is no ground of objection. Miller v. State (1896) 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 47, 35 S. W. 391.

The attaching of the prosecuting attorney's name in print at the bottom of an indictment is his signature within the meaning of a statute requiring that an indictment shall be signed by him. Hamilton v. State (1885) 103 Ind. 96, 53 Am. Rep. 491, 2 N. E. 299.

The fact that an indictment bears the printed signature of the predecessor in office of the commonwealth's attorney does not invalidate it, because the Code does not require him to sign it. Brown v. Com. (1909) 135 Ky. 635, 135 Am. St. Rep. 471, 117 S. W. 281, 21 Ann. Cas. 672.

A plea in abatement alleging that the name of the foreman of the grand jury was merely printed on the indictment is demurrable. Coburn v. State (1907) 151 Ala. 100, 44 So. 58, 15 Ann. Cas. 249.

A facsimile of the signature of the proper officer of the tenement-house department, made with a rubber stamp, is a sufficient signing of an order of such department respecting an alleged violation of the Tenement House Law, which does not provide for the form of the order, or the manner in which it shall be signed, but requires merely that it shall be a notice or order of the department. Tenement House Dept. v. Weil (1912) 76 Misc. 273, 134 N. Y. Supp. 1062.

G. V. I.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

JACK COPELAND, Plff. in Err.,
v.

OBIE COPELAND.

(— Okla. —, 159 Pac. 1122.)

Divorce — changing custody of child.

When, in an action for divorce, a decree

Headnote by HARDY, J.

Note. — As to remedy for refusal to permit access to or visitation of children, as provided by decree of divorce, see annotation following this case, post, 290.
L.R.A.1917B.

has been rendered granting the husband a divorce and awarding him the exclusive care, custody, and education of their minor son, and directing that the actual custody of said child be placed with the husband's parents, and according the wife the privilege of visiting said child twice each month without the hearing of and without interference from any person, and directing the husband's parents to treat her as a guest during the period of her visits, and when the right of visitation has not been accorded the wife according to the spirit and intent of the decree, the court has the authority to modify its order and place said child a portion of the time with the parents of the wife, they being in every way suitable, so that her right of visitation may be enforced.

For other cases, see Divorce and Separation, VII. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(September 12, 1916.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Pottawatomie County to review an order modifying a judgment in plaintiff's favor in a suit for a divorce. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. S. F. Bailey and Edward Howell, for plaintiff in error:

The maternal grandparents are not entitled to the custody of the child as against its father, he being in every way a suitable and fit person for the care and custody of the child, and there being no evidence in the record to show that any interest of the child would be subserved by permitting its maternal grandparents to have its custody.

Stanfield v. Stanfield, 22 Okla. 574, 98 Pac. 334; Snow v. Smith, 44 Okla. 312, 144 Pac. 578; Re Cross, 41 Okla. 629, 137 Pac. 673; Jamison v. Gilbert, 38 Okla. 751, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1133, 135 Pac. 342; 29 Cyc. 1594, 1595; Eckhard v. Eckhard, 29 Neb. 457, 45 N. W. 466; Morrison v. Miller, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 128 S. W. 480.

Mr. H. H. Smith for defendant in error.

Hardy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff in error was granted a decree of divorce from defendant in error in the district court of Pottawatomie county on the 26th day of October, 1914, and was awarded the exclusive care, custody, and education of their minor child, Darrell Gaston, with directions that the actual personal custody of said child should be with the father and mother of plaintiff in error, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Copeland, granting to defendant in error the privilege of visiting said child at their home twice each month without the hearing or presence of anyone, and without interference, and directing the said Mr. and Mrs. Copeland to treat defendant in error kindly and as a guest during the period of her visits.

On March 29, 1915, there was filed in the trial court a motion to modify the order theretofore made so as to place the custody of said child one half the time with the parents of defendant. Much testimony was taken at the hearing, at the conclusion of which the court modified the order theretofore made, and awarded the custody of said child during the months of June and December to the parents of defendant, and for the remainder of the year the custody of said child was to continue as before. It is from this order that error is prosecuted.

L.R.A.1917B.

The entire case is presented in this court upon the theory that, the custody of this child having been placed with the father and mother of plaintiff, and no change having been shown in the condition of plaintiff or his parents, the court was without authority to modify the decree, under the rule announced in Stanfield v. Stanfield, 22 Okla. 574, 98 Pac. 334. This contention requires a review of the evidence taken at the hearing. No attempt was made to show that plaintiff was an unfit person, or that there had been any change in his condition, nor that the paternal grandparents were unsuitable, except as hereinafter pointed out. Evidence was introduced to show that Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Bristow, the father and mother of defendant, were in every way suitable; that they were peaceable, moral, industrious, law-abiding citizens; that Mr. Bristow was engaged in the mercantile business, and enjoyed the confidence and respect of those who knew him. Mr. Copeland was about seventy years of age and his wife was about sixty-five. All their children were grown and were married, and they were rearing a girl about fourteen years old. Mr. Bristow was forty-seven and his wife forty-four, and they had a family of seven children of various ages. Plaintiff was earning $45 per month as a clerk in a grocery, while Mr. Bristow was paying defendant as a clerk in his store $50 per month. After the litigation was commenced and the custody of the child was awarded to plaintiff with the privilege to defendant of visiting it, said child was taken to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Copeland. There is some controversy as to whether this was before or after the rendition of the final judgment. The trial court evidently took the view that this was after the former decree, and while the child was thus at the home of the Copelands, defendant, in company with her mother, Mrs. Bristow, visited the home of the Copelands for the purpose of being with her child. While there Mr. Copeland remained in her presence, not permitting her to visit the child alone, and, according to the evidence of defendant, was mad during the entire time, treating her discourteously, swearing and using vile language, and stating to her in the presence and hearing of the child and of her mother that she (defendant) ought not to have married his son, that she was not worthy of him, did not have any friends, and ought not to be allowed to see the child, and that this course of conduct and manner of talking was continued during the period of the visit. When they first arrived at the home of the Copelands Mrs. Bristow remained sitting in the buggy and asked defendant to bring the child to the buggy so she could see it, and Mr. Copeland refused to permit this to be done. At another time when defendant visited their home she stayed all night, and while at the evening meal requested the child to sit in her lap during the meal. Mr. Copeland interfered and forbade the child doing so, and when she attempted to take the child in her lap told her if she could not behave to leave the house. The child told defendant in the hearing of Mrs. Bristow that Mr. and Mrs. Copeland had told it not to like its mother. The third time she attempted to visit the child she arrived at the Copeland's late one evening and was refused permission to stay that night. Upon this occasion she left with the child, going to various places, and was finally found in California. There was evidence tending to show that she was accompanied by a man named Campbell with whom she occupied the same room at a rooming house for as many as two nights. While there she became sick and underwent an operation. Plaintiff, learning of her whereabouts, caused her to be arrested upon a charge of kidnapping. She then returned to Oklahoma without requisition papers and presented to the court her motion to modify the final order theretofore made, with the result stated.

The authority of the court to modify the order did not depend solely upon whether there has been any change in the circumstances of the person to whom the custody of the child had previously been awarded, but the court was authorized to inquire into the conditions existing and determine whether its order as to the right of visitation accorded the mother had been complied with, and, if not, to enforce said order by placing the child where such right could be enjoyed in accordance with the spirit of the order. The welfare of the child is an element which may always be considered in determining the right to its custody. Rev. Laws 1910, § 3331; Jamison v. Gilbert, 38 Okla. 757, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1133, 135 Pac. 342.

In Allison v. Byran, 26 Okla. 529, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 146, 138 Am. St. Rep. 988, 109 Pac. 934, the custody of an illegitimate child had been awarded to the father without the privilege of visitation being accorded to the mother. Thereafter, upon application to the court, the father was required to produce the child twice each month at the town of Norman, in order that the mother might see the child alone and in the absence of any other person. Allison refused to comply with this order, and was adjudged guilty of contempt and appealed. In the discussion of the case, this court, after reviewing a number of authorities, said: "From the foregoing it L.R.A.1917B.

will be seen that under practically every and all conditions the parent, in some instances the father, and in others the mother, while losing the right of custody of their children, have in every instance received at the hands of the court recognition of their right of visitation. It is true the foregoing cases, other than the opinion of this court, present those only in which the question arose between parents of legitimate children, but the underlying reason for the rule was in each instance that the one accorded the right was a parent, and that it was in accord with humanity and right living and the best interests of the child that it should not forget and be estranged."

The court quotes the language used in Allison v. Bryan, 21 Okla. 557, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 931, 97 Pac. 282, 17 Ann. Cas. 468, which was a case where habeas corpus had been sued out for the same child, and the custody held properly to belong to the father, where it was said: "We would not have it understood, however, that in thus declaring the law we hold he should not see his mother, be with her, or be permitted to enjoy her society, nor she his. Not at all. Under the judgment rendered in this cause in the lower court provision was made for the father to visit the child, and the successful respondents should not be deaf to those common promptings of humanity which dictate that the child and the mother be granted the utmost possible latitude for social communion consistent with the new duties placed upon all. In case of sickness or accident the mother should be promptly notified, and, if she desires, permitted to attend, care for, and nurse."

The trial court evidently entertained the view that its order permitting the mother to visit the child had not been complied with, and that the grandparents with whom the child was living were attempting to poison its mind against her, and were depriving her of the privilege of enjoying communion with the child according to the spirit and purpose of the original decree. Counsel say that by her conduct she forfeited her right to the custody of the child, and because no change has been shown in the condition existing at the time of the first order the modification thereof was void. This is saying, in effect, that the affection of this mother for her child counts for naught, and that its welfare depends upon the financial condition of the person in whose custody it was placed, and will not be affected by being deprived of association with its mother and of the love which she entertains for and yearns to bestow upon it, but will be best subserved by permitting a continuance of the conduct of its grandparents, who, according to defendant's claim, insult and taunt her in the presence of the child, and teach it not to like her.

The original decree directed that defendant be given the privilege twice each month of visiting the child and having it with her during the entire day, out of the presence of and without interference from any person, and that she be treated as a guest during such visit. That this order has not been obeyed is manifest, in that during her visit the grandparents have not permitted her communion with the child to be out of their presence and without interference by them, as directed, and the court, looking to the best interest of the child in making provision for communion with the mother so that its love for her might not be estranged, and that she should not become an object of aversion and hatred, had the right to modify its order and give such further direction as was necessary to effect its purpose. The child was the legitimate offspring of a lawful marriage between the parties and was of tender years, and, though the mother may have erred, her sin did not dry up the wellsprings of mother love and forfeit all right upon her part to visit with and enjoy the association of her own offspring. Neither does the law so declare, but recognizes this right, so long as the welfare of the child will not be endangered thereby. It was said in Allison v. Bryan, 26 Okla. 520, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 146, 138 Am. St. Rep. 988, 109 Pac. 934, that "it was in accord with humanity and right living and the best interests of the child that it" be not estranged; and, according to the language used in Allison v. Bryan, 21 Okla. 557, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 931, 97 Pac. 282, 17 Ann. Cas. 468, the common promptings of humanity "dictate that the child and the mother be granted the utmost possible latitude for social communion consistent with the new duties placed upon all."

There is nothing in the evidence that makes it apparent the moral or physical welfare of the child will be endangered by a compliance with the modified order. The maternal grandparents are morally fit and financially able to do as well by the child as the paternal grandparents, and entertain an affection for the child similar to that possessed for their own, and the defendant may there enjoy that association with the child without interruption, which is her right by nature, and is dictated by the common promptings of humanity, and was accorded her by the original decree, but denied her by the acts of the paternal grandparents. Neither can the fact, as already stated, that she was adjudged not suitable to have the exclusive custody of the child, prevent the court from making the modification. In Haley v. Haley, 44 Ark. 429, the supreme court of Arkansas said: "The privilege of visiting accorded to the mother is a plain dictate of humanity, in the absence of any reason to suppose that the privilege would be abused to the injury of the boy. There was none in this case. The charges of immorality against the mother were not sustained. She is shown to be an industrious, hardworking woman, and a good woman, by all the witnesses, except the defendant. But had it been otherwise the permission to visit would not be necessarily erroneous. The court should regard the maternal instinct in the veriest trull that walks the streets, taking proper care that it does not lead to the corruption of the offspring. It is the strongest and holiest sentiment of humanity, the freest from selfishness or impurity, and often the last hope of redemption for fallen natures."

There was ample evidence to warrant the court in modifying the original decree, and the order appealed from is affirmed.

Annotation—Remedy for refusal to permit access to or visitation of children as provided by decree of divorce.

The question as to denial of custody of child to parent for its well being is treated in note to Re Pryse, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 564, and later case, Jamison v. Gilbert (1913) 38 Okla. 757, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1133, 135 Pac. 342. For other annotations, consult Index to L.R.A. Notes, under Divorce and Separation.

The cases in this note establish the rule that a parent who has been denied the right to visit a child, as provided in a decree of divorce, may apply to the court of first instance for a modification of the decree, or for a rule on the L.R.A. 1917B.

parent failing to comply with the decree, to show cause why he or she should not be punished as for a contempt.

In the following cases as in COPELAND v. COPELAND, ante, 287, a parent who had been denied the right of visitation sought relief by a modification of the decree.

Where a husband, after obtaining a divorce from his wife, died, and his sister, the testamentary guardian of the child, refused the wife access, as provided in the decree which committed the custody of the child to the husband, it was held in Hill v. Hill (1878) 49 Md. 450, 33 Am. Rep. 271, that the wife could maintain a bill of revivor, the court stating that though she was a defendant in the cause and the decree was against her, it was evident that she had rights and interests under the decree which entitled her to have the same reviewed. "The terms and provisions of the decree above recited secured to her the most precious and important right and privilege of having access to and visiting her child. This right, being now denied, can be secured to her and enforced only by a proceeding of this kind, whereby the decree in this respect may be executed in her favor."

Where a husband who had been granted a divorce and the right to visit the child when in the custody of the mother, sought a modification of the decree on the ground that the wife, in violation thereof, was keeping the child from him, the court, in Arne v. Holland (1902) 85 Minn. 401, 89 N. W. 3, stated that "the proper practice in securing a modification of an order or decree in divorce proceedings, under Gen. Stat. 1894, §§ 4801-4803, is by application in the original action, and not by the commencement of an independent suit upon a new complaint. Upon a hearing for such modification it is discretionary with the trial court whether the evidence bearing upon the question shall be in the nature of affidavits, or duly sworn and examined witnesses. In this character of proceedings the court is not limited strictly to rules applicable to the introduction of evidence in ordinary cases, and its rulings and orders are not subject to the same legal exactness. The legal test required is that the court shall not abuse its discretion." In this case it was held that, in modifying a preceding decree as to the custody and control of the child, the court did not abuse its discretion.

Where, in a divorce suit, a wife was awarded custody of an infant child, and the husband was given the privilege of paying it reasonable visits, it was stated, on motion for a rehearing in Dimmitt v. Dimmitt (1912) 167 Mo. App. 94, 150 S. W. 1107, that the wife would have the child taken from her if she should attempt to discourage the husband's proper visits by making them difficult and disagreeable; that the husband would lose the privilege accorded him by attempting to make it the instrument of torture or fear to the child; and that, should it appear in the future that the welfare of the child will permit a division between the parents of the right of custody, the circuit court, on application of the father, and on finding that he has conducted himself in a deserving manner, should modify the order to the extent of allowing him to have the custody of the child for such period and in such manner as not to interfere with its proper nurture and education.

Where a wife, domiciled in Connecticut, was by a divorce decree awarded the custody of children subject to the right of the husband to have them visit him at least six weeks during each year, and she removed to Germany with the children, it was held in Morrill v. Morrill (1910) 83 Conn. 479, 77 Atl. 1, that the court, by power of a continued jurisdiction conferred by statute, could so modify the decree as to direct that the wife send the children to the father at a suitable place in Connecticut or New York, at a certain time of the year, under proper escort and at her expense, and that the father, after the visit, should return them to the mother in Germany under proper escort and at his expense, the court not thereby having abused its discretion.

It is held in State ex rel. Nipp v. District Ct. (1912) 46 Mont. 425, 128 Pac. 590, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 256, that where a foreign state grants a divorce and awards the custody of one child to the father and one to the mother, each party being accorded the right to visit at all times the child awarded to the custody of the other, and each being enjoined from interposing any obstacle or hindrance in the way of the other, the court retains jurisdiction notwithstanding the removal of a child from the state; that where a father violates the decree by such a removal, the court may amend it so as to enable the mother to enforce the right thereby accorded to her.

In affirming an order denying a husband's motion for leave to modify a judgment of divorce against him, the court, in Newman v. Newman (1905) 105 App. Div. 63, 93 N. Y. Supp. 847, said that the supreme court, by virtue of the provisions of § 1771 of the Code of Civil Procedure, now possesses the power to modify the directions contained in a final judgment of divorce for the custody, care, education, and maintenance of any of the children of the marriage, upon the application of either party to the action, upon due notice to the other. But no such application shall be made by a defendant unless leave to make the same shall have been previously granted by the court by order made upon or without notice, as the court, in its discretion, may deem proper, after presentation to the court of satisfactory proof that such an application should be entertained. The final judgment of divorce in the present action awarded the custody of the child to the mother, with the privilege to the father of knowing her whereabouts at all times and of calling on her and seeing her at all reasonable and proper hours. The father asked leave to move to modify the directions in the judgment providing for the custody, care, education, and maintenance of the child by providing for her residence or custody within the jurisdiction or at such other place beyond its jurisdiction as would enable the father to visit and care for her. In upholding a refusal to grant the desired leave, the court said that the papers read upon the application showed that the mother had taken the child to reside with her in the state of Virginia; and if it had appeared that the father was still a resident of New York state, the court could not properly have refused to entertain the motion which he wished to make, to modify the decree so as to require the child to be kept within the jurisdiction of the New York state supreme court, or at all events at a place conveniently accessible from New York. It was shown, however, that the father himself had become a resident of Virginia; that he had described himself as a resident of that state in a proceeding which he instituted in a Virginia court to obtain custody of the child; and hence it was evident that the modification of the divorce judgment for which he proposed to move ought not, in any event, to be granted, for it could not possibly conduce to his convenience in visiting the child that she should be kept in or near New York while he resided in Virginia.

Where a divorce decree gave the custody of the child to the mother, who thereafter refused to let the father see or visit it, although the decree provided that the husband should "have the right to see the child at proper and reasonable times and places until the further order of the court," the court, in Oliver v. Oliver (1890) 151 Mass. 349, 24 N. E. 51, stated that though the evidence in words did not show grounds for a modification, yet the trial court could, by observation, see many things in the character, appearance, and manners of the parents testifying which could not be presented in print, and thereupon relused to hold that there was no evidence on which to base a modification of the decree so as to permit the offending father to see his child. In this case, a statute provided that upon a decree of divorce, the court may make such decree as it may deem expedient concerning the care, custody, and maintenance of the minor children of the parties, and may afterwards, from time to time, on petition of either of the parents, revise and alter such decree, or make a new decree, as the circumstances of the parents and the benefit of the children may require. Consequently, the court observed that "if the experience of the parties enables them at any time to show to the court any better way of accomplishing this purpose than that now pursued, or if, from any other change of circumstances, there seems to be occasion to modify the decree, it is in the power of either party to apply for a modification of it."

The decree in Burge v. Burge (1878) 88 Ill. 164, awarding a mother the custody of children, did not make any provision for the father to see or visit them. The court, in holding the decree not erroneous on this account, said that the father had a legal right to visit his children, at convenient and proper times, in a decent and respectful manner, and without using improper influences to dissatisfy them with their mother, or to influence them to go with him. "He, of course, in visiting them must be governed by the rules of propriety, and has no right, in any manner, to abuse the right, and if he should, he might properly be debarred the privilege. If he should be refused the right to thus see them, under the 18th section of the Divorce Act he can apply to the court for a modification of the decree, so as to secure the reasonable exercise of the right."

Where a husband applied for a rule against his wife to show cause why she should not comply with the decree of divorce permitting him to visit the child, and in response to the rule she stated that she was constrained to so act because of the husband's drunken and debauched habits, it was held, in Shallcross v. Shallcross (1909) 135 Ky. 418, 122 S. W. 223, that, under the circumstances, the court, after granting the decree and after the expiration of the term, could, upon its own motion and without any action upon the part of the parent, modify the decree in so far as it granted the father the right to visit the child, notwithstanding the statute provided that the court in divorce proceedings may make an order for the care, custody, and maintenance of minor children, and at any time afterward, on the petition of either parent, may revise the same, having in all cases the welfare of the children principally in view. The court says: "Exercise of the power possessed by a court of equity with respect to the custody of an infant in such a case is not, therefore, dependent upon action upon the part of either of the divorced parents, or upon a reservation in the judgment of authority to subsequently change or modify it. The court need not have waited for either parent to take the initiative, but possessed the power to modify upon its own motion and previous judgment as to the custody of the infant upon the state of facts appearing in the response and established by the proof. We do not mean to say that the circuit court should at any time enter a judgment or change one rendered at a previous term, as to the custody of a child, without notice to the parents. In this case, however, both had notice. It does not lie in the mouth of appellant [husband] to complain that he was not served with a written notice of the proceedings resulting in the modification of the original judgment as to the custody of his son; for he instituted the proceeding by taking the rule against appellee [wife] and thereby gave cause and opportunity for the filing of her response, the statements of which, together with the evidence introduced to support them, convinced the court of the necessity for modifying the first judgment to the extent that would prevent appellant from having the custody of his son at all. In this view of the matter we think appellant is estopped to complain of the want of previous formal notice of the action of the court in modifying the judgment, and likewise estopped to complain that the modification resulted without the filing of a petition therefor by appellee or himself."

No violation of a decree permitting a mother to visit her child was involved in the decision of Haley v. Haley (1884) 44 Ark. 429, discussed in COPELAND v. COPELAND, ante, 287, but there being charges of immorality against the mother, the propriety of making such a provision was questioned.

In Phipps v. Phipps (1913) 168 Mo. App. 697, 154 S. W. 825, the court upheld a modification of a decree so as to give the mother the privilege of having the child visit her during certain hours L.R.A.1917B.

on each Saturday. The husband, who had been granted the divorce and awarded the custody of the child, opposed the order on the ground that the evidence did not show any new facts upon which a change in the custody of the child could be made; that the court was powerless to act unless the motion contained averments and the evidence disclosed facts showing that, since the decree, a change of condition, circumstances, or situation or character of the parties had occurred to justify a modification. The court stated that there were facts showing a sufficient change in the mother's situation and character to justify the court in modifying the decree, not so as to take the custody of the child from the father and give it to the mother, but so that the child could visit its mother, and not be entirely deprived of her society and affection, nor she of its. If the mother's right to visit the child were denied her by the father, her only remedy would seem to be to apply to the court in which the decree was granted, for an order requiring him to allow her that privilege. And in such case the father's refusal to let her visit the child would be a new fact on which the court could modify the decree so as to permit such visits. To hold otherwise would put it in the power of one parent to deny, without reason, the other parent the privilege of seeing the offspring which both had brought into the world. Although the court is without power to change the custody of the child, in the absence of new facts to justify such change, this ought not to prevent the court giving the mother a right to visit the child under proper regulations and on certain conditions based merely on the new fact of the father's refusal to let her see it. The court further observed that if, at any time in the future, circumstances should so change as to make it necessary that this modifying order should be changed or revoked altogether, it is within the power of the father or of either parent, for that matter, to apply to the court for such modification or revocation, since the divorce suit on this phase remains open, and will stay open until the child becomes of age.

In Bedolfe v. Bedolfe (1912) 71 Wash. 60, 127 Pac. 594, it is stated that where a divorce decree awards the custody of a child to the husband, and gives the wife the right to visit it, if the husband or any member of his household treats her with such incivility, when she is visiting the child, as to deter her from continuing her visits, she may either apply to the court of first instance for a modification of the decree, or for a rule on the husband to show cause why he should not be punished as for a contempt.

So, in the following cases the latter remedy, suggested in the above case, was involved;

Thus, where a father had been adjudged in contempt and remanded to jail until he should pay the fine imposed for violating a divorce decree by removing a child from the jurisdiction of the court and preventing the mother visiting it, it was held, in Ex parte Ellerd (1912) 71 Tex. Crim. Rep. 285, 158 S. W. 1145, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 361 (Davidson, P. J., dissenting), on habeas corpus, that the commitment for contempt was proper, and that; although the fine was excessive, the applicant should not be released until he had paid so much thereof as could lawfully be imposed.

The case of Allison v. Bryan (1910) 26 Okl. 520, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 146, 138 Am. St. Rep. 988, 109 Pac. 934, discussed in COPELAND v. COPELAND, ante, 287, holds that the mother of an illegitimate, unmarried minor child which has been legitimated by its father under the provisions of § 4931 of the Compiled Laws of Oklahoma 1909, does not, by reason of such legitimation, where same will not conflict with the best interests of the child, forfeit the right to visit the child or to have it visit her; and failure and neglect, without sufficient cause, on the part of the father, to observe a valid order of a court, enforcing such right, is punishable as a contempt; and in such a case it is no defense that his wife objected or refused to consent to his obedience to the same.

A party, however, cannot remain in contempt in an equity proceeding, and at the same time ask the court to grant him privileges which are conferred upon him by the decree which he has refused to obey. Consequently, it is held in Smith v. Smith (1897) 18 Wash. 158, 51 Pac. 355, that the court will not enforce a decree giving him a right to visit his children where he has failed to comply with the decree by the payment of alimony.

J. D. C.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

RE ASSESSMENT OF FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF CHICKASHA.

COUNTY BOARD OF EQUALIZATION et al., Appts.

(— Okl. —, 160 Pac. 469.)

Tax — power to exempt.

1. The power to exempt from taxation, as well as that of taxation, is an essential attribute of sovereignty. Generally, the power to make exemptions is included or involved in the right to apportion taxes, and exists in the supreme legislative power, unless expressly forbidden by constitutional limitation.

For other cases, see Taxes, I. f, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — state bonds.

2. Section 50, art. 5, of the Constitution, prohibiting the legislature from passing laws exempting any property within the state from taxation, except such as is named in § 6, art. 10, was not intended to prohibit the legislature from exempting from taxation the bonds of the state, issued in aid of its governmental functions. Such bonds being instrumentalities of government, do not constitute property within the meaning of the constitutional limitation against exempting property from taxation.

For other cases, see Taxes, I. f, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — constitutionality.

3. There being no constitutional obstruction forbidding the legislature from exempting from taxation the bonded indebtedness of the state, in the form of the state public building bonds, it follows, necessarily, that the act exempting said bonds from taxation is not, in that respect, unconstitutional.

For other cases, see Taxes, I. f, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — national bank stock.

4. The taxation of shares of stock in national banks is permitted by Act of Congress, June 3, 1864, chap. 106, as amended by Act of February 10, 1868, chap. 7, provided they are taxed in the city or town where the bank is located, and at no greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of the state.

For other cases, see Taxes, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — discrimination — prohibition — effect.

5. The statutory rule that the rate of taxation upon the shares in a national bank should be the same or not greater than upon the moneyed capital of the individual

Headnotes by SHARP, J.

Note. — For constitutional limitation of the power to exempt property from taxation as affecting public obligations or property, see annotation following this case, post, 300.

L.R.A.1917B.

citizen which is liable to taxation was not intended to cut off the power of the legislature to exempt bonds of the state from taxation.

For other cases, see Taxes, I, f, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — state bonds.

6. The issuance and sale of state public building bonds, authorized by chapter 89 of the act of the legislature approved March 15, 1911, by which the state was enabled to raise money to accomplish and carry out a governmental purpose, and to the payment of which the good faith of the state was solemnly pledged, was an exercise of sovereignty, of the borrowing power, a use of the state's credit. And the bonds issued to enable the state to discharge its public functions are instrumentalities of government. They constitute the means resorted to by the state to effectuate the powers of government.

For other cases, see Bonds, IV. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — exemption — effect.

7. The intention of the legislature to exempt the bonds from taxation being indubitable, the right to tax such bonds, whether directly or in legal effect, can be exercised under no circumstances, and is not therefore dependent upon the character of the owner or the statute under which the tax is assessed.

For other cases, see Taxes, I, e, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Contract — tax exemption — protection.

8. State public building bonds issued and sold pursuant to the Act of March 15, 1911, and which, by the terms of the act, as well as by express recital in the bonds, are made nontaxable, constitute a binding contract between the holder of such bonds and the state, which the latter, under the guise of taxation, may not constitutionally impair.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II, g, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Constitutional law — limitation — taxing power.

9. The constitutional inhibitions, both state and Federal, against impairing contract obligations, is a limitation upon the taxing power, as well as upon all legislation, whatever form it may assume.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II, g, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Tax — contract exemption — scope.

10. The contract between the state and the bank in respect to the exemption of the bonds from taxation extends to its shares of stock in the hands of individual shareholders, and entitles them to the right to deduct from the value of their shares that proportion of the value invested in the bonds.

For other cases, see Taxes, I, f, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — bank stock — allowance.

11. The bonds being nontaxable for any purpose, and the state not having the power to tax the capital and surplus of a national L.R.A.1917B.

bank, the shareholders, taxable on their shares, are entitled to proper reductions on account of the bank's ownership of said bonds, as any other view would ignore the covenant making the bonds nontaxable, and permit the state, in effect, to do that which it had contracted not to do.

For other cases, see Taxes, I, f, 1; III, b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 10, 1916.)

APPPEAL by the County Board of Equalization et al., from an order of the District Court for Grady County, reversing the action of the board raising the assessed valuation of the First National Bank of Chickasha, and directing the board to deduct from the valuation of the bank the amount invested by it in public building bonds. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. S. P. Freeling, Attorney General, Smith C. Matson, Assistant Attorney General, John H. Venable, and Allen K. Swan, for appellants:

The shares of stock in national banks are taxable for the year 1915 under chapter 107, Session Laws 1915, § 4, art. 1.

Scobee v. Bean, 109 Ky. 526, 59 S. W. 860; First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. 353, 19 L. ed. 701; Lionberger v. Rouse, 9 Wall. 468, 19 L. ed. 721; First Nat. Bank v. Chehalis County, 166 U. S. 440, 41 L. ed. 1069, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 629; Merchants' & M. Nat. Bank v. Pennsylvania, 167 U. S. 461, 42 L. ed. 236, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829; Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 33 L. ed. 892, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533; Van Slyke v. Wisconsin, 154 U. S. 581 and 20 L. ed. 240, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1168; Primghar State Bank v. Rerick, 96 Iowa, 238, 64 N. W. 801; German American Sav. Bank v. Burlington, 118 Iowa, 84, 91 N. W. 829; Anderson v. Ritterbusch, 22 Okla. 761, 98 Pac. 1002; Heilig v. Puyallup, 7 Wash. 29, 34 Pac. 164; Fristoe v. Blum, 92 Tex. 80, 45 S. W. 998; League v. Texas, 184 U. S. 156, 46 L. ed. 478, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; Van Allen v. Assessors (Churchill v. Utica) 3 Wall. 584, 18 L. ed. 234; New York v. Tax & A. Comrs. 4 Wall. 244, 18 L. ed. 344; First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. 353, 19 L. ed. 701; Cleveland Trust Co. v. Lander, 184 U. S. 111, 46 L. ed. 456, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 394; Brown v. First Nat. Bank, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 175 S. W. 1122.

If the Constitution expressly forbids the exemption of property from taxation, or provides that all property, or all property of certain kinds, shall be subject to taxation, or if the legislature attempts to exempt property not within the classes or kinds enumerated in the Constitution, in either case its action is invalid, and the statutory grant of exemption is of no effect.

37 Cyc. 887; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Worthen, 46 Ark. 312; People v. Latham, 52 Cal. 598; Campbell County v. Newport & C. Bridge Co. 112 Ky. 659, 66 S. W. 526; Gate City Guard v. Atlanta, 113 Ga. 883, 54 L.R.A. 806, 39 S. E. 394; Crocker v. Scott, 149 Cal. 575, 87 Pac. 102; Iron City Bank v. Pittsburgh, 37 Pa. 340; Mott v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 30 Pa. 9, 72 Am. Dec. 664; Westport v. McGea, 128 Mo. 152, 30 S. W. 523; Wells v. Hyattsville, 77 Md. 125, 20 L.R.A. 89, 26 Atl. 357; State ex rel. Richards v. Armstrong, 17 Utah, 166, 41 L.R.A. 407, 53 Pac. 981; State Nat. Bank v. Memphis, 116 Tenn. 641, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 663, 94 S. W. 606, 8 Ann. Cas. 22; Keith v. Funding Board, 127 Tenn. 441, 155 S. W. 142, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1145; Penick v. Foster, 129 Ga. 217, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1159, 58 S. E. 773, 12 Ann. Cas. 346.

The county board of equalization and county assessor not only had jurisdiction to increase this assessment, as provided by the assessment made by the state board of equalization, but it was their duty so to do.

Carrico v. Crocker, 38 Okla. 440, 133 Pac. 181.

Messrs. Bond, Melton, & Melton, for appellee:

State bonds are instrumentalities of government, and, as such, are not subject to taxation unless the power to tax is expressly declared.

Mercantile Nat. Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 138, 30 L. ed. 895, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826; Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. 449, 7 L. ed. 481; Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 157 U. S. 429, 39 L. ed. 759, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673; State ex rel. Louisiana Improv. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 111 La. 982, 36 So. 91; Murray v. Charleston, 90 U. S. 432, 24 L. ed. 760; Peacock v. Superior Ct. 163 Cal. 701, 126 Pac. 976; Penick v. Foster, 129 Ga. 217, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1159, 58 S. E. 773, 12 Ann. Cas. 346; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 367; 37 Cyc. 883; Re Indian Territory Illuminating Oil Co. 43 Okla. 307, 142 Pac. 997.

If the legislature had authority to declare that the state building bonds should be nontaxable for any purpose, and if the statutes of the state tax the bank on its capital, surplus, and undivided profits, or upon the shares of stock in the bank, then the bank is entitled to deduct from the valuation so ascertained the amount of the bonds held by it.

Home Sav. Bank v. Des Moines, 205 U. S. 515, 518, 51 L. ed. 909, 910, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 571.

The taxing power having been expressly L.R.A.1917B.

declared not to extend to the state public building bonds, the attempt to subject such property to a tax directly or indirectly would impair the obligations of such contract.

State v. King, 64 W. Va. 546, 63 S. E. 468; Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 432, 24 L. ed. 760; Hartman v. Greenhow, 102 U. S. 672, 26 L. ed. 271; 3 Elliott, Contr. § 2757; Wright v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 216 U. S. 420, 54 L. ed. 544, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 242; Colorado Farm & Live Stock Co. v. Beerbohm, 43 Colo. 464, 96 Pac. 443; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 66, 44 L. ed. 673, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 545, Woodruff v. Trapnall, 10 How. 180, 13 L. ed. 383.

Messrs. Stuart, Cruce, & Cruce and Hatchett & Ferguson, amici curiæ.

Sharp, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

February 18, 1910, the legislature passed an act providing for the creation and management of what was designated the "Public Building Fund" Chapter 16, Sess. Laws 1910, pp. 21-25. Said act was by act of the legislature amended March 15, 1911 (Sess. Laws 1910-11, pp. 194-199). The latter act provided that all moneys theretofore or thereafter received from the sale or rentals of section 33 of the public lands of the state, and lands granted in lieu thereof, the same being lands granted to the state of Oklahoma for charitable and penal institutions and public buildings, should constitute and be known as "The Public Building Fund;" that bonds of different denominations bearing interest at the rate of 5 per centum per annum, payable semiannually, should be issued against said fund, and that the state auditor should, on or before the 1st day of April, 1911, issue public building bonds to the amount of $750,000, made payable to bearer, and place them in the hands of the state treasurer for sale. The aggregate amount of bonds authorized was not to exceed the sum of $3,000,000, of which sum $2,451,500 was actually issued. The act provided that all outstanding warrants issued under the provisions of chap. 16 of the Session Laws of 1910 should become a valid lien against said building fund, and that the state treasurer should receive sealed bids for the purchase of said bonds, or any part thereof at a time fixed, but that none of the bonds should be sold for less than par and accrued interest. The act further provided that the officers of the state, or of any municipality thereof, having charge of any sinking fund, could purchase said bonds from the state treasurer at par. The proceeds of the sale of all bonds authorized were to be paid into the state treasury and used for the payment of the construction of charitable and penal institutions and public buildings. It was provided in § 7 that "any bank, trust or insurance company, organized under the laws of this state, may invest its capital and surplus in bonds issued under the provisions of this act. The officers having charge of any sinking fund of the state or of any county, city, town, township or school district thereof, may invest the sinking fund of the state or of such county, town, township or school district in bonds issued under the provisions of this act, maturing prior to the date of the bonded indebtedness for the payment of which any such sinking fund is created. Said bonds shall also be approved collateral as security for the deposit of any public funds and for the investment of trust funds. Said bonds shall be nontaxable for any purpose."

By § 9 it was provided that "all bonds and interest thereon, when issued as provided for in this act, shall become payable out of the public building fund, arising from the sale or rental of section 33, and lands granted to the state in lieu thereof, until all of said bonds and interest thereon are fully paid. And the good faith of the state is solemnly pledged to administer the trust created by the terms of the Enabling Act and the Constitution of Oklahoma, to apportion and dispose of all lands granted to the state for charitable and penal institutions and public buildings, as the legislature may prescribe, and safely keep and preserve the proceeds of the rental and sale thereof, and apply same to the payment of the bonds authorized by this act, and the interest thereon, as the same falls due, and to use such funds, constituting the Public Building Fund, for no other purpose or purposes."

July 19, 1913, the First National Bank of Chickasha purchased of the state treasurer, with the approval and consent of the comptroller of the currency, public building bonds of the par value of $200,000. Said bank afterwards sold to the First National Bank of Minco, out of its purchase from the state treasurer, bonds of the par value of $20,000. In the month of May, 1915, said bank made a return to the county assessor of its property subject to taxation for the year 1915, from which it deducted the assessed valuation of its real estate in the state of Oklahoma, separately listed in the name of the bank, and the public building bonds owned by it. The return as made by said bank was accepted by the county assessor, and was afterwards approved by the county board of equalization. July 20, 1915, the state board of equalization raised the valuation of national banks in Grady county, having state building bonds deducted from their assessment, in the sum of $200,000; and the assessment of Grady county was referred back to the county assessor and board of equalization of Grady county for the purpose of correction, equalization, and adjustment. On August 16, 1915, the county board of equalization, together with the county assessor, pursuant to the order and direction of the state board of equalization, met, and after hearing the protest of said bank and others affected, raised the assessed valuation of said bank in a sum equal to the par value of said public building bonds, namely, $180,000, and ordered the county assessor to extend such raise upon the tax rolls for the year 1915. From said order, under authority of § 2 of subdiv. B, chap. 107, Sess. Laws, 1915, the bank prosecuted its appeal to the district court of Grady county, where the action of the county board was reversed, and said board was directed to deduct from the valuation of the bank the amount invested by it in public building bonds. From the order and judgment of the district court, the county board of equalization, and the board of county commissioners of Grady county, and the state of Oklahoma, have appealed to this court.

Primarily, the controversy involves the taxability of the public building bonds of the state, issued under the act of March 16, 1911. If said bonds are taxable, then the controversy is at an end. If not, the further inquiry is involved: That of the right of the shareholders in a national bank, whose capital and surplus is invested in nontaxable state bonds, to a deduction upon the valuation of their shares, on account of the nontaxable bonds owned by the bank. The question is one in which the state, the banks, both national and state, trust and insurance companies organized under the laws of the state, and public officers having charge of any sinking fund of the state, or of any county, city, town, township, or school district thereof, as well as the public generally, are vitally interested. For these reasons, and because of the fact that numerous suits are pending in the various courts of the state, involving the power of the state taxing authorities to assess for taxation the public building bonds of the state, it is important that our opinion should go to the merits of the controversy, laying aside all questions of the regularity of the proceedings, not of a jurisdictional character, had before the taxing authorities or in the trial court.

The statute, pursuant to which the bonds were issued, in terms provides that "said bonds shall be nontaxable for any purpose." It is urged by the state and its affected subdivisions that the act is in conflict with § 50, art. 5, of the Constitution, providing that "the legislature shall pass no law exempting any property within this state from taxation, except as otherwise provided in this Constitution."

And that as § 6 of art. 10 of the Constitution, prescribing what is exempt from taxation, does not include state and municipal bonds, or either; and as such bonds in the hands of the owner constitute property, it follows that the bonds are taxable.

The sovereignty of a state, it was said by Chief Justice Marshall, extends to everything which exists by its own authority, or is introduced by its permission. McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 429, 4 L. ed. 579, 607. While in § 36, art. 5, of our Constitution, it is broadly stated that "the authority of the legislature shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation."

The taxing power is one of the highest attributes of sovereignty, and its authority to tax all subjects over which its sovereign power extends, is undeniable. In Re Wolverine Oil Co. — Okla. —, L.R.A.1916F, 441, 154 Pac. 362. The power to tax rests on necessity, and is inherent in sovereignty. It is vital to our form of government. With equal force it may be said that the power of exemption, as well as the power of taxation, is an essential attribute of sovereignty: that the power to tax includes the power to exempt, unless specially denied by the Constitution. The general right to make exemptions is involved in the right to apportion taxes, and exists in the supreme legislative power, unless expressly forbidden. Of this right it is said by an eminent authority: "The general rule on the subject is familiar and has been too often declared to be open to question. The right to make exemptions is involved in the right to select the subjects of taxation and apportion the public burdens among them, and must consequently be understood to exist in the lawmaking power, wherever it has not in terms been taken away. . . . Exemptions, when properly made, must be determined in the legislative discretion, which is not, however, arbitrary; there must underlie its exercise some principle of public policy that can support a presumption that the public interest will be subserved by the exemptions allowed." Cooley, Taxn. 342, 343.

Section 7318, Rev. Laws 1910, as amended by the act of March 11, 1915, pp. 172, 173, in respect to the taxation of shares of stock in a national bank, conforms, it seems, to the requirements of § 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 9784, authorizing the assessment for taxation of the shares of national banking associations located within the state. First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. 353, 19 L. ed. 701; First Nat. Bank v. Chehalis County, 166 U. S. 440, 41 L. ed. 1069, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 629. While it is true that the old section of the statute appears at the beginning of the amended section, changed only in respect to date of taxation, said former statute is followed immediately, and in the same section, by the amendment, which sufficiently directs the taxation of the shares as distinguished from the net value of their "moneyed capital, surplus and undivided profits," attempted to be taxed under the old statute. The right of the state to tax the shares of stock in a national bank rests upon the theory that shares in corporations are property entirely distinct and independent from the property of the corporation, and that the tax on an individual in respect to his shares in a national bank is not regarded as a tax upon the corporation itself. This distinction, now settled beyond dispute, was mentioned in McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579, where in the opinion, declaring a tax upon a branch bank of the United States beyond the power of the state of Maryland, it was said: "That the opinion did not extend 'to a tax imposed on the interest which the citizens of Maryland may hold in this institution, in common with other property of the same description throughout the state.'"

The distinction appears, however, to have first been made the basis of decision in Van Allen v. Assessors (Churchill v. Utica) 3 Wall. 573, 18 L. ed. 229, in which, under the act of 1864, as originally enacted, it was held that the tax on the shares was not a tax on the capital stock of the bank, but upon a distinct, independent interest or property held by the shareholder. The Van Allen Case, followed by a long line of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, has settled the law that a tax may be assessed by the state upon the owners of shares of stock in a national bank located therein. The tax assessed to shareholders may be required by law to be paid in the first instance by the corporations themselves as a debt and in behalf of the shareholder, leaving to the corporation the right to reimbursement for the tax paid for their shareholders, either under some express statutory authority for their recovery, or under the general principles of law that one who pays the debt of another, at his request, can recover the amount from him. First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky; and, First Nat. Bank v. Chehalis County, supra; Merchants' & N. Nat. Bank v. Pennsylvania, 167 U. S. 461, 42 L. ed. 236, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829; Cleveland Trust Co. v. Lander, 184 U. S. 111, 46 L. ed. 456, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 394. Hence we say that whatever may have been the law in this state respecting the taxation of national banks prior to 1915, and regardless of its validity, the act of March 11th of that year, in so far as the right to tax is concerned, is sufficient to authorize an assessment of the shares of stock of a national bank located within the state. The act of Congress Rev. Stat. § 5219, was not intended to curtail the power of the state on the subject of taxation. It simply required that the capital invested in national banks should not be taxed at a greater rate than like property similarly invested, and that the shares of any national banking association, owned by nonresidents of the state, should be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located, and not elsewhere. It was not intended to cut off the power to exempt particular kinds of property, if the legislature chose to do so. The discretionary power of the legislature remained as it was before the act. New York ex rel. Bank of Commerce v. Tax Comrs. 2 Black, 620, 17 L. ed. 451; Adams v. Nashville, 95 U. S. 19, 24 L. ed. 369. The assessment list meets the greater part, if not all, the requirements of the amended statute, particularly in respect to furnishing the list of names and residences of all stockholders of the bank, with the number and assessed value of the shares held by each of the stockholders. It is not claimed that the bank should not pay on account of its stockholders taxes on their shares of stock, but that proper deductions on account of interest in nontaxable bonds should be allowed. For the purposes of the case we shall therefore consider the shares of stock of bank to have been properly assessed.

The proceeds of the sale of the bonds, authorized by the act, were to be used by the state for the payment of the construction of needed charitable and penal institutions, and public buildings. Such was the governmental object sought to be effected by the issuance and sale of said bonds. To its accomplishment the good faith of the state was solemnly pledged to safely keep and preserve the proceeds of the sale and rental of the public lands of the state, named in the act, and to apply said proceeds to the payment of the bonds issued, with interest thereon, as the same matured. It was necessary, or at least so considered, that the credit of the state be employed in order that it might promptly and faithfully discharge the obligations assumed by and resting upon it. The issuance of bonds secured in the manner provided for was a method usual and ordinary of using the state's credit. When a state issues its bonds in conformity to law in order to raise money to accomplish and carry out a governmental purpose, the instruments issued by it for that purpose are instrumentalities of government. Such obligations constitute the means resorted to by the state to effectuate the powers of government. In the hands of the purchasers such credits may be the subject of taxation, unless because of some superior intervening right, providing the intention to tax is manifest. Cases involving the liability of state or municipal bonds to taxation very generally hold that laws providing for the imposition of taxes will not be construed to authorize the collection of a tax upon such bonds, unless there is in the law clear language that such was the legislative intent. The statute authorizing the issuance of the bonds, it must be remembered, in terms provided that they should be nontaxable. The pledged immunity on the part of the state attached in the act, so that at no period of time were the bonds subject to taxation. Not only was such the case, but the very act under which the present assessment was made exempts the bonds of the state from taxation. Originally, it was provided by § 7302, Rev. Laws 1910, that "all property in this state, whether real or personal, including the property of corporations, banks and bankers, except such as is exempt, shall be subject to taxation."

This section of the statute was amended by the act of March 11, 1915, by inserting therein the words: "Except bonds of this state, and its counties, cities, towns, school districts and other municipalities of this state."

It is a rule firmly established in our jurisprudence that the bonds of the United States government cannot be taxed by the states, and that bonds of the states cannot be taxed by the United States government, for the reason that such bonds are but instrumentalities of government; that the power of the Federal government to tax the bonds of the state, as well as the power of the state government to tax the bonds of the general government, would be a power to embarrass each sovereignty in the exercise of its governmental functions. McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579; Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. 449, 7 L. ed. 481; New York ex rel. Bank of Commerce v. Tax Comrs. 2 Black, 620, 17 L. ed. 451; Buffington v. Day, 11 Wall. 118, 20 L. ed. 122. A sovereign state may, at its election, when not restrained by its Constitution, permit its own property to be taxed, as well as its agencies of government, including evidences of indebtedness issued on the basis of the credit of the state, in the exercise of its power to borrow money. State v. Elizabeth, 65 N. J. L. 479, 47 Atl. 454; People

v. Home Ins. Co. 29 Cal. 533; Norfolk v. J. W. Perry Co. 108 Va. 28, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 167, 128 Am. St. Rep. 940, 61 S. E. 867; Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 432, 24 L. ed. 760.

While it is true the obligations of the state, in the form of its bonds, are not specifically named in the Constitution as exempt from taxation, we do not believe that the framers of the Constitution, fully cognizant of the many necessities of the state upon its admission into the Union, intended, by denying to the legislature the power to discriminate between taxpayers, to thereby curtail its power to provide in the most efficient way possible, and in such method as its judgment and patriotism might suggest, for the preservation of the credit and good faith of the people of the state. Fairly construed, the Constitution, denying the legislature the right to exempt property from taxation, reflects the wisdom of the times. By this limitation an effectual curb was placed upon abuses that had crept into the legislation of many of the sister states. Favoritism, involving exemption from taxation, was thereby made impossible, or at least unenforceable, save in the limited and exceptional instances provided for in § 6, art. 10, of the Constitution. By the provision against exemption from taxation, it was not intended to deny to the state an exercise of sovereignty so necessary and essential to the due and orderly administration of its affairs. It was not intended thereby to deny to the state the power to go upon the open money markets of the world and compete for money upon equal terms with other sovereign states; or to deny to the state the power to provide a security of equal attractiveness to its own citizens, with that of other state governments of no better credit. Neither was it the purpose to place the state in the ungenerous attitude of asking the public to advance money upon its securities, which it was thereafter bound to render unprofitable by enforced taxation. Thus interpreted, the state building bonds, constituting as they do obligations of the state for the payment of money, and being an exercise of the borrowing power, and a use of the state's credit, do not constitute property within the meaning of § 50, art. 5, of the Constitution; and hence the statutes exempting such bonds from taxation do not contravene the constitutional limitation against exemption from taxation. Our conclusions we believe to be supported both by sound principle and the weight of authority. Discussing the subject of taxation of agencies and instrumentalities of state governments, 37 Cyc. 883, announces the following rule: "Nor, as in the case of public property generally, will the state itself impose taxes upon its own public or governmental agencies or instrumentalities, or those of its municipal corporations, or a municipality tax such agencies or instrumentalities of a state. The bonds and other securities of a state, or of its municipalities, are generally exempt from all taxation by the state itself and its municipal corporations, either by express provisions of law or by implication."

In the well-considered opinion of State ex rel. Da Ponte v. Board of Assessors, 35 La. Ann. 651, the supreme court of Louisiana held that a law directing the taxation of all property would not, for that reason, include public property, or any of the means, appliances, or instruments of government; that municipal bonds or contracts for the payment of money was an exercise of the borrowing power and the use of the public credit; and that the taxation of such bonds in the hands of a private person was a taxation of the public credit, and a burden on the borrowing power. Again, in the later case of State ex rel. Louisiana Improv. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 111 La. 982, 36 So. 91, it was held that a general law, in terms directing that all property be taxed, including "bonds," "credits," did not include public property, as property to be taxed, nor "public securities," due by the municipality by which they were issued; nor did it include within its terms public credits of the municipality by which the tax was demanded.

In Miller v. Wilson, 60 Ga. 505, it was said that, in the absence of explicit language clearly expressing the will of the legislature to tax the bonds of the state, the general assembly will not be presumed to have passed on so grave a question of public policy, from the use of general words, especially when like words had been employed in former acts, and the executive department has never construed them to embrace state bonds. In Penick v. Foster, 129 Ga. 217, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1159, 58 S. E. 773, 12 Ann. Cas. 346, after declaring that nothing was better settled than that securities issued by the government are as much the instrumentalities of the government as other means adopted by it to perform its functions, and that it was immaterial whether the security be issued by the state, or by a county, or by a municipality, as it was in all cases an instrumentality, issued for the purpose of effectuating those objects for which government exists, the rule was announced that bonds issued by a municipal corporation, as evidence of a loan made to it, were instrumentalities of the government which created the municipal corporation, and that laws providing for the collection of taxes will not be so construed as to authorize the collection of a tax upon such instrumentalities of the government, unless there is in the law clear language declaring that such was the intention of the lawmaking power. Also that the word "property," in that clause of the Constitution of the state of Georgia (art. 7, § 2, ¶ 1) which declares, "all taxation shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, and ad valorem on all property subject to be taxed within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax," correctly construed, did not require the taxing of public property, or any of the lawful instrumentalities of government. That there was not, in the tax law of that state, any terms which expressly declared that the bonds of the state, or its various political subdivisions, were subject to tax, nor any language in such laws which clearly indicated that it was the intention of the general assembly to subject those instrumentalities of government to taxation, either by the state or any county thereof.

To the foregoing authorities we may add that of Mercantile Nat. Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 138, 30 L. ed. 895, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826, in which it was said: "The amount of the exemption in this case is comparatively small, looking at the whole amount of personal property and credits which are the subjects of taxation; not large enough, we think, to make a material difference in the rate assessed upon national bank shares; but, independently of that consideration, we think the exemption is immaterial. Bonds issued by the state of New York, or under its authority by its public municipal bodies, are means for carrying on the work of the government and are not taxable even by the United States, and it is not a part of the policy of the government which issues them to subject them to taxation for its own purposes. Such securities undoubtedly represent moneyed capital, but as from their nature they are not ordinarily the subjects of taxation, they are not within the reason of the rule established by Congress for the taxation of national bank shares."

Keeping in mind the close relation that ever exists between the right to tax and the power to exempt from taxation, the principle upon which the foregoing cases rest is the same as in the case under consideration. There being nothing in the Constitution that expressly forbids the legislature to exempt the bonded indebtedness of the state from taxation, the consequence is that the power to do so exists, and may be called into action at the legislative will.

The power of the legislature to exempt the bonds from taxation being, we think, clearly established, was it the purpose and intent so to do? The language of the statute is broad and comprehensive. The intention was indubitable. As plainly expressed, the bonds were made nontaxable for any purpose. Not only did the statute authorizing the issuance of the bonds provide for their nontaxability, but printed in the face of the bonds was the provision, "This bond is nontaxable under the laws of the state of Oklahoma." And to which was added the usual certificate of the attorney general and ex officio bond commissioner of the state. From the foregoing, as well as from the subsequent acts of the legislature, there is no room to doubt that the legislature intended to exempt the bonds from all form of taxation, on any account, or for any purpose.

While the bonds of a state, held by the residents of the state by which they are issued, may be taxed by the state or by its lawful authority, such may not be done if there be a valid contract with the holder exempting them from taxation. Dill. Mun. Corp. ¶¶ 1399, 1401; Gray, Limitations of Taxing Power, ¶¶ 1049, 1051. As stated by Cooley on Taxation, pp. 355, 356: "A state sometimes makes the bonds or other evidences of indebtedness issued by itself nontaxable. When this is done before the indebtedness is incurred, a contract is established between the state and those who become its creditors, which precludes withdrawing the exemption."

It is a rule well supported by authority that a legislature has the power, when not restricted by some constitutional provision, to contract with a corporation for its immunity from taxation. State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 48 Md. 49; Mobile & S. H. R. Co. v. Kennerly, 74 Ala. 566; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Berry, 41 Ark. 509; Com. v. Richmond & P. R. Co. 81 Va. 355.

The petition of the bank alleges, and the uncontradicted evidence shows, that the bank, through its officers and directors, and representing its stockholders, purchased the bonds upon the advice and under the belief that they were nontaxable; and that such was the construction placed upon the law by the then attorney general, governor, state treasurer, and the state taxing authorities. The transaction between the state and the purchasers of its bonds amounted to a contract that the bonds should be nontaxable. Humphrey v. Pegues, 16 Wall. 244, 21 L. ed. 326; Pacific R. Co. v. Maguire, 20 Wall. 36, 22 L. ed. 282; Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 432, 24 L. ed. 760; Gray, Limitations of Taxing Power, ¶¶ 998, 998a.

It has been said that a compact lies at the foundation of all national life; that contracts mark the progress of communities in civilization and prosperity. They guard, as far as possible, against the fluctuations of human affairs. They seek to give stability to the present and certainty to the future. They gauge the confidence of man in the truthfulness and integrity of his fellow-men. They are springs of business, trade, and commerce. Without them society could not go on. Spotless faith in their fulfillment honors alike communities and individuals. Where this is wanting in the body politic, the process of descent has begun, and the lower plane will be speedily reached. To the extent to which the defect exists among individuals, there is decay and degeneracy. As are the integral parts, so is the aggregated mass. Under the monarchy or aristocracy order may be upheld and rights enforced by the strong arm of power. But a republican government can have no foundation other than the virtue of its citizens. When that is largely impaired, all is imperiled. Trist v. Child (Burke v. Child), 21 Wall. 441, 22 L. ed. 623; Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, 24 L. ed. 558; 1 Montesquieu, Spirit of Laws, 17-25.

By the statute any bank, trust, or insurance company, organized under the laws of this state, was authorized and invited to invest its capital and surplus in said bonds. By the sale of the bonds the state was enabled to discharge a great public duty in the erection and furnishing of charitable and penal institutions and public buildings of the state. Inducements in the way of making the bonds approved collateral as security for the deposit of any public funds, and for the investment of trust funds, were offered investors; and the good faith of the state was solemnly pledged to administer the trust created by the terms of the Enabling Act and the Constitution of Oklahoma, to apportion and dispose of all lands granted to the state for charitable and penal institutions and public buildings, as the legislature might prescribe, and safely keep and preserve the proceeds of the rental and sale thereof, and apply the same to the payment of the bonds authorized by the statute, and the interest thereon, as the same fell due at maturity, and to use such funds constituting the public building funds for no other purpose or purposes.

As the capital and surplus of a national bank cannot be taxed by a state, but the shareholders, both resident and nonresident, may, no benefit could accrue either to the bank or its shareholders if deductions on account of the ownership of said bonds are not allowed the latter. This, it is claimed by the attorney general, cannot be done, on the authority of Van Allen v. Assessors (Churchill v. Utica) 3 Wall. 573, 18 L. ed. 229; New York v. Tax. & A. Comrs. 4 Wall. 244, 18 L. ed. 344; Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 129, 29 L. ed. 830, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 645; Home Sav. Bank v. Des Moines, 205 L.R.A.1917B.

U. S. 503, 51 L. ed. 901, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 571.

But the question decided in the foregoing cases is not decisive of that at hand. We are concerned, not alone in the power of the state to tax the shareholder, or his right to exemptions on account of ownership by the bank of nontaxable government bonds, but in a proper application of the local statute, making certain of the bonds of the state nontaxable for any purpose, and the rights of the shareholders in a national bank, arising out of a contract between the state and the officers and directors of the bank in the purchase of its bonds. It is not, as already seen, a question of power in the legislature, but of the rights of the shareholders springing out of the purchase of the bonds under the circumstances appearing from the record, and of which we may take notice. It is said in Gray on Limitations of Taxing Power, § 997, that the cases where a state has made a direct contract for exemption or commutation of taxes, not contained in the corporate charter, are few compared to the number of those where corporate charters have contained the corporate contract. Among the former class is Pacific R. Co. v. Maguire, 20 Wall. 36, 22 L. ed. 282, where it seems that the state of Missouri, which had previously chartered the Pacific Railroad Company, granted to it by legislative act certain lands owned by the state, and provided for the issuance of bonds for which the state had a lien on the road. The lands and the proceeds of the bonds were to be used in the construction of a new branch road, and the railroad was to pay the principal and interest of the bonds, and to secure subscriptions to them. The act also provided for an acceptance by the company of the grant, and contained an exemption from taxation until the road should be completed, in operation, and should declare a dividend. The company accepted the act. Both the state and the road defaulted in the interest on the bonds, and after a device in the nature of a legislative receivership had been tried, the state levied a "tax" and the proceeds of which it enacted should be devoted to the payment of the bonds and the interest, which were the common obligations of the state and the company. The stipulated event had not occurred, upon which the property of the company should become taxable. It was held that the circumstances constituted a contract between the state and the company, and the tax was void.

In New Jersey v. Yard, 95 U. S. 104, 24 L. ed. 352, the language of the act, which it was held constituted a contract between the railroad company and the state, in respect to its taxation, provided: "Which tax (one half of 1 per cent) shall be in lieu and satisfaction of all other taxation or imposition whatsoever by or under the authority of this state, or any law thereof."

And it was said, in denying the right of the state to levy a further tax: "Is there here to be implied 'except such laws as may hereinafter be enacted?' Such a provision would be to nullify the whole contract. How could the tax be in lieu and satisfaction of all other taxation, if other taxes might be imposed next day? Or how can it be said to be in satisfaction of all taxes whatsoever under authority of the state, if the state could immediately impose another and more burdensome tax?"

Full force was given by the court to the doctrine that when it is asserted that a state has bargained away her right of taxation in a given case. The contract must be clear and cannot be made out by dubious implications. And it was said that of the existence of a contract, there was no doubt. That its meaning and terms were clear enough, and, taken alone, constituted a contract which would be protected by the Constitution of the United States.

In Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 432, 24 L. ed. 760, it was held that a municipality of a state could not by its ordinances, under the guise of taxation, relieve itself from performing to the letter all that it expressly promised to its creditors. It was argued on behalf of the defendant that the state of South Carolina and the city council of Charleston possessed the power of taxation when the contracts were made; that by the contracts the city did not surrender this power; that, therefore, the contracts were subject to its possible exercise, and that the city ordinances were only an exertion of it. It was said that the power of a state to impose taxes upon subjects within its jurisdiction was unlimited (with some few exceptions), and that it extended to everything that exists by its authority, or is introduced by its permission. Hence it was to be inferred that the contracts with the city of Charleston were made with reference to this power, and in subordination to it. All this, it was said by the court, may be admitted, but that it did not meet the case of the defendant. That the court did not question the existence of a state power to levy taxes, as claimed, nor the subordination of contract to it, so far as unrestrained by constitutional limitation. But the power was not without limits, and one of its limitations was found in the clause of the Federal Constitution, that no state shall pass a law impairing the obligation of contracts. The opinion in part reads: "A change of the expressed stipulations of a contract, or a relief of a debtor from strict and literal compliance with its requirements, can no more be effected by an exertion of the taxing power than it can be by the exertion of any other power of a state legislature. The constitutional provision against impairing contract obligations is a limitation upon the taxing power, as well as upon all legislation, whatever form it may assume. Indeed, attempted state taxation is the mode most frequently adopted to affect contracts contrary to the constitutional inhibition."

Proceeding further, the court said: "What, then, is meant by the doctrine that contracts are made with reference to the taxing power resident in the state, and in subordination to it? Is it meant that when a person lends money to a state, or to a municipal division of the state having the power of taxation, there is in the contract a tacit reservation of a right in the debtor to raise contributions out of the money promised to be paid, before payment? That cannot be, because if it could, the contract (in the language of Alexander Hamilton) would 'involve two contradictory things: An obligation to do, and a right not to do; an obligation to pay a certain sum, and a right to retain it in the shape of a tax. It is against the rules, both of law and of reason, to admit by implication in the construction of a contract a principle which goes in destruction of it.'"

A review of a number of cases where the contract for exemption of taxes is found in the corporate charters may properly be considered in this connection. The case at hand is not unlike, in some of its material aspects, that involved in Gordon v. Appeal Tax Ct. 3 How. 133, 11 L. ed. 529. The inquiry raised in that case, by the agreed statement of facts was: Did the Act of Maryland of 1841, chap. 23, so far as it imposed a tax upon shares of stock held by stockholders in the Union Bank of Maryland, and other banks mentioned in the statement, impair the obligation of a contract? The banks were classified in the statement as old and new banks. The old were those which were chartered previous to the year 1821; the new, those which were chartered after the year 1830. Their exemption from the tax imposed by the Act of 1841 was claimed under the Acts of Maryland of 1821, chap. 131, and that of March, 1835, chap. 274, called the Act of the Session of 1834. In the opinion it is said: "Has such an exemption been given to the old banks? The language of the 11th section of the act of 1821 is: 'And be it enacted, that, upon any of the aforesaid banks accepting and complying with the terms and conditions of this act, the faith of the state is hereby pledged not to impose any further tax or burden upon them during the continuance of their charters under this act.' This is the language of grave deliberation, pledging the faith of the state for some purpose,—some effectual purpose. Was that purpose the protection of the banks from what that legislature and succeeding legislatures could not do, if the banks accepted the act, or from what they might do, in the exercise of the taxing power? The terms and conditions of the act were, that the banks should construct the road and pay annually a designated charge upon their capital stocks, as the price for the prolongation of their franchise of banking. The power of the state to lay any further tax upon the franchise was exhausted. That is the contract between the state and the banks. . . . Having determined that the clause in question was not meant as a pledge against further taxation upon the franchises of the banks, but that it was a pledge against additional taxation, what is the extent of exemption given by it, or to what does it apply? Does it exempt the respective capital stocks of the banks, as an aggregate, and the stockholders from being taxed as persons on account of their stock? We think it does both. The aggregate could not be taxed, without its having the same effect upon the parts that a tax upon the parts would have upon the whole. Besides, the legislature, in proposing the terms and conditions of the act, use the word 'banks' with reference to the consent or acceptance of the act being given by the stockholders, according to a fundamental article of their charters. . . . True it is, when accepted and recognized, it became a contract with the banks. But its becoming a contract with the banks determines of itself nothing. We must look in what character, or by whose assent it was to become a contract with the state, to ascertain the intention of the legislature in making the pledge, 'that upon any of the aforesaid banks accepting of and complying with the terms and conditions of this act, the faith of the state is hereby pledged not to impose any further tax or burden upon them during the continuance of their charters under this act.'

It was further said that the legislatures of 1813 and 1821 were anxious to have a certain highway constructed, which they thought the convenience and intercourse of the citizens of Maryland required; and they were also anxious to raise an adequate school fund for every county in the state. They determined that both should be accomplished by incorporating certain banks, with the obligation upon them to make the roads, and to make all the banks in the state pay an annual tax upon their capital as a condition upon which their charters were to be extended. Referring to the Acts of 1813 and 1821, the court observed: "In L.R.A.1917B.

whatever way we examine the Acts of 1813 and 1821, we are of opinion that it appears from the 11th sections in those acts, to have been the intention of the legislatures which passed them, to exempt the stockholders from taxation as persons on account of the stock which they owned in the banks. This exemption, however, is limited to the old banks in Baltimore which were chartered before 1821, during the continuance of their charter under the Act of 1821. It is founded upon the 11th section of that act, and it is our opinion that the Act of 1841, chap. 23, in so far as it imposes a tax upon the stockholders in those banks, on account of their stock, does impair the obligations of a contract, and is void by the 10th section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States."

In Piqua State Bank v. Knoop, 16 How. 369, 14 L. ed. 977, quoting from the opinion of the court in State ex rel. Prosecuting Atty. v. Commercial Bank, 10 Ohio, 535, Mr. Justice McLean said: "The supreme court of Ohio say, we take it to be well settled that the charter of a private corporation is in the nature of a contract between the state and the corporation. Had there ever been any doubts upon this subject, those doubts must have been removed by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Woodward v. Dartmouth College. And the court remark, 'The general assembly say to such persons as may take the stock, you may enjoy the privileges of banking, if you will consent to pay to the state of Ohio, for this privilege, 4 per cent on your dividends, as they shall from time to time be made. The charter is accepted, the stock is subscribed, and the corporation pays, or is willing to pay, the consideration stipulated; to wit, the 4 per cent.' And the court say, 'Here is a contract, specific in its terms, and easy to be understood.' 'A contract between the state and individuals is as obligatory as any other contract. Until a state is lost to all sense of justice and propriety, she will scrupulously abide by her contracts, more scrupulously than she will exact their fulfillment by the opposite contracting party.' This opinion commends itself to the judgment, both on account of its sound constitutional views and its elevated morality. . . . That decision was calculated to give confidence to those who were desirous to make investments in banking operations, or otherwise, in the state of Ohio."

Again, in the course of the opinion, it is said: "A state, in granting privileges to a bank, with a view of affording a sound currency, or of advancing any policy connected with the public interest, exercises its sovereignty, and for a public purpose, of which it is the exclusive judge. Under such circumstances, a contract made for a specific tax, as in the case before us, is binding. This tax continues, although all other banks should be exempted from taxation. Having the power to make the contract, and rights becoming vested under it, it can no more be disregarded nor set aside by a subsequent legislature than a grant for land. This act, so far from parting with any portion of the sovereignty, is an exercise of it. Can anyone deny this power to the legislature? Has it not a right to select the objects of taxation and determine the amount? To deny either of these is to take away state sovereignty."

In Jefferson Branch Bank v. Skelly, 1 Black, 436, 17 L. ed. 173, the rule was announced that state legislatures, unless prohibited by state Constitutions, may contract by legislation to release from taxation a particular thing, corporation, or person.

In Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, 24 L. ed. 558, it was said that the charter of a bank which declares, "that the bank shall pay to the state an annual tax of one half of 1 per cent on each share of capital stock subscribed, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes," is a contract between the state and the bank, and any other tax than that therein specified is expressly forbidden. Many authorities are cited or reviewed in the opinion of the court, and the doctrine announced in Gordon v. Appeal Tax Ct. is reaffirmed. After referring to the power of the legislature granting the charter, the opinion reads: "There is no question before us as to the tax imposed on the shares by the charter. But the state has by her revenue law imposed another and an additional tax on these same shares. This is one of those 'other taxes' which it had stipulated to forgo. The identity of the thing doubly taxed is not affected by the fact that in one case the tax is to be paid vicariously by the bank, and in the other by the owner of the share himself. The thing thus taxed is still the same, and the second tax is expressly forbidden by the contract of the parties. After the most careful consideration, we can come to no other conclusion. Such, we think, must have been the understanding and intent of the parties when the charter was granted and the bank organized. Any other view would ignore the covenant that the tax specified should be 'in lieu of all other taxes.' It would blot those terms from the context, and construe it as if they were not a part of it."

In Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 129, 29 L. ed. 830, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 645, the charter exemption from taxation of the capital stock of the Nashville, Chattanooga, & St. L.R.A.1917B.

L. R. Co. was held to apply to its shares of stock in the hands of individual stockholders. In the course of the opinion it was announced that, in construing statutes which were binding on states as contracts, the words employed are, if possible, to be given the same meaning they had in the minds of the parties to the contract when the statute was enacted. In that respect, it was said, there is no difference between a contract of a state and a contract of a natural person. That if the words employed are capable of more than one meaning, that meaning is to be given them which, taking the whole statute together, it is apparent the parties intended they should have. In conclusion, it was said: "The charter exempted the stock from taxation clearly because the property which represented the stock had been put in its place as a taxable thing. The exemption is of the thing called the 'capital stock' divided into shares. As the whole thing is exempt, so must necessarily be its several parts or shares."

In Powers v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 201 U. S. 543, 50 L. ed. 860, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 556, it was held that a contract between a state and a railway company which prevented the subjection of the property of the company to any other than the tax prescribed in Michigan Laws 1855, p. 305, § 9, was created by the provisions of that section, that the company shall pay an annual tax of 1 per cent of the capital stock of said company, paid in, which tax should be in lieu of all other taxes except for penalties imposed on said company, and should be estimated upon its last annual report, the statute being a special one, having reference only to the company in question, which formally accepted the taxation provision, and made large expenditures, and completed an unfinished railroad, to induce which was the motive of the enactment.

In Penrose v. Chaffraix, 106 La. 250, 30 So. 718, it appears that when the legislature of Louisiana in 1833 (Laws 1833, p. 172) exempted the capital of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana from taxation, it meant, according to the opinion, to include in the exemption that which represented the capital,—the shares in the hands of those who had subscribed to the capital stock. And it was said that where there is an exempting clause in the charter, the question is one of the legislative intent as to the scope and extent of the exemption, rather than one of the legislative power. The act incorporating the bank, in consideration of certain benefits therein stipulated the state declared the corporation exempt from taxation. The 30th section thereof provided: "The said corporation shall, during its existence, be exempt in its capital and property, . . . from all taxes to the state, or to any parish or corporation created by the law of this state."

A subsequent act passed in 1836 (Laws 1836, p. 16) greatly enlarged the scope of the bank's purpose and the extent of its power. It pledged the faith of the state as security for a sum as large as $12,000,000, and bonds of the state, predicated upon this pledged faith, to the extent of $7,000,000, were issued, and by means thereof the capital needed for the enlarged purpose of the bank was secured. There was an exemption of the bank from taxation, superseding the previous exemption, in these words: "And the capital of said bank shall be exempt from any tax laid by the state, or by any parish or body politic under the authority of the state during the continuance of its charter."

Construing the exemption feature of the statute, it was observed: "When the legislature exempted the capital of the bank from taxation, it meant to include in the exemption that which represented the capital, which was the tangible evidence of the capital,—the shares in the hands of those who had subscribed to the fund which went to make up the capital. That was the usual meaning, the ordinary significance, of the terms employed. It was so taken and understood at the time and long subsequent thereto, as is shown by the fact that, down to the present time, neither the capital of the bank nor the shares of its capital stock have ever been amenable to taxation."

It was further said, discussing the subsequent effort to tax the shares: "What, invite private subscriptions to a fund designed to form in part the capital of a bank which is to become an instrument of the state, formally exempt this capital from taxation, and yet latently reserve the right, secretly entertain the intention, of some day taxing the certificates which show that A, B, C, D, and others had supplied the money which constituted the capital! To so hold would be to impugn the justice, fairness and good faith of the legislature which enacted, and the executive who approved, the act. It is a question of intention, and we cannot hold that the lawmakers of that early period meant to ensnare the then subscribers to the capital stock by exempting the capital itself, yet reserving the right to succeeding generations to tax the shares representing that capital in the hands of the heirs and assigns of those who subscribed."

It was said that the subscribers dealt with the bank upon the public faith of the state, as declared in its statute; that the exemption was granted for a consideration, and formed a contract between the state and the corporation. Citing Gordon v. Appeal L.R.A.1917B.

Tax Ct. 3 How. 133, 11 L. ed. 529, it was said that the contract with the bank was a contract with the stockholders of the bank. Further, in this respect, the opinion reads: "It can hardly be doubted that if the original subscribers to the capital stock had been informed the offer of the state to exempt the capital was not intended to exempt the shares in their hands, the consequence would have been they would not, in many instances, have subscribed to the stock. There would have been no sufficient inducement for them to do so, on that score. Whether the tax came out of their pockets directly, or whether it came out of the bank, to be deducted from their dividends, or to affect the value of their shares, there was not to them the shadow of a difference."

In conclusion, it was noted that when the state contracts, it places itself on an equality with other contracting parties, and thus becomes liable to the application of the rule of contra proferentem.

In Richardson v. St. Albans, 72 Vt. 1, 47 Atl. 100, it was held that under the Vermont Statutes, § 365, providing that certain manufacturing establishments, and all capital and personal property used in their business, may be exempt from taxation for a term of years, if the town so votes; and § 411 of the statutes, declaring that in determining the list of a taxpayer, the amount of his stocks and bonds which were exempt from taxation should be deducted from the appraised value of his personal estate—where the stock of a manufacturing corporation had been exempted from taxation by vote of the city in which it was located, its shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders were exempt.

In State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 48 Md. 49, 73, 74, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, incorporated in 1826 (being the first railroad ever chartered in this country for the transportation of freight and passengers), proposed to construct a railroad from Baltimore to the Ohio river, a distance of 379 miles, involving in its construction an expenditure of an enormous sum of money, and was therefore justly considered not only as a gigantic, but, in a pecuniary sense, a hazardous, enterprise. Under these circumstances the legislature was willing to confer on it every privilege and immunity which could be reasonably required, and which would tend to the completion of the road. In the charter it was provided: "And the shares of the capital stock of the said company . . . shall be exempt from the imposition of any tax or burthen."

It was said by the court, in construing the exemption provision: "As used in this connection, we understand the legislature to mean that the shares of stock, representing the property and profits of the company, shall be exempt from the imposition of any tax or burthen. The legislature, beyond all question, intended to confer a substantial benefit on the company, and thereby to induce capitalists and others to invest their means in the construction of a road which everyone deemed of so much importance to the state. And to say they meant to exempt the shares only, and to reserve the right to tax the property and franchises, is a construction that would render the privilege thus granted of no practical benefit to the appellee."

And it was held that the exemption from taxation, granted in the charter of the company, was a contract between the state and the corporators, within the protection of the Constitution of the United States, and therefore beyond the power of a subsequent legislature to repeal or in any manner impair.

In Com. v. Richmond & P. R. Co. 81 Va. 355, the charter of the Richmond & Petersburg Railroad Company provided that "all machines, wagons, vehicles and carriages purchased . . . with the funds of the company, and all other works constructed under the authority of this act," of the legislature, "and all profits which shall accrue from the same, shall be vested in the respective shareholders of the company forever, in proportion to their respective shares; and the same shall be deemed personal estate, and shall be exempt from any public charge or tax whatsoever."

And it was held that all the property and profits of the company, and also all the shares of the respective shareholders, were exempt from taxation, whether state, county, or municipal.

Where the tax is in fact laid upon the franchise of a corporation, although measured by the amount of its capital stock, the manner in which the capital is invested is not material. But if the tax is really upon the property or assets of the corporation, as represented by its capital, allowance must be made for such portion of the capital as is invested in nontaxable property. New York Tax Cases (New York ex rel. Bank of Commonwealth v. Tax & A. Comrs.) 2 Wall. 200, 17 L. ed. 793; German-American Sav. Bank v. Burlington, 54 Iowa, 609, 7 N. W. 105; State ex rel. Davis v. Rogers, 79 Mo. 283; Whitney v. Madison, 23 Ind. 331; Newark City Bank v. Fourth Ward Assessor, 30 N. J. L. 13, 28; New Orleans v. New Orleans Canal & Bkg. Co. 29 La. Ann. 851; 27 Cyc. 820.

In the present case, of the invested capital of the bank, including surplus fund and undivided profits, $180,000 was invested in nontaxable state bonds. This money, the proceeds arising from the sale of said bonds, had been paid into the state treasury to the credit of the state building fund. Had the purchase been made by a private individual, it is obvious that the tax would not lie. In such case the state would in effect be levying a tax upon the bonds. The purchaser, having parted with his money, could not be taxed thereon; not until the redemption of the bonds by the state and the money paid on account thereof was again in his hands. There being a contract between the state and the officers of the bank, acting both on account of the bank and in behalf of the shareholders, and the statute making the bonds nontaxable for any purpose, effect cannot be given the promised immunity, and upon which the bank acted, unless by allowing shareholders the right to deduct from the value of their shares that proportion of the value invested in nontaxable state bonds. Not to do so would be to fail to give to the statute making the bonds nontaxable all practical value and effect, and make the exemption from taxation of the bonds held by national banks as investments of capital wholly unreal and illusory. Pledging the faith of the state, we have seen, is an act evidencing "grave deliberation," intended to accomplish some "effectual purpose." An end not intended, but, on the other hand, forbidden, would result if the shares are taxed without a proportionate reduction in value on account of the bank's investment in the bonds. That the bonds are not taxed eo nomine cannot affect the rule. The consequence would be the same in either case.

It is as essential that the public faith should be preserved as that individual grants and contracts should be maintained and enforced. A state must always preserve unsullied its good faith whenever it has been pledged, and its officers should never, by any nice refinement, open a way by which it may be violated. Those of our citizens, who, at the state's invitation, purchased the state building bonds, and thereby enabled the state, at a time when, according to the evidence, there was little or no market for its obligations at par, to discharge its public functions by furnishing shelter and comfort to its unfortunates, and prisons for its criminals, and other necessary public buildings, should not, and will not, be required to pay, even though in the form of taxation, that from which by solemn compact, lawfully entered into, they are exempt. To do so would be to impair the obligations of their contract with the state, and upon the inviolability of which the purchasers of the bonds had full right to rely.

Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 432, 24 L. ed. 760. Legislative contracts are to be read in the light of the public policy entered into and the purposes sought to be accomplished at the time they were made, rather than at a later period, when different ideas and theories may prevail. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Tennessee, 153 U. S. 486, 38 L. ed. 793, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 968. The wisdom of the legislature in exempting the bonds from taxation involves a question of legislative policy, over which the courts have no right of review. In that respect its judgment is conclusive and binding upon all branches of the state government.

Aside from what we have said was the legislative purpose in respect to the taxation of said bonds, a well-founded doubt may exist as to the right of the state to tax the shareholders of a national banking association, owning state building bonds, without, according to such shareholders, the right ratably to deduct from the valuation thereof the amount of the capital and surplus invested in such bonds, in view of § 5219, Rev. Stat., requiring that the taxation of such shares "shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital, in the hands of individual citizens of such state." A somewhat similar question was involved in New York v. Weaver, 100 U. S. 539, 25 L. ed. 705, where it was held that the prohibition against the taxation of national bank shares at a greater rate than that imposed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens could not be evaded by the assessment of equal rates of taxation upon unequal valuations, and that consequently where the state statute authorized individuals to deduct the amount of debts owing by them from the assessed value of their personal property, and moneyed capital subject to taxation, the owners of shares of national banks were entitled to the same deduction. The cases of Albany County v. Stanley, 105 U. S. 305, 26 L. ed. 1044; Hills v. National Albany Exch. Bank, 105 U. S. 319, 26 L. ed. 1052; Evansville Nat. Bank v. Britton, 105 U. S. 322, 26 L. ed. 1053; Cummings v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 153, 25 L. ed. 903; Mercantile Nat. Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 138, 30 L. ed. 895, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826, are applications of the same principle. See also McHenry v. Dow- ner, 116 Cal. 20, 45 L.R.A. 737, 47 Pac. 779. It would seem that the rule announced in the foregoing cases must hold true in the case at bar, else a condition would exist whereby the taxability of the bonds would be made to depend upon the personality of their owners, or the statute under which the tax was sought to be collected. That is to say, that bonds belonging to individuals and to corporations, taxable upon the net value of their moneyed capital and undivided profits, would not be taxable, while those belonging to national, if not state, banks, would in legal effect be taxable. We do not consider it necessary, however, to a decision of the case, to decide this point, preferring to rest our conclusion upon the ground that the bonds being nontaxable for any purpose, the right of the shareholders to a proper credit on account thereof is sufficiently made to appear.

We have seen that the statute permitting the exemption of state bonds from taxation violates no provision of our Constitution. That it was not the purpose of the legislature to tax the state building bonds issued under authority of the act of March 15, 1911, as evidence both by the act itself and the subsequent act of March 11, 1915, is obvious. It was so recognized by the governor, attorney general, and state treasurer, in office when the bonds were issued and sold. Until 1915 the law was so understood and administered by the state taxing authorities. Fully informed of the foregoing, and relying thereon, the First National Bank of Chickasha purchased the bonds subsequently indirectly sought to be taxed.

From what we have said it follows the action of the state board of equalization, of August 4, 1915, and the subsequent action of the county board of equalization of Grady county, was violative of the rights of the bank and its shareholders, which had theretofore attached under its contract with the state; and that the judgment of the District Court of Grady county, on appeal from the action of the county board of equalization, should be and is in all things affirmed.

All the Justices concur, except Kane, Ch. J., absent, and not participating.

Annotation—Constitutional limitation of the power to exempt property from taxation as affecting public obligations or property.

The present note is intended to include only cases involving the power of the legislature to exempt public obligations L.R.A.1917B.

or property in the face of a general constitutional requirement that all property be taxed, or of a specific constitutional restriction on the legislative power to exempt property.

On implied exemption of state or municipal bonds, see note to State Nat. Bank v. Memphis, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 663.

On liability of municipal bonds to taxation, see note to Penick v. Foster, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1159.

The question as to the intention to include public property or obligations in the constitutional term "property," which is decisive of the question here under annotation, depends upon whether or not there is a presumption in favor of the exemption or immunity of public property from taxation. But that question is broader than the scope of this note, and in some of its aspects has been covered in the notes referred to.

There are not many cases in which the exact question here annotated has been passed upon, but a reference to the cases cited in the other notes will show that, on the underlying principle, the decisions are overwhelmingly in favor of the position taken by the court in RE FIRST NAT. BANK, ante, 294.

Many analogous cases supporting this holding on the underlying principles are cited in the note to Penick v. Foster, already mentioned. In that case, the court, by way of argument, said: "Let it be conceded, for the purposes of this case, that the state, either directly or through its counties and municipalities, may tax public securities in the hands of individuals. The question then arises whether the words 'all property subject to be taxed,' in the Constitution, embrace bonds issued by the state or its political subdivisions. If they do, there is no power to exempt them from taxation. If they do not, the question as to whether they shall be so subject is a matter left to the discretion of the general assembly. If a municipal bond is property which the Constitution taxes of its own force, and the general assembly has no authority to exempt the same from taxation, then a county bond is likewise taxable, and, for a similar reason, a state bond itself."

Where the Constitution provides that "no man or set of men are entitled to exclusive, separate, public emoluments or privileges from the community but in consideration of public services," the question of the legislature's power to exempt city waterworks from taxation properly turns upon the question whether the property belongs to the city in its governmental or in its private capacity. Com. v. Makibben (1890) 90 Ky. 384, 29 Am. St. Rep. 382, 14 S. W. 372; Clark v. Louisville Water Co. (1890) 90 Ky. 515, 14 S. W. 502.

In Williamson v. Massey (1880) 33 Gratt. (Va.) 237, it was held that the legislature had power to exempt state bonds from taxation notwithstanding a clause in the Constitution which provided that "taxation, except as hereinafter provided, whether imposed by the state, county, or corporate bodies, shall be equal and uniform, and all property, both real and personal, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as prescribed by law. No one species of property from which a tax may be collected shall be taxed higher than any other species of property of equal value." But the decision is based upon a construction of the constitutional provision which would permit the exemption even of classes of private property rather than upon the public character of the property.

The Tennessee court is the only authority directly opposed to the result of the decision in RE FIRST NAT. BANK. In State Nat. Bank v. Memphis (1906) 116 Tenn. 641, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 663, 94 S. W. 606, 8 Ann. Cas. 22, that court held that an attempted exemption of state bonds by the legislature violates a constitutional provision that all property shall be taxed, basing its decision upon the theory that there is no implied exemption of state bonds from taxation, hence, state bonds are included in the provision that all property shall be taxed. This underlying theory that there is no implied exemption of state bonds seems to be contrary to the unanimous opinion of other courts (see cases cited in the note in 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 663), which fact would indicate that the decision is erroneous. But a majority of the same court in Keith v. Funding Board (1912) 127 Tenn. 441, 155 S. W. 142, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1145, reached practically the same ultimate conclusion by a different route, or rather by different routes. Two of the five judges agreed and one concurred in the result only, while two wrote dissenting opinions, none of the judges being content to rest the decision wholly upon the State Nat. Bank v. Memphis.

J. W. M.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

ROBERT B. ALEXANDER, Appt.,
v.
WILKES-BARRE ANTHRACITE COAL COMPANY et al.

(— Pa. —, 98 Atl. 794.)

Nuisance — operation of coal mine.

1. The operation of a coal mine in the ordinary way with the precautions usually and customarily prevailing in such plants is not a nuisance of which those located in the vicinity can complain.

For other cases, see Nuisances, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — failure to call witness — presumptions.

2. Failure of plaintiff in an action to enjoin the operation of a business as a nuisance to call as a witness an engineer who examined the plant at his request under order of court justifies the court in assuming that he found no violation of the law or existing conditions which proper operation or adoption of other appliances would remedy.

For other cases, see Evidence, II. c, 9, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Injunction — arrangement of mine — nuisance.

3. The failure of a mine operator to arrange his buildings and appliances as required by statute is no ground for injunction at the suit of one complaining of a nuisance, if there is nothing to show that such arrangement affected him adversely.

For other cases, see Nuisances, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Court — interference with act of corporation.

4. Under a statute empowering private citizens to contest the authority of a corporation to do a particular act, the power of the court ceases if such authority is found to exist.

For other cases, see Corporations, IV. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(May 15, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Court of Common Pleas for Luzerne County dismissing his bill filed to enjoin defendants from operating and using their plant to the injury of plaintiff's private property rights. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John McGahren and R. B. Alexander, for appellant:

The dust, smoke, noise, and vibration created by the use of defendant company's structures are continuing nuisances to plaintiff's property.

Note. — For operation of mine as a nuisance, see annotation following this case, post, 313.
L.R.A.1917D.

Stokes v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 214 Pa. 415, 63 Atl. 1028.

The defendant company should be enjoined from such operation of its breaker as causes injury to plaintiff, because its operation is a continuing nuisance and the defendant company does not possess the right to maintain it.

Siegfried v. Boyd, 237 Pa. 55, 85 Atl. 72; Jackson v. Thomson, 215 Pa. 209, 64 Atl. 421; United States v. Dickson, 15 Pet. 141, 10 L. ed. 689; Folmer's Appeal, 87 Pa. 133; Com. v. Morass Hill Coal Co. 5 Lack. Jur. 364; Com. ex rel. Roderick v. Vipond, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 357; Com. v. Mann, 168 Pa. 290, 31 Atl. 1003; Stuart v. Laird, 1 Cranch, 299, 2 L. ed. 115; United States v. State Bank, 6 Pet. 29, 8 L. ed. 308; Edwards v. Darby, 12 Wheat. 206, 6 L. ed. 603; Union Ins. Co. v. Hoge, 21 How. 35, 16 L. ed. 61; United States v. Moore, 95 U. S. 760, 24 L. ed. 588; Brown v. United States, 113 U. S. 569, 28 L. ed. 1079, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648; The Laura (Pollock v. Bridgeport S. B. Co.) 114 U. S. 411, 29 L. ed. 147, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 881; United States v. Johnston, 124 U. S. 236, 31 L. ed. 389, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 446; Dollar Sav. Bank v. United States, 19 Wall. 227, 22 L. ed. 80; Klinger v. Bickel, 117 Pa. 326, 11 Atl. 555; Alexander v. Kerr, 2 Rawle, 83, 19 Am. Dec. 616; Kincaid's Appeal, 66 Pa. 411, 5 Am. Rep. 377.

The coal company should use its premises in such manner that no injury will be caused plaintiff.

Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, 57 Am. Rep. 445, 6 Atl. 453; Pfeiffer v. Brown, 165 Pa. 267, 44 Am. St. Rep. 680, 30 Atl. 844; Sullivan v. Jones & L. Steel Co. 208 Pa. 540, 66 L.R.A. 712, 57 Atl. 1065; Harvey v. Susquehanna Coal Co. 201 Pa. 63, 88 Am. St. Rep. 850, 50 Atl. 770; Walters v. McElroy, 151 Pa. 549, 25 Atl. 125; Keppel v. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. 200 Pa. 649, 50 Atl. 302, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 605; Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 528, 64 Am. Dec. 721, 13 Mor. Min. Rep. 374; Hoy v. Sterrett, 2 Watts, 330; Woelpper v. Pennsylvania Water & Power Co. 250 Pa. 559, 95 Atl. 717; Lewis's Appeal, 67 Pa. 153; Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. § 399; Bell v. Ohio & P. R. Co. 1 Grant, Cas. 105; Todd's Appeal, 24 Pa. 429; High, Inj. § 10a; Menendez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 514, 32 L. ed. 526, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 143.

Mr. John G. Johnson also for appellant:

Mr. Benjamin R. Jones, for appellee Coal Company:

This is not a case for equitable intervention by means of a preliminary injunction. People's Pass. R. Co. v. Union Pass. R. & P. Traction Co. 35 W. N. C. 311; Mammoth Vein Consol. Coal Co.'s Appeal, 54 Pa. 183, 7 Mor. Min. Rep. 460; Daugherty Typewriter Co. v. Kittanning Iron & Steel Mfg. Co. 178 Pa. 215, 35 Atl. 1111.

Plaintiff, not being a mine inspector or an employee of the defendant company, had no right to enforce alleged violations of the Anthracite Mine Law.

Sparhawk v. Union Pass. R. Co. 54 Pa. 401; Cumberland Valley R. Co.'s Appeal, 62 Pa. 218; Evans v. Reading Chemical Fertilizing Co. 160 Pa. 209, 28 Atl. 702; Klein v. Livingston Club, 177 Pa. 224, 34 L.R.A. 94, 55 Am. St. Rep. 717, 35 Atl. 606.

The operation of the breaker and washery is not a nuisance.

Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, 57 Am. Rep. 445, 6 Atl. 453; Joyce, Nuisances, § 95; Com. v. Miller, 139 Pa. 77, 23 Am. St. Rep. 170, 21 Atl. 138, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 619; Eller v. Koehler, 68 Ohio St. 51, 67 N. E. 89, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 659; Straus v. Barnett, 140 Pa. 111, 21 Atl. 253; McCaffrey's Appeal, 105 Pa. 253; Alexander v. Stewart Bread Co. 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 526; Keiser v. Mahanoy City Gas Co. 143 Pa. 276, 22 Atl. 759; Price v. Grantz, 118 Pa. 402, 4 Am. St. Rep. 601, 11 Atl. 794; Gold v. Philadelphia, 115 Pa. 184, 8 Atl. 386; Farver v. American Car & Foundry Co. 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 579.

Frazer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant corporation operates a colliery situated along North Pennsylvania avenue, in the city of Wilkes-Barre, which was opened and first operated in 1882. In 1902 or 1903, following a suspension of mining for a time, and previous to renewing operations, improvements were made to the plant by the erection of a new breaker, a boiler plant, and a washery; and later, in 1913, by the installation of four additional boilers. The new buildings were erected on the site of structures that had been in existence since 1882. In 1908 a receiver was appointed for the company at that time owning the colliery, and in 1910 the property was sold at receiver's sale, subsequently becoming vested in defendant company, and since that time operated by it. In 1909 Elizabeth C. Alexander, plaintiff's mother, the other defendant, purchased a lot of ground on North Pennsylvania avenue opposite the colliery, and erected a dwelling thereon in which she and her family have since resided. Following the resumption of mining at the colliery in 1910, Mrs. Alexander, through her son, the plaintiff in these proceedings, complained to defendant company of annoyance, and damage to her property, by dust escaping from the breaker, and the vibration caused by a ventilating fan operated on defendant's premises, and requested that the cause of the injury be abated. On the company's failure to suppress, or lessen, the vibration caused by the fan, a bill in equity was filed by Mrs. Alexander to enjoin its use; and in 1913 a second proceeding was instituted, in which she alleged damage to her dwelling due to the operation of the washery. Both proceedings are pending and undetermined. In the meantime complaint had been made to the state mine inspector, together with a request that an investigation of defendant's premises be made, and asking that he proceed against the company if violations of the mining laws were found to exist. In response to the complaint the inspector made an investigation of defendant's plant, and reported that he found no violation of the law sufficient to warrant an application to the courts for an injunction to restrain the operation of the colliery. The inspector, however, informed Mrs. Alexander that defendant company would be notified to make certain changes in the location of the opening of the air shaft, which was done by the inspector, and the request complied with by the company. Plaintiff, in the meantime, having received from his mother a deed for an undivided half interest in the property, instituted proceedings in equity against the defendant company in which he complained of damage to the property caused by the operation of the colliery, and asked that an injunction be awarded preliminary until final hearing, and thereafter perpetual. Before the motion for a preliminary injunction was disposed of, plaintiff moved the court to dismiss his bill without prejudice, which was done, and immediately following that action he petitioned this court to assume original jurisdiction, which we declined to do, and refused his petition. Whereupon he began the present proceedings. The court below refused his motion for a preliminary injunction, and upon final hearing dismissed the bill. From this action plaintiff appealed.

The city of Wilkes-Barre is located in the anthracite coal mining regions, there being at least seven other coal mining operations within the limits of the city near the location of defendant's mine, and in addition to these industries the locality contains a number of manufacturing and other enterprises. Defendant's colliery has been in operation since 1882, with the exception of about three years, and represents an investment of half a million dollars. In connection with the mining of anthracite coal, the erection and use of breakers, washeries, fans, and other machinery, is a necessary and usual incident in the operation of such mines, and a certain amount of noise and dust will necessarily result from carrying on the business, and must be expected and endured by persons who take up their residence in a neighborhood devoted to such industries.

Defendant's business is a lawful one, consisting of the development of the natural resources of the land, in which the interests of the entire community are concerned, and for which large expenditures have been made; and so long as defendant carries on its business in the ordinary way, and adopts and uses the precautions usually and customarily prevailing in the operation of such plants, as has been done in this case, it is not accountable for incidental annoyances and damages that necessarily follow its mining operations. Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, 57 Am. Rep. 445, 6 Atl. 453; Straus v. Barnett, 140 Pa. 111, 21 Atl. 253; McCaffrey's Appeal, 105 Pa. 253. The court below found, as a matter of fact, that defendant's plant and equipment are such as are usual in the particular locality, and in common and ordinary use in the operation of anthracite coal mining. This finding is fully justified by the evidence, in fact the court in giving weight to the testimony could not have reached a contrary conclusion.

The fourth prayer of plaintiff's bill is for an order on defendant company to allow plaintiff's engineer access to its breaker and other structures for the purpose of inspecting the appliances used in the preparation of coal, and ascertaining if anything was being done or omitted which would lessen the nuisance by preventing the emission of the dust complained of. This order was made as requested, and an inspection of defendant's mines and buildings permitted by plaintiff's engineer, who was not called to testify on the trial. That the court was justified in taking into consideration the absence of this witness, and in assuming he found no violation of the law and no existing condition which a proper operation of the plant, or the adoption of other appliances, would remedy, cannot be questioned.

Plaintiff in his bill further avers defendant violated the provisions of the Mining Law of June 2, 1891 (P. L. 176), by: (1) Erecting its breaker within 200 feet of the mouth of the main hoisting shaft; (2) in constructing the washery in too close proximity to the fan house; and (3) in not properly placing and erecting the boilers above referred to. These violations of the act, assuming them to be such, the court below has found did not in any way injure or affect plaintiff in either his health or his property. As stated before, a new breaker was built in 1903 on the site of the original one of 1882, and, upon application by the mine inspector for an injunction to restrain the rebuilding of the structure, the court dissolved the preliminary injunction, and in the present case held the decree in that case to be res judicata of the question whether in that respect there was a violation of the mining laws. Aside from this, plaintiff is without standing to complain of infractions of the mining laws in a proceeding of this character. The complaint here is that he is being inconvenienced and damaged by smoke, noise, and dust, caused by the proximity of defendant's works to his residence and the vibration of machinery used in operating its plant. It does not appear how compliance with the mining laws with respect to the location of buildings would, in any way, lessen the nuisance complained of. So far as the evidence shows, the structures might be separated as required by the act, and yet be, perhaps, as near plaintiff's property as now situated, or possibly nearer. The sole question raised here is whether or not plaintiff is damaged, and, if so, has he the right to restrain the operation of the plant, if necessary, to avoid a continuation of the damage? The finding of the court below is that plaintiff is not affected by the relative location of the defendant's buildings with respect to each other, and a review of the evidence has convinced us of the correctness of this conclusion. In this case the circumstances do not require us to decide whether, under any conditions, an individual possesses the right by action in his individual name to enforce the mining laws, or whether that duty is devolved solely upon the inspector of mines under article 15, § 1, of the Act of 1891. The purpose of that enactment is to protect the community as well as those employed in the mines, and the rights of plaintiff are the same as the rights of every other member of the community if he suffers no special injury by its violation. The remedy to restrain acts prejudicial to the interest of the public must be in accordance with the provisions of the law, or in absence of express provisions, by the proper public officers, and cannot be accomplished by a proceeding in equity by an individual.

A private action for a public nuisance can be maintained only by one who suffers some particular loss or damage beyond that suffered by all others affected by the nuisance. Interference with a common right does not of itself afford a cause of action by an individual. Knowles v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 175 Pa. 623, 52 Am. St. Rep. 860, 34 Atl. 974. In Rhymer v. Fretz, 206 Pa. 230, 232, 98 Am. St. Rep. 777, 55 Atl. 959, it was said by this court, quoting from Mechling v. Kittanning Bridge Co. 1 Grant, Cas. 416: "Private citizens have no right of action, either in law or equity, for the suppression of a public nuisance, unless on averring and proving some special damage to themselves. . . . For a nuisance that is merely a public wrong, only a public action can be brought, and that must be done by the proper public functionaries."

Likewise, equity will not enforce a penalty, or enjoin the commission of crime, at the instance of an individual, where there is no special injury to private rights. Sparhawk v. Union Pass. R. Co. 54 Pa. 401; Klein v. Livingston Club, 177 Pa. 224, 34 L.R.A. 94, 55 Am. St. Rep. 717, 35 Atl. 606. Had plaintiff shown a special damage to himself, by reason of the location of defendant's buildings and machinery within a distance of each other prohibited by the state mining laws, a case would have been presented for the enforcement of the mining laws at the instance of an individual specially damaged. This he failed to do, as his evidence established the only damage sustained by him to be due to the operation of the colliery in a particular neighborhood, there being no evidence that the removal of a building so as to comply with the provisions of the mining laws would lessen, or tend to prevent, the injury complained of.

Neither does the Act of June 19, 1871 (P. L. 1360), assist plaintiff. That act merely gives a private citizen the right to contest the power or authority of a corporation to do certain things injurious to private rights, and to decide whether the franchise to do the particular act has been conferred upon the corporation. Under its provisions the inquiry is limited to the question whether there was a grant to do the thing complained of. If so, the court is without authority to interfere. Blauch v. Johnstown Water Co. 247 Pa. 71, 93 Atl. 169. In the case cited it was said, quoting from Western Pennsylvania R. Co.'s Appeal, 104 Pa. 390: "The Act of 1871 contemplates nothing more than that it shall be made to appear from the charter, that the corporation has the power to do the particular act in controversy, and which involves some right of the contestant, but when we get beyond this, we assume something with which we have no business in a collateral proceeding; we assume to assert the right of a third party, the commonwealth, who may or may not, at her own option, insist upon the observance of those rights."

The decree is affirmed.

Annotation—Operation of mine as a nuisance.

This question so far as the pollution of streams by mining operations is concerned is treated in the notes to Drake v. Lady Ensley Coal, Iron & R. Co. 24 L.R.A. 64; Straight v. Hover, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 276; Arminius Chemical Co. v. Landrum, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 272, and Packwood v. Mendota Coal & Coke Co. L.R.A.1915D, 911.

Many cases dealing with questions in relation to nuisances quite analogous to that now under consideration, including the effect of vibration, smoke, etc., are cited in notes that may be found by consulting the Indexes to L.R.A. Notes, under the title "Nuisances."

The mining of coal is not a nuisance in itself. Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson (1886) 113 Pa. 126, 57 Am. Rep. 445, 6 Atl. 453; Pwllbach Colliery Co. v. Woodman [1915] A. C. (Eng.) 634, [1915] W. N. 108, 84 L. J. K. B. N. S. 874, 113 L. T. N. S. 10, 31 Times, L. R. 271, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 833.

And a mining company, so long as it carries on its business in the ordinary way, and adopts and uses the precautions usually and customarily prevailing in the operation of such plants, is not accountable for incidental annoyances and damages that necessarily follow its mining operations. Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson (Pa.) supra; ALEXANDER v. WILKES-BARRE ANTHRACITE COAL Co. ante, 310.

See also Marvin v. Brewster Iron Min. Co. (1874) 55 N. Y. 538, 14 Am. Rep. 322, 13 Mor. Min. Rep. 40, motion for reargument denied (1874) 56 N. Y. 671, holding that a mine owner will not be restrained from blasting in the nighttime, as is usual in mines, because it disturbs the sleep of the owner of the surface and his family, and thus affects their sleep or diminishes the value of his premises. Consult also Index to L.R.A. Notes under title, "Blasting."

Such an important industry as that of mining will not be interfered with at the instance of an individual, in the absence of proof of actual, visible, and substantial damage.

Thus, in Salvin v. North Brancepeth Coal Co. (1874) L. R. 9 Ch. (Eng.) 705, the bill in substance sought by a mandatory injunction to prevent a colliery company erecting or working any coke ovens or other ovens to the nuisance of the plaintiff, the nuisance alleged being from smoke and deleterious vapors. The bill was dismissed on plaintiff's failure to show actual substantial or visible damage. "With respect to this particular property before us," said the court, "I observe that the defendants have established themselves on a peninsula which extends far into the heart of the ornamental picturesque grounds of the plaintiff. If, instead of erecting coke ovens at that spot, they had been minded, as apparently some persons in the neighborhood on the other side have done, to import ironstone and to erect smelting furnaces forges and mills, and had filled the whole of the peninsula with a mining and manufacturing village, with beer shops and pigsties and dog kennels, which would have utterly destroyed the beauty and the amenity of the plaintiff's ground, this court could not, in my judgment, have interfered. A man to whom Providence has given an estate, under which there are veins of coal worth perhaps hundreds or thousands of pounds per acre, must take the gift with the consequences and concomitants of the mineral wealth in which he is a participant."

The decision in Robb v. Carnegie Bros. Co. (1891) 145 Pa. 324, 14 L.R.A. 329, 27 Am. St. Rep. 694, 22 Atl. 649, holds that one owning and operating ovens for manufacturing coke from coal obtained from strangers, and not mined in the land on which the ovens stand, the natural effect of which is to substantially injure property in their vicinity, must pay to the owners of such property the damages sustained by them, although the ovens are located on his own land at a place so well adapted to the business that they could not be enjoined. Such cases as this are not considered strictly within the scope of this note, the injury complained of resulting from the manufacture of coke being in no sense the natural and necessary consequence of the exercise of the legal rights of the owner to develop the resources of his property, but being the consequence of his election to devote his land to the establishment of a particular sort of manufacturing having no natural connection with the soil or the subjacent strata.

In Harvey v. Susquehanna Coal Co. (1902) 201 Pa. 63, 88 Am. St. Rep. 850, 50 Atl. 770, plaintiffs alleged that they were injured because the defendant mining company did not properly control the dust from its coal breaker, but adopted and used defective and inadequate appliances; and the court observed that, as there was proof submitted in support of this allegation, it was not for it to say that the injury complained of was damnum absque injuria, but it was for the jury to determine whether it resulted from negligence, for the consequences of which the defendant was liable. If such injuries, said the court, can be avoided by the most effective and approved means known of controlling coal dust, it is the duty of the mining company to adopt them. The maxim, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas," as applied to this company, does not mean that it cannot prepare its coal for market, but that in so preparing the same due regard must be had for the rights of others, by controlling, so far as possible, through the most effective known means, the dust generated in breaking and separating the coal. The court also approved of the instruction that "the defendants, in the preparation of the coal, are engaged in a lawful business, . . . the injury of which the plaintiffs complain is not in the mining of the coal, but is the cause of the method of its preparation for the market upon defendant's land after it is mined. Parties can reasonably use their own lands, but they must so use them as not to do injury and damage to the property rights of their neighbors. When parties are engaged in a lawful business, in order to sustain an action for injury resulting therefrom, the injury must be shown to have been real and substantial, not a trifling annoyance or injury, such as is necessarily incident to the business complained of. There are some injuries too slight and exceptional to be recognized as a bar to the active industries of the country. Every lawful enterprise contributes to the public good. It furnishes employment to the idle, promotes every other branch of industry, and in this way directly benefits the whole community. It is not unreasonable that the individual members of the community thus benefited should make some slight sacrifices for the public welfare. There can be no recovery in a case of this kind based upon the theory that it is not pleasant or conducive to the plaintiffs' feelings to have this breaker in proximity to their property. There can only be a recovery upon the principle of the negligence of the defendant, and as a result of such negligence the plaintiffs have sustained more than a trifling injury,—that they have sustained a substantial injury to their property rights."

It is held in Pwllbach Colliery Co. v. Woodman [1915] A. C. (Eng.) 634,

Ann. Cas. 1915D, 833, however, that a colliery, by a lease authorizing it to carry on the trade of mining, does not by implication acquire the right, privilege, or easement to so carry on its work as to commit a nuisance; and a person maintaining a slaughter house and sausage factory on adjoining premises under a subsequent lease from the same lessor, "subject to all rights and easements belonging to any adjoining or neighboring property," who is injured in his trade by screening and breaking operations, discharging dust which is carried by the wind to his premises, is entitled to relief by injunction and damages. "To my mind," says Earl Loreburn, "it is clear that permission to carry on a business is quite a different thing from permission to carry it on in such a manner as to create a nuisance. If, indeed, it could be proved that the business authorized could not possibly in a practical sense be carried on without committing a nuisance, so that everyone must have known the purpose was to commit a nuisance, or if some particular method of carrying it on had been authorized, which being faithfully observed had nevertheless necessarily resulted in an unexpected nuisance being committed, then it would have been different."

An injunction to restrain the continued and injurious acts of a company, after mining operations had ceased, consisting of carrying coal and water over, and depositing dirt and debris upon, the land of an adjoining owner, was granted and damages awarded in Walters v. McElroy (1892) 151 Pa. 549, 25 Atl. 125, the court, stating: "And as to the principle invoked, that a chancellor will refuse to enjoin when greater injury will result from granting than from refusing an injunction, it is enough to observe that it has no application where the act complained of is in itself, as well as in its incidents, tortious. In such case it cannot be said that injury would result from an injunction, for no man can complain that he is injured by being prevented from doing, to the hurt of another, that which he has no right to do. Nor can it make the slightest difference that the plaintiff's property is of insignificant value to him, as compared with the advantages that would accrue to the defendant from its occupation."

It was stated in Czarnecki v. Bolen-Darnell Coal Co. (1909) 91 Ark. 58, 120 S. W. 376, that a burning dump pile incidental to the opening and operating of a mine constituted a nuisance the continued maintenance of which was a sufficient ground for the recovery of damages. In this case the pile had been burning about three years, and the testimony tended to prove that the burning of the waste caused quantities of smoke and sulphur fumes, and other noxious vapors and gases, to arise constantly from the pile, and, being carried by the wind, to render the adjacent houses uninhabitable and dangerous to health; that the burning of the dump pile caused quantities of sulphur, alkali, salt, and other substances to be separated from the waste product and to become soluble in water; that rains falling upon the dump carried substances in solution upon the plaintiff's property, ruining the wells, destroying vegetation, shrubbery, and shade trees. It is argued, observed the court, that a distinction should be made as to a coal mine, because of the fact that it is operated at a fixed place, and cannot be moved like manufacturing plant. Another way of stating this recognized distinction is that, in the operation of a coal mine, the material is not brought to or accumulated on the land, like a manufacturing plant, but that it is found and utilized there (Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson (1886) 113 Pa. 126, 57 Am. Rep. 445, 6 Atl. 453; Robb v. Carnegie Bros. Co. (1891) 145 Pa. 324, 14 L.R.A. 329, 27 Am. St. Rep. 694, 22 Atl. 649). This distinction, the court goes on to say, is doubtless a sound one as to things which are reasonably essential to the proper operation of the mine. Now, the evidence in this case shows that it is customary in the operation of mines to dump the waste products near the entrance to the mine; but it does not appear that it is either customary or necessary to burn the waste, or that the fire could not have been extinguished. The evidence in this case shows that the pile was comparatively small when it became ignited, but it burned steadily for more than three years because of the fact that the waste product containing inflammable matter had been daily added to it until the pile had grown to immense proportions. The evidence does not show precisely how the pile became ignited, but it was shown that it is customary to throw ashes from the boiler on the pile, and it may have become ignited in this way.

It is held in McCabe v. Watt (1909) 224 Pa. 253, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 274, 73 Atl. 453, that a mandatory injunction will not lie to compel a corporate lessee of a coal mine within the limits of a municipal corporation to extinguish a fire in the mine which has become a nuisance to the health and property of adjacent property owners, where it has exhausted its entire capital in an ineffectual effort to control the fire, and such control will require the expenditure of a large sum of money and the service of a large force of men for a long period of time. (As to burning slack, culm, or other waste material as a nuisance, see note to Pana v. Central Washed Coal Co. 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 244.)

J. D. C.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

ARTHUR E. HUMES

v.

AUGUST H. SCHALLER.

(— R. I. —, 99 Atl. 55.)

Highway — duty to look out for passing vehicles.

1. One standing in the roadway engaged in inspecting a bursted tire on an automobile in which he had been riding is not bound to look out for passing vehicles if there is room for them to pass him in safety.

For other cases, see Negligence, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

New trial — insufficiency of evidence.

2. The trial judge cannot grant a new trial because the verdict is not supported by the evidence if the evidence is nearly balanced, or such that different minds would naturally and fairly come to different conclusions thereon, although his judgment may not agree with the verdict.

For other cases, see New Trial, III. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 20, 1916.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Kent County, made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servant, which resulted in a verdict for plaintiff. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Boss & Barnefield, for defendant:

Plaintiff was not in the exercise of due care.

Volosko v. Interurban Street R. Co. 190 N. Y. 206, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1117, 82 N. E. 1090; Gunn v. Union R. Co. 27 R. I. 320, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 362, 62 Atl. 118; Quinn v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 188 Mass. 473, 74 N. E. 687; Kelly v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 197 Mass. 420, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 282, 83 N. E. 865; Hennessey v. Forty-Second Street, M. & St. N. Ave. R. Co. 103 App. Div. 384, 92 N. Y. Supp. 1058; Clancy v. St. Louis Transit Co. 192 Mo. 615, 91 S. W. 509; Manetta

v. United Traction Co. 174 Fed. 207; Eddy v. Cedar Rapids & M. City R. Co. 98 Iowa, 626, 67 N. W. 676.

The trial court did not properly consider the defendant's motion for new trial.

Wilcox v. Rhode Island Co. 29 R. I. 292, 70 Atl. 913; McMahon v. Rhode Island Co. 32 R. I. 237, 78 Atl. 1012, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1223.

Mr. William R. Champlin, for plaintiff:

Plaintiff was in the exercise of due care.

37 R. I. 208; Marsh v. Boyden, 3 R. I. 519, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 582, 82 Atl. 393, 2 N. C. C. A. 410.

The operator or driver of an automobile, seeing a person in a position of danger in time to avoid an injury to him, may nevertheless be liable therefor, though the other's negligence may continue up to the time of the injury.

Mosso v. E. H. Stanton Co. 75 Wash. 220, L.R.A.1916A, 943, 134 Pac. 941.

The law of the road requiring vehicle drivers, upon meeting, to pass to the right, is held not necessarily to apply to their meeting of pedestrians.

Apperson v. Lazro, 44 Ind. App. 186, 87 N. E. 97, 88 N. E. 99; Buxton v. Ainsworth, 138 Mich. 532, 101 N. W. 817, 5 Ann. Cas. 146.

Baker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in this case, on August 14, 1915, was severely injured by an automobile driven by a servant of the defendant at a point on the main road in Warwick just south of Apponaug. A verdict has been returned in his favor, and the trial judge has denied defendant's motion for a new trial. To such ruling the defendant only excepted, as he also did to the refusal of the court to grant two requests for instructions. The case is before this court on these three exceptions.

Two grounds of error are urged in support of the exception to the denial of the motion for a new trial, namely: First, that upon the plaintiff's own testimony, as a matter of law, he was not in the exercise of due care; second, that the trial judge would not consider "the question of whether the jury had responded to the real merits of the controversy, and of whether the verdict failed to do justice between the parties."

Note.—As to liability for striking one engaged about an automobile in a highway, see annotation following this case, post, 319. L.R.A.1917B.

These facts are shown by the plaintiff's evidence: The plaintiff, as a sergeant of the First Light Infantry, in charge of a detail of three men, was riding on an automobile truck, which was conveying camp equipage and stores from Providence to the camp at Quonset. Between 1 and 2 o'clock in the afternoon, at a point on the highway south of Apponaug, opposite Brayton Cemetery, the tire on the truck's left rear wheel burst, and the truck was brought to a stop alongside of and 2 or 3 feet to the east of the trolley track. This track is on the west side of the highway, and its easterly rail is 10 feet from the electric car poles on the west side of the highway, and 12 feet from the fence on that side. From the easterly rail to the curb or edge of the sidewalk on the east side the distance is 21 feet. Poles of the Narragansett Electric Light Company are placed in this sidewalk at its edge, the sidewalk being 6 feet wide. The macadam portion of the street lies between the edge of the sidewalk on the east and the easterly rail of the car track. The extreme over-all width of the truck was 5 feet and 8 inches. By the testimony there was a space of about 13 feet between the curb or edge of the sidewalk and the east side of the truck after it was stopped. After the truck stopped there was at first some conversation as to what was to be done, as they had with them no spare tire. Three of the men—Freese, Clarke, and the plaintiff—alighted and went to the rear to look over the injured tire. Freese took a position close to the left rear wheel, facing it; Clarke stood near him, a little to the north and east, and the plaintiff was a little more to the north and east, facing southeasterly, bending over slightly and looking over his right shoulder at the wheel. The attitude of Clarke was similar. All three say that they were thus engaged for a minute and a half. The plaintiff, who was farthest from it, was about 3 feet east of the truck, thus leaving 10 feet of the roadway between him and the edge of the sidewalk. At the point of the accident the highway was nearly straight, and from the truck southward there was an unobstructed view for at least 350 feet. The chauffeur of defendant's automobile testified that he saw the truck standing there when even at a greater distance. The plaintiff says he looked up and down the highway, when he took his position at the rear of the truck, but did not look up afterwards, and admits that if he had looked up he would have seen the approaching automobile, but says he did not pay attention to what might be coming because he thought he was in a safe place. The defendant's automobile was an Oldsmobile of the Autocrat 1911 type. Its width is not stated, but from what is common knowledge, we think it may be inferred that its extreme width did not exceed 6 feet.

Upon this testimony the defendant argues that, as a matter of law, the plaintiff was not in the exercise of proper care for his own safety at the time of the accident. In support of this claim he cites seven or eight street railway cases in which the duty of persons working upon or in close proximity to street railway tracks to exercise care by looking or listening for approaching cars is upheld. We think that these and similar cases are clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. Practically everyone knows that a street car, normally used, can only proceed upon its track. The track is therefore an obvious place of danger, and the law imposes upon everyone on or in close proximity to it the duty of exercising care to avoid the danger arising from passing cars. But it is clear that the law does not require one, lawfully standing at noonday on a country highway, and directing his attention to a burst or punctured tire on a wheel of the vehicle on which he has been riding, to anticipate and to guard against being run over by an automobile, having ample room to pass him in safety. In other words, the law does not require an ordinarily prudent person to expect such carelessness. On the contrary, he has a right to expect, and to rely on the expectation, that the driver of the automobile will avail himself of the opportunity to pass by in safety. We hold, therefore, that it does not appear that upon this evidence the plaintiff was negligent as a matter of law.

The defendant bases his second claim of error in the denial of the motion for a new trial on this portion of the rescript of the trial judge, namely: "Defendant says that the preponderance of the evidence is that plaintiff stepped suddenly in the way from behind the stalled truck. Suppose I do believe that this is more probable than that defendant's driver ran down a man in plain sight; it is a question of fact which has been passed upon by the tribunal appointed to try questions of fact. Motion for new trial denied."

The defendant urges that by this language the trial judge refused to consider whether the jury had responded to the real merits of the controversy, and of whether the verdict failed to do justice between the parties, because apparently of the opinion that he had no power to do so. This court, in Wilcox v. Rhode Island Co. 29 R. I. 292, 70 Atl. 913; Noland v. Rhode Island Co. 30 R. I. 246, 74 Atl. 914, and McMahon v. Rhode Island Co. 32 R. I. 237, 78 Atl. 1012, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1223, has considered and discussed the powers and duties of trial judges in passing upon motions for new trials. From them two rules emerge; namely, "when the evidence is nearly balanced, or is such that different minds would naturally and fairly come to different conclusions thereon, he has no right to disturb the findings of the jury, although his own judgment might incline him the other way;" but when his judgment tells him that the verdict is wrong, because it fails to respond truly to the real merits of the controversy and to administer substantial justice, and is against the fair preponderance of the evidence, then his duty is to set aside the verdict. These rules have been referred to and affirmed in numerous cases since those above cited. We think it should not be inferred that the trial judge was not informed as to these decisions, but that, being aware of them, he has intended to imply that in his judgment the evidence in this case places it in the first class, where the verdict of the jury is to be accepted as conclusive as to the facts. We say this while recognizing the fact that the language of the rescript is not as discriminating and clear on this point as it might be.

There were two witnesses for the defendant, the chauffeur and the defendant's wife, who was one of the other two occupants of the car. The absence of the third occupant was explained by illness. The chauffeur said that he saw two men standing by the truck, Smith, its driver, and Clarke, but not the plaintiff; that he passed at a distance of 4 feet from the truck, that when his car was about 8 feet from these two men, they ran to the rear of the truck, and he was not aware that the automobile had come in contact with the plaintiff until informed of the fact by Mrs. Schaller, after the automobile had passed the truck. Mrs. Schaller says that the automobile was going not over 12 miles an hour at the time, and that it passed the truck with a clearance of about 3 feet; that as they passed the rear of the truck she saw a man run right into the mud guard and fall; that she did not see him until he struck the fender. They both say that the horn of the automobile was repeatedly sounded as it approached the truck. Smith, the driver of the truck, testifies that when the automobile passed he had not alighted from the truck, but at that time stood on its left-hand running board, near the front end of the truck. The others of his party corroborate him in this. The three men standing near the left rear wheel of the truck all say that on the approach of the automobile they did not leave their places and go to the rear of the truck; that they were unaware of its approach until it whizzed by. Clarke says it touched his clothing. The plaintiff could not tell how he was struck, or what hit him. No one of the other three saw the actual collision, but heard the noise of the impact, and saw the plaintiff while falling and as he struck the ground. Smith and Clarke testified that the tracks of defendant's car showed that it moved a little to its left as it passed the truck, and the latter said that the western rack of the automobile as it passed the rear part of the truck was about 4 feet away.

L.R.A.1917B.

We have stated the essential portions of the testimony thus fully because of the peculiar question now raised. The testimony was plainly and sharply conflicting. Upon carefully considering it, we are clearly of the opinion that the trial judge did not err in denying the motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence. The exception to the denial of such motion is overruled.

The two requests refused to which the other two exceptions are directed are:

"(1) In this case the doctrine of last clear chance has no application, unless it be found as a fact that the defendant's driver actually saw the plaintiff in time to avoid striking him."

"(3) In determining the center line of the road in this case the measurements are to be taken from the extreme side of the road, and the space occupied by the car tracks is not to be excluded from the measurements."

In refusing to charge them, the trial judge said: "I do not think they are called for by the evidence in the case, and will probably lead to more confusion than they would be of benefit."

We think there was no error in such refusal, and these two exceptions are overruled.

All the exceptions are overruled, and the case is remitted to the Superior Court in the county of Kent for the entry of judgment on the verdict.

Annotation—Liability for striking one engaged about an automobile in a highway.

As to reciprocal duty of operator of automobile and pedestrian to use care, see annotation to Deputy v. Kimmell, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 989, and earlier annotation there referred to.

The decision in HUMES v. SCHALLER, ante, 316, that the law does not require one lawfully standing at noon on a country highway, and directing his attention to a defective tire on a truck on which he had been riding, to guard against being run over by an automobile having ample room to pass him in safety, and that he has a right to rely on the expectation that the automobile driver will avail himself of the opportunity to pass in safety, and that the plaintiff in that case was not, under the circumstances, negligent as a matter of law, appears sound. It is held that drivers are bound to anticipate the presence of pedestrians upon the streets and highways, and to exercise reasonable care not to injure them. A person engaged about a car in the highway is in somewhat the same position as a pedestrian, and the driver of a vehicle approaching such a person undoubtedly owes him the duty to exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring him; and, on the other hand, the one engaged about the car must also use reasonable care for his own safety. What amounts to the use of such care depends, of course, upon the circumstances of each case. The inquiry is suggested whether one working about a disabled car should not, in the exercise of due care, ordinarily move the car to the right-hand side of the way, and thus obviate as far as possible the danger from passing vehicles. In case of a disabled car at night it would seem that such a course at least should be pursued. As stated, however, each case depends upon its own facts, and no definite rules can be laid down, except that both approaching drivers and those engaged about cars standing in the highway must exercise reasonable care to avoid injury.

HUMES v. SCHALLER appears to be the first case which has considered the specific question under annotation. It will be noted that in that case the court distinguishes the street railway cases cited, dealing with the duty of persons working near street railway tracks to look or listen for approaching cars, remarking that everyone knows that street cars, as normally used, can only proceed on the tracks, and that the tracks are therefore places of danger, so that the law imposes upon those in close proximity to them the duty of exercising care to avoid passing cars.

J. T. W.

SOUTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

MARTHA ALICE DUSTIN, Resp.,
v.

INTERSTATE BUSINESS MEN'S ACCIDENT ASSOCIATION, Appt.

(— S. D. —, 159 N. W. 395.)

Appeal — statement of facts — sufficiency.

1. A statement of facts for appeal will not be stricken from the record if from the standpoint of the appellant the facts necessary properly to present the matters sought to be reviewed are set out.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, IV. n, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Insurance — construction — additional insurance.

2. A provision for apportionment in case a holder of an accident insurance policy shall carry any other accident insurance of which he has not notified the insurer within the specified time before loss, applies to any such insurance secured during the life of the policy, and is not limited to that existing at the time the policy is secured.

For other cases, see Insurance, VI. g, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — automatic reduction — validity.

3. A provision in an accident insurance policy for automatic reduction in case additional insurance of the same kind is taken out is not against public policy.

For other cases, see Insurance, VI. g, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — conflicting provisions — enforcement.

4. A provision in an accident insurance policy for pro rata liability of the maker, in case additional insurance of that nature is taken without notifying him, is not so repugnant to a provision making the insurer liable for a specified amount in case of accident that it must yield thereto.

For other cases, see Insurance, III. d, 2; VI. g, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — As to provision in accident policy for prorating in case of other insurance, see annotation following this case, post, 323. L.R.A.1917B.

(October 4, 1916.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lawrence County in plaintiff's favor, and from an order overruling a motion for a new trial, in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on an accident insurance policy. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Dunshee & Haines and Stewart & Hodgson, for appellant:

The provisions of paragraph 16 do not contravene public policy.

Vidal v. Philadelphia, 2 How. 127, 11 L. ed. 205; Printing & Numerical Registering Co. v. Sampson, L. R. 19 Eq. 462, 44 L. J. Ch. N. S. 705, 32 L. T. N. S. 354, 23 Week. Rep. 463, 21 Eng. Rul. Cas. 696; 1 Page, Contr. p. 503.

Provisions of similar import are found in the standard fire insurance policy of this state and such provisions are uniformly upheld.

Hronish v. Home Ins. Co. 33 S. D. 428, 146 N. W. 588.

By the terms of the provision it became operative immediately upon the procuring of additional insurance.

Schuermann v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 161 Ill. 437, 52 Am. St. Rep. 377, 43 N. E. 1093; Moore v. Phoenix F. Ins. Co. 64 N. H. 140, 10 Am. St. Rep. 384, 6 Atl. 27; McClure v. Watertown F. Ins. Co. 90 Pa. 277, 35 Am. Rep. 656.

The provision is not void for uncertainty and the propositions made by plaintiff's counsel with reference to the ambiguity of the clause are not well founded.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 51; Commercial Travelers' Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Fulton, 24 C. C. A. 654, 45 U. S. App. 578, 79 Fed. 423; Travelers' Preferred Acci. Asso. v. Stone, 50 Ill. App. 222; Carr v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 100 Mo. App. 602, 75 S. W. 180.

Plaintiff's contention that it was not the beneficiary's duty to give the notice is conceded, but the liability of the defendant was fixed by the condition at the time of the accident and before her rights accrued.

Globe Acci. Ins. Co. v. Gerisch, 163 Ill. 625, 54 Am. St. Rep. 486, 45 N. E. 563.

The provisions of paragraph 16 are not repugnant to the insuring clause, which specifically states that the agreements as to indemnity and benefits are subject to the provisions, conditions, and limitations set forth in the policy.

2 Page, Contr. p. 1753; Wisconsin M. & F. Ins. Co. Bank v. Wilkin, 95 Wis. 111, 60 Am. St. Rep. 86, 69 N. W. 354; Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. v. Morrow, 74 C. C. A. 640, 143 Fed. 750; Bean v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 111 Tenn. 186, 78 S. W. 104. L.R.A.1917B.

Messrs. Robert N. Ogden and Robert N. Ogden, Jr., for respondent:

Defendants' brief does not contain all the material evidence received upon the trial, and its assignment of error that the decision of the court is not sustained by the evidence, cannot be considered.

Anderson v. Standard Acci. Ins. Co. 36 S. D. 390, 155 N. W. 1; Smith v. Pence, 33 S. D. 516, 146 N. W. 709; Gilfillan v. Schaller, 32 S. D. 638, 144 N. W. 133; Sweeney v. Hewett, 34 S. D. 302, 148 N. W. 503; Clark v. Mosier, 35 S. D. 54, 150 N. W. 475; Dewey v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 35 S. D. 279, 152 N. W. 104.

The clause in the policy is ambiguous.

1 C. J. 414, notes, 27-30; Fidelity & C. Co. v. Chambers, 93 Va. 138, 40 L.R.A. 432, 24 S. E. 896; Commercial Travelers' Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Fulton, 24 C. C. A. 654, 45 U. S. App. 578, 79 Fed. 423; Travelers' Preferred Acci. Asso. v. Stone, 50 Ill. App. 222; Wadsworth v. Canadian R. Acci. Ins. Co. Ann. Cas. 1913A, 546, note; McNamara v. Dakota F. & M. Ins. Co. 1 S. D. 342, 47 N. W. 288.

The clause is void for repugnancy.

Cumberland Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Giltinan, 48 N. J. L. 495, 57 Am. Rep. 586, 7 Atl. 424; Employer's Liability Assur. Corp. v. Morrow, 74 C. C. A. 640, 143 Fed. 750; Bean v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 111 Tenn. 186, 78 S. W. 104; Wisconsin M. & F. Ins. Co. Bank v. Wilkin, 95 Wis. 111, 60 Am. St. Rep. 86, 69 N. W. 354; Straus v. Wanamaker, 175 Pa. 213, 34 Atl. 648; Williams v. Hathaway, L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 544.

Polley, P. J. delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is brought for the recovery of $2,500 claimed to be due on an accident insurance policy issued by defendant to one J. F. Dustin, and in which this plaintiff is named as beneficiary. Said policy was issued on the 10th day of July, 1913, pursuant to a written application theretofore made by said Dustin. But two paragraphs, C and 16 of said policy, are of importance on this appeal. Said paragraphs read as follows:

"C. If, as a result of such injury, independently of all other causes, intervening, contributing, or concurring, the death of the member shall occur within ninety days from the date thereof, the association shall pay the sum of $5,000, which shall be in full and complete satisfaction of every claim against it, including any claim or disability."

"16. If the member shall carry any other accident insurance, of which he has not notified this association in writing at least fifteen days prior to the date of any accident on account of which any claim is made hereunder, this association shall only be liable for such proportionate amount of the benefits or indemnity herein promised as such benefits and indemnity bear to the total amount of benefits or indemnity promised in all accident policies or certificates, and for the return of such part of the last assessment paid by the member as shall exceed the pro rata of the premium for benefits paid."

These two paragraphs are found on different pages of the policy.

On the 16th day of September, 1913, said Dustin made application to the Chicago Business Men's Association, an accident insurance company of Chicago, Illinois, for additional accident insurance. This application was accepted, and on the 21st day of that month a policy was issued by said company to said Dustin, by the terms of which it was agreed that, in case of the death of the said Dustin from a bodily injury caused by accidental means, the said company would pay to the beneficiary named in said policy the sum of $5,000. The said Dustin did not give to defendant the notice provided for in paragraph 16 above quoted, and on the 27th day of September, 1913, within six days after the issuance of the policy by the Chicago Business Men's Association, the said Dustin lost his life as the result of an automobile accident. Plaintiff made the proper proof of death, and demanded payment of $5,000 under the provisions of paragraph C. of the policy issued by defendant. Defendant refused to pay the full amount of $5,000, claiming that, because of the issuance of the said second policy of accident insurance, and the failure on the part of the said decedent to give the notice provided for in paragraph 16 above quoted, it was liable for only $2,500. This amount defendant paid to plaintiff without prejudice to her right to prosecute this action for the remaining $2,500. The case was tried to the court upon an agreed statement of facts. Findings and judgment were in favor of plaintiff, and from such judgment and from an order overruling its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

It is contended by respondent that appellant's statement of the facts in the case should be disregarded by the court, for the reason that the same does not contain a sufficient amount of the material evidence to properly present the appeal. The portion of the evidence that respondent claims is material, but which appellant failed to print, is the application made to defendant by the decedent for the issuance of the policy involved. Appellant's brief contains a L.R.A.1917B.

statement that all the material evidence is therein set forth.

The rule which requires the appellant to set out in his brief all the material evidence does not mean all the evidence that may have been material on the trial, but only so much thereof as is necessary to properly present the matters that are sought to be reviewed by this court. Where this has been fairly done from the standpoint of the appellant, the statement will not be stricken from the record, nor be disregarded, though there may be other evidence that respondent, or even the court, believes should have been printed. In such cases the respondent may supply the omission by printing the omitted evidence in an additional statement of the case. Or the court may, if deemed necessary, order the original record sent up for examination. A statement will not be stricken from the record, nor be disregarded by the court, except on motion to that effect by the respondent, and then only when it is apparent that the appellant has, either intentionally or negligently, omitted to print portions of the evidence that are necessary to a proper understanding of the case. State v. Syverson, — S. D. —, 159 N. W. 40. No such disregard of the rule is shown in this case; neither was the proper motion made. And, moreover, respondent's brief contains enough of the substance of said application to supply appellant's omission and to answer all necessary purposes.

The purpose of the provisions in paragraph 16 is to give the insurer, in accident insurance, an opportunity to guard against, and prevent, overinsurance. Such provisions can be justified only on the ground that the element of moral hazard is involved in accident insurance,—that there is danger of liability on account of self-inflicted injuries if excessive or overinsurance is permitted. In fire insurance the element of moral hazard is constantly taken into consideration, and is recognized by law; and a provision of similar import to the one herein involved has been written into the standard fire insurance policy, and is a part of the fire insurance law of this state. But it is contended by the respondent that such a provision in an accident insurance policy is against the public policy of this state and for that reason void, and that it is so repugnant to the main purpose of the policy that the two provisions cannot stand together. It is also contended that the language used in paragraph 16 is so ambiguous, and its meaning, if it has any, is so obscure and misleading, as to render the entire paragraph void. The first clause of said paragraph reads as follows: "If the member shall carry any other accident insurance." It is argued by respondent that the verb "carry," being in the present tense, has reference only to insurance carried at that time; i. e., at the time the decedent made his application for the policy involved. In the said application, the applicant had been required to state whether he was then carrying any accident insurance, and respondent contends that the decedent might reasonably have inferred from the language used in the clause just quoted that the condition in question in paragraph 16 referred only to accident insurance carried by the decedent at that time. The clause in question is not susceptible of this interpretation. When read in connection with the succeeding modifying clause, "of which he has not notified this association at least fifteen days prior to the date of any accident on account of which any claim is made hereunder," it clearly indicates that it has reference to insurance in force at the time of the accident. True, as contended by respondent, if the clause had read, "if the member shall hereafter carry," or, "shall hereafter obtain, take out, or carry," any other accident insurance of which he has not notified this association at least fifteen days prior to the date of any accident on account of which any claim is made hereunder, there could have been no possible ground for respondent's contention. But we are satisfied that the language used is broad enough to include any other accident insurance, whether the same was in force at the time the application was made or was issued thereafter, and that the decedent could not have misunderstood or have been misled by the language used, and that the clause in question is not void for ambiguity.

This brings us to the second and more difficult question: Is the provision found in paragraph 16 so repugnant to the main covenant in the policy that both cannot stand? If it is, then the provision limiting appellant's liability found in said paragraph must give way to the principal agreement found in the first part of the policy. Where two clauses of a contract are in conflict with each other the latter must give way to the former. Wisconsin F. & M. Ins. Co. Bank v. Wilkin, 95 Wis. 111, 60 Am. St. Rep. 86, 89 N. W. 354, citing Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Hewett, 55 Wis. 96, 42 Am. Rep. 701, 12 N. W. 382; 2 Parsons, Contr. 513; Hartung v. Witte, 59 Wis. 285, 18 N. W. 175; 2 Bl. Comm. 380; 6 R. C. L. § 236. Again: "If the subsequent stipulation of the contract should restrict what was distinctly stated, and constitutes a principal inducement to the contract, it will be of no effect." Story, Contr. § 810.

And, quoting from Williams v. Hathal, L.R.A.1917B.

way, L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 544: "The distinction," says Jessel, M. R., 'has always been taken between a proviso which is repugnant to the covenant, and therefore void, and a proviso which can be incorporated into the covenant and be consistent with it.'"

Can the limitation under consideration in this case be incorporated into and be consistent with the main covenants? We think it can. Had the main covenant in the policy in question read: "In consideration of the stipulated premium, appellant agrees, subject only to the terms, conditions, and limitations contained herein and the application herein set out, to pay the beneficiary of the said Dustin, in case of his death from bodily injuries while this policy is in force, the sum of $5,000: Provided, that if said Dustin shall carry any other accident insurance of which he has not notified this association at least fifteen days prior to the date of any accident on account of which any claim is made hereunder, this association shall pay only such proportionate amount of said sum of $5,000 as said sum bears to the total amount of all accident insurance policies carried by the decedent,"—it would not be subject to the criticism made by respondent. The condition in the proviso is perfectly consistent with the main covenant in the contract. It merely provides that certain conduct or acts on the part of the insured will reduce the liability of the insurer. The proviso is not contrary to any law, nor is it immoral, and, unless it is contrary to public policy, it must be given effect.

As above stated, the purpose of the proviso contained in paragraph 16 is to enable the insurer to guard against and prevent excessive accident insurance. Under the terms of the provision, the issuance of additional insurance without the giving of the notice therein provided for automatically reduces the amount of the insurance. If the notice is given, the liability is not affected by the additional insurance unless the company chooses to exercise its option to return the unearned premium and cancel the policy. The only reason that is suggested why a policy shall be canceled under these circumstances is the danger of liability on account of self-inflicted injuries where persons have been allowed to carry excessive accident insurance. In other words, that the element of moral hazard is involved in accident insurance. The provision guarding against moral hazard in standard fire insurance policies has been upheld by this court (Hronish v. Home Ins. Co. 33 S. D. 428, 145 N. W. 588), and is, we believe, upheld by courts in general. While it is true that the element of moral hazard is not involved in accident insurance to the same extent as in fire insurance, it cannot be denied that there is some additional risk on account of self-inflicted injuries in case of accident insurance, and that the element of moral hazard does exist. No reason has been shown why the parties to an accident insurance policy may not guard against this risk by contract; and if the contract has been fairly entered into, it ought to be enforced.

The case involves no question of public policy. It is purely a question of the right to enter into the agreement contained in the policy. The decedent failed to give the notice provided for in the policy, and defendant's liability was reduced as therein provided.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

Annotation—Provision in accident policy for prorating in case of other insurance.

While provisions for prorating in case of other insurance are common in fire insurance policies, a provision of this character in an accident policy seems to be a new one, and no direct authority dealing with such a provision has been found.

Provisions of this kind are held to be valid in fire policies, and the conclusion reached in DUSTIN v. INTERSTATE BUSINESS MEN'S ACCI. ASSO. ante, 319, that the provision for prorating there involved was not against public policy, seems sound; as does also the decision that the provision for prorating was not so repugnant to the general provision making the insurer liable to a specified amount in case of accident that it could not be given effect. And under the provisions of the policy there seems to be no question as to the correctness of the further conclusion, that the provision for apportionment was applicable to other accident insurance taken out during the life of the policy, although it was taken out after the policy was obtained.

In cases of fire insurance the right to prorate, as a rule, exists only as to policies which insure the same property, the same interest, against the same risk, and in favor of the same party.

The policy in DUSTIN v. INTERSTATE BUSINESS MEN'S ACCI. ASSO. provided for prorating if the insured carried "any other accident insurance" of which he had not notified the insurer within fifteen days prior to the date of any accident.

It will be noticed that the other insurance contemplated was expressly stated to be accident insurance, and it is clear that the insurer could not successfully claim a proportionate liability on account of policies of life insurance carried by the insured. If, however, the provision for prorating had not specifically designated accident insurance, but had been general, the question might have arisen whether the amount of life insurance carried by the deceased insured should not also have been taken into consideration for the purpose of prorating.

The purpose of provisions of this kind, in accident policies as in fire policies, is to enable the insurer to guard against overinsurance; and it is questionable, at least, whether it would not be material for accident insurers in determining the question of overinsurance to take into consideration policies on the insured's life as well as accident policies.

In cases of injuries not proving fatal, no right of recovery would of course ordinarily accrue under the life policies; but in the event of accidents resulting in death, liability would result on both the accident and life policies.

J. T. W.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

E. C. WALLIN et al., Appts.,
v.

JOHNSON CITY LUMBER & MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

(— Tenn. —, 188 S. W. 577.)

Corporations — dividends — held in treasury — vested right.

1. A dividend on stock of a corporation L.R.A.1917B.

belongs to the holder of the stock at the time it is declared, and not at the time it becomes payable, although the resolution declaring it provides that it is to be held in the treasury and paid out at a later date, on the order of the directors.

For other cases, see Corporations, V. 6, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — For right to dividends on transfer of stock, see annotation following this case, post, 326.

Same — recovery — reasonable time.

2. A dividend declared by the directors of a corporation, to be held in the treasury and paid out at a later day, on the order of the directors, may be recovered by the stockholders after the lapse of a reasonable time.

For other cases, see Corporations, V. c, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(September 23, 1916.)

A PPEAL by complainants from a judgment of the Chancery Court for Washington County sustaining a demurrer to a complaint filed to recover a dividend alleged to have been declared on the capital stock of the defendant corporation. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. Stanley Barlow, for appellants: The dividend declared by defendant belonged to complainants, and not to their respective transferees, and where it was held in the treasury of the company, to be paid out at a later date upon the order of the board of directors, it was payable "within a reasonable time."

Clephane, Business Corp. 2d ed. § 413; Cook Corp. §§ 539, 541-543 & notes; 2 Beach, Priv. Corp. §§ 598, 599; Clark, Corp. 2d ed. pp. 336-343; 2 Cumming, Cas. Priv. Corp. 203; 7 R. C. L. §§ 260, 267; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 162, 163, 450, 451; 7 Thomp. Corp. §§ 2172, 2173, 2175; 8 Thomp. Corp. § 532; 10 Cyc. 546, 556, 557; Wheeler v. Northwestern Sleigh Co. 39 Fed. 347; Dow v. Gould & C. Silver Min. Co. 31 Cal. 630; Bright v. Lord, 1 Willson, Super. Ct. (Ind.) 523; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Papot, 59 Ga. 342; Chinn v. Courtney, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 422; Goodwin v. Hardy, 57 Me. 143, 99 Am. Dec. 758; Richardson v. Richardson, 75 Me. 570, 46 Am. Rep. 428; Houser v. Richardson, 90 Mo. App. 134; Jones v. Terre Haute & R. R. Co. 17 How. Pr. 529; King v. Follett, 3 Vt. 385; Hopper v. Sage, 112 N. Y. 530, 8 Am. St. Rep. 771. 20 N. E. 350; Carpenter v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 5 Abb. Pr. 277; Clapp v. Astor, 2 Edw. Ch. 379; Beers v. Bridgeport Spring Co. 42 Conn. 17; Keppel v. Petersburg R. Co. Chase, Dec. 167, Fed. Cas. No. 7,722; Bright v. Lord, 51 Ind. 272, 19 Am. Rep. 732; Boardman v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 157; Jermain v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 91 N. Y. 483; Hill v. Newich-awanick Co. 8 Hun, 459, 71 N. Y. 593; King v. Paterson & H. R. Co. 29 N. J. L. 82; West Chester & P. R. Co. v. Jackson, 77 Pa. 321; Le Roy v. Globe Ins. Co. 2 Edw. Ch. 657; Re Kernochan, 104 N. Y. 618, 11 N. E. 150; De Gendre v. Kent, L. R. 4 Eq. 283, 16 L. T. N. S. 694; Rose v. Barclay, 45 L.R.A. 392, and note, 191 Pa. 594, 43 Atl. 385; Southwestern R. Co. v. Papot, 67 Ga. L.R.A.1917B.

675; Waterman v. Alden, 42 Ill. App. 294; Baltimore City Pass R. Co. v. Sewell, 35 Md. 238, 6 Am. Rep. 402; Abercrombie v. Riddle, 3 Md. Ch. 320; Brundage v. Brundage, 65 Barb. 397; McGill v. Holmes, 23 Misc. 524, 52 N. Y. Supp. 840; Union Screw Co. v. American Screw Co. 13 R. I. 673, 11 R. I. 569; Spear v. Hart, 3 Robt. 420; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Tennessee, 153 U. S. 486, 38 L. ed. 793, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 968; Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 76, 18 Am. Rep. 156; Phinizy v. Murray, 83 Ga. 747, 6 L.R.A. 426, 20 Am. St. Rep. 342, 10 S. E. 358; Hite v. Hite, 93 Ky. 267, 19 L.R.A. 173, 40 Am. St. Rep. 189, 20 S. W. 778; Gemmell v. Davis, 75 Md. 546, 32 Am. St. Rep. 412, 23 Atl. 1032; Clark v. Campbell, 23 Utah. 569, 54 L.R.A. 508, 90 Am. St. Rep. 716, 65 Pac. 496; Ex parte Rutledge, 14 Am. Dec. 697, note; Rose v. Barclay, 45 L.R.A. 392, note; Kane v. Bloodgood, 7 Johns. Ch. 90, 11 Am. Dec. 417; Ehle v. Chittenango Bank, 24 N. Y. 548; Re London Indiarubber Co. L. R. 5 Eq. 525, 37 L. J. Ch. N. S. 235, 18 L. T. N. S. 530, 16 Week. Rep. 334; Stevens v. South Devon R. Co. 9 Hare, 312, 68 Eng. Reprint, 524, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 816; Henry v. Great Northern R. Co. 1 De G. & J. 605, 44 Eng. Reprint, 858, 3 Jur. N. S. 1117; Taft v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co. 8 R. I. 310, 5 Am. Rep. 575; Gordon v. Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. 81 Va. 621; State v. Bank of Commerce, 95 Tenn. 221, 31 S. W. 993; Pritchitt v. Nashville Trust Co. 96 Tenn. 473, 33 L.R.A. 856, 36 S. W. 1064; Tubb v. Fowler, 118 Tenn. 325, 99 S. W. 988; Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 34 L. ed. 525, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1057; Phelps v. Farmers & M. Bank, 26 Conn. 269; American Nat. Bank v. Nashville Warehouse & Elevator Co. — Tenn. —, 36 S. W. 960.

Mr. S. E. Miller also for appellants.

Messrs. Thad A. Cox and Ben H. Taylor, for appellee:

The question as to whether or not a dividend shall be declared for the stockholders in a corporation, even where there are profits, is a question that rests within the sound discretion of the board of directors of such corporation, and they will be controlled in the exercise of this discretion at the suit of stockholders only where they abuse it and act fraudulently, oppressively, or unreasonably.

Clark, Corp. p. 329; Cook, Corp. § 545; 8 Thomp. Corp. § 5294.

No dividend was declared.

Clark, Corp. p. 330; 2 Thomp. Corp. § 2126; State v. Bank of Commerce, 95 Tenn. 221, 31 S. W. 993.

There was no declaration in the sense of segregating the property from the property of the corporation, and there was no order to pay it, either on demand or at a fixed time; but it was to be paid on the order of the board of directors, which order has never yet been made.

Tubb v. Fowler, 118 Tenn. 386, 99 S. W. 988; Clark v. Campbell, 23 Utah, 569, 54 L.R.A. 511, 65 Pac. 496.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case, standing on bill and demurrer, involves the right of complainants. Wallin and others, to recover of the defendant corporation portions of a dividend claimed to have been declared.

The bill alleges that in January, 1916, when complainants were the owners of the shares of stock on which they seek to pro-rate, at a regular annual meeting of the board of directors a dividend was declared and set aside to the stockholders holding stock at that time, of $2,600, or 17.8 per cent; that said dividend was declared and set apart in the treasury of said company, same to be held in the treasury and paid out at a later date on the order of the board of directors of said company. Judgments for the amounts of the respective dividend sums were sought to be recovered.

The demurrer set forth as defenses: (a) That there was no allegation in the bill of complaint that the directors had ordered the payment of the dividend out of the treasury; therefore, that the sums sued for were not due as collectable debts. (b) That it appeared from the recitals of the bill that some of complainants had sold and transferred their shares at a time when the payment of the dividend yet depended upon the condition or contingency that the directors should order same to be made; that, therefore, the right to any dividend that may be declared is in the transferees, and not complainants.

The rule undoubtedly is that a dividend on particular shares belongs to him who owns the shares on the date of the declaration of the dividend, as between the vendor and the vendee of the shares; and this is true notwithstanding the time of payment to stockholders may be postponed to a date subsequent to the transfer.

The declaration of the dividend has the effect to segregate the earnings, to the amount of the dividend, from the corporation's assets, or general mass of property which is represented by the capital stock, and to appropriate the same to the then stockholders. The corporation thereafter holds the dividend for the stockholders, who become entitled to recover the same of the corporation, as debtor, when the time for payment, fixed by the resolution or declaration or by the law, is reached. Wheeler v. Northwestern Sleigh Co. (C. C.) 39 Fed. L.R.A. 1917B.

347; Hopper v. Sage, 112 N. Y. 530, 8 Am. St. Rep. 771, 20 N. E. 350; Bright v. Lord, 51 Ind. 272, 19 Am. Rep. 732; 7 R. C. L. p. 283, §§ 260 et seq.

It is erroneously contended by the defendant corporation that in order to such effectiveness the "declaration of a dividend" must embody as a part of it an express order for payment thereof to the stockholders. The setting aside or segregation may precede the time of payment, postponed for the convenience of the company, or the order for actual payment. The declaration thus operating to segregate, leaves the dividend dissociated from the capital stock and no longer to pass as an incident to the stock certificates when transferred. The law at that time implies a promise on the part of the corporation to pay to the then stockholders their proportionate amounts as dividends.

The main insistence of the defendant corporation is that the payment of the dividend of $2,600 was conditioned on the board of directors' later order, in that it was to be "paid out at a later date on the order of the board of directors," and that until such order be made the suit is premature.

At least two reported cases have dealt with this phase of the suit, and, as we believe, properly.

In Beers v. Bridgeport Spring Co. 42 Conn. 17, the resolution of the directors was to declare a dividend of 26 per cent; the amount to be placed, pro rata, to the credit, on the books of the company, of each stockholder, and made payable, without interest, at such time as may by the directors be ordered. It was held in favor of the stockholder: "The proviso as to the time of payment does not absolve the company from all obligation to him; there remain all the essential elements of a debt, certain in amount, and certain to be paid upon a day not yet appointed, but which it is the duty of the debtor at some time to name. The legal effect of the vote is that the debt is to be paid within a reasonable time."

In Northwestern Marble & Tile Co. v. Carlson, 116 Minn. 438, 133 N. W. 1014, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 552, the resolution was, in substance, that a dividend of 6 per cent be declared on the common stock, payable at such time as the finances of the company would, in the judgment of the board of directors, warrant. The court said:

"The board of directors by the resolution declared a dividend, and its action was amply justified by the surplus and undivided profits of the corporation. No further action of the board was necessary to make the segregation of the amount of the dividend of each stockholder from the common mass of the corporate property. There was no qualification of the declaration of the dividend, and its existence as a debt against the corporation was not dependent upon any further action of the board, but the debt was payable at such time as the finances of the corporation would, in the judgment of the board of directors, warrant.

"This provision as to the time of payment of the dividend must be construed in connection with the fact that a dividend had been rightfully declared and notice thereof given to the stockholders at their annual meeting. So construing the provision, we hold that the time of payment of the dividend was not a matter depending upon the discretionary future action of the board, but that it gave to the board a reasonable time in which to make the necessary arrangements for its payment; that is, the dividend was payable within a reasonable time."

The chancellor, therefore, was in error in holding that the dividend so declared did not belong to the complainants, but to their respective transferees.

The bill of complaint proceeds upon the theory that the dividend sums were payable on demand, and does not set forth on its face facts showing that the period from January, the dividend declaration date, to May 15, 1916, when this suit was brought, was not such a reasonable time; and we think justice requires that the case be remanded to the chancery court for an answer and issue, in respect to prematurity, if the defendant may be advised to make further defense to the effect that, in the circumstances, a reasonable time had not elapsed.

Reversed and remanded.

Annotation—Right to dividends on transfer of stock.

The earlier cases on this question are discussed in the note to Rose v. Barclay, 45 L.R.A. 392.<sup>1</sup>

The general rule announced in the earlier note, that dividends belong to the one who owns the stock at the time the dividends are declared, in the absence of special circumstances, has been applied in cases decided since the date of that note.<sup>2</sup>

A contrary rule was announced in North Carolina.<sup>3</sup> In a subsequent case<sup>4</sup> the court recognizes that the earlier case is against the weight of authority, but states that it was not necessary to question it, since there were special circumstances in the case at bar which showed an intention that the dividends were to be the property of the vendor. Upon rehearing, however, the special circumstances were held not to cover a stock dividend included in the declaration, and

<sup>1</sup> The right as between life tenant and remainderman in dividends or distribution by corporations is discussed in the notes to Holbrook v. Holbrook, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 768; Newport Trust Co. v. Van Rensselaer, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 563; Re Osborne, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510; and Re Heaton, L.R.A.1916D, 211.

<sup>2</sup> Cates v. Consolidated Realty Co. (1914) 25 Cal. App. 531, 144 Pac. 301; Redhead v. Iowa Nat. Bank (1905) 127 Iowa, 572, 103 N. W. 796; Price v. Morning Star Min. Co. (1900) 83 Mo. App. 470; Houser v. Richardson (1901) 90 Mo. App. 134; Tepfer v. Ideal Gas & Electrical Fixture Co. (1908) 58 Misc. 396, 109 N. Y. Supp. 664.

It has been stated that an attachment upon corporate stock which becomes a lien prior to the declaration of dividends thereon impounds the dividends equally with the stock itself, so that a purchaser at an execution sale subsequently had upon a judgment obtained the dividends. Cates v. Consolidated Realty Co. (Cal.) supra. The question in this case, however, was whether an assignee of such purchaser obtained title to the dividends,—a question that was answered in the negative.

A recovery of dividends of the corporation was denied a transferee of shares who L.R.A.1917B.

became such subsequent to the declaration of the dividends, and apparently subsequent to the payment thereof, where they were paid to a third person in accordance with an agreement between him and the promoters of the corporation, which operated as an appropriation and assignment of their interest in the net earnings of the company to the redemption of their indebtedness to such third person. Farquhar v. Canada-Atlantic & Plant S. S. Co. (1912) 212 Mass. 278, 98 N. E. 1036. The dividends seem to have been assigned to the plaintiff in addition to his being a transferee of the stock.

<sup>3</sup> Burroughs v. North Carolina R. Co. (1872) 67 N. C. 376, 12 Am. Rep. 611, discussed in the earlier note.

<sup>4</sup> Lancaster Trust Co. v. Mason (1909) 151 N. C. 264, 65 S. E. 1015. The special circumstances relied upon in this case consisted of a statement in the contract of sale that the "January dividend" was to remain the property of the vendor; this statement was held to cover a semiannual dividend, an extra dividend, and an extra stock dividend, all payable to the stockholders of record in January. The sale was made after dividends had been declared, but before they were payable. Upon rehearing, this was modified and held to exclude the stock this was allowed the purchaser, although declared before sale.<sup>5</sup>

In the cases which apply the majority rule, it is accordingly held that dividends which have been declared prior to a sale belong to the vendor, although the sale is made before the dividends are paid,<sup>6</sup> or even before the making of an order for payment by the directors, who have declared the dividend, but have ordered it held in the treasury, to be paid out at a later date, on the order of the board of directors.<sup>7</sup> The same is true of an assignment.<sup>8</sup> The foregoing rules have been held to apply to a stock dividend.<sup>9</sup> It has been held that a dividend declared while stock indorsed in blank is in the possession of an organizer or intermediary engaged in forming a combination of corporations belongs to the vendor, and not to the organizer.<sup>10</sup> Cash dividends which have been declared become a personal debt from the corporation to the stockholder. The declaration of the dividends confers a right upon the stockholder which thereafter remains separate from the stock.<sup>11</sup> dividend, but to include the regular and extra cash dividend.

Dividends declared after the sale and transfer of title pass to the purchaser.<sup>12</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Lancaster Trust Co. v. Mason (1910) 152 N. C. 660, 136 Am. St. Rep. 851, 68 S. E. 235. Although declared before the sale, it was to be paid to stockholders of record of a future date, upon which date the purchasers were record stockholders. In this case the written contract of sale expressly excluded the "January dividend." The word "dividend" was held to signify dividends payable in money. The certificate of shares of stock is stated to denote the interest of each stockholder, which consists in the right to his proportionate share of the profits when declared as dividends and to a like proportion upon its dissolution, after its debts are paid. "A cash dividend depletes the treasury of the corporation and detracts from its assets, but a stock dividend neither takes from nor adds to the corporate wealth; the interest of each stockholder remains the same when he receives his stock dividend as it was before." Further, it is stated to have been admitted that the vendor did not know of any stock dividend. From this the court concludes that "it is manifest that it intended to sell and transfer to the defendant the entire interest in the corporate property represented by the four shares of stock it held prior to any increase in the capital stock."

See Bowers v. Post (1913) 209 Fed. 660, infra.

<sup>6</sup> Redhead v. Iowa Nat. Bank (1905) 127 Iowa, 572, 103 N. W. 796, holding that one to whom the vendor had assigned this right to dividends might recover of the corporation.

Price v. Morning Star Min. Co. (1900) 83 Mo. App. 470, holding that a creditor of the vendor, to whom the vendor had assigned his right to dividends, to accrue upon the declaration of the dividends, became entitled thereto in preference to a subsequent purchaser from the vendor, to whom the right to said unpaid dividends had also been assigned.

See Lancaster Trust Co. v. Mason (1909) 151 N. C. 264, 65 S. E. 1015, supra.

<sup>7</sup> WALLIN v. JOHNSON CITY LUMBER & MFG. Co. ante, 323.

<sup>8</sup> Cates v. Consolidated Realty Co. (1914) L.R.A.1917B.

25 Cal. App. 531, 144 Pac. 301, holding that an assignee of purchasers of corporate stock at execution sale, who, by virtue of their purchase, were entitled to certain dividends which had been declared thereon, could not recover the dividends under his assignment by means of which the purchasers at the execution sale transferred to him "all their right, title, and interest in and to said 34 shares of the stock above described, and all thereof."

<sup>9</sup> Bowers v. Post (Fed.) supra. It was accordingly held in this case that where the corporation provided that a certain amount of the increase in capital stock should be sold by the corporation to employees, and the proceeds shall belong to and be distributed to the holders of the original capital stock, sums so received belonged to the holders of the stock, although they subsequently parted with their stock.

But see Lancaster Trust Co. v. Mason (1910) 152 N. C. 660, 136 Am. St. Rep. 851, 68 S. E. 235, supra.

<sup>10</sup> Rowe v. White (1906) 112 App. Div. 688, 98 N. Y. Supp. 729, affirmed in (1907) 189 N. Y. 523, 82 N. E. 1132. The organizer had taken an option from the vendor to convey his stock, and subsequently accepted the option, and took an assignment of the certificates in blank. A directors' meeting of the old company was then held and the dividends declared. The organizer was held not to have exercised the option as a purchaser, but as an agent of the new combination; accordingly, he was held not entitled to the dividends.

<sup>11</sup> Cates v. Consolidated Realty Co. (Cal.) supra; Price v. Morning Star Min. Co. (Mo.) supra; Steel v. Island Mill Co. (1906) 47 Or. 293, 88 Pac. 783.

<sup>12</sup> Price v. Morning Star Min. Co. (Mo.) supra, holding that a creditor of the stockholder, to whom the stockholder had assigned his right to future dividends, acquired no right to the dividends as against one to whom the stockholder had sold his stock prior to the declaration of the dividends. The suit in this case was brought by a subsequent purchaser from the first purchaser, to whom the stock had been sold and the right to unpaid dividends assigned.

A vendee was allowed to recover divi-

This is true although the transfer of shares has not been recorded.<sup>13</sup>

In an English case dividends declared some time after the death of the owner of the shares, which were bequeathed by him to trustees, the income to arise therefrom to be paid to life tenants, were apportioned between the testator's estate and the life tenants under the English Apportionment Act of 1870, which made such dividends apportionable unless, pursuant to § 7, it is "expressly stipulated that no apportionment shall take place."<sup>14</sup> A provision in the company's articles that "every dividend whether arising from past or current profits shall for all purposes be deemed to accrue and fall due upon the day on which it is declared and not before" is not an express stipulation against apportionment, nor is another provision in the company's articles that "every dividend shall belong and be paid (subject to the company's lien) to those members who shall be on the register at the date when every such dividend is declared, notwithstanding any subsequent transfer or transmission of shares" an express stipulation against apportionment.<sup>14</sup>

A pledgee is entitled to dividends declared on the stock while in his possession as pledgee,<sup>15</sup> unless there is an agreement to the contrary.<sup>16</sup> This is true notwithstanding the stock certificate on its face states that the shares are transferable only on the books of the company, and no such transfer has been made.<sup>17</sup> The dividends paid to a pledgee must be accounted for by him upon the redemption of the pledge.<sup>18</sup> All persons having notice of the pledge are affected by the right of the pledgee to the dividend.<sup>19</sup>

Where the dividends belong to the dends in Hartley v. Pioneer Iron Works (1905) 181 N. Y. 73, 73 N. E. 576. The facts are not clearly stated the sale was made by the corporation, and the right of the vendee to the dividends recognized by it for a time. Subsequently the right was denied.

<sup>13</sup> Houser v. Richardson (1901) 90 Mo. App. 134; Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Mosher (1901) 63 Neb. 130, 88 N. W. 552, on rehearing (1903) 68 Neb. 713, 94 N. W. 1003, 100 N. W. 133; Tepfer v. Ideal Gas & Electrical Fixtures Co. (1908) 58 Misc. 396, 109 N. Y. Supp. 664; Corgan v. George F. Lee Coal Co. (1907) 218 Pa. 386, 120 Am. St. Rep. 891, 67 Atl. 655, 11 Ann. Cas. 838 (obiter).

<sup>14</sup> Re Oppenheimer [1907] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 399, 76 L. J. Ch. N. S. 287, 96 L. T. N. S. 631, 14 Manson, 139.

<sup>15</sup> Brady v. Irby (1912) 101 Ark. 573, 142 S. W. 1124, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1054 (stock dividends); Hunt v. Laconia & L. Street R. Co. (1896) 68 N. H. 561, 39 Atl. 437; White River Sav. Bank v. Capital Sav. Bank & T. Co. (1904) 77 Vt. 123, 107 Am. St. Rep. 754, 59 Atl. 197; Booth v. Consolidated Fruit Jar Co. (1909) 62 Misc. 252, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1000; National Bank v. Equitable Trust Co. (1915) 142 C. C. A. 158, 227 Fed. 526.

Meredith Village Sav. Bank v. Marshall (1895) 68 N. H. 417, 44 Atl. 526, holding that the pledgee is entitled to recover the dividends from the pledgeor, to whom the corporation has paid them.

It is stated in McCrea v. Yule (1902) 68 N. J. L. 465, 53 Atl. 210, that a pledgee of personal property assigned as collateral security has the right to collect the interest, dividends, and income accruing on the collateral assigned, accounting to the pledgeor upon the redemption of the pledge. It is not clear, however, that corporate stock and dividends were involved in this case.

This rule is recognized in Maxwell v. L.R.A. 1917B.

National Bank (1904) 70 S. E. 532, 50 S. E. 195, 3 Ann. Cas. 723; but it is there held that an assignee of the pledgee owes the pledgeor no duty to collect the dividends and thus prevent the pledgee from receiving them, so as to make the assignee liable to the pledgeor for dividends received by the pledgee.

<sup>16</sup> Fourth Nat. Bank v. Manchester Real Estate & Mfg. Co. (1915) 77 N. H. 481, 93 Atl. 661. The general proposition that the pledgee was entitled to recover of the corporation a dividend not yet paid seems not to have been disputed in this case, the objection to the recovery being that the pledgeor had previously assigned the right to all dividends, due or thereafter to become due, and waiver was urged against the pledgee. The assignment of future dividends was held invalid as against the pledgee, and there was held to be no waiver; consequently, his right to recover was sustained.

<sup>17</sup> Steel v. Island Mill Co. (1906) 47 Or. 293, 83 Pac. 783.

<sup>18</sup> Reid v. Caldwell (1904) 120 Ga. 718, 48 S. E. 191; Booth v. Consolidated Fruit Jar Co. (1909) 62 Misc. 252, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1000. See McCrea v. Yule (N. J.) supra.

In Whitney v. Whitney Bros. Co. (1913) 152 Wis. 453, 140 N. W. 35, the pledgees had, upon a dividend being declared, payable in cash or in stock, as each shareholder might elect, elected to take the stock dividend, and the additional shares of stock were accordingly issued to them. In an action to redeem, it was held that the pledgeor was bound by this election of the pledgees; that he could not treat the issue of the stock dividend to the pledgees as a conversion.

<sup>19</sup> National Bank v. Equitable Trust Co. (1915) 142 C. C. A. 158, 227 Fed. 526.

Brady v. Irby (1912) 101 Ark. 573, 142 S. W. 1124, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1054, sustain-vendor within the rules stated above, the purchaser has not, of course, any right against the corporation so far as such dividends are concerned. But in the case of a dividend declared after a sale or transfer, the vendee, or, in case of a pledge, the pledgee, has the right to collect the dividend of the corporation.<sup>20</sup> The fact that the amount of the dividend was passed to the credit of the stockholder before notice does not change this; such an act does not amount to payment.<sup>21</sup> A recovery may be had of the corporation although it has paid the dividends to the transferrer, if such payment has been made after notice of the transfer.<sup>22</sup>

If, however, the corporation has paid the dividends to the stockholder of record before notice of the transfer, it is not liable to the transferee.<sup>23</sup> A corporation which thus pays the dividends to a stockholder of record is protected under a statutory provision that the unrecorded transfer of a stock certificate does not affect the right of the corporation to pay dividends to the stockholder of record, although the pledgeor was president of the corporation; the corporation not being chargeable with the knowledge of its president, since he was adversely interested.<sup>24</sup>

In case of options and sales for future delivery, the right to dividends, in the absence of indications of a contrary intention, depends upon the question at what time, with respect to declaration of the dividend, the title passes; all dividends declared before the passing of the title belong to the seller, while those after that event belong to the purchaser.<sup>25</sup> Thus, under a writing entitled "escrow," instructing a depository to deliver stock deposited with the writing to a third person in case he should pay therefor on or before a certain date, no title is held to pass to the vendee until payment is made, so as to entitle him to dividends on the stock, declared between the time of deposit and of payment.<sup>26</sup>

ing an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover certain stock dividends issued to one other than the pledgee.

<sup>20</sup> Reid v. Caldwell (1904) 120 Ga. 718, 48 S. E. 191; Merchants' & M. Bank v. Boyd Co. (1915) 143 Ga. 755, 85 S. E. 914 (dividends upon liquidation of corporation); Fourth Nat. Bank v. Manchester Real Estate & Mfg. Co. (N. H.), and Steel v. Island Mill Co. (Or.) supra.

<sup>21</sup> Steel v. Island Mill Co. (Or.) supra, sustaining an action by an assignee of the pledgee against the corporation for the dividends.

<sup>22</sup> Hunt v. Laconia & L. Street R. Co. (1896) 68 N. H. 561, 39 Atl. 437.

It has been held that in the case of a liquidation dividend, a pledgee of the stock may recover of the corporation although it has paid the same to the stockholder of record, before notice of the assignment; but the court expressly limits this to dividends that amount to a distribution of the corporate stock itself, and states that it would not apply to dividends that do not partake of a transfer of the corpus of the shares. Bath Sav. Inst. v. Sagadahoc Nat. Bank (1897) 89 Me. 500, 36 Atl. 996.

<sup>23</sup> Merchants' & M. Bank v. Boyd Co. (1915) 143 Ga. 755, 85 S. E. 914 (dividends paid in liquidation of corporation, before notice of pledge).

<sup>24</sup> Fourth Nat. Bank v. Manchester Real Estate & Mfg. Co. (1915) 77 N. H. 481, 93 Atl. 661.

<sup>25</sup> See earlier note in 45 L.R.A. 394.

<sup>26</sup> Clark v. Campbell (1901) 23 Utah, 569, 54 L.R.A. 508, 90 Am. St. Rep. 718, 65 Pac. 496. W. A. E.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 1.)

GEORGE JACOBS and Wife, Appts.,
v.

SEATTLE, Resp't.

(— Wash. —, 160 Pac. 299.)

Appeal — sufficiency of record — omission of admissions.

1. It is not ground for dismissal of an appeal from a judgment sustaining a de-murrer to the complaint that the record does not contain material admissions made in counsel's opening statement, if the preliminary proceedings were merged in the final attack by demurrer, and the record is sufficient for a review of the ruling thereon. For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VI. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. B.

Eminent domain — injury by garbage incinerator — liability.

2. The establishment and operation by a municipal corporation of a garbage incinerator in such a manner as to depreciate

Note. — The effect of legislative authority upon liability for private nuisance is discussed at length in the note to Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Lillyet, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 49; and see also later cases in this series, referred to in the footnote to Rich-L.R.A.1917B.

ards v. Washington Terminal Co. L.R.A. 1915A, 887. The concrete aspect presented by this question in its relation to pollution by municipal sewage is discussed in the notes to Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury, 48 L.R.A. 691; Georgetown v. Com. 61 the value of neighboring property and menace the health of its owner and his family is within a constitutional provision requiring compensation for property taken or damaged for public use, even though, being authorized by the legislature, it cannot, under the statute, be declared a nuisance.

For other cases, see Eminent Domain, III. c, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Action — form — injury to property.

3. An action for compensation as for a taking, and not one for injury for the maintenance of a nuisance, is the proper remedy for the operation under statutory authority of a garbage incinerator so as to diminish the value of adjoining property and menace the health of its owner and his family, where the statute provides that nothing done under statutory authority can be deemed a nuisance.

For other cases, see Action or Suit, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 11, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County sustaining a demurrer to a complaint brought to recover damages for injury to their property by reason of the construction and operation, on an adjoining lot, of a garbage incinerator. Reversed in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Jay O. Allen, for appellants:

Defendant is liable to plaintiffs for damages to their property by the construction and operation of the garbage incinerator.

Louisville v. Hehemann, 161 Ky. 523, L.R.A.1915C, 747, 171 S. W. 165; McLaughlin v. Hope, 107 Ark. 442, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 137, 155 S. W. 910; Hines v. Rocky Mount, 162 N. C. 409, L.R.A.1915C, 751, 78 S. E. 510, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 132; Richards v. Washington Terminal Co. 233 U. S. 546, 58 L. ed. 1088, L.R.A.1915A, 887, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Kobbe v. New Brighton, 20 Misc. 477, 45 N. Y. Supp. 777; Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 177, 20 L. ed. 560; Thurston v. St. Joseph, 51 Mo. 510, 11 Am. Rep. 463; Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101

N. Y. 136, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321; Sammons v. Gloversville, 175 N. Y. 346, 67 N. E. 622; Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury, 72 Conn. 531, 48 L.R.A. 691, 77 Am. St. Rep. 335, 45 Atl. 154; Atty. Gen. ex rel. Wyoming Twp. v. Grand Rapids (Bird ex rel. Emmons v. Grand Rapids) 175 Mich. 503, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 473, 141 N. W. 890, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 968; Moser v. Burlington, 162 N. C. 141, 78 S. E. 74; Donnell v. Greensboro, 164 N. C. 330, 80 S. E. 377; Parish v. Yorkville, 96 S. C. 24, L.R.A. 1915A, 282, 79 S. E. 635; Birmingham v. Land, 137 Ala. 538, 34 So. 613; Thompson v. Winona, 96 Miss. 591, 51 So. 129, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 449; Markwardt v. Guthrie, 18 Okla. 32, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1150, 90 Pac. 26, 11 Ann. Cas. 581; Ft. Worth v. Crawford, 74 Tex. 404, 15 Am. St. Rep. 840, 12 S. W. 52; Stephenville v. Bower, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 384, 68 S. W. 833; Haskell v. Webb, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 140 S. W. 127; New Albany v. Slider, 21 Ind. App. 392, 52 N. E. 626; Brayton v. Fall River, 113 Mass. 218, 18 Am. Rep. 470; Franklin Wharf Co. v. Portland, 67 Me. 46, 24 Am. Rep. 1; Bell v. Savannah, 139 Ga. 298, 77 S. E. 165; Waycross v. Houk, 113 Ga. 964, 39 S. E. 577; Massengale v. Atlanta, 113 Ga. 966, 39 S. E. 578; Whitten v. Haverhill, 204 Mass. 95, 90 N. E. 409; Nevins v. Fitchburg, 174 Mass. 545, 47 L.R.A. 312, 55 N. E. 321; Johnston v. District of Columbia, 118 U. S. 19, 30 L. ed. 75, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 923; Hines v. Nevada, 150 Iowa, 620, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 797, 130 N. W. 181; Georgetown v. Kelly, — Ky. —, 123 S. W. 261; Henderson v. Robinson, 152 Ky. 245, 153 S. W. 224; Henderson v. Herron, 152 Ky. 341, 153 S. W. 440; Batchner v. Staples, 120 Minn. 86, 139 N. W. 140; Kellogg v. Kirksville, 132 Mo. App. 519, 112 S. W. 296, subsequent appeal in 149 Mo. App. 1, 129 S. W. 57; Little v. Lenoir, 151 N. C. 415, 66 S. E. 337; Colbert v. Ardmore, 31 Okla. 537, 122 Pac. 508.

Messrs. James E. Bradford and William B. Allison for respondent.

L.R.A. 694; State v. Concordia, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1050; and McLaughlin v. Hope, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 137; and see later cases, Joyce v. Janesville, L.R.A.1916D, 426, and Hampton v. Watson, L.R.A.1916F, 180.

It will be observed that while the court in JACOBS v. SEATTLE, ante, 329, holds that an incinerator cannot be regarded as a nuisance, in view of the statute authorizing its establishment and maintenance, it does not follow that the property owner is without recourse. Upon the contrary, his right to compensation as for a taking of the property is expressly affirmed. The case, therefore, lends no support to the view that a municipality may, with immunity from liability, by virtue of statutory authority, create and maintain what in fact amounts to a private nuisance.

The question as to the remedy of one whose property has been taken for a public use without his consent and without condemnation proceedings is discussed in the note to Boise Valley Constr. Co. v. Kroeger, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 968; and see later case, Parish v. Yorkville, L.R.A.1915A, 282.

The general discussion of the distinction between taking or damaging property and consequential injuries will be found in the annotation to Gordon v. Ellenville & K. R. Co. 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 462.

Fullerton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action by George Jacobs and Theresa Jacobs, his wife, against the city of Seattle for damages to their residence property by reason of the construction and operation of an adjoining lot of an incinerator for the purpose of burning and destroying city garbage. The appeal is based upon the alleged error of the court in sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, and in entering judgment dismissing the action on plaintiffs' refusal to amend.

The respondent interposes a motion to dismiss the appeal because the record does not disclose the opening statement made by counsel for appellants. This is thought to be material because of the admissions therein contained on which the respondent moved for judgment. It appears, however, that the respondent had answered to the complaint, and on the court's intimation that a demurrer to the complaint would be the better method of attack, the respondent obtained leave to withdraw the answer and file a demurrer to the complaint. It is sufficient answer to the motion to dismiss to say that the preliminary proceedings were merged in the final attack presented by way of demurrer, and that the appeal is from the order of the court on the demurrer. The record is ample for the presentation of the sufficiency of the complaint, which is the sole question before us. The motion is denied.

The complaint for a first cause of action alleged that appellants are the owners of lot 3, block 4, McNaught's third addition to the city of Seattle, Washington; that respondent, prior to the 5th day of May, 1913, installed upon property abutting and adjoining appellants' lot on the south an incinerator for the purpose of burning up and disposing of the garbage and refuse of the respondent city, which are brought to said incinerator from different portions of the city in open wagons; that the wagons pass alongside of appellants' property and frequently stand along its east line; that such wagons give forth noxious odors and are disgusting and sickening to the sight and senses; that said refuse and garbage are burned in said incinerator, by reason of which smoke, steam, and vapors arise and permeate the air, noxious to the smell and other senses, which said odors are sickening, disgusting, and unbearable, and tend to, and will, cause sickness and disease to those forced to smell and inhale the same; that from such incinerated garbage and refuse, ashes, and unburnt portions are carried out and dumped in close proximity to appellants' home: that the said refuse is composed mainly of decomposed and partly burned matter, which emits strong, disagreeable, and noxious odors, detrimental to the health, peace, and comfort of appellants and of anyone living or being upon appellants' property; that during the process of incineration a large amount of cinders and ashes is carried up into the air and precipitated upon the property of appellants, covering appellants' home and yard and surrounding property; that by reason of the operation of said incinerator flies congregate in great numbers upon and about appellants' home and in and about their house and other houses which they have upon said property, thereby breeding disease and filth and rendering the occupancy of appellants' property disagreeable to the senses and dangerous to health; that respondent maintains an inclined roadway leading from said incinerator and alongside of appellants' property, which is unsightly and unseemingly, and which lessens the value of their property; that at no time has respondent ever condemned the property of appellants, nor brought suit to fix the damage thereto, because of the erection, maintenance, and operation of said incinerator, but has installed same without paying, or having first fixed and ascertained by a jury, the damages to appellants; that by reason of the facts and conduct and uses aforesaid, appellants have been greatly damaged, and the value of their property has been and is constantly being lessened and will permanently continue to be lessened, to their damage in the sum of $7,000.

For a second cause of action, it is alleged that the incinerator is negligently and carelessly maintained; that it constitutes a nuisance; that by reason of its maintenance large quantities of garbage, rubbish, refuse, and trash are carried to, and burned in, said incinerator, causing a large amount of cinders, ashes, and dust, disagreeable and noxious odors, stench, and gases to arise therefrom and permeate the atmosphere in the vicinity of appellants' premises to such an extent as to be a menace and danger to the health of appellants and to persons occupying their property; that respondent carelessly causes and permits a large amount of ashes, cinders, and debris and partially burned animal matter to accumulate around said incinerator, and to be blown and carried over appellants' property, causing it to be covered with cinders, ashes, and dust; that respondent has built an inclined roadway alongside appellants' property, leading from the ground up into said incinerator, over which is being hauled garbage, refuse, ashes, and debris, from which noxious and vexatious odors arise, and which is unsightly and detrimental to the property of appellants; that appellants have upon their property three houses for rental purposes, from which they might derive an income, but that they are untenanted and uninhabitable, and appellants are and will be unable to derive any income therefrom; that said damage is a continuing one, and the value of their property has been greatly injured, lessened, and destroyed. They further alleged that on May 5, 1913, within thirty days after said damages first accrued, they presented their claims in writing to the respondent city, and again on April 2, 1914, presented a further and additional claim, both of which the city disallowed. Appellants demanded judgment for $7,000.

The first cause of action is based upon the guaranty of article 1, § 16, of the state Constitution, which provides that no property shall be taken or damaged for public or private use without just compensation. The second cause of action is based upon the negligent operation of the incinerator plant in a manner which causes it to be a nuisance. Respondent's attack on the sufficiency of the complaint is founded on its contention that the city, in the disposal of garbage, is discharging a governmental as distinguished from a corporate duty, and hence would not be liable for resulting damages of any character. The only question for determination is: Does the complaint state a cause of action on either count? It may be conceded that the construction and operation of an incinerator by the city of Seattle for the disposal of garbage was a lawful exercise of municipal power under the delegation of authority granted by virtue of state legislation. But the lawfulness of the power would not warrant its exercise in such a way as to breach any constitutional guaranty for the protection of the citizen. The disposal of garbage may be a proper governmental function, granted by legislative enactment; but, conceding it to be so, the function must be exercised with due regard to constitutional limitations. Our Constitution (article 1, § 16) explicitly provides that private property shall not be damaged for public use "without just compensation having been first made, or paid into court for the owner." The complaint in this case sets forth the injury to the property of appellants arising from the erection, maintenance, and operation of respondent's plant for the disposal of garbage on land adjoining that of the appellants, and "that at no time has said city ever condemned plaintiffs' property, nor has it ever brought any suit to establish or fix the damage to plaintiffs' property because of the erection, maintenance, and operation of said incinerator, but said city has, without paying to plaintiffs, L.R.A.1917B.

or having first fixed and ascertained by a jury, plaintiffs' damage," so installed and operated said incinerator as to menace and depreciate the value of their property. The complaint does not seek to charge negligence of the respondent or its employees in the performance of governmental duties, in which case the municipality might be absolved from liability. The first cause of action is founded on the higher ground of the taking or injury to property without just compensation. The authorities sustain the right of recovery in such cases.

The case of Hines v. Rocky Mount, 162 N. C. 409, L.R.A.1915C, 751, 78 S. E. 510, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 132, which was an action involving the disposal of garbage, after conceding the rule of nonliability of municipalities for negligence in the performance of governmental duties, said: "This general principle is subject to the limitation that neither a municipal corporation nor other governmental agency is allowed to establish and maintain a nuisance, causing appreciable damage to the property of a private owner, without being liable for it. To the extent of the damage done to such property, it is regarded and dealt with as a taking or appropriation of the property, and it is well understood that such an interference with the rights of ownership may not be made or authorized except on compensation first made pursuant to the law of the land."

In Louisville v. Hehemann, 161 Ky. 523, L.R.A.1915C, 747, 171 S. W. 165, another garbage case, which concedes the nonliability for the negligence of city employees, it is said: "But there is an element of wrong complained of in this case which goes beyond that. Conceding that a city dump is necessary for the public good, and that Cabel street was the proper place for it, still the city had no right to take or injure adjacent private property or the occupants in the use thereof without making compensation."

In Kobbe v. New Brighton, 20 Misc. 477, 45 N. Y. Supp. 777, a garbage incinerator case, it is said: "The constitutional prohibitions against depriving any person of his property without due process of law, or without just compensation, may be violated without the physical taking of property. They extend to every act which injuriously affects property rights. . . . If, therefore, it be true that such a cremator as this statute authorizes is, like a pesthouse, necessarily offensive, and a direct injury to neighboring real property, though conducted in the most careful and scientific manner, the authorization of it by the legislature without providing for compensation for such injury could not legalize it as against individuals thus damaged in their property."

See also Thurston v. St. Joseph, 51 Mo. 510, 11 Am. Rep. 463; McLaughlin v. Hope, 107 Ark. 442, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 137, 155 S. W. 910.

The Federal Constitution and many of the state Constitutions are without provision respecting the necessity of compensation for the "damaging" of private property by means of a public use; the constitutional inhibition extending only to the "taking" of private property without compensation. But the courts in the most of those states, however, hold that such an injury as in the case at bar is a "taking" of private property, and apply the same principle of necessity of compensation. We cite a number of them, most of them involving an injury to property arising from the disposal of sewage by municipalities. See Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 177, 20 L. ed. 557; Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 136, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321; Sammons v. Gloversville, 175 N. Y. 346, 67 N. E. 622; Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury, 72 Conn. 531, 48 L.R.A. 691, 77 Am. St. Rep. 335, 45 Atl. 154; Atty. Gen. ex rel. Wyoming Twp. v. Grand Rapids (Bird ex rel. Emmons v. Grand Rapids) 175 Mich. 503, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 473, 141 N. W. 890, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 968; Donnell v. Greensboro, 164 N. C. 330, 80 S. E. 377; Parish v. Yorkville, 96 S. C. 24, L.R.A.1915A, 282, 79 S. E. 635.

From the foregoing authorities it is clear that the erection and maintenance by a city of an incinerator for the burning of garbage on land adjacent to that of a private owner, and its operation so as to depreciate the value of his land and render it a menace to the health of himself and family, constitute a damaging of private property for a public use for which he would be entitled to compensation under the terms of Const. art. 1, § 16. The allegations in the first count of appellants' complaint set forth facts sufficient to bring it within the operation of this principle, and therefore state a cause of action as against a general demurrer.

Respecting appellants' second cause of action, we are of the opinion that the demurrer thereto was properly sustained. This cause is based on the theory of the negligent operation of the garbage plant in such a manner as to create a nuisance. There is a respectable line of authorities permitting the right of recovery in such cases. See Ft. Worth v. Crawford, 74 Tex. 404, 15 Am. St. Rep. 840, 12 S. W. 52; Stephenville v. Bower, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 384, 68 S. W. 833; Haskell v. Webb, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 140 S. W. 127; *New L.R.A.*1917B.

Albany v. Slider, 21 Ind. App. 392, 52 N. E. 626; Newcastle v. Harvey, 54 Ind. App. 243, 102 N. E. 878; Hines v. Nevada, 150 Iowa, 620, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 797, 130 N. W. 181; Brayton v. Fall River, 113 Mass. 218, 18 Am. Rep. 470.

We think, however, under the statutes of this state, the proper theory of recovery is set forth in appellants' first cause of action. The two causes of action in reality seek the same damages for the same injury, and to uphold one cause necessarily excludes the other.

The installation of plants for the disposal of garbage is authorized by 3 Rem. & Bal. Code, § 8005. The Code also provides (§ 8311): "Nothing which is done or maintained under the express authority of a statute can be deemed a nuisance."

The construction of a garbage incinerator being authorized by law, its maintenance in a proper manner and place would not constitute a nuisance in a legal sense. But such a conclusion does not defeat appellants' right of recovery for the damaging of his property without just compensation. The denial of the right to recover damages for an injury on the theory of its constituting a tort, such as is the basis of the second cause of action, does not militate against the right of recovery for a taking or damaging of property for a public use without compensation. The principle upon which we rest appellants' right of recovery is well expressed in Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury, 72 Conn. 531, 48 L.R.A. 691, 77 Am. St. Rep. 335, 45 Atl. 154, as follows: "But if, for the purpose of this case, we concede the defendant's claim that the use is a governmental use, it is nevertheless liable to the plaintiff. The injury described by the complaint is not a mere consequential damage, like that resulting wholly from the lawful use of one's own property, or the lawful exercise of governmental power; it is a direct appropriation of well-recognized property rights within the guaranty of the Constitution. . . . Public necessity may justify the taking, but cannot justify the taking without compensation. . . . The mandate of the Constitution is intended to express a universally accepted principle of justice, and should receive a construction in accordance with that principle, broad enough to enable the court to protect every person in the rights of property thus secured by fundamental law."

The judgment sustaining the demurrer is reversed as to the first cause of action, and the cause remanded, with leave to the defendant to answer.

Morris, Ch. J., and Mount, Ellis, and Chadwick, JJ., concur.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

HILDA LIPPS, by Guardian, Appt.,
v.

MILWAUKEE ELECTRIC RAILWAY &
LIGHT COMPANY, Resp't.

(— Wis. —, 159 N. W. 916.)

Infant — injury to unborn child — liability.

No liability to an infant exists for an injury rendering it epileptic, inflicted so long before birth that at the time it could not have been born viable.

For other cases, see Afterborn Children, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 14, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County sustaining a demurrer to a complaint filed to recover damages for prenatal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Vinje, J.:

Action, by guardian ad litem, to recover damages for personal injuries sustained on defendant's car by plaintiff on September 5, 1912, while a fetus en ventre sa mère of the age of about five months, and before she could have been born viable. Plaintiff's father and mother settled with the defendant for the damage sustained by them. In due course of time plaintiff was born, and it is alleged that she suffers from epileptic fits as a direct result of the prenatal injuries received. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that it failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and because it appeared on the face thereof that plaintiff had not the legal capacity to sue. The court sustained the demurrer and entered judgment dismissing the action, from which judgment the plaintiff appealed.

Mr. Oscar Kroesing, for appellant:

If the infant has a cause of action, a release by the parents would not bar recovery by it.

Kirk v. Middlebrook, 201 Mo. 245, 100 S. W. 450.

A child en ventre sa mère is considered as having an existence for purposes beneficial to it.

Note — Prenatal injury as ground of action is treated in the note to Buel v. United R. Co. 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 625. Apparently the only case in point since that note is LIPPS v. MILWAUKEE ELECTRIC R. & L. Co. supra, 334, the decision in which is in harmony with the general rule stated in the earlier note. L.R.A.1917B.

Gillespie v. Nabors, 59 Ala. 441, 31 Am. Rep. 20.

Messrs. Van Dyke, Shaw, Muskat, & Van Dyke, for respondent:

There is no right of recovery for injuries alleged to have been received before birth.

Dietrich v. Northampton, 138 Mass. 14, 52 Am. Rep. 242; Walker v. Great Northern R. Co. Ir. L. R. 28 C. L. 69; Allaire v. St. Luke's Hospital, 184 Ill. 359, 48 L.R.A. 225, 75 Am. St. Rep. 176, 56 N. E. 638, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 427; Gorman v. Budlong, 23 R. I. 169, 55 L.R.A. 118, 91 Am. St. Rep. 629, 49 Atl. 704, 10 Am. Neg. Rep. 188; Nugent v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 154 App. Div. 667, 139 N. Y. Supp. 367; Buel v. United R. Co. 248 Mo. 126, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 625, 154 S. W. 71, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 613, 4 N. C. C. A. 129.

Vinje, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

But few cases of this kind are found in the reports, though there must have been many occasions for bringing them had it been generally considered by the legal profession that a cause of action accrues to a child for injuries received before birth. This paucity of cases, however, does not determine the right to maintain such an action, but it does indicate, no doubt, the general view relative thereto held by the legal profession. Our attention was called by counsel on both sides to but six cases involving the question under consideration. Independent search has failed to find others directly in point. The first case was that of Dietrich v. Northampton, 138 Mass. 14, 52 Am. Rep. 242 (decided in 1884), where, as the result of a fall on a defective highway, a woman between four and five months advanced in pregnancy was delivered of a child that lived only a few minutes after its birth. It was held that such a child was not a person for the loss of whose life an action may be maintained, within the meaning of Pub. Stat. chap. 52, § 17, which gives a right of action for negligently causing the death of a person. The court, through Holmes, J., says: "Taking all the foregoing considerations into account, and further, that, as the unborn child was a part of the mother at the time of the injury, any damage to it which was not too remote to be recovered for at all was recoverable by her, we think it clear that the statute sued upon does not embrace the plaintiff's intestate within its meaning."

The next case, that of Walker v. Great Northern R. Co. Ir. L. R. 28 C. L. 69, decided in 1891, was one where a woman quick with child was injured while a passenger on defendant's train in such a manner as to permanently wound and cripple plaintiff then en ventre. The opinions of the judges do not all agree as to whether or not an action for injuries to an unborn child may not, under any circumstances, be maintained, but they do all agree that since defendant's contract relations were with the mother alone, and not with the plaintiff, the latter has no cause of action. The case of Allaire v. St. Luke's Hospital, 184 Ill. 359, 48 L.R.A. 225, 75 Am. St. Rep. 176, 56 N. E. 638, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 427 (decided in 1900), presents the question in its broadest form. There plaintiff's mother, about ten days before she expected to be confined, went to the defendant for the express purpose of treatment and care during her accouchement. While in the hospital for such purpose she was negligently injured in an elevator therein in such a way that plaintiff, who was born four days later, was also severely injured. After reviewing Dietrich v. Northampton and Walker v. Great Northern R. Co. supra, and in summing up the case, the opinion of the appellate court, adopted by the supreme court as its opinion, proceeds: "That a child before birth is, in fact, a part of the mother, and is only severed from her at birth, cannot, we think, be successfully disputed. The doctrine of the civil law and the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts, therefore, that an unborn child may be regarded as in esse for some purposes, when for its benefit, is a mere legal fiction, which, so far as we have been able to discover, has not been indulged in by the courts of common law to the extent of allowing an action by an infant for injuries occasioned before its birth. If the action can be maintained, it necessarily follows that an infant may maintain an action against its own mother for injuries occasioned by the negligence of the mother while pregnant with it. We are of the opinion that the action will not lie."

Boggs, J., in an able dissenting opinion, argued that a cause of action should accrue to every child capable at the time of injury of being born viable for injuries received en ventre, where the defendant knew, or ought to have known, of its existence at the time of the injury, upon the broad ground that an infant capable of being born viable is in fact an independent person or being which the law of torts should recognize as such. In German v. Budlong, 23 R. I. 169, 55 L.R.A. 118, 91 Am. St. Rep. 629, 49 Atl. 704, 10 Am. Neg. Rep. 188 (decided in 1901), a woman gave premature birth to a child by reason of injuries received through the negligence of the defendant, which child lived only a couple of days after birth. The court held that since no cause of action accrued to the child, none could be maintained by the next of L.R.A.1917B.

kin. In Nugent v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 154 App. Div. 867, 139 N. Y. Supp. 367 (decided in 1913), the plaintiff sued for injuries received thirty-six days before his birth while his mother was a passenger on defendant's car. The argument of Thomas, J., writing the opinion of the court, is to the effect that an infant may, in some cases, have a cause of action for injuries received before birth, but the court held that since there were no contract relations between the unborn infant and the defendant, no recovery could be had. The case of Buel v. United R. Co. 248 Mo. 126, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 625, 154 S. W. 71, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 613, 4 N. C. C. A. 129 (decided in 1913), holds that since no cause of action accrued to a child, who died about six months after birth, from injuries received before birth, while its mother was a passenger on defendant's street car, none survived to next of kin. The case does not turn on a lack of contract relation between the unborn child and the defendant, but is based upon the ground that since by common law no cause of action accrued to an infant for injuries received before birth, none was given by the survival statute.

Quotations have been made from some of the foregoing cases, not necessarily for approval, but to show the trend of judicial thought concerning the question. It will be noticed that in all cases, though courts have differed as to the grounds of denial, the right to maintain the action has been negatived. All, however, so far as expression is found therein, agree that no cause of action accrues to an infant for injuries received before it could be born viable. Such is the present case. The complaint alleges the child could not have been born viable. Since a nonviable child cannot exist separate from its mother, it must, in the law of torts, be regarded as a part of its mother, and hence, being incapable of a separate existence, it is not an independent person or being to whom separate rights can accrue. Its rights are merged in those of the mother of whom it forms a part.

We go no further than the facts of the case require, and hold that no cause of action accrues to an infant en ventre sa mère for injuries received before it could be born viable.

Very cogent reasons may be urged for a contrary rule where the infant is viable, and especially so in cases where the defendant, being a doctor or midwife, has negligently injured an unborn child. As to such cases we express no opinion.

The fact that the criminal law protects nonviable infants does not affect the question of their civil rights. The criminal law rests upon grounds of public policy and affects the public; the law of torts relates solely to the rights of private parties. So, too, the fact that, for purposes of inheritance, taking under a will, etc., the existence of unborn children is recognized in law, has no particular bearing upon the question of their right to recover for injuries sustained before birth. Neither does the medical or scientific recognition of the separate entity of an unborn child aid in determining its legal rights. The law cannot always be scientific or technically correct. It must often content itself with being merely practical.

Judgment affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.
(In Banc.)

OCEAN ACCIDENT & GUARANTEE COMPANY et al.

v.

INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al.

(— Cal. —, 159 Pac. 1041.)

Master and servant — workmen's compensation — going to work.

An engineer on a tugboat, who, after his boat has been moved from its berth for protection from a storm, goes ashore for purposes of his own by crossing other vessels alongside of which it is moored, is not, when attempting to return to the boat, performing a service within the scope of his employment and growing out of and incident thereto, within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, although, when reaching the place where he left the boat, and finding it returned to its rightful berth, he receives from the captain a direction to come over to it, in response to his inquiry as to what he is doing over there.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(September 8, 1916.)

APPPLICATION by petitioners for a writ to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission of Compensation for the death of petitioners' employee. Award annulled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Redman & Alexander, for petitioners:

At the time of his death, Slattery was not performing a service growing out of his employment, nor did his death arise out of his employment.

Note.—The American cases on the question as to what injuries arise out of and in the course of the employment within the Workmen's Compensation Acts are treated at pages 232 et seq., of the annotation covering the general subject of Workmen's Compensation Acts in L.R.A.1916A, 23; and the English cases on this question at pages 40 et seq. Specifically as to recovery of compensation, under these acts, for injuries received while going to and from work, see L.R.A.1917B.

Walters v. Staveley Coal & I. Co. 105 L. T. N. S. 119, 55 Sol. Jo. 579, 4 B. W. C. C. 303; Gilmour v. Dorman, L. & Co. 105 L. T. N. S. 54, 4 B. W. C. C. 279; Leach v. Oakley Street & Co. [1911] 1 K. B. 523, 80 L. J. K. B. N. S. 313, 103 L. T. N. S. 778, 27 Times L. R. 124, 55 Sol. Jo. 124, 4 B. W. C. C. 93; Biggart v. The Minnesota, 5 B. W. C. C. 69; Fumiciello's Case, 219 Mass. 488, 107 N. E. 349; Byrket v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 29 Ohio C. C. 614, affirmed in 75 Ohio St. 625, 80 N. E. 1124; Caton v. Summerlee & M. Iron & Steel Co. 39 Scot. L. R. 762, 4 Sc. Sess. Cas. 5th Series, 989, 10 Scot. L. T. 204.

It is immaterial what findings the Commission made, because the evidence does not sustain the award, which, for this reason, should be set aside.

Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 171 Cal. 69, L.R.A.1916A, 281, 151 Pac. 1136, 11 N. C. C. A. 493; Reck v. Whittlesberger, 181 Mich. 463, 148 N. W. 247, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 771; International Harvester Co. v. Industrial Commission, 167 Wis. 167, 147 N. W. 53, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 330, 5 N. C. C. A. 822; Buckley's Case, 218 Mass. 354, 105 N. E. 979, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 474, 5 N. C. C. A. 613.

Mr. Christopher M. Bradley for respondents.

Henshaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Review to consider an award of the Industrial Accident Commission: William J. Slattery was engineer of the fishing tug Condare, owned by the Borzone Fish Company. Upon an afternoon in January she was moored in her customary berth—a wharf between piers 23 and 25, on the San Francisco water front. The weather was stormy, and the captain of the tug conannotation following De Constantin v. Public Service Commission, L.R.A.1916A, 331.

As to recovery of compensation for injury to employee, received while on street, see annotation following Hopkins v. Michigan Sugar Co. L.R.A.1916A, 314.

For later cases and annotation on questions arising under these acts, consult the L.R.A. Digest and Indexes to Notes covering volumes subsequent to L.R.A.1916A, under the title, "Workmen's Compensation."

sidered it expedient to move his vessel from this wharf to a place alongside of the schooner Crescent City. The Crescent City lay next to the steamer Moana, which last vessel was moored to pier 25, a short distance away from the Condare's usual berth. As thus placed, to go ashore from the Condare necessitated debarking from the Condare to the Crescent City, crossing the Crescent City, climbing onto the Moana, crossing her, and from her reaching the wharf. Slattery knew the position of the Condare, and knew also that it was a temporary location, chosen for protection against the stormy weather. After the tug was thus moored, he went ashore for purposes of his own, unconnected with his employment, and spent the night on shore. It was a Saturday night. It was Slattery's duty to return to his vessel before 4 o'clock upon the following morning. Not having so returned, the captain of the tug went to the boarding house where Slattery spent the night and had him called for duty. It was Slattery's duty to have reported on his vessel without any such summons. Slattery did not know that the tug during the night had been shifted back, as in fact it had, to its own berth. He went to pier 25, safely crossed the Moana and the Crescent City, and discovered that his vessel was not there. He then called from the dock of the Crescent City, "What are you doing over there?" Capt. Johnson, of the Condare, hearing the call and recognizing Slattery's voice, replied, "I don't know, Bill, come on over here." Slattery answered, "All right," and, seeking to return to the wharf and thence to his vessel, fell into the bay between the Crescent City and the Moana and was drowned.

This fairly epitomizes the facts, though there are certain statements in the findings of the Commission which are in the nature of deductions or conclusions from those unquestioned facts which call for animadversion. Thus it is in terms declared that when Slattery hailed his ship and was told by the captain to "Come on over here" Slattery had "reported for duty, and was directed by his superior to proceed to the boat Condare at its changed position." These statements must be treated as conclusions of law, for as findings of fact they are utterly without evidence to sustain them. The unquestioned facts are that it was Slattery's duty to report to his boat without any instruction, and that he was no more on duty when standing upon the deck of the Crescent City than when he was summoned at his hotel, and that the captain's call to him to "Come on over here" (since it was Slattery's duty to go to his ship without any instructions), amounted to no more than telling Slattery the location of the ship. Again it is found that the captain of the Condare "caused Slattery to be called at the hotel where said Slattery was staying, but did not leave word nor advise said Slattery with regard to the position of the boat Condare." The evidence establishes without conflict that the captain caused Slattery to be called because Slattery had failed in the performance of his express duty, which was to report to the ship at a given hour; and the fact that the captain did not tell Slattery—a man knowing the usual berth of the ship and familiar with the San Francisco water front—that the Condare was at its usual berth is a circumstance immaterial to this consideration, since there was not the slightest duty upon the captain's part so to tell him. Eliminating, then, from this consideration, such declarations as those above noted, which, if they are to be regarded as findings, are findings absolutely unsupported by the evidence, and, if they are to be regarded as conclusions of law, are conclusions of law erroneously drawn, we are enabled to approach the one real question in controversy, and we do so with the disposition to give to the terms of the act the utmost liberality of construction of which they are legally capable, to the end of effectuating the beneficent purposes of the act itself.

So far as affects this question, the employer's liability or nonliability rests upon the construction to be given to § 12 (a) and subdivision 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act. Stat. 1913, p. 283. That law is as follows: Section 12 (a). "Liability for the compensation provided by this act, in lieu of any other liability whatsoever, shall, without regard to negligence, exist against an employer for any personal injury sustained by his employees by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment and for the death of any such employee if the injury shall proximately cause death, in those cases where the following conditions of compensation concur: . . . 2. Where, at the time of the accident, the employee is performing service growing out of and incidental to his employment and is acting within the course of his employment as such."

Admittedly the deceased was an employee of the petitioner. Admittedly he met his death while, in the broadest sense, he was such employee. The question is: At the time he met his death was he "performing service growing out of and incidental to his employment and acting within the course of his employment?" It will be noted that § 12 (a) expresses the conditions generally under which compensation for injury shall be paid. It is to be paid when and only when the injury is a personal injury sustained by the employee "by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment." It will also be noted that subdivision 2, having specific reference to compensation in the event of death, does not broaden the right to this compensation beyond the language just quoted, but, if anything, perhaps restricts it, and certainly makes it more specific by the added declaration that, to entitle the representatives of the deceased to recover in the case of death, the employee must not only be "performing a service growing out of and incidental to his employment," but must also be "acting within the course of his employment as such." Therefore it is quite within the meaning of the statute to say that the controlling language found in § 12(a) is not modified, but merely paraphrased and made more definite, by the language of subdivision 2. Next it is pertinent to call attention to the fact that this language, injury "by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment," is language taken literally from the Workmen's Compensation Act of England, enacted by Parliament in 1897, § 1 of that act declaring that an employer shall be liable "if in any employment to which this act applies personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment is caused to a workman." L. R. Stat. 60-61 Vict. p. 53. This language, then, had been for many years upon the English statute books before it was adopted and made a part of the Employers' Workmen's Compensation Act of this state, and the courts of England had been called upon, as was inevitable, to construe this phrase many times before our enactment of it. Under familiar principles, when a statute which has received judicial construction by the courts of one state is adopted and re-enacted by another state, it is so adopted and re-enacted in consonance with the construction put upon it by the courts of the first sovereignty. The common sense of this rule of construction is so apparent that it needs in its support nothing more than the obvious suggestion that if the later lawmakers did not design that the construction put upon any given language should obtain, they would modify and change that language to express their different intent.

We may now with profit consider these English adjudications, and, first, those upon which respondent places reliance. In Robertson v. Allan Bros. & Co. 77 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1072, 98 L. T. N. S. 821, 1 B. W. C. C. 172, the steward of a steamship went on shore in the evening under permission, for his own purposes. He returned late in the evening and proceeded to board his ship by L.R.A.1917B.

means of the cargo skid or stage which stretched from the ship to the quay. It was a breach of discipline to use the skid, but it was frequently used by members of the crew. In stepping from the skid to the deck he slipped or stumbled, fell down the unguarded hatch into the hold, and died from the effect of the injuries which he sustained. It was not disputed that the accident "arose out of his employment." The question debated was whether it was "in the course of his employment." It was held by the master of rolls that, in view of all the circumstances, the accident occurred in the course of the employment. In Moore v. Manchester Liners, 3 B. W. C. C. 527, a fireman had gone on shore to procure certain personal necessities. Returning to his ship, he fell off a ladder, which was the only means provided of gaining access from the quay to the ship. The House of Lords held this accident to have befallen the deceased in the course of his employment, Lord Loreburn, L. C., saying: "In these circumstances it was not, I think, contested that the accident which caused death arose out of the employment; the danger of falling from the ladder which gave the only access from quay to ship being, in its nature, incidental to the service of a seaman."

In Keyser v. Burdick, 4 B. W. C. C. 87, a riveter working on a ship at the dock was about to go ashore. Coming on deck, he found that the vessel was being moved to a dry dock, and was already a short distance from the quay. The gangway had been removed. There was no other means of getting ashore than by sliding down a rope, which still held the vessel to the quay. A fellow workman had thus gone ashore in safety. Keyser attempted to follow him. The rope gave way. He was thrown against the quay and injured. The master of the rolls said: "I am satisfied that there is no ground for this appeal. The man, when he came on deck, wanted to get ashore, and he found that the vessel was a little away from the quay side, and that the gangway had gone. He saw one of his mates use the rope, and he followed, but met with an accident. The county court judge found that, in the circumstances, this was a reasonable step to take by the man to get off the ship, when the regular means of exit was closed. We cannot interfere with his findings."

In Kearon v. Kearon, 45 Ir. L. T. 96, 4 B. W. C. C. 435, a seaman was on shore leave. When he returned, his vessel was some 5 or 6 feet from the pier, the top of the ship's rail being about 3 feet lower than the quay. No gangway had been provided, but a ladder was used in getting on board. Not seeing the ladder, he hailed the ship, and, receiving no answer, jumped from the pier to the vessel. His leg struck on the rail, and he was permanently injured. There was no question but that the accident occurred in the course of his employment. The proposition debated was whether or not the seaman had taken a wantonly reckless step in his effort to reach the ship, and it was held that he had not. In the cases of Kitchenham v. The Johannesburg and Leach v. Oakley-Street & Co. 4 B. W. C. C. 91, two seamen on different ships had been ashore for their own purposes. They were both drowned before reaching their ships. In the Leach Case access was obtained to the ship by a ladder extending from the wharf to the ship. As the sailor was mounting this ladder his foot slipped, he fell between the ship and the wharf, and was drowned. Fletcher Moulton, L. J., delivering the judgment, first pointed out that "any accident that occurs during the period of his being on shore is generally, if not necessarily, due to a danger to which he is exposed as a member of the public, and not as one of the crew on the ship, and therefore is one which does not 'arise out of his employment;'" and the opinion proceeds as follows: "But if, whether in his hours of leisure or not, it becomes necessary for him, in fulfilment of his employment, to get on board his vessel, an accident occurring in his doing so is normally an accident arising out of his employment, because it is due to a danger incidental to his service in that ship. In the cases before us the accident occurred on the return of the seaman to the ship, immediately prior to his actually getting on board. This is the critical moment when the dangers to which he is exposed change from being of the one class to being of the other class, and it will frequently be a difficult task to draw the line between the two. But I do not think it difficult to lay down the general principle by which our decisions ought to be guided. The return to the ship is in the course of his employment, but the risks do not become risks arising out of his employment until he has to do something specifically connected with his employment on the ship. Thus, if the risk is one due to the means of access to the ship, as in Moore v. Manchester Liners, the accident is rightly said to arise out of his employment; but if the accident is shown to arise from something not specifically connected with the ship, it cannot be said to arise out of his employment. I do not think that the dividing line is when he actually touches the ship or the special means of access thereto. For instance, if it was shown that when the sailor returned to the ship there was a dense fog, and that in trying to find the gangway, which I will suppose was not lighted, he fell into the water and was drowned. I think that the accident would arise out of his employment. But if all that is shown is that it occurred during his return to the ship, but while he was still on the shore, and before he had taken any specific step towards getting on board the vessel, I think that it would not thereby be established that the accident arose out of his employment."

In the Kitchenham Case access to the ship was by a gangway. The evidence showed that the sailor, on returning to the ship, came upon the wharf and walked towards the gangway. It was not shown that he ever reached the gangway. "A splash was heard a little abaft the inboard end of the gangway." Says the court: "It is for the applicant to prove that the accident arose 'out of' the employment; and, if the evidence is not sufficient to establish this, the claim fails."

And it was held that the evidence failed to establish a case for compensation. In Jackson v. General Steam Fishing Co. [1909] A. C. 523, 78 L. J. P. C. N. S. 148, 101 L. T. N. S. 401, 25 Times L. R. 787, 46 Scot. L. R. 901, 2 B. W. C. C. 56, a workman was employed to watch trawlers as they lay in the harbor. His duties compelled him to be on the quay to which the trawlers were moored. In the course of his watch he left the boats and went to a hotel for refreshment. He was absent a short time, had returned to the quay, and, while descending a fixed ladder attached to the quay to go on board one of the trawlers, he fell into the water and was drowned. He was in the performance of his duty in leaving the quay to go onto the trawler. He used the means provided and at hand, and it was held that he met his accident in the course of his employment. This completes a review of the cases cited and relied upon by respondent. From them we will turn to petitioner's authorities.

In Walters v. Staveley Coal & I. Co. 105 L. T. N. S. 119, 55 Sol. Jo. 579, 4 B. W. C. C. 303, a minor was proceeding to his work along a footpath prepared by his employers for their workmen's convenience. He slipped and sustained injury. There was evidence that the employers knew that the footpath was not safe. The question considered by the House of Lords was: Did the accident "arise out of the employment, and did it arise in the course of the employment?" It was held that there was "no evidence which would have justified a finding that the accident arose out of the employment," and it was declared to be immaterial that the employee was injured upon this footpath prepared for his use by his employers, "since the man was merely going to his employment." In Gilmour v. Dorman, L. & Co. 4 B. W. C. C. 279, a workman was injured upon vacant land belonging to his employer, over which for many years he had been in the habit of going to and from his work, by walking along a footpath over the land. The master of the rolls, holding that the accident did not arise out of his employment, declared: "I cannot regard the case as in any way different from the case where a man slips on the ice on a public road, a quarter of a mile from his employer's works. It has been repeatedly held that a man is not entitled to the protection of the act when on his way from his home to the works."

Dealing specifically with seamen, Leach v. Oakley, Street, & Co. has already been discussed. In Biggart v. The Minnesota, 5 B. W. C. C. 69, a seaman had gone ashore on leave, for his own purposes. He returned late at night, and found that his ship had been moved to another part of the dock. He proceeded to make his way to the ship along the dock side, on which were many railway lines. He was injured by a train on the docks 200 yards from his ship. Said the master of the rolls: "This appeal seems more hopeless than any we have had to deal with. . . . The accident took place 200 yards from the ship. That was not an accident 'arising out of.'"

Other cases not dealing specifically with ships and their crews, but having a bearing upon the question of what constitutes an injury "arising out of employment" are Caton v. Summerlee & M. Iron & Steel Co. 39 Scot L. R. 762, 4 Sc. Sess. Cas. 5th series, 989, 10 Scot. L. T. 204, where it was held that a workman who, after finishing his day's work, was injured while walking along a private branch railway leading from the employer's colliery to the main line of a railroad, had not met with an accident arising out of or in the course of his employment. In Fumiciello's Case, 219 Mass. 488, 107 N. E. 349, an employee was killed while crossing a railroad track on private property over which it was necessary for him to pass. The court held that the death did not arise out of the employment, and the fact that the deceased was upon private property as a licensee made no difference; that the principle was the same as if he had been killed on a public highway. To like effect is Byrket v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 29 Ohio C. C. 614, affirmed by Ohio supreme court, 75 Ohio St. 625, 80 N. E. 1124, where it was held that an injury sustained by a workman while walking on the railroad tracks owned by his employer, L.R.A.1917B.

while complying with a direction to report for duty, was not an injury arising out of his employment.

With these authorities before us we think the governing principles of all the decisions are not difficult of discernment. The first of these is that there are excluded from the benefits of the act all those accidental injuries which occur while the employee is going to or returning from his work, and it matters not in this respect whether his journey takes him over public roads or private ways. Second, in the case of vessels, a seaman or other employee is entitled to the benefits of the act if injured while using the instrumentality provided in either reaching or departing from his ship, and in case no instrumentality at all is provided, as in Kearon v. Kearon, 45 Ir. L. T. 96, 4 B. W. C. C. 435, supra, the injured employee will not be excluded from the benefits of the act if he adopts some perilous means of boarding his ship, as by endeavoring to leap to her deck from the pier. But in the case of an employee seeking to board his vessel, until he has come into such proximity to her as to be using, or immediately about to use, the gang plank, ladder, or other instrumentality "specifically connected with the ship," his accident does not arise out of his employment, this indeed being the precise language of Moulton, L. J., as above quoted in Leach v. Oakley, Street & Co., where he says: "If the accident is shown to arise from something not specifically connected with the ship, it cannot be said to arise out of his employment."

In the very broadest sense, of course, it is true that an injury which happens to a man who is on his way to his place of employment is an injury "growing out of and incidental to his employment," since a necessary part of the employment is that the employee shall go to and return from his place of labor. But it is to be noted that the right to an award is not founded upon the fact that the injury grows out of and is incidental to his employment. It is founded upon the fact that the service he is rendering at the time of the injury grows out of and is incidental to the employment. Therefore an employee going to and from his place of employment is not rendering any service, and begins to render such service only when, as has been said, arriving at the place of his employment, he proceeds to use some instrumentality provided, by means of which he immediately places himself in a position to perform his tasks.

Such, beyond question, is the reasoning of the cases and the meaning of their adju-lections; and, applying this reasoning to the facts in the case at bar, it is too plain to call for lengthy discussion that Slattery, in his progress toward his vessel, had not reached the point where it could be said that he met his death in "performing service growing out of and incidental to his employment."

The award is therefore annulled.

We concur: Angellotti, Ch. J.; Shaw, J.; Sloss, J.; Melvin, J.; Lorigan, J.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

CITY OF KANSAS CITY, KANSAS,

v.

HARRY SEAMAN, Appt.

(— Kan. —, 160 Pac. 1139.)

Commerce — collecting and returning laundry.

A corporation located and doing business in Missouri as a steam laundry sent an employee with a wagon to gather up the linen of patrons in Kansas City, Kansas, carry it to the laundry, and, when the service was completed, deliver it to the patrons in Kansas, and collect the charges. The employee, while so engaged, was arrested and fined for the violation of an ordinance of Kansas City, Kansas, imposing a license tax upon each laundry operated within the city, the amount to be determined by the number of wagons employed. Held, that the conviction is unlawful, first, for the reason that the employee of the laundry company was not conducting a laundry within the city, as contemplated by the ordinance, and, second for the reason that collecting the articles in Kansas, carrying them into Missouri, and returning them to their owners after the service had been performed, is interstate commerce.

For other cases, see Commerce, IV. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 11, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Wyandotte County, convicting him of violating an ordinance imposing a license tax upon each laundry operated within the defendant city. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. G. W. Stubbs and F. H. Stubbs, for appellant:

Defendant, in the course of his duties, was engaged in interstate commerce, and was therefore exempt from the provisions of the ordinance.

International Textbook Co. v. Pigg, 217 U. S. 91, 54 L. ed. 678, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Headnote by PORTER, J.

Note. — For gathering laundry or other articles in one state, performing services thereon in another, and returning to owners, as interstate commerce, see annotation following this case, post, 343. L.R.A. 1917B.

493, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep: 481, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103, reversing 76 Kan. 328, 91 Pac. 74: Com. v. Pearl Laundry Co. 105 Ky. 259, 49 S. W. 26; Lyng v. Michigan, 136 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 143, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 725.

Mr. H. J. Smith for appellee.

Porter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant was convicted and fined in the police court of Kansas City, Kansas, for carrying on the occupation and business of a laundry within the city without having obtained a license under the provisions of a city ordinance. The district court affirmed the conviction, and he appeals.

The appellant resided in Kansas City, Missouri, and was in the employ of the Fern Laundry Company, a corporation located in and doing business as a steam laundry in Kansas City, Missouri. Among the customers of the laundry company are people who reside in Kansas City, Kansas. It was the custom of the laundry company to send the appellant with the company's horse and wagon to Kansas City, Kansas, to gather up the linen of its patrons, take it to the laundry, and when it was ready for delivery, return the same to its patrons and collect the charges. The appellant, while so engaged, was arrested for violation of an ordinance of the city, which provided that no person, firm, or corporation, either as principal, officer, agent, servant, or employee, shall carry on or operate within the city any calling, trade, or occupation therein specified, without first obtaining a license therefor. The ordinance fixed the occupation tax for the business of laundries as follows: "Laundry wagon.—Any person or corporation conducting, pursuing or carrying on a laundry business by collecting or delivering laundry by means of a wagon or other vehicle, for each wagon or vehicle, $10."

We construe the ordinance as imposing an occupation tax upon the laundry business; the amount of the tax against the business being determined by the number of wagons employed therein.

There are two reasons why we think the judgment convicting the appellant must be reversed: First, he was not carrying on the business of a laundry within the city, and therefore was not within the terms or contemplation of the ordinance. The laundry was conducted in Kansas City, Missouri. He was engaged solely in collecting and distributing articles to be laundered in Missouri. He had no place of business in Kansas City, Kansas, but was simply using the streets for the lawful purpose of transporting from that city to the state of Missouri articles to be laundered and to return them to the owners when the service was completed. Second, in the course of his employment the appellant was engaged in interstate commerce. The appellee insists that there was no commerce involved; or, at least, that commerce was only incidental to the business, because there was no barter or sale of personal property. A number of decisions are cited in which "trade, barter, sale, or transportation involving trade, barter, or sale" are spoken of as constituting the elements of interstate commerce. In the appellee's brief it is said: "The contract between the laundry company and its customers is, that the company will take, wash, and return the clothing. The transaction is for a personal service with reference to property owned by the customer. No goods are sold by the company. They have nothing but services to sell."

It is seriously insisted that interstate commerce has been defined by the Federal courts to involve only the transfer of the title to personal property and its transportation, and the business of transporting passengers or intelligence. But certain services are held to be commodities. In International Textbook Co. v. Pigg, 217 U. S. 91, 54 L. ed. 678, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 493, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 481, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103, it was held that teaching by correspondence, the business of imparting knowledge, is interstate commerce when conducted between residents of different states, because teaching is a service. In the case at bar there was a sale of service involving transportation between the homes of the customers in Kansas and the place where the service was performed in Missouri.

One of the cases relied upon by the appellee which illustrates its attitude as regards the claim that appellant was employed in interstate commerce is W. W. Cargill Co. v. Minnesota, 180 U. S. 452, 45 L. ed. 619, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423. In that case Cargill owned a number of grain elevators located upon the rights of way of interstate railways. At these elevators he purchased grain from citizens of Minnesota and shipped it in carload lots to points in other states; the grain being purchased for the express purpose of shipping as Cargill's property to his terminal elevators in L.R.A.1917B.

Wisconsin and Illinois. A statute of Minnesota required grain elevators operating in that state to pay a license fee. The court held that the statute imposing the license was valid for the reason that it had reference only to the business of the defendant at his elevators and warehouses in Minnesota, "in respect to business conducted at an established warehouse in the state between the defendant and sellers of grain." The Minnesota case does not support the contention of the appellee. If the laundry company were resisting the imposition of a license tax by the state of Missouri on its business conducted there, upon the theory that some, or a large part, of its business, was interstate, the Minnesota case would be an authority upholding the power of the state of Missouri to levy such a tax, for the reason that the tax would be imposed in respect to a business conducted in an establishment located in Missouri. Or if a person conducting a laundry business in Kansas City, Kansas, sought to avoid the license tax imposed by the ordinance in question, by claiming that its customers resided in Missouri, the Minnesota case would uphold the authority of the city to levy such a tax in respect to the business actually carried on within the city.

Undoubtedly there were some features of the business conducted by the laundry company which involved interstate transactions. The sending of its wagons into another state, with agents to collect articles to be laundered, the transporting of the same to its place of business in Missouri, and returning the articles to the owners in Kansas after the work had been completed, involved trade and intercourse. In Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 189, 6 L. ed. 23, 68, Chief Justice Marshall said: "Commerce, undoubtedly, is traffic, but it is something more—it is intercourse."

Anything which can be bought and sold is a subject of commerce. Butler Bros. Shoe Co. v. United States Rubber Co. 84 C. C. A. 167, 156 Fed. 1, 17. In International Textbook Co. v. Pigg, supra, it was held that "intercourse or communication between persons in different states through the mails and otherwise, and relating to matters of regular continuous business, such as teaching by correspondence, and the making of contracts relating to the transportation thereof, is commerce among the states within the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution."

When a resident of Kansas contracts with an individual doing business in Missouri that the later will mend a pair of spectacles for him, and the one who engaged to perform the service agrees to send into this state for the article which is to be repaired, take it to his place of business in Missouri, and, after the service has been performed, return it to the owner, the servant or agent of the individual in Missouri, while engaged in transporting the article to Missouri and returning it to the owner in Kansas, is engaged in trade and intercourse between individuals of different states. The servant or agent of the one performing the service is not, while so engaged, carrying on the business of mending spectacles; that business is carried on in Missouri.

A wholesale grocer in Missouri who sells goods there to a retail dealer in Kansas under a contract which requires him to deliver them in Kansas may send them by his own wagon to the customer's place in Kansas. In such a transaction he, and of course his agents, are engaged in interstate commerce. His traveling men who solicit business in Kansas are not engaged in conducting a wholesale grocery in this state, nor can they be required to pay a local license tax. Kinsley v. Dyerly, 79 Kan. 1, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 405, 98 Pac. 228, and cases cited in the opinion; note in 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 297, 316. Since the decision of Delamater v. South Dakota, 205 U. S. 93, 51 L. ed. 724, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 447, 10 Ann. Cas. 733, an exception to the general rule exists in the case of intoxicating liquors because of the provisions of the Wilson Act and other recent acts of Congress touching the control of such liquors.

Instances might be multiplied of cases involving transactions between citizens of different states whereby the owner of personal property in one state sends it to an individual, firm, or corporation in another state to have some service or labor performed upon it there, and afterwards to be returned to the owner in Kansas. The collecting and transporting of the thing from one state to another, and the return of it after the labor and service have been performed, is trade and intercourse between citizens of different states.

While engaged in collecting articles to be laundered, or in returning them to the owners in Kansas after the labor and service had been performed in Missouri, the appellant, as the servant and agent of his employer, was not carrying on the laundry business in Kansas; and for that reason alone was not within the provisions of the ordinance which purports to levy an occupation tax upon persons carrying on such business within the state. If the ordinance were given the construction contended for by the appellee, grievous burdens might be imposed by one state by the enactment of laws and ordinances which would embarrass traffic, trade, and intercourse between the citizens of different states.

It follows that the appellant is not amenable to the provisions of the ordinance, and his conviction for its alleged violation is void.

The judgment will be reversed, and the case remanded, with directions that appellant be discharged.

All the Justices concur.

Annotation—Gathering laundry or other articles in one state, performing services thereon in another, and returning to owners, as interstate commerce.

KANSAS CITY v. SEAMAN, ante, 341, finds a support for the decision in Com. v. Pearl Laundry Co. (1899) 105 Ky. 259, 49 S. W. 26, which held that one who solicited laundry work for a laundry company situated without the state, the laundry, when the service thereon was completed, being returned to such solicitor, who returned it to the owners, was not subject to a license tax. The court stated that it was not necessary to discuss the Federal question raised by the solicitor for laundry as the law is well settled that a citizen of another state may come into this state and solicit and receive work to be done in such other state, without being required to pay a license tax.

On the other hand, the decision in KANSAS CITY v. SEAMAN, that one is engaged in interstate commerce who solicits laundry work for a laundry company situated without the state, finds opposition in Smith v. Jackson (1899) 103 Tenn. 673, 47 L.R.A. 416, 54 S. W. 981, which held that an agent of a laundry company in another state, who collects garments and sends them out of the state to be laundered, and afterwards redelivers them to their owners, is not engaged in commerce so as to be protected against the privilege tax imposed on his occupation by statute. The word "commerce," the court said, found in the interstate clause of the Federal Constitution, cannot be held to embrace a transaction such as is here presented. It implies when used by business men, as it is defined in Webster's Dictionary, trade or traffic; as in the exchange of specific articles or commodities for other articles or commodities, or else of these for money or its representative. In a case like the present nothing in the true commercial sense is sold or exchanged. The agent takes the articles committed to his care, and agrees with the owner that he will send them across the state line, and have certain labor bestowed on them, and, when returned, he is to receive compensation equal to his labor. There is no commodity created, of which the ownership is changed. It is simply a personal contract based on a valuable consideration, having no element of a commercial transaction falling within the protection of this clause of the Constitution.

Generally as to interstate commerce, see Index to L.R.A. Notes, under the title, "Commerce." J. H. B.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.
(Division B.)

SARAH WOODS, Appt.,
v.
CITY OF TUPELO.

(— Miss. —, 72 So. 879.)

Criminal law — presence at receipt of verdict.

The receipt of the verdict in the absence of one accused of illegal sale of intoxicating liquors violates his constitutional right to be present at every stage of the trial.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. 8.

(Stevens, J., dissents.)

(November 6, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lee County convicting her of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George T. Mitchell, for appellant:

Defendant has a right to be present at every step during the trial of his case, and especially at the time of the rendition of the verdict, and unless he voluntarily absents himself, the trial is a nullity.

Ryan v. Couch, 66 Ala. 244; Chester v. Bower, 55 Cal. 46; Larue v. Russell, 26 Ind. 386; Crowe v. Peters, 63 Mo. 429; Schneider v. Haas, 14 Or. 174, 58 Am. Rep. 296, 13 Pac. 236; Garman v. State, 66 Miss. 196, 5 So. 385; Corbin v. State, 99 Miss. 486, 55 So. 43; 12 Cyc. 528.

Mr. C. P. Long for appellee.

Cook, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was tried in the circuit court of Lee county upon a charge that she had unlawfully sold beer within the corporate limits of the city of Tupelo. After the evidence was introduced, the instructions of the court were read to the jury, and counsel for the prosecution and for the defendant completed their arguments, and the jury retired to consider their verdict. Before the jury had reported their verdict, the court, at 4 o'clock P. M., announced from the bench that the court would be adjourned until 8:30 o'clock the following morning. The sheriff then announced in open court that all parties and witnesses were discharged until 8:30 o'clock the following morning. After the adjournment of the court, and after appellant and her attorneys had left the court room, the jury notified the court that they were ready to report, whereupon the court, without giving any notice to the defendant or her counsel, received the verdict of the jury finding the defendant guilty as charged. On the following morning, when the court convened, a bill of exception was presented to the presiding judge, embodying the above facts, which was signed by the judge. Defendant also made a motion to arrest the judgment, based on the facts above stated, which motion was overruled by the court. A motion for a new trial was made and overruled, and the court imposed a fine of $100 and sentenced the defendant to confinement in the county jail for a term of thirty days.

In our opinion the court erred. The defendant, by the affirmative act of the court, was denied her constitutional right to be present at every stage of her trial. It may be said that the verdict of the jury was the important event of the trial, and concerned the defendant more than all of the precedent proceedings.

The argument is made that the defendant was not prejudiced by the error of the court. This is a stock argument, so often repudiated by this court that we deem it unnecessary to comment upon it in this case.

True, the defendant was on bond, but it is clear that she had not forfeited her bond by voluntarily absenting herself; on the contrary, she was absent by the express permission of the court.

In Garman v. State, 66 Miss. 196, 5 So.

Note.—As to necessity of presence of accused at rendition of verdict for misdemeanor, see annotation following this case, post, 346.
L.R.A.1917B.

385, is announced the rule and its application.

Reversed and remanded.

Stevens, J., dissenting:

The record in this case affirmatively shows that the city of Tupelo introduced sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding beyond every reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty of the misdemeanor here charged. The defendant offered no testimony whatever, and therefore I presume she has no defense on the facts. The jury reached the only verdict which under the law and facts of this case would have been proper. This verdict, it is true, was returned into court in the absence of both the accused and her counsel. I am perfectly willing to concede that the defendant had a right to be present, and this right the court could not wilfully or arbitrarily deny to her. In this case, however, the circuit court, after concluding the business of the day and after announcing that all parties and witnesses would be discharged until 8:30 o'clock the following morning, thereafter reconvened his court for the purpose of receiving the verdict of the jury then deliberating upon this case. When the learned circuit judge adjourned his court, he, of course, had no intention of denying, and did not thereby necessarily deny, this defendant her privilege to tarry and determine for herself whether the jury would report. The record shows that the adjournment for the day was taken at 4 o'clock P. M. and, without lingering to determine whether the jury would report, the accused left for her home, and the circuit judge did the very natural and humane thing of accepting this verdict in the absence of the accused, rather than keep the jury locked up overnight. The defendant in this case does not say by her bill of exceptions that she desired or intended to poll the jury, and she does not by this appeal attempt to challenge or impeach the verdict; that is to say, she does not even now contend that the verdict as returned was not the unanimous verdict of the jury. She simply relies upon the technical proposition that she was not present when the verdict was returned, and this irregularly my brethren have dignified by classing it as a fatal and reversible error. To this I cannot assent. It must be borne in mind that this is a misdemeanor case, and not a felony. In such cases the weight of authority sustains the view that the presence of the defendant at the reception of the verdict is not necessary. "In prosecutions for misdemeanor the weight of authority seems to be that it is not necessary that the defendant should be personally present at the reception of the verdict." 22 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 928, and the authorities cited in the footnote. The case is altogether different from that of Garman v. State, 66 Miss. 196, 5 So. 385, relied upon in the majority opinion. In the Garman Case the accused was denied the right to be present during the trial simply because he was a witness in the case. In that case the court denied the accused the constitutional right of being confronted by the witnesses against him, as also the right to conduct his defense. In Price v. State, 36 Miss. 531, 72 Am. Dec. 195, our court on this point said: "The right of the defendant to be present proceeds upon the presumption that he is in custody, and has no power to be present, unless ordered by the court to be brought into court. But under our law he may waive that right. If he is not in custody, so as to be deprived of the power to attend, it would seem that the reason of the rule as to his right to be present would fail; for he is voluntarily absent when he ought to be present, and cannot complain of the consequence of his own voluntary act. His voluntary absence must be taken to be a waiver of his right to be present. . . . Hence, though the verdict in his absence was irregular, so far as his being present, and in the power of the court, to submit to its judgment, yet no prejudice was done to his rights, and he can take no benefit from his own illegal act."

So said our court in a felony case, and there is a vast difference between misdemeanors and felonies. The right of the accused to be present at the reception of a verdict in a misdemeanor case is certainly not a constitutional right. Our court has held squarely that it is not a constitutional right even in a felony case, for this court, speaking through Whitfield, Chief Justice, in Sherrod v. State, 93 Miss. 774, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 509, 47 So. 554, observes that "the right to be present when the verdict is received is not a constitutional right, but a very sacred legal right, which may, as indicated, be waived under the conditions stated in the first proposition."

So it is then, that even though appellant were denied the right to be present, this was not the denial of a right guaranteed by the Constitution, and the court certainly had jurisdiction to proceed. In this case the presence of the bond should be regarded as the presence of the accused. This court has recently held that the defendant on bond in a misdemeanor case must attend upon the regular term of the court, and that, even though such defendant attended court two or three days and had temporarily left the court room to attend to business when his case was called, he has no right to complain at the action of the trial court in proceeding to the trial of his case. Williams v. State, 103 Miss. 147, 60 So. 73. My brethren, I fear, have reversed this rule by requiring the court to keep up with the defendant in such case, instead of requiring the defendant to keep up with the court. In the case of State v. Shepard, an early Iowa case reported in 10 Iowa, 126, it was held that "when the defendant is convicted of an assault and battery, though charged with a higher offense, his presence when the verdict is returned is not required." "In trials for inferior misdemeanors, a verdict may be given in the absence of the respondent (who was defendant)." Sawyer v. Joiner, 16 Vt. 499.

The same holding is declared in the early case of Warren v. State, 19 Ark. 214, 68 Am. Dec. 214. In the notes to this last case I find this statement: "The verdict of a jury in minor offenses or misdemeanors may be rendered and received in the absence of the accused" (citing several authorities).

As a practical proposition this procedure is more reasonable. Any other holding will necessitate twelve tired jurors and their bailiffs to spend many nights in the very uninviting quarters usually prepared for jurors in our courthouses. Take the present case as an illustration: Was it not more consonant with reason and common sense to receive the verdict of the jury in this case and thereby accord to the several jurors the society and shelter of their own homes, rather than keep them incarcerated all night in order that a guilty "blind tigress" might have the satisfaction of hearing the report of the jury?

The case is essentially different from that of Corbin v. State, 99 Miss. 486, 55 So. 43, wherein Judge Anderson speaking for the court, observes that "the appellant had the constitutional right to be present when tried." In the Corbin Case the court tried the defendant while she was ill and in her absence. Mr. William E. Mikell, a law professor and writer of high standing, makes the following observation in reference to the verdict: "When the jury is ready to report, they announce the fact to the officer in charge. He informs the court, which is supposed to be always open for the purpose of receiving a verdict, any hour of the day or night, including holidays and Sundays," and cites in this connection State v. Atkinson, 104 La. 570, 29 So. 279; 3 Mod. Am. Law, p. 328. If this be a correct statement,—and I think it is,—then every defendant on bond should take notice of this fact and place himself in position to co-operate with the circuit judge and officers of the court in receiving the verdict. It is said by Hughes, District Judge, in United States v. Shepherd, 1 Hughes, 520, Fed. Cas. No. 16,274, that "the cases cited by prisoner's counsel only go to the extent of ruling that verdicts in trials for felony must be rendered in the presence of the prisoner. They do not invalidate verdicts rendered in the absence of the accused in cases of misdemeanor. . . .

The old technicalities of the criminal practice have been gradually discarded, as the necessity for them decreased and finally ceased; and now the rules of the criminal practice are as little arbitrary and technical, and as reasonable and just, as they are in civil proceedings."

In the footnotes on page 686 of 12 Cyc. the statement is made that "at common law a privy verdict may be given in misdemeanors and in the absence of defendant (Bacon, Abr. title 'Verdict'; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 636), and by consent of the parties, a verdict may be delivered at the judge's house, although beyond the limits of the county in which the trial was had (1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 636)."

But conceding the right of the defendant to be present and poll the jury, the irregularity in this case was harmless error for which this case should not be reversed. It did not prejudice the rights of the accused. There being, then, no invasion of her constitutional right, and the error assigned under the facts of this case being harmless, this case should be affirmed.

Annotation—Necessity of presence of accused at rendition of verdict for misdemeanor.

This note does not include cases where the absence was voluntary, or where the accused waived the question of his absence.

For waiver of presence of one charged with a misdemeanor at time of receiving verdict, see the note to State v. Waymire, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 56.

For waiver of presence of accused at L.R.A.1917B.

time of receiving verdict upon trial for felony, see the notes to State v. Way, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 603; State v. Gorman, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 306; and Frank v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 817.

The cases on this subject are in some apparent confusion, chiefly for the reason that some of them are based on constitutional or statutory grounds which are not clearly referred to; also to some extent for the reason that it is not always entirely clear whether the absence was voluntary or not. There is a further difficulty in statutes permitting verdicts to be taken in the absence of the defendant, as to whether they apply in cases of involuntary absence. Speaking generally, on the one hand, it seems clear that at common law a verdict in ordinary misdemeanor might be taken in the absence of the defendant; but on the other hand, the modern American courts are reluctant to take any step whatever in the involuntary absence of the accused.

Theory that presence is not necessary
—at common law.

At common law, the presence of accused is not necessary at rendition of verdict of misdemeanor. Rex v. Ladsingham (1671) T. Raym. 193, 82 Eng. Reprint, 101. The same was held in the following cases, where, however, it does not appear that the absence was involuntary: Jackson v. State (1887) 49 N. J. L. 252, 9 Atl. 740, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 80 (affirmed on opinion below in (1887) 50 N. J. L. 175, 17 Atl. 1104); Holliday v. People (1847) 9 Ill. 111; People v. Brown (1916) 273 Ill. 169, 112 N. E. 462. See also, as stating the rule in a case where it appears that the absence was voluntary, Sawyer v. Joiner (1844) 16 Vt. 497.

In Rex v. Ladsingham (Eng.) supra, it was held proper to give a privy verdict in misdemeanor, the court distinguishing cases concerning life, as in felony, because there the jury are commanded to look upon the prisoner while they give their verdict.

Holliday v. People (Ill.) supra, holding that a verdict in misdemeanor was properly received in the absence of the accused, seems to have been decided upon the common-law rule, though it does not appear that the absence was involuntary. The Holliday Case was cited in People v. Brown (Ill.) supra, where the verdict was rendered in the absence of the defendant, who was on bail, and of his attorney, and where the court said: "According to the common law, a defendant accused of a misdemeanor may be found guilty in his absence."

In Jackson v. State (N. J.) supra, where it was claimed that the verdict in a misdemeanor case was taken in the absence of the accused, who was on bail, and of his counsel, the reasons for the absence not appearing, it was held that there was no error. The court said inter L.R.A.1917B.

alia: "The criminal code of this state wholly ignores the distinction between felonies and misdemeanors. Statutory offenses, if designated at all, are called in the Crimes Act either misdemeanors or high misdemeanors. Rev. p. 226. Assault with an intent to commit murder—the offense of which the accused was convicted—is styled a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment at hard labor not exceeding ten years, or by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or both. Rev. p. 241, § 78. The offense was a misdemeanor at common law, and retains that character in the statute, and is punishable, as at common law, by fine and imprisonment. It is such an offense as neither in species nor in the character of the punishment required the presence of the accused when the verdict was rendered, as essential to the legality of the verdict."

In the United States v. Shepherd (1875) 1 Hughes, 520, Fed. Cas. No. 16,274, it is held to be no error to receive a verdict for a misdemeanor, punishable by from five to fifteen years' imprisonment and by fine, when the prisoner was in jail, though his counsel was present. The court discusses the general question, observes that the counsel did not ask that the prisoner be brought in but that they did all that he could have done, but does not state that they asked the jury to be polled. The court further states, but whether as governing the question or not is not clear, that "the Code of Virginia (chap. 201, § 25, p. 1243) allows the trial of misdemeanor to proceed, provided a summons has been served, whether a capias has been returned executed, or not executed, and whether the accused be present in person or not. In such matters the practice in the courts of the state furnishes the rule of practice in this court."

In State v. Miller (1912) 87 Kan. 454, 124 Pac. 361, where the facts on the point do not appear, it is said: "The offense of which the defendant was convicted is a misdemeanor, and there was no error in receiving the verdict during his absence from the court room." The court does not state whether this decision was at common law. The statute provided: "Nor can any person indicted or informed against for any other offense [than felony] be tried unless he be present either personally or by his counsel."

—under statute.

In People v. Ebner (1863) 23 Cal. 158, it was held that the court had no power to forfeit a recognizance when the defendant in misdemeanor appeared by attorney, who offered to plead not guilty, the statute providing that a verdict in misdemeanor might be rendered in the absence of the defendant.

In Gage v. State (1880) 9 Tex. App. 259, it was held that the verdict was properly received when the defendant and his counsel were both absent, the statute providing that in a misdemeanor the verdict may be received and read in the absence of the defendant.

So it was held to be no error in misdemeanor to receive the verdict and discharge the jury while the defendant was in jail and his counsel absent. Ripsey v. State (1904) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 81 S. W. 531.

It has been further held in Texas that a verdict in misdemeanor cases may be received in the absence of the defendant although the punishment may be imprisonment, and that the following two statutes are to be thus harmonized: "In all prosecutions for felonies, the defendant must be personally present on the trial, and he must likewise be present in all cases of indictment or information for misdemeanors where the punishment or any part thereof is imprisonment in jail." "In all felony cases the accused must be present when the verdict is returned into court, but in misdemeanor cases the verdict may be received in the absence of the defendant." Wyatt v. State (1906) 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 193, 94 S. W. 219 (followed in Booher v. State (1916) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 188 S. W. 977; followed also in Loving v. State (1907) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 100 S. W. 154, reversed on rehearing on another ground). In the Wyatt Case the court said: "The legislative intent was to draw a distinction between what is termed a trial and the reception of the verdict at the hands of the jury."

Theory that presence is necessary.

There are, however, several cases in which it has been held that the presence of the accused is necessary at rendition of verdict in misdemeanor, in the absence of waiver.

Wells v. State (1906) 147 Ala. 140, 41 So. 630; Stewart v. State (1906) 147 Ala. 137, 41 So. 631 (obiter); Lyons v. State (1909) 7 Ga. App. 50, 66 S. E. 149; State v. Callahan (1880) 55 Iowa, 364, 7 N. W. 603; State v. Muir (1884) 32 Kan. 481, 4 Pac. 812, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 599; WOODS v. TUPELO, ante, 344; Hunt v. Tupelo (1916) — Miss. —, 72 So. 895.
L.R.A.1917B.

In State v. Callahan (1880) 55 Iowa, 364, 7 N. W. 603, the jury, without any consent or order, sealed up their verdict, handed it to the officer, and separated.

In State v. Muir (1884) 32 Kan. 481, 4 Pac. 812, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 599, the jury rendered their verdict to the court on Sunday, in the absence of the accused and his counsel, and without their having been called; and at the opening of the court on the following day, the accused asked the court to recall the jury and allow him the opportunity of having the jury polled in his presence. This the court denied. The defendant also moved that the verdict be set aside and stricken from the files; that the jury be recalled, and directed to return a proper verdict,—all of which motions, as well as the motion for a new trial, were overruled, and exceptions taken; and on appeal the judgment was reversed.

WOODS v. TUPELO, ante, 344, was followed in Hunt v. Tupelo (1916) — Miss. —, 72 So. 895, where the court reversed a conviction upon a verdict, where it appeared from the record that the jury in the lower court returned a verdict of "guilty" to the clerk after court had adjourned for the noon hour, and in the absence of the judge, the defendant, and her counsel, without any agreement of the defendant or her counsel that the verdict might be returned in such manner, or any agreement whatever with reference to the return of the verdict by the jury; nor did the defendant in any other way waive her presence when the verdict was returned.

Most of these cases, on examination, are grounded on the local written law. Thus, State v. Callahan (Iowa) and State v. Muir (Kan.) supra, rest on the right to poll the jury, which is statutory; and the decision on the question in Wells v. State (Ala.) supra, is probably to be referred to the same reason, particularly in view of what is said in Stewart v. State (Ala.) supra. The Lyons Case (Ga.) supra, seems founded on the constitutional provision that "no person shall be deprived of the right to prosecute or defend his own cause in any of the courts of this state, in person, by attorney or both," which has been reenacted in the Penal Code.

The two Mississippi cases, however, are rested (see WOODS v. TUPELO) generally on the "constitutional right to be present at every stage" of the trial, without referring to any particular enactment.

There are two other cases which may be referred to where it is not clear whether the offense tried was a felony or not. In the North Carolina case the decision seems to have been on the general right of the accused to be present throughout; the Connecticut case gives no reason.

In State v. Hurlbut (1789) 1 Root (Conn.) 90, a prosecution for counterfeiting money, not characterized as a felony or misdemeanor, the court refused to receive the verdict where the accused was out on bail and did not appear when called, stating he must appear, "or there will be no propriety in receiving the verdict."

In State v. Bray (1872) 67 N. C. 283 (larceny, with a count for receiving), the verdict was guilty of receiving stolen goods knowing them to be stolen, and it was held that a verdict in a case subject to punishment in the penitentiary cannot be sustained, when rendered out of court, to the judge at chambers, in the absence of the prisoners and their counsel, and entered on the record, on the next day, in the absence of the jury and the prisoners. (Smith, Ch. J., states, in State v. Kelly (1887) 97 N. C. 411, 2 Am. St. Rep. 299, 2 S. E. 185, that "in the case of State v. Bray (N. C.) supra, the conviction was of an aggravated misdemeanor, punished with the same severity as the associated charge, of which the defendant was acquitted;" and the statutes seem to suggest that larceny was not then a felony.)

In Davis v. State (1860) 14 Ind. 358, in holding there was no error in receiving the verdict in the absence of the accused and his counsel, as it was voluntary, the court refers to the defendant's right of polling the jury, "or taking any other step that he might desire, upon the rendition of the verdict."

Record.

A verdict of misdemeanor will not be set aside as given in the absence of the accused, where contrary to the record. (Suggested in Rex v. Ladsingham (1871) T. Raym. 193, 83 Eng. Reprint, 101, supra.) An inference that a prisoner was not present in court, at the time the verdict of a jury against him was received, will not be permitted to overcome the legal presumption that everything was rightly done in court. (Welsh v. State (1890) 126 Ind. 71, 9 L.R.A. 664, 25 N. E. 883.) The presumption obtains that when the presence of a defendant on a misdemeanor trial is once shown it continues until the verdict is received. (Feddern v. State (1907) 79 Neb. 651, 113 N. W. 127.)

—statute.

In Missouri, in misdemeanor cases, it is provided by the statute that where the presence of the defendant is once shown by the record, it will be presumed "in the absence of all evidence in the record to the contrary that he was present during the whole trial," and thus at the verdict. State v. Finley (1911) 162 Mo. App. 134, 144 S. W. 120.

Miscellaneous.

In Davis v. State (1860) 14 Ind. 358, supra, it was held that there was no error in receiving the verdict in the absence of the accused, who was not called, nor his counsel, where the court directed the jury to cause the bailiff to ring the courthouse bell whenever they should have agreed upon a verdict, and informed them that upon the ringing of the bell the judge would appear in court and receive their verdict. The court then adjourned until nine o'clock next morning. About seven o'clock the next morning, the jury having agreed, the courthouse bell was rung, and the judge repaired to the court room and received the verdict.

In Gaussin v. State (1910) 174 Ind. 583, 92 N. E. 651, it was held that there was no second jeopardy in a conviction entered in a verdict for the state under these circumstances, disclosed by the record: When the jury returned their verdict, the defendant was not present in court. His attorney was there, as was also the prosecuting attorney. The verdict was handed to the clerk, read in open court, the jury duly polled by the court, and each answered that the verdict as read was his verdict. The absence of the defendant being noted, the prosecuting attorney objected to the receiving of the verdict, whereupon the court requested the clerk to hand the verdict back to the jury; which being done, the jury was directed to retire to its room therewith. The defendant was at once brought into court; thereupon the jury was again brought in, and presented to the court as its verdict the same document, or verdict, as before, which was received by the court as the verdict in the case, and the jury was then discharged. The court said: "There was but one receipt of the verdict by the court. Its order to the jury to return to its room with the paper first presented was a refusal by the court, for a sufficient reason, to receive the verdict at that time."

It is proper when no judgment has been entered to move for the setting aside of the verdict. Lyons v. State (1909) 7 Ga. App. 50, 66 S. E. 149, supra.

This note does not include the general question, whether trials for misdemeanors may be had in the absence of the defendant, but reference may be had, for example, to the following cases, where that question was considered: Slocovitch v. State (1871) 46 Ala. 227; Henderson v. Murfreesboro (1915) 119 Ark. 603, 178 S. W. 912; Lawn v. People (1888) 11 Colo. 343, 18 Pac. 281; State v. Young (1892) 86 Iowa, 406, 53 N. W. 272; Steele v. Com. (1835) 3 Dana (Ky.) 84; Canada v. Com. (1840) 9 Dana (Ky.) 304; Com. v. Cheek (1863) 1 Duv. (Ky.) 26; Sharp v. Com. (1895) 16 Ky. L. Rep. 840, 30 S. W. 414; Payne v. Com. (1895) 16 Ky. L. Rep. 839, 30 S. W. 416; Walston v. Com. (1907) 31 Ky. L. Rep. 378, 102 S. W. 275, on rehearing (1907) 32 Ky. L. Rep. 535, 106 S. W. 224; Ehrlich v. Com. (1909) 131 Ky. 680, 115 S. W. 797; Veal v. Com. (1915) 162 Ky. 250, 172 S. W. 501; Corbin v. State (1911) 99 Miss. 486, 55 So.

43; Haggett v. State (1911) 99 Miss. 844, 56 So. 172; State v. Peacock (1887) 50 N. J. L. 34, 11 Atl. 270; People v. Wilkes (1850) 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 105; Stuart v. State (1911) 6 Okla. Crim. Rep. 27, 115 Pac. 1026; Anderson v. State (1911) 6 Okla. Crim. Rep. 606, 116 Pac. 1134; State v. Lucker (1893) 40 S. C. 549; State v. Spray (1906) 74 S. C. 443, 54 S. E. 600; State v. Rabens (1907) 79 S. C. 542, 60 S. E. 442, 1110; Love v. State (1913) 71 Tex. Crim. Rep. 259, 158 S. W. 532; Shiffett v. Com. (1894) 90 Va. 386, 18 S. E. 838.

In Garman v. State (1888) 66 Miss. 196, 5 So. 385, cited in the opinions in WOODS v. TUPELO, ante, 344, the absence was not, apparently, at the time of rendering the verdict.

It may be noted that the quotation in the dissenting opinion in the principal case from State v. Shepard (1859) 10 Iowa, 126, was an obiter statement and made on the authority of Hughes v. State (1857) 4 Iowa, 554, where it was held that by statute judgment could be rendered in misdemeanor in the defendant's absence. B. B. B.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

RELIABLE MUTUAL HAIL INSURANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

LIZZIE ROGERS, Special Admr., etc., of John Rogers, Deceased.

(— Okla. —, 160 Pac. 914.)

Pleading — wrongful attachment.

1. In a petition to recover damages for the wrongful issue of an attachment, it is not necessary to aver the want of probable cause for the suing out of the attachment, or a determination of the action in which the attachment was issued.

For other cases, see Pleading, II. 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Damages — wrongful attachment.

2. Actual damages only for mere wrongful attachment may be recovered in an action against the plaintiff therein, independent of the undertaking required by § 4070, Laws 1893 (§ 4814, Rev. Laws 1910), and without allegation or proof that the same

Headnotes by BOWLES, C.

Note.—The want of probable cause to believe the alleged ground of attachment as a condition of an action for a wrongful attachment is treated in the Vesper v. Crane Co. L.R.A.1915A, 541.

The right to exemplary damages in an action for malicious prosecution or for abuse of process in suing out attachment for col-was sued out maliciously or without probable cause.

For other cases, see Damages, III. g, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Pleading — wrongful attachment — punitive damages.

3. If exemplary or punitive damages are sought in an action for wrongful attachment against the party instituting the attachment proceedings, both malice and want of probable cause must be alleged and proved.

For other cases, see Pleading, II. 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 4, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court for Kingfisher County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for alleged wrongful attachment of certain property. Affirmed on condition.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Parker & Simons and F. L. Boynton for plaintiff in error.

lection of debt only is discussed in the note to International Harvester Co. v. Iowa Hardware Co. 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 272.

For loss of profits as element of damages for wrongful attachment, see notes to Wallace v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 52 L.R.A. 33, and Wellington v. Spencer, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 470.

Messrs. Bradley & Bradley, for defendant in error:

Plaintiff was entitled to actual damages by merely showing that the attachment was wrongful; in order to entitle her to exemplary damages, she would have to show that the action was maliciously started or maintained.

McLaughlin v. Davis, 14 Kan. 168; Western News Co. v. Wilmarth, 33 Kan. 510, 6 Pac. 786; Wiley v. Keokuk, 6 Kan. 94; Hoge v. Norton, 22 Kan. 374; Winstead v. Hulme, 32 Kan. 568, 4 Pac. 994; Dow v. Julien, 32 Kan. 576, 4 Pac. 1000, 4 Cyc. 853, 874; Reed v. Samuels, 22 Tex. 114, 73 Am. Dec. 253; Clark v. Wilcox, 31 Tex. 322; Brown v. Tyler, 34 Tex. 168; Hughes v. Brooks, 36 Tex. 379; Harris v. Finberg, 46 Tex. 96; Shaw v. Brown, 41 Tex. 449; Rice v. Miller, 70 Tex. 613, 8 Am. St. Rep. 630, 8 S. W. 317; Ellis v. Bonner, 80 Tex. 198, 26 Am. St. Rep. 731, 15 S. W. 1045; Gregory Grocery Co. v. Beaton, 10 Kan. App. 256, 62 Pac. 732; Tootle v. Kent, 12 Okla. 674, 73 Pac. 310; Cole v. Noerdlinger, 22 Wash. 51, 60 Pac. 57; Overton v. Simon Furniture Mfg. Co. — Okla. —, 151 Pac. 215; Morris v. Shew, 29 Kan. 661; Schwartzberg v. Central Ave. State Bank, 84 Kan. 681, 115 Pac. 110.

Bowles, C., filed the following opinion:

This is an action commenced by defendants in error against the plaintiff in error to recover damages for wrongful attachment. A complete history of the case is as follows:

Plaintiff in error, defendant below, instituted proceedings against defendants in error, plaintiffs below, jointly as husband and wife, to recover judgment upon a promissory note signed by the husband alone. Attachment proceedings were caused to issue, and a crop of cotton growing upon the homestead of defendants in error was attached. Garnishment proceedings were also instituted against defendants in error jointly, and money was garnished in the name of the husband. The homestead was in the name of the wife. It seems that no proceedings were taken to dissolve the attachment. The main case, however, was determined after two trials in favor of defendants in error. Plaintiff in error appealed to the district court, where a trial was had, and again judgment was rendered for defendants in error. After the termination of the suit in the district court of Kingfisher county, the action before us was instituted in the district court of Kingfisher county for wrongful attachment, and defendants in error recovered a judgment; hence this appeal.

The errors complained of by plaintiff in L.R.A.1917B.

error, and relied upon for a reversal of this case, will be considered in the order referred to in plaintiff in error's brief. Plaintiff in error complains of instruction No. 13, given by the court, wherein he instructs the jury in substance that if the attachment proceedings were wrongful, the defendants would be entitled to recover such damages as were the proximate result of such wrongful attachment, and also told the jury in the same instruction that the want of probable cause was not a necessary element in determining whether or not the attachment proceedings were wrongful.

From our investigation of plaintiffs' amended petition, we find that they predicated their cause of action upon the wrongfulness of the attachment proceedings. It is true that an allegation appears in the amended petition that the affidavit for attachment was sworn to without any probable cause therefor. The attachment affidavit, however, was not the only basis of the suit. The suit is based upon the wrongful attachment, including all the proceedings which brought about and caused an unlawful and wrongful taking and converting of the property of defendants in error, and the petition, taken as a whole, states a cause of action for wrongful attachment. The court, however, gave instructions which would lead us to believe that he considered the case one for malicious prosecution; consequently the instruction complained of squarely contradicts the instruction given by the court upon the theory that the cause of action was one for malicious prosecution; in other words, he tells the jury in instruction No. 1: "In order for the plaintiff to recover it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove each and every one of the following four things which are essential to sustaining their cause of action as set forth in the petition: First. That the attachment and garnishment process was sworn out and levied on the plaintiffs' property and money by the defendant. Second. That this was done with malice. Third. That it has been legally terminated in favor of the plaintiff. Fourth. That the institution of these proceedings was without probable cause."

This can be accounted for upon one hypothesis alone: The vigilant and determined effort on the part of the plaintiff in error to transform a case of wrongful attachment into one for malicious prosecution. In a suit for malicious prosecution, four elements must combine: The termination of the main case, damages, malice, and want of probable cause. In a suit for wrongful attachment it was only necessary to allege that the attachment was wrongful and the resulting damages. In the event exemplary or punitive damages are sought, malice and want of probable cause are necessary allegations.

It is strenuously insisted by counsel for plaintiff in error, and not without authority, that when an attachment is sued out and levied upon the property of the defendant in an action, and the plaintiff therein has failed to maintain his action, two remedies, and only two, are open to the attachment defendant; he may sue upon the undertaking on attachment, or maintain an action for malicious prosecution. We cannot agree with this contention. The dissolution of the attachment proceedings gives the right of action, and it is not necessary to wait until the termination of the main action before instituting proceedings for redress. This being the law, upon the dissolution of the attachment, the aggrieved party may elect to sue upon the bond or waive the bond and sue the attaching plaintiff for wrongful attachment. If the proceedings were malicious and instituted without probable cause, the defendant can await the termination of the main action and sue for malicious prosecution.

Justice Brewer, in McLaughlin v. Davis, 14 Kan. 168, speaking of the defendant's right to sue for wrongful attachment and to sue attaching plaintiff, uses this language: "It is insisted that 'the petition should have averred want of probable cause for the suing out of the order, and the determination of the attachment suit.' Neither of these is necessary. A party is entitled to an attachment only when certain facts exist. . . . If the facts do not exist, the attachment is wrongfully issued, and the party causing it to issue is liable for all the damages actually sustained. Nor is it necessary in such case to set out or sue on the undertaking. If the surety in the undertaking is liable, a fortiori the principal is, and that, not by reason of the undertaking, but of the act for which it was given. Nor need the determination of the attachment suit be averred. The attachment is but ancillary to the action in which it was issued. It stands or falls without affecting the progress or termination of" the main case. "A party may have a just cause of action, but no right to an attachment; nor can he justify a wrongful attachment by a valid action."

This court, in Overton v. Sigmon Furniture Mfg. Co. — Okla. —, 151 Pac. 215, has held:

"An action at common law may be maintained for wrongful attachment against the plaintiff therein when the attachment is sued out maliciously and without probable cause, in which case, if the pleadings and evidence warrant it, both actual and punitive or exemplary damages may be recovered.

"In such case, by reason of § 4070, Stat. 1893 (§ 4814, Rev. Laws 1910), actual damages only may be recovered for the mere wrongfulness of the attachment and without regard to either malice or probable cause.

"Actual damages only for mere wrongful attachment may be recovered in an action against the plaintiff therein independent of the undertaking required by § 4070, Stat. 1893 (§ 4814, Rev. Laws 1910), and without allegation or proof that the same was sued out maliciously or without probable cause."

We therefore conclude that the instruction complained of stated the law correctly, and that the giving of the same was not error. In coming to this conclusion we have thoroughly considered the authorities cited by plaintiff in error sustaining the opposite view, but we see no reason why we should depart from the former holdings of this court.

The instructions of the court, however, predicated upon the theory that the action was one for malicious prosecution, were erroneous, but plaintiff in error is not in a position to complain of the giving of them, because they were given at the request of plaintiff in error, and, under our theory of the case, these instructions, if followed by the jury, had the effect to add an additional burden to the plaintiffs below, which could in no wise adversely affect plaintiff in error, but would militate in its favor.

Plaintiff in error next complains that the cause of action of defendant in error was barred by the statute of limitations, citing our statute that "actions on a foreign judgment, libel, slander, assault, battery, malicious prosecution, and false imprisonment, must be instituted within one year after the cause of action accrues."

This being an action for wrongful attachment, and not for malicious prosecution, the statute of limitations would not run in any event for a period of three years, and three years not having elapsed from the termination of the attachment until the suit for wrongful attachment was instituted in the district court, the statute has not run, and the contention of plaintiff in error in this regard is without avail. This being the law, a construction of § 5397, Harris-Day Code, pertaining to appeals from justice court, is unnecessary in determining whether or not, by virtue of the appeal, the attachment proceedings were taken to the district court. Under the evidence and facts adduced at the trial of the case at bar, plaintiff in error acts upon the assumption, when the appeal was taken in the main case, the attachment proceedings were also appealed. The constable, having charge of the property, continued to retain it until the case was disposed of in the district court, and no instructions were received by him from the justice of the peace or plaintiff in error here to release said property; the damages suffered and the expense incurred in defending the attachment were the same and the liability of plaintiff in error unchanged.

Plaintiff in error also urges that the court erred in permitting evidence to go to the jury relative to the damage to the cotton growing upon the homestead of defendants in error; said homestead being in the name of the wife. That plaintiffs below could not sue jointly for damages to the cotton, even though the attachment was wrongful. Under our law, the homestead is for the benefit of the family, and the husband, in this instance, being a member of the family, and having possession of the cotton by reason of his homestead relation, and the fact that he had produced it, as shown by the evidence, inclines us to the opinion that he had such a special interest, along with his wife, as to permit him to be joined with her to recover for the damages complained of.

Instructions numbered 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 16, given by the court, are claimed to be erroneous and prejudicial to the rights of the plaintiff in error. Instructions Nos. 9, 11, and 12 were given by the court, we imagine, to counteract the theory maintained by the defendant in the court below that the appeal from the justice of the peace having been erroneously taken to the district court, the district court having no jurisdiction of appeals from justices of the peace at the time, was void, and the plaintiff in error could not be held for damages accruing to the defendant in error after the matter had been appealed to the district court, and the contention of plaintiff in error that the suit for wrongful attachment must be predicated upon the bond given in the attachment proceedings in the first instance.

Plaintiff in error, having invoked the jurisdiction of the district court, and caused a trial to be had therein, is estopped from denying the liability for injuries done by reason of its wrongful attachment. Instructions of this character are often necessary, that the jury may be advised in such a way as to give them a correct understanding of the law of the case, and in order to prevent them from giving an improper effect to the evidence and argument of counsel. In the same connection, instruction No. 10 advises the jury of the admitted facts in the case. We fail to see how this instruction could operate to prejudice the rights of plaintiff in error.

Plaintiff in error also complains of instruction No. 16, which reads as follows: "You are instructed that attorneys' fees and expenses, incident to the trial of said former proceedings in attachment the fair, reasonable value of the time expended by reason of the same and all property lost or destroyed by reason of the same, if wrongful, and while such property was under attachment, are elements of actual damages; in the event you find that the defendant company maliciously caused the issuance, levy, and maintenance of said attachment in said former proceedings, and that the plaintiffs herein suffered a loss of credit by reason of such malicious conduct on the part of the defendant company, you will allow the plaintiffs damages for such loss of credit."

In order, however, to discuss instruction No. 16, it will be necessary to understand instruction No. 15, which reads as follows: "You are also instructed that if you find that the order of attachment and said attachment proceedings were sued out or maintained maliciously and without probable cause therefor, you may also award to the plaintiff such exemplary damages as may be just and reasonable, in addition to such actual damages as you may allow them under the instructions heretofore given you by the court. Exemplary damages, also called vindictive or punitive damages, are given by way of example and by way of punishing the defendant."

For wrongful attachment, plaintiffs below were entitled to have the jury instructed, as a measure of damages, that they were entitled to attorneys' fees, loss of time, loss of credit, and the reasonable value of the property destroyed or taken under the attachment and of which they were ultimately deprived. The instruction complained of tells the jury that before it could consider loss of credit, they must find that the prosecution was carried on maliciously. This instruction was wrong, as to the necessity of showing malice in order to recover for loss of credit, and in not admonishing the jury that it could not consider remote, speculative, or conjectural damages; following Tootle v. Kent, 12 Okla. 674, 73 Pac. 310. But the instructions militated to the advantage of plaintiff in error, and it will not be heard to complain of the error here. Instruction No. 15 was a correct statement of the law, so far as exemplary or punitive damages are concerned; the better line of decisions holding that even in a suit for wrongful attachment, before punitive or exemplary damages can be claimed, both malice and want of probable cause must not only be proven, but pleaded.

The theory of instruction No. 18, so far as the item of loss of credit is concerned, is based upon malice. The jury was instructed that it must first find malice before the loss of credit can be taken into consideration. We have examined the evidence and fail to find where the defendant suffered any loss of credit other than in his own imagination, and we do not believe the instruction was proper, unless there had been some evidence upon which to base it. However, the instruction seems to have been given upon the theory that unless there was malice and lack of probable cause, loss of credit could not be taken into consideration; this being true, we are strongly inclined to the opinion that both the court and jury had in mind that loss of credit could only be considered in awarding punitive or exemplary damages.

The jury was directed to specify the amount of exemplary and punitive damages in its verdict. This they did, and returned a verdict in the sum of $280 for punitive damages, and we believe the punitive damages as returned by the jury, were based upon the item of damages for loss of credit. There being no evidence before the jury that would justify the court in submitting to them the item of loss of credit as an element of damages, the $280 judgment for punitive damages should be remitted. Complaint is made on the part of counsel for plaintiff in error that counsel for defendant in error in the court below, throughout the entire trial and proceedings, were insinuating, captious, and, by a series of questions, both in direct and cross-examination, were endeavoring to prejudice the jury against the plaintiff in error because it was an insurance company and a corporation.

A reading of the record convinces us of this truth, and such proceedings should not be countenanced, and the trial judge, when such conduct is called to his attention, should be prompt in admonishing counsel of their duty in that regard; yet we cannot say in this case that the jury was influenced in its verdict on account of such conduct.

Upon the whole, we believe that the verdict of the jury, with the modification made in this opinion, does substantial justice. That the attachment in the first instance was wrongful, cannot be gainsaid. The verdict of $920 as actual damages suffered by the defendants in error on account of the wrongful attachment included the expense of counsel, witnesses, loss of time for two trials before the justice of the peace of Hennessey township, and the trial in the district court of Kingfisher county. The defendants in error were required to travel long distances and appear in court several times. In addition to this, 20 acres of cotton was attached, and, according to all of the evidence, entirely destroyed. The testimony of several witnesses, qualified to give evidence of the value of the cotton destroyed, estimated the same to be worth from $500 to $700, after paying the expenses of picking and hauling to market. We believe the judgment, under the evidence, was no more than a fair and reasonable estimate of the actual damages sustained.

Finding no prejudicial error in the record, except as indicated, we recommend that upon the defendants in error agreeing to remit $280 of the judgment, the cause be in all things affirmed. In the event defendants in error refuse or fail to remit the said $280, we recommend that the cause be reversed and remanded, with directions to grant a new trial.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

Petition for rehearing denied November 14, 1916.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (In Banc.)

STATE OF WASHINGTON EX REL. PORT OF SEATTLE et al.

v.

SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF
WASHINGTON IN AND FOR KING COUNTY et al.

(— Wash. —, 160 Pac. 755.)

Municipal corporations — use of public funds — defeat of statute.

A corporation created by the legislature for governmental and business purposes has no power to use public funds raised by taxation to secure a nullification, by means of a referendum, of a statute increasing the number of its commissioners and limiting the amount of its bonded indebtedness.
L.R.A.1917B.

For other cases, see Municipal Corporations,
II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 4, 1916.)

Note. — For power of municipal corporation or governmental body to use public funds to promote the passage, or to secure the defeat, of a law, see annotation following this case, post, 358.

PROCEEDING by the State to review an order of the Superior Court for King County enjoining relators, in an action against them, from expending or causing to be expended certain public funds for the purpose of defeating the operation and effect of a proposed statute increasing the number of its commissioners and limiting the amount of its bonded indebtedness. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. J. France, for plaintiffs:

It is not ultra vires for representatives of a municipal corporation to expend public funds to present arguments to a legislative body in respect to pending legislation which affects such corporation.

Farrel v. Derby, 58 Conn. 224, 7 L.R.A. 776, 20 Atl. 460; State ex rel. Hill v. Bridges, 87 Wash. 260, 151 Pac. 490; Crawfordville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 14 L.R.A. 268, 30 Am. St. Rep. 214, 28 N. E. 849; Torrent v. Muskegon, 47 Mich. 115, 41 Am. Rep. 715, 10 N. W. 132; State ex rel. Ellis v. Tampa Waterworks Co. 56 Fla. 858, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 183, 47 So. 358; Clark v. South Bend, 85 Ind. 276, 44 Am. Rep. 13; Marshall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 16 How. 314, 14 L. ed. 953; Cooley, Const. Law, 6th ed. p. 163; Chesebrough v. Conover, 140 N. Y. 382, 35 N. E. 633; Houlton v. Dunn, 60 Minn. 26, 30 L.R.A. 737, 51 Am. St. Rep. 493, 61 N. W. 698; Foltz v. Cogswell, 86 Cal. 542, 25 Pac. 60; Miles v. Thorne, 38 Cal. 335, 99 Am. Dec. 384; Trist v. Child (Burke v. Child) 21 Wall. 441, 450, 22 L. ed. 623, 624; Bryan v. Reynolds, 5 Wis. 200, 68 Am. Dec. 55; Denison v. Crawford County, 48 Iowa, 211.

Messrs. Halverstadt & Clarke and W. M. Whitney, for defendants:

Municipal powers depend upon express grant or necessary implication.

Martin v. Whitman County, 1 Wash. 533, 20 Pac. 599; State ex rel. Winsor v. Ballard, 10 Wash. 4, 38 Pac. 761; Tacoma Gas & E. L. Co. v. Tacoma, 14 Wash. 288, 44 Pac. 655; Young v. State, 19 Wash. 634, 54 Pac. 36; Smith v. Lamping, 27 Wash. 624, 68 Pac. 195; Farwell v. Seattle, 43 Wash. 141, 86 Pac. 217, 10 Ann. Cas. 130; State ex rel. Hill v. Bridges, 87 Wash. 260, 151 Pac. 490; Stowe v. State, 2 Wash. 124, 25 Pac. 1085; State ex rel. Rochford v. Superior Ct. 4 Wash. 30, 29 Pac. 764; Presby v. Klickitat County, 5 Wash. 329, 31 Pac. 876; James v. Seattle, 22 Wash. 654, 79 Am. St. Rep. 957, 62 Pac. 84; Mather v. King County, 39 Wash. 693, 82 Pac. 121; State ex rel. Spring Water Co. v. Monroe, 40 Wash. 545, 82 Pac. 888; Linne v. Bredes, 43 Wash. 540, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 707, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1068, 86 Pac. 858, 11 Ann. Cas. 238. L.R.A.1917B.

Relators are without power to expend public funds raised by taxation for lobbying purposes.

James v. Seattle, 22 Wash. 654, 79 Am. St. Rep. 957, 62 Pac. 84; Minot v. West Roxbury, 112 Mass. 1, 17 Am. Rep. 52; Coolidge v. Brookline, 114 Mass. 592; Frankfort v. Winterport, 54 Me. 250; Westbrook v. Deering, 63 Me. 231; Henderson v. Covington, 14 Bush. 312; New London v. Brainard, 22 Conn. 553; Grant County v. Bradford, 72 Ind. 455, 37 Am. Rep. 174; Hooper v. Ely, 46 Mo. 505; Stetson v. Kempton, 13 Mass. 272, 7 Am. Dec. 145; Claflin v. Hopkinton, 7 Gray, 502; Castner v. Minneapolis, 92 Minn. 84, 99 N. W. 361, 1 Ann. Cas. 934; Farmer v. St. Paul, 65 Minn. 176, 33 L.R.A. 199, 67 N. W. 990; Drake v. Phillips, 40 Ill. 388; Wasson v. Wayne County, 49 Ohio St. 622, 17 L.R.A. 795, 32 N. E. 472; Livingston County v. Weider, 64 Ill. 427; Hubbard v. Fitzsimmons, 57 Ohio St. 436, 49 N. E. 477; Jackson County v. State, 155 Ind. 604, 58 N. E. 1037; State ex rel. Milton v. Dickenson, 44 Fla. 623, 60 L.R.A. 539, 33 So. 514, 1 Ann. Cas. 122; Institute for Education v. Henderson, 18 Colo. 98, 18 L.R.A. 398, 31 Pac. 714; State v. Commissioners, 54 Ohio St. 652, 47 N. E. 1117; Wilder v. Daniels, 53 Ohio St. 658, 44 N. E. 1150; Hutchinson v. Ozark Land Co. 57 Ark. 554, 38 Am. St. Rep. 258, 22 S. W. 173.

Mount, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding to review an order of the lower court granting an injunction in the case of C. O. Qualheim, Plaintiff, v. The Port of Seattle and Robert Bridges, C. E. Remsberg, and Carl A. Ewald, as Port Commissioners of the Port of Seattle, Defendants.

The plaintiff in that case alleged that the legislature, in 1915, enacted a law amending the Port District Act of this state, being chapter 46 of the laws of that year. This amendment increased the number of port commissioners, and limited the bonded indebtedness of port districts of the first class. It is alleged that the port commissioners, for the purpose of defeating that enactment, are attempting to secure a nullification thereof by means of a referendum, and, for that purpose, the port commissioners have wrongfully, unlawfully, and without authority, expended large sums of the funds of said port district for the purpose of advertising, lobbying, and printing circulars, which have been scattered over King county and a considerable portion of the state; that the port commissioners, unless restrained from so doing, will expend other large sums of port funds for the purpose of carrying on a political campaign against said chapter 46; and that, by reason of said unlawful expenditures, the rate of taxation in King county will be increased, and the taxpayers of King county will be compelled to repay the money so unlawfully expended. It is also alleged that the plaintiff is a resident and taxpayer of King county. An application was made to the court below for a restraining order. After a hearing upon that application, the superior court of King county, on the 18th day of October, entered an order enjoining the defendant port of Seattle and the port commissioners, their agents and servants, from expending, or causing to be expended, any of the funds of the port of Seattle for the purpose of defeating the operation and effect of chapter 46 of the Laws of 1915. This writ is to review that order.

The amendment to the Port District Act, being chapter 46 of the Laws of 1915, was made the subject of a referendum under the Constitution. It is now designated as referendum measure No. 8, to be printed on the official ballot, to be approved or rejected at the general election on November 7th of this year. By reason of the reference, this chapter has not yet become a law. This amendment is intended to increase the board of port commissioners from three to seven members, and provides that the total bonded indebtedness of any port of the first class shall be limited to 2½ per cent of the assessed valuation of taxable property in said district, but in no event shall the total bonded indebtedness ever exceed the sum of $5,750,000.

The question presented is whether the board of port commissioners is authorized to expend public funds raised by taxation, to defeat proposed legislation affecting that corporation. It is contended by the relators that, while the port of Seattle is a municipal corporation, it is also a business corporation, and has the power to expend the money of the corporation to the best interest thereof. It is not contended, as we understand the brief of the relators, that there is any express provision in the law authorizing the port commission to expend money belonging to the corporation for political purposes, but it is argued, in substance, that, because this corporation is in the nature of a business corporation, engaged in commercial enterprises in competition with private individuals engaged in similar enterprises, and is conducting such business as an agency of the state, it has a right to expend its moneys in such way as the port commissioners deem for the best interest of the corporation; that, inasmuch as the powers of the corporation are general in their character, the power is implied to the trustees to apply the money of the corporation as, in their opinion, will best promote the affairs of the corporation. There can be no doubt that a corporation exercising powers of the state possesses only those powers expressly granted, or such as are necessarily implied. The general rule is stated by Dillon on Municipal Corporations, vol. 1, at § 89, as follows: "It is a general and undisputed proposition of law that a municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers, and no others: First, those granted in express words; second, those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted; third, those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation,—not simply convenient, but indispensable. Any fair, reasonable doubt concerning the existence of power is resolved by the courts against the corporation, and the power is denied."

In the case of Tacoma Gas & E. L. Co. v. Tacoma, 14 Wash. 288, 44 Pac. 655, this court said: "It is a well-settled rule of construction that a delegation of powers will not be presumed in favor of a municipal corporation unless they be such as are necessary to its corporate existence, but that the same must be clearly conferred by express statutory enactment."

And in Young v. State, 19 Wash. 634, 54 Pac. 36, this court said: "It is well settled that public officers have, and can exercise, only such power as is conferred upon them by law, either statutory or constitutional, and that the government is not bound by the unauthorized acts of its officers or agents."

See also Smith v. Lamping, 27 Wash. 624, 68 Pac. 195; Farwell v. Seattle, 43 Wash. 141, 86 Pac. 217, 10 Ann. Cas. 130. In this latter case, it is said: "A municipal corporation is limited in its powers to those granted in express words, or to those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted, and also to those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 89. . . . It is a general principle that a municipal corporation cannot usually exercise its powers beyond its own limits, and if in any case it has authority to do so, it must be derived from some statute which expressly or impliedly permits it. Coldwater v. Tucker, 36 Mich. 474, 24 Am. Rep. 601. The doctrine of ultra vires is applied with greater strictness to municipal bodies than to private corporations. 1 Smith, Modern Law of Mun. Corp. § 661. Upon this subject the supreme court of Minnesota has said: 'A different rule of law would in effect vastly enlarge the power of public agents to bind a municipality by contracts not only unauthorized, but prohibited, by the law. It would tend to nullify the limitations and restrictions imposed with respect to the powers of such agents, and to a dangerous extent expose the public to the very evils and abuses which such limitations are designed to prevent."

It is plain from these authorities that, unless the port of Seattle may be fairly implied to have the power to expend money in the way here proposed, it has no such authority. It is not claimed that there is any express provision authorizing the port of Seattle to expend money as is here attempted. The powers of the corporation, as defined by the act creating it (Laws 1913, chap. 62), are general in their character. They are stated as follows: ". . . To lay out, construct, condemn, purchase, acquire, add to, maintain, conduct, and operate any and all systems of sea walls, jetties, wharves, docks, ferries, canals, locks, tidal basins, and other harbor improvements, rail and water transfer and terminal facilities within such port district. . . ."

The port commissioners have, no doubt, implied authority to spend the money of the port for any of these purposes, but clearly the purpose for which this money is being spent is not and cannot be reasonably implied from the powers named. This corporation, the port of Seattle, is a creature of the state. It is in the nature of a municipal corporation engaged in the business of building wharves and docks and harbor improvements, and in operating and maintaining the same. Its powers are given by the state. If the state desires to limit those powers, the port itself and its commissioners have no special interest therein. They are simply agents of the state, and it seems absurd to say that an agent of the state may be permitted to expend money of the state for the purpose of defeating a proposed curtailment of the powers of that corporation by the state. No such power is expressly granted to the corporation, and it is not a necessarily or fairly implied incidental power to those expressly granted. It may be convenient for the port and the port commissioners to desire no change in its powers, but the curtailment of these powers, as is proposed, is clearly not indispensable, and for that reason alone the courts ought not to construe in favor of such corporations the power here sought to be exercised. In James v. Seattle, 22 Wash. 654, 79 Am. St. Rep. 957, 62 Pac. 84, this court held that the city of Seattle had no power to pay the expenses of councilmen on a visit to other cities to inform themselves concerning waterworks, street paving, terminal facilities, street lighting, and other municipal matters. We there said: "And we think the rule thus announced is the established one, and in consonance with all sound authority. The members of the city council are trustees. The body holds a trust for the inhabitants of the city. The terms of the trust are fixed by legislation, and no expenditure of money belonging to the city can be made without express authority, or implied authority by reason of a necessary granted power."

See also Minot v. Roxbury, 112 Mass. 1, 17 Am. Rep. 52; Coolidge v. Brookline, 114 Mass. 592; Frankfort v. Winterport, 54 Me. 250; Westbrook v. Deering, 63 Me. 231; Henderson v. Covington, 14 Bush, 312; State ex rel. Clausen v. Burr, 65 Wash. 524, 118 Pac. 639.

In this last-named case, it was said: "The question of local self-government is one which has engaged the attention of the courts since the formation of the Union. A few states have adopted the view that the municipalities have an inherent right to local self-government not dependent upon legislative authority, and that this right was brought to this country from the rule adopted in the Anglo-Saxon countries from which our laws descended. This view is entertained by the courts of Indiana, Kentucky, and Michigan; while practically all the rest of the jurisdictions hold that municipal corporations have only such power as is conferred upon them by the legislature, and that the legislature, in the absence of constitutional inhibition, controls such municipalities absolutely. This is the view of the Supreme Court of the United States, which, in Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 23 L. ed. 440, held in substance that a municipal corporation was but a department of the state, and that the legislature could give it all the powers it was capable of receiving, or that it might deprive it of every power, leaving it a corporation in name only, and could create and recreate changes in its government as it chose. In addition to the overwhelming weight of authority, this is the view that has been taken by this court. In McLean v. Shields, 57 Wash. 617, 107 Pac. 835, in discussing the constitutionality of the State Aid Road Law and in commenting thereon, it was said: 'Our Constitution is a limitation of power, and such rights and powers of local government as are not conferred upon counties by the language of the Constitution remain with the state and may be exercised by the legislature as the lawmaking power of the state. Rules and regulations for local county government and control, except as otherwise provided for in the Constitution, are as much within the control of the state as those matters which are more general and state wide."

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the port of Seattle and its commissioners have not authority to expend the money of the corporation in an endeavor to defeat any law which has been passed by the legislature and referred to the people for approval or rejection. The approval or rejection of the amendment proposed to the port of Seattle is a matter of no concern to the port itself, or its commissioners. As stated above, this corporation is a branch of the state government, municipal in its character, and its authority is limited to the powers expressly granted or necessarily inferred from express grants. If the port commissioners may take the money of the port acquired by taxation upon property within the district or otherwise, for political purposes, or purposes other than those for which the port was organized, then there is no limit upon the port commissioners in expending the money of the port. The commissioners might determine that the best interests of the business of the port required that the individual members of the commission be perpetuated in office, and because of that reason, use the funds of the port to insure their own election. We are clearly of the opinion that when the port was created no thought was held by any person that the money raised by the port could be used for political purposes, or any purpose other than for the direct use of the port and its business.

We find no error of the lower court in granting the injunction. The order is therefore affirmed.

Morris, Ch. J., and Main, Ellis, Holcomb, Chadwick, and Parker, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Power of municipal corporation or governmental body to use public funds to promote the passage, or to secure the defeat, of a law.

It would seem clear that if any efforts may properly be made by anyone before the legislature or its committees touching matters of legislation, that no general rule is to be made for or against the power of a municipal corporation to make such efforts, but that the question of power depends upon the particular case. The theory of some of the courts that a town has no interest in its existence or size does not compel us to say, for example, that a city is to remain silent while a railroad secures from the legislature the right to use its streets.

The courts have differed materially as to whether in particular cases a municipal corporation or governmental body has power to use public funds to promote the passage or to secure the defeat of a law.

The power was denied in the following cases as not being for an authorized corporate purpose:

Thus it has been held that there was no power—

—in a town to pay the expenses of a committee "for the purpose of preventing the annexation of the town, or any part thereof, to the city of Boston" Coolidge v. Brookline (1874) 114 Mass. 592 (holding also that no such power was implied in a statute providing that "whoever intends to present a petition affecting the rights of a city or town shall cause a copy to be served on the city or town" in the manner provided"); 1 L.R.A. 1917B.

—in a town to incur expenses in opposing before a legislative committee a division of its territory. Westbrook v. Deering (1874) 63 Me. 231 (stating also that the question decided in Frankfort v. Winterport (Me.) infra, was that "the town, in its corporate capacity, cannot legally raise and expend money for the purpose of sending lobby members to oppose before the legislature a division of the town");

—in a town to provide for the expenses of a committee directed by a vote of the town to petition the legislature to annex the town to a city, and to appear with counsel to advocate the annexation. Minot v. West Roxbury (1873) 112 Mass. 1, 17 Am. Rep. 52;

—in a town to pay the expenses of a committee for appearing before the legislature and procuring the passage of an act authorizing the town to pay bounties. Mead v. Acton (1885) 139 Mass. 341, 1 N. E. 413, where the act procured was held unconstitutional;

—in a city to pay the expenses of agents for advocating legislation by the state legislature and by Congress authorizing the city to build a bridge over the Ohio river. Henderson v. Covington (1878) 14 Bush (Ky.) 312;

—in a county to oppose a bill requiring the county to pay a large sum to another county. Colusa County v. Welch (Cal.) infra.

See also STATE EX REL. SEATTLE V. SUPERIOR CT. ante, 354.

Where a town sent twenty delegates to the legislature to oppose the division of the town, and paid for their services, part before and part after the separation, it was held it could not recover any of the payment from the part of the town separated from it, nor could the part separated into a new town recover from the old town for any part of such payment made before the separation. Frankfort v. Winterport (1865) 54 Me. 250, supra (where the opinion is of great obscurity).

In Henderson v. Covington (Ky.) supra, the court said: "The construction of a bridge across the Ohio river, to connect the city of Covington with the neighboring city of Cincinnati, in the state of Ohio, was not, under the charter as it then existed, a part of the duty of the city council of Covington, nor was the legislation sought by the council necessary to enable it to perform its corporate duties or to accomplish the purposes for which the corporation was created. True, such an enterprise might be of very great advantage to the city by inviting population, enhancing the value of real estate, and in many other ways."

In some cases the decision has turned in whole or in part on the question of public policy.

In Colusa County v. Welch (1898) 122 Cal. 428, 55 Pac. 243, supra, it was held that an attorney could not recover of a county for services in securing the defeat of a bill whereby the county would have had to pay a large sum to another county, on two grounds: (1) that the contract involved personal solicitations and private interviews with members of the legislature, and hence was void as against public policy; and (2) because the board of supervisors had no power or duty to act in the matter. The court does not seem to hold that the case was within the constitutional provision that "any person who seeks to influence the vote of a member of the legislature by bribery, promise of reward, intimidation, or other dishonest means, shall be guilty of lobbying, which is hereby declared a felony."

In Buchanan v. Farmer (1916) 122 Ark. 562, 184 S. W. 33, it was held that an attorney may not recover from a county his expenses in "lobbying" a bill through the legislature, as such action contravened public policy.

In Richardson v. Scott's Bluff County (1899) 59 Neb. 400, 48 L.R.A. 294, 80 L.R.A.1917B.

Am. St. Rep. 682, 81 N. W. 309, it was held that an attorney could not recover against a county for procuring the passage of a bill reimbursing the county for the expenses of a criminal trial, under a contract by which the pay was contingent upon success, as such contract was illegal and void. In Stroemer v. Van Orsdel (1905) 74 Neb. 132, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 212, 121 Am. St. Rep. 713, 103 N. W. 1053, 107 N. W. 125, where no municipality was involved, the court modified the rule expressed in the Richardson Case.

Other cases take broader views of municipal powers.

Thus it has been held in Connecticut that the selectmen of a town may employ counsel to oppose before the general assembly a proposed division of the town. Farrel v. Derby (1889) 58 Conn. 234, 7 L.R.A. 776, 20 Atl. 460.

In Meehan v. Parsons (1916) 271 Ill. 546, 111 N. E. 529, reversing (1915) 194 Ill. App. 131, it was held that a city might properly pay its mayor his expenses in going to Washington and interviewing Senators and Congressmen in the endeavor to induce them to vote an appropriation for strengthening and repairing levees and embankments in and about the city. The court said: "The courts have not gone so far as to hold that in no event and under no circumstances is it proper to interview and importune members of a legislative body to enact certain legislation in which the party importuning them may be interested. The interests of the city of Cairo would undoubtedly be affected by whatever action Congress should choose to take in reference to the appropriation for the building of its levees. Should Congress refuse to appropriate any sum whatever, the whole burden of building and maintaining its levees would rest upon the city. That burden would be lightened by whatever appropriation Congress should see fit to make. The city, therefore, had the undoubted right to authorize its chief executive to appear before the various congressional committees and interview the members of Congress to urge upon them the claims of the city, and to advance any legitimate argument in favor of the passage of an appropriation bill for the relief of the city in this respect. Having the undoubted right to intercede with the members of Congress, and to appear before its committees through its authorized agent, it must follow that the city undoubtedly would have the right to pay the necessary and legitimate expenses of its agent in presenting its claims to the members of Congress."

Where Congress had recognized the fact that a county was entitled to swamp lands within its borders, and further legislation by Congress became necessary to complete the matter, it was held competent for the county to employ an agent to bring the matter to the attention of Congress and obtain further legislation by proper means. Denison v. Crawford County (1878) 48 Iowa, 211, where the court said: "It was perfectly competent for the county to employ agents or attorneys for this purpose, and an agreement to pay them therefor is valid. Such agents may lawfully draft the petition to set forth the claim, attend to taking of testimony, collecting facts, preparing arguments, and submitting them orally or in writing to a committee or other proper authority, and other services of like character. All these things are intended to reach only the reason of those sought to be influenced." Swayne, J., in Trist v. Child (Burke v. Child) 21 Wall. U. S. 441, 22 L. ed. 623."

In the briefly reported case of Arthur v. Dayton (1883) 4 Ky. L. Rep. 831, it was held that a city has the right to employ, if necessary, a competent person to prepare an amendment to its charter, and to employ, if need be, such a person to attend before the proper committee of the legislature to show cause why the additional powers should be granted.

Where a town appointed a committee to apply to the legislature to get the court of common pleas to hold one term of that court in each year in the town, it was held that the town should pay for the expenses and services of the committee. Bachelder v. Epping (1854) 28 N. H. 354, where the court said: "A town is certainly as well able to pay its servants as an individual is; and if an individual, for the purpose of advancing his own interests, should employ a person to apply to the legislature to get the court to be held in the town where he resided, and the agent should devote his time and money for that purpose, the principal would be bound to compensate him."

Under statute.

A town may employ and pay counsel for opposing the division of the town, and for representing the town generally in reference to such division, before a committee of the legislature, under a statute providing that a town "interested in a petition to the legislature may . . . authorize the employment of counsel to represent such town at any hearing before any committee of the legislature upon such petition: "Provided, however, that no expense shall be hereby authorized excepting such as would be incurred in presenting a case before the judicial courts." Connolly v. Beverly (1890) 151 Mass. 437, 24 N. E. 404.

The following cases are of interest as closely allied to the subject.

A town has no authority to pay expenses incurred before it was incorporated not provided for by its charter, including lobbying and other expenses of obtaining its charter. Frost v. Belmont (1863) 6 Allen (Mass.) 152.

The legislature may authorize the employment of an agent to prosecute claims on behalf of the state which require the procurement of legislation, for a fee contingent on his success. Davis v. Com. (1895) 164 Mass. 241, 30 L.R.A. 743, 41 N. E. 292.

A borough may not pay expenses of resisting the annulment of its charter in the court of quarter sessions. Webster v. Hopewell (1902) 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 549.

A city has not the power to pay printing expenses of those campaigning to make the city a state capital, as this is foreign to the purposes and objects of the corporation. Shannon v. Huron (1896) 9 S. D. 356, 69 N. W. 598.

B. B. B.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

LE ROY E. WAUGH, Plff. in Err.,
v.

W. J. DIBBENS et al.

(— Okla. —, 160 Pac. 589.)

Courts — county — power to commit for contempt.

1. A judge of the county court, while

Headnotes by RITTENHOUSE, C.
L.R.A.1917B.

taking depositions, has power to commit a witness for contempt for refusing to answer a material question.

For other cases, see Contempt, III. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Judge — personal liability.

2. An action will not lie against a judicial officer for a judicial act, where there

Note. — The liability of a judicial officer to civil action for acts of a judicial nature is discussed in the note to Broom v. Douglass, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 164; and see also is jurisdiction of the person and the subject matter, although it be alleged and proved that such act was done maliciously, or even corruptly.

For other cases, see Judges, VI. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — inferior court.

3. The same protection extends to judges of courts of inferior and limited as to those of general jurisdiction; the law exempts all judicial officers alike.

For other cases, see Judges, VI. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Attorney and client — liability of attorney.

4. Attorneys at law, in the exercise of their proper functions as such, are not liable for their acts, if such acts are in good faith and pertinent to the matter in question.

For other cases, see Attorneys, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(July 11, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court for Logan County to review a judgment in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover damages for alleged wilful and malicious false imprisonment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Joseph Wisby and Milton Brown for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Dale & Blerer and O. O. Smith, for defendants in error:

An action will not lie against a judicial officer for false imprisonment, where such officer acts within the apparent scope of his judicial authority, no matter what the allegations of the petition may be.

Comstock v. Eagleton, 11 Okla. 487, 69 Pac. 955; Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. 336, 20 L. ed. 646; Flint v. Lonsdale, 41 Okla. 448, 139 Pac. 268; Cooke v. Bangs, 31 Fed. 640.

The same exemption applies to an attorney which applies to a court.

Campbell v. Brown, 2 Woods, 349, Fed. Cas. No. 2,355; Carpenter v. Ashley, 148 Cal. 422, 83 Pac. 444, 7 Ann. Cas. 601; Lawson v. Hicks, 38 Ala. 279, 81 Am. Dec. 49; Hollis v. Meux, 69 Cal. 628, 58 Am. Rep. 574, 11 Pac. 248; Lester v. Thurmond, 51 Ga. 118; Conley v. Key, 98 Ga. 115, 25 S. E. 914; Atlanta News Pub. Co. v. Medlock, 123 Ga. 719, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1139, 51 S. E. 756; Morgan v. Booth, 13 Bush, 481; Stewart v. Hall, 83 Ky. 375; Mauleby v. Reifsnider, 69 Md. 164, 14 Atl. 505;

later cases Gordon v. District Ct. 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1078, and Rammage v. Kendall, L.R.A.1916C, 1295.

The liability of a judicial officer for libel or slander is considered in the note to Houghton v. Humphries, L.R.A.1915E, 1051. L.R.A.1917B.

Hoar v. Wood, 3 Met. 193; Rice v. Coolidge, 121 Mass. 393, 23 Am. Rep. 279; McLaughlin v. Cowley, 127 Mass. 316, affirmed in 131 Mass. 70; Hartung v. Shaw, 130 Mich. 177, 89 N. W. 701; Gilbert v. People, 1 Denio, 41; Ring v. Wheeler, 7 Cow. 725; Hastings v. Lusk, 22 Wend. 410, 34 Am. Dec. 330; Dada v. Piper, 41 Hun, 256, 2 N. Y. S. R. 152; Marsh v. Ellsworth, 50 N. Y. 309; Sickles v. Kling, 60 App. Div. 515, 69 N. Y. Supp. 944; Youmans v. Smith, 153 N. Y. 214, 47 N. E. 265; Sheller v. Gooding, 2 Jones, L. 175; Com. v. Culver, 1 Clark (Pa.) 361; Vausse v. Lee, 1 Hill, L. 197, 26 Am. Dec. 168; Davis v. McNees, 8 Humph. 40; Mower v. Watson, 11 Vt. 536, 34 Am. Dec. 704; Jennings v. Paine, 4 Wis. 358; Com. v. Gotshalk, 13 Phila. 575; McDavitt v. Boyer, 169 Ill. 475, 48 N. E. 317; Burdette v. Argile, 94 Ill. App. 171.

Rittenhouse, C., filed the following opinion:

Le Roy E. Waugh brought an action against the Guthrie Gas, Light, Fuel, & Improvement Company for injuries alleged to have been received on account of an explosion. After the petition was filed, the defendant served notice to take depositions before Honorable J. C. Strang, judge of the county court of Logan county, at which hearing the plaintiff, Le Roy E. Waugh, was sworn as a witness and testified to certain matter. When asked as to the name of the physician, living in Missouri, who attended him during his injuries, he refused to testify, whereupon Frank Dale, attorney for the company, requested and procured an order, punishing him for contempt. The defendant was subsequently discharged by this court in Ex parte Waugh, 40 Okla. 188, 137 Pac. 105, wherein it was held that in cases of contempt, where a mandatory statute (§ 5061, Rev. Laws 1910) requires that the questions propounded be set out in the order of commitment, and such is not done, the commitment is void, and the prisoner should be discharged. On July 11, 1914, this action was brought against J. C. Strang, who was the judge of the county court of Logan county and issued the commitment, Frank Dale, who was the attorney for the company, for whom the depositions were taken for use in the case of Le Roy E. Waugh v. Guthrie Gas, Light, Fuel & Improvement Company, and W. J. Dibbens, who was general manager of said company, asking judgment in the sum of $16,347, for an alleged false imprisonment, occasioned by his refusal to testify in the original action.

It is alleged that Frank Dale and W. J. Dibbens were present at the time the commitment was issued, advising, urging, soliciting, counseling, and procuring the court to cause the unlawful imprisonment, and that such wrongful acts were done wilfully, knowingly, maliciously, wantonly, and oppressively on the part of said defendants. At the close of the evidence the court sustained the demurrer of J. C. Strang on the ground that he was acting in a judicial capacity at the time the commitment was issued, and within the jurisdiction conferred upon him by law. The court instructed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the remaining defendants, on the ground that the proof failed to establish a cause of action against them. The evidence offered by the plaintiff in the instant case, which would, in the least, connect W. J. Dibbens with this controversy, was that he was the manager of the Guthrie Gas, Light, Fuel & Improvement Company, that he was in the court room at the time the commitment was issued, and that prior to the taking of the depositions he had sworn to an affidavit stating that the depositions were being taken in good faith. This evidence was insufficient to constitute a cause of action for false imprisonment, and the court properly instructed the jury.

The argument contained in the brief of plaintiff in error does not refer to any particular assignment of error, but we gather from such brief that there are three questions for our determination: (1) In taking depositions under authority of § 5075, Rev. Laws 1910, does the judge of the county court take the depositions as a judicial officer with power to commit for contempt, or merely as a ministerial act? (2) Will an action lie against a judicial officer for false imprisonment where such officer acts within the scope of his judicial authority, even though it is alleged that such imprisonment was done wilfully, knowingly, maliciously, wantonly, and oppressively? (3) Is an attorney at law, while acting in good faith, liable for damages for false imprisonment upon a showing that, while conducting a judicial hearing, he requested the court to punish a witness for contempt of court in refusing to answer a question which was material and pertinent to the issues involved in the suit?

We are asked to hold that the order committing the witness for contempt was without authority of law. Section 5075, Rev. Laws 1910, confers upon judges of courts of record authority to take depositions. Section 5057, Rev. Laws 1910, gives such officer power to punish a witness for contempt in refusing to answer as a witness, or to subscribe a deposition, when lawfully ordered. These identical sections were under consideration in 1898 in the case of Ex parte Abbott, 7 Okla. 78, 54 Pac. 319, L.R.A.1917B.

wherein it was held that a judge of the probate court had power to punish for contempt a witness who refused to be sworn or to give his depositions. It is insisted that under § 1, art. 7, of the Constitution, the judicial power of the state is vested in the senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, a supreme court, district courts, county courts, courts of justices of the peace, municipal courts, and such other courts, commissions, or boards inferior to the supreme court as may be established by law, and therefore the judges of courts of record have no judicial powers, other than those mentioned in subsequent sections of the Constitution. In this argument we cannot agree. The wording of the Constitution is practically the same as § 9 of the Organic Act, which was construed in the Abbott Case. That section provided that the judicial power of the territory was vested in a supreme court, district courts, probate courts, and justices of the peace, and in construing that section this court held that such courts and the judges thereof were by the Organic Act vested with judicial power, and it was further held that where, by constitutional provisions, judicial power is vested in certain courts, the judges thereof may, by legislative enactment, be authorized to perform acts that are in their nature judicial.

The evidence offered by the plaintiff disclosed that the officer taking the deposition had jurisdiction of the person and the subject matter, and, where this condition exists, a judicial officer is not liable in a civil action for false imprisonment for an erroneous exercise of judicial power. Comstock v. Eagleton, 11 Okla. 487, 60 Pac. 955; Flint v. Lonsdale, 41 Okla. 448, 139 Pac. 268. But it is contended that there was not only proof of an act in excess of jurisdiction, but proof that such act was done wilfully, knowingly, maliciously, wantonly, and oppressively. From the evidence we are not willing to say that such proof was made. If it be conceded, however, that the proof is sufficient to sustain the contention, the position is not well taken; an action will not lie against a judicial officer for a judicial act when there is jurisdiction of the persons and the subject matter, though it be alleged and proved that such act was done maliciously, or even corruptly. In Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. 335, 20 L. ed. 646, in discussing the question, Mr. Justice Field said: "If civil actions could be maintained in such cases against the judge, because the losing party should see fit to allege in his complaint that the acts of the judge were done with partiality or maliciously or corruptly, the protection essential to judicial independence would be entirely swept away. Few persons sufficiently irritated to institute an action against a judge for his judicial acts would hesitate to ascribe any character to the acts which would be essential to the maintenance of the action."

And, again, in the same opinion, it is said: "The exemption of judges of the superior courts of record from liability to civil suit for their judicial acts, existing when there is jurisdiction of the subject matter, though irregularity and error attend the exercise of the jurisdiction, the exemption cannot be affected by any consideration of the motives with which the acts are done. The allegation of malicious or corrupt motives could always be made; and, if the motives could be inquired into, judges would be subjected to the same vexatious litigation upon such allegations, whether the motives had or had not any real existence. Against the consequences of their erroneous or irregular action, from whatever motives proceeding, the law has provided for private parties numerous remedies, and to those remedies they must, in such cases, resort. But for malice or corruption in their action whilst exercising their judicial functions within the general scope of their jurisdiction, the judges of these courts can only be reached by public prosecution in the form of impeachment, or in such other form as may be specially prescribed."

See also Coleman v. Roberts, 113 Ala. 323, 36 L.R.A. 84, 59 Am. St. Rep. 111, 21 So. 449; Irion v. Lewis, 56 Ala. 190; Lacey v. Hendricks, 164 Ala. 280, 137 Am. St. Rep. 45, 51 So. 167; Broom v. Douglass, 175 Ala. 268, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 164, 57 So. 860, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1155; Cooke v. Bangs (C. C.) 31 Fed. 640; Busteed v. Parsons, 54 Ala. 393, 25 Am. Rep. 688; Lange v. Benedict, 73 N. Y. 12, 29 Am. Rep. 80. From these cases and those collated in the notes thereto, it is obvious that upon existence or nonexistence of jurisdiction, and not upon malice or corruption, rests the question of immunity from liability from acts done in a judicial capacity; where there is jurisdiction of the person and of the subject matter, no civil liability can attach. In the case of Flint v. Lonsdale, supra, it was said: "A judicial officer will not be held liable in a civil action for the false imprisonment for an erroneous exercise of judicial power, nor for acting in excess of his jurisdiction, where he has jurisdiction over the person and subject matter, where he has not acted maliciously and corruptly."

And in so far as the expression, "where he has not acted maliciously and corruptly," is in conflict with this opinion, it is disapproved, as this question could only be pre-L.R.A.1917B.

sented where there is an entire want of jurisdiction and the good faith of the officer came into question. The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Randall v. Brigham, 7 Wall. 523, 19 L. ed. 285, used a similar expression, which was disapproved in Bradley v. Fisher, supra, wherein the court said that the qualifying words used were not necessary to a correct statement of the law, and that judges of courts are not liable in civil actions for their judicial acts, even when such acts are alleged to have been done maliciously and corruptly.

The plaintiff advances the argument that while the foregoing rule may apply to judges of the courts of general jurisdiction, it does not apply to those of inferior and limited jurisdiction. In this we cannot concur. The same protection extends to judges of courts inferior and limited as to those of general jurisdiction; the law exempts all judicial officers alike. In Robertson v. Hale, 68 N. H. 538, 44 Atl. 695, it is said: "It is a general rule that courts and judges are not liable in civil actions for their judicial acts within the scope of their jurisdiction, and this protection extends to magistrates exercising an inferior and limited jurisdiction, as justices of the peace. For the purpose of securing a fearless and impartial administration of justice, the law exempts all judicial officers, from the highest to the lowest, from civil liability in the performance of their judicial duties within their jurisdiction; and, to guard against an oppressive abuse of legal authority, makes them liable to impeachment or indictment for official misconduct."

See also Coleman v. Roberts, 113 Ala. 323, 36 L.R.A. 84, 59 Am. St. Rep. 111, 21 So. 449; Early v. Fitzpatrick, 161 Ala. 171, 135 Am. St. Rep. 123, 49 So. 686; Lund v. Hennessey, 67 Ill. App. 233; Broom v. Douglass, 175 Ala. 268, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 164, 57 So. 860, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1155; Flint v. Lonsdale, supra; Johnston v. Moorman, 80 Va. 131; Comstock v. Eagleton, supra.

We now come to the question of the liability of an attorney for an alleged false imprisonment. The facts as developed at the trial show that an action for damages caused by an explosion was pending against the Guthrie Gas, Light, Fuel & Improvement Company; that Frank Dale, the attorney representing such company, was attempting to take the deposition of the plaintiff in that case, for use in the subsequent trial, which resulted in a judgment against his client. That he had the right to take the plaintiff's deposition cannot be controverted. § 5048, Rev. Laws 1910, construed in Ex parte Abbott, supra, is ample authority for such proceeding. It became material in the trial of the damage suit to ascertain the facts connected with the plaintiff's injuries, and the company through its attorney was attempting to elicit from the witness the name of the physician who attended him during his confinement resulting from such injuries. This the witness refused to answer; whereupon the attorney requested that he be punished for contempt. There was no evidence of bad faith or malicious motive. Anderson v. Canaday, 37 Okla. 171, L.R.A.1915A, 1186, 131 Pac. 697, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 714. He was merely representing his client in his capacity as an attorney at law, requesting an order which he was entitled to have, but which was held to be void because the order of commitment failed to show the question propounded to the witness, and that such question was pertinent and material to the issue in the action for damages. Upon a thorough examination of the authorities, we are convinced that the general rule is that attorneys at law, in the exercise of their proper functions as such, are not liable for their acts, if such acts are made in good faith and pertinent to the matter in question; and when in the course of a judicial proceeding a witness refuses to answer a question which is pertinent and material to the issue involved, and the attorney requests that such witness be punished for contempt, the attorney is not liable in damages for false imprisonment. In the case of Campbell v. Brown, 2 Woods, 349, Fed. Cas. No. 2,355, it is said: "It is a general rule that attorneys at law, in the exercise of their proper functions as such, are not liable for their acts when performed in good faith and for the honest purpose of protecting the interests of their clients. The public interest demands this. If attorneys cannot act and advise freely and without constant fear of being harassed by suits and actions at law, parties could not obtain their legal rights. If not free to advise and defend those who seek their aid, the laws are made in vain. Injustice and oppression would rule high-handed in the land. The untrammelled freedom and zeal, no less than the learning and ability of the members of the legal profession, are necessary to make them what they really are,—the great bodyguard of men's rights in society. It is as necessary to the public zeal that they should be privileged from molestation by actions and suits in the courageous performance of their duty, as it is that the representatives of the people in the legislature or the judges of the court should be thus privileged. Hastings v. Luak, 22 Wend. 410, 34 Am. Dec. 330; Hodgson v. Scarlett, 1 Barn. & Ald. 232, 106 Eng. Reprint, 86, 19 Revised Rep. 301; Wright v. State, 18 Ga. 383; Hunt v. Printup, 28 Ga. 297; Wigg v. Simonton, 12 Rich. L. 563; Hargrave v. Le Breton, 4 Burr. 2423, 98 Eng. Reprint, 269, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 169;" Youmans v. Smith, 153 N. Y. 214, 47 N. E. 265; Hollis v. Meux, 69 Cal. 628, 58 Am. Rep. 574, 11 Pac. 248; Rice v. Coolidge, 121 Mass. 393, 23 Am. Rep. 279; Hartung v. Shaw, 130 Mich. 177, 89 N. W. 701; Ring v. Wheeler, 7 Cow. 725; Moore v. Manufacturer's Nat. Bank, 123 N. Y. 420, 11 L.R.A. 753, 25 N. E. 1048.

The cause should therefore be affirmed.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

Petition for rehearing denied October 31, 1916.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

MANGOLD & GLANDT BANK, Plff. in Err.,
v.

W. T. UTTERBACK.

(— Okla. —, 160 Pac. 713.)

Bills and notes — guaranty — indorsement.

1. When the payee of a negotiable promissory note transfers it by indorsing thereon, "Payment guaranteed. Protest waived,"

Headnotes by MATHEWS, C.

Note. — As to transfer of title to note by indorsement in form of guaranty, including the question whether the transferee is an "indorsee" entitled to protection against defenses good as between the L.R.A.1917B.

the purchaser is an "indorsee," within the rule protecting an innocent purchaser of such paper for value and before maturity against defenses good between the original parties.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, V. b, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — character of indorsement.

2. The tendency of the law, when the status of a party who places his name upon the back of a negotiable instrument is under consideration, is to resolve all doubtful cases toward holding the same to be a commercial indorsement in due course.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, III. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

original parties, see notes to Dunham v. Peterson, 36 L.R.A. 232; McNary v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1009; and Ireland v. Floyd, L.R.A.1915C, 661.

Same — effect of indorsement.

3. A simple indorsement by the payee of his name upon a note serves the double purpose both of transferring the title to the holder, and of charging the payee with the obligation to pay it in the event the maker, upon presentation, declines to pay it. For other cases, see Bills and Notes, III. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Trial — judgment on pleadings.

4. Where plaintiff declares upon an indorsed negotiable promissory note, and a copy of the note is attached to the petition, showing an undated indorsement, and defendant does not deny such indorsement under oath, or fails to plead facts showing that plaintiff took the note with knowledge of such infirmities as would operate to defeat it between the original parties, plaintiff is entitled to judgment upon the pleadings.

For other cases, see Pleading, I. k, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 11, 1916.)

ERROR to the Caddo County Court to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. Randall U. Livesay for plaintiff in error:

As plaintiff had alleged, it was a purchaser in due course of business, for value, before maturity and without notice; the defenses set up were not available to defendant.

Showalter v. Webb, 42 Okla. 297, 141 Pac. 439; King v. Mecklenburg, 17 Colo. App. 312, 68 Pac. 984; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 6th ed. §§ 769a, 770, p. 890; Clapp v. Cedar County, 5 Iowa, 15, 68 Am. Dec. 678; Bliss, Code Pl. 3d ed. p. 289, § 175; Draper v. Cowles, 27 Kan. 484.

To constitute notice of an infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating the same, the person to whom it is negotiated must have had actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith.

Lehman v. Press, 106 Iowa, 389, 76 N. W. 818; Bank of Indian Territory v. First Nat. Bank, 109 Mo. App. 665, 83 S. W. 537; Setzer v. Deal, 135 N. C. 428, 47 S. E. 466; 7 Cyc. 944 (b); Massachusetts Nat. Bank v. Snow, 187 Mass. 159, 72 N. E. 959; Goetting v. Day, 87 N. Y. Supp. 510; Unaka Nat. Bank v. Butler, 113 Tenn. 574, 83 S. W. 655; McCarthy v. Louisville Bkg. Co. 100 Ky. 4, 37 S. W. 144; Doe v. Northwestern Coal & Transp. Co. 78 Fed. 62; Atlas Nat. Bank v. Holm, 19 C. C. A. 94, L.R.A.1917B.

34 U. S. App. 472, 71 Fed. 489; St. Joe & M. F. Consol. Min. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 10 Colo. App. 339, 50 Pac. 1055; Coors v. German Nat. Bank, 14 Colo. 202, 7 L.R.A. 845, 23 Pac. 328; Tourtelotte v. Brown, 1 Colo. App. 408, 29 Pac. 130; Rand v. Pantagraph Stationery Co. 1 Colo. App. 270, 28 Pac. 661; Merchants' Bank v. McClelland, 9 Colo. 608, 13 Pac. 725; Forbes v. First Nat. Bank, 21 Okla. 206, 95 Pac. 785; Vaught v. Miners' Bank, 27 Okla. 101, 111 Pac. 214; Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall. 110, 17 L. ed. 857; Hotchkiss v. National Shoe & Leather Bank, 21 Wall. 354, 22 L. ed. 645; Clark v. Evans, 13 C. C. A. 433, 27 U. S. App. 640, 66 Fed. 263; Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. 343, 15 L. ed. 934.

The maker of a negotiable instrument, procured through fraud, may be held liable to a purchaser for value before maturity, without notice, and the maker will not be allowed to set up the defense of fraud to relieve himself of the liability.

Alabama Nat. Bank v. Halsey, 109 Ala. 196, 19 So. 522; McMahon v. Thomas, 4 Cal. (Unrep.) 984, 39 Pac. 783; Bedell v. Her-ring, 77 Cal. 572, 11 Am. St. Rep. 307, 20 Pac. 129; Palmer v. Poor, 121 Ind. 135, 6 L.R.A. 469, 22 N. E. 984; Walters v. Palmer, 110 Ga. 776, 36 S. E. 79; Taylor v. Cribb, 100 Ga. 94, 26 S. E. 468; Highsmith v. Martin, 99 Ga. 92, 24 S. E. 805; Lamier v. Union Mortg. Bkg. & T. Co. 64 Ark. 39, 40 S. W. 466; Mulberger v. Morgan, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 34 S. W. 148; Hawkins v. Wilson, 71 Iowa, 761, 32 N. W. 416; First Nat. Bank v. Houseknecht, 121 Mich. 313, 80 N. W. 13; McCormick v. Warren, 74 Conn. 234, 50 Atl. 740; Ross v. Webster, 63 Conn. 64, 26 Atl. 476; Gillespie v. Rogers, 184 Pa. 488, 39 Atl. 290; Second Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 165 Pa. 199, 44 Am. St. Rep. 652, 30 Atl. 957; Hoats v. Aschbach, 160 Pac. 6, 28 Atl. 437; Draper v. Cowles, 27 Kan. 484.

Fraudulent representations as to the value of the consideration for which a negotiable promissory note is given may be shown in an action between the original parties, but such fraud is not a defense against an action by a bona fide holder for value.

Taylor v. Cribb, 100 Ga. 94, 26 S. E. 468; Grooms v. Olliff, 93 Ga. 789, 20 S. E. 655; Second Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 165 Pa. 199, 44 Am. St. Rep. 652, 30 Atl. 957; Clark v. Tanner, 100 Ky. 275, 38 S. W. 11; Stedman v. Rochester Loan & Bkg. Co. 42 Neb. 641, 60 N. W. 890; Franklin Phosphate Co. v. International Harvester Co. 62 Fla. 185, 57 So. 206, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1247; Showalter v. Webb, 42 Okla. 297, 141 Pac. 439; Morrison v. Farmers' & M. Bank, 9 Okla. 697, 60 Pac. 273; Forbes v. First Nat. Bank, 21

Okla. 206, 95 Pac. 785; Farmers' Bank v. Nichols, 25 Okla. 547, 138 Am. St. Rep. 931, 106 Pac. 834, 21 Ann. Cas. 1160; City State Bank v. Pickard, 35 Okla. 243, 129 Pac. 38; Wood v. Stickle, 36 Okla. 592, 128 Pac. 1082; McPherrin v. Tittle, 36 Okla. 510, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 395, 129 Pac. 721; Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Landis, 37 Okla. 530, 132 Pac. 1101; Western Exch. Bank v. Coleman, 38 Okla. 178, 132 Pac. 488; First State Bank v. Tobin, 39 Okla. 96, 134 Pac. 395; Cedar Rapids Nat. Bank v. Bashara, 39 Okla. 482, 135 Pac. 1051.

Where a party gives a reason for his conduct and decision touching anything involved in a controversy, he cannot, after litigation has begun, change his ground and put his conduct upon another and different consideration.

Ohio & M. R. Co. v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 258, 24 L. ed. 693; Davies v. Wakelee, 156 U. S. 680, 690, 39 L. ed. 578, 585, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 555; Duclos v. Cunningham, 102 N. Y. 678, 6 N. E. 790; Smith v. Keeler, 151 Ill. 518, 38 N. E. 250; Davis & R. Bldg. & Mfg. Co. v. Dix, 64 Fed. 411; Fenn v. Ware, 100 Ga. 563, 28 S. E. 238; Harris v. Chipman, 9 Utah, 101, 33 Pac. 242; Wyatt v. Henderson, 31 Or. 48, 48 Pac. 700; Redinger v. Jones, 68 Kan. 627, 75 Pac. 997; Sandefur v. Hines, 69 Kan. 168, 76 Pac. 444; Stanton v. Barnes, 72 Kan. 541, 84 Pac. 116; Gould v. Banks, 8 Wend. 562, 24 Am. Dec. 90; Holbrook v. Wight, 24 Wend. 169, 35 Am. Dec. 607; Winter v. Coit, 7 N. Y. 288, 57 Am. Dec. 522; Wallace v. Minneapolis & N. Elevator Co. 37 Minn. 464, 35 N. W. 268; Ballou v. Sherwood, 32 Neb. 666, 49 N. W. 790, 50 N. W. 1131; Donley v. Porter, 119 Iowa, 542, 93 N. W. 574; McDermott v. Mahoney, — Iowa, —, 106 N. W. 925; Frenzer v. Dufrene, 58 Neb. 432, 78 N. W. 719; State ex rel. Seth Thomas Clock Co. v. Cass County, 60 Neb. 566, 83 N. W. 733; Hixson Map Co. v. Nebraska Post Co. 5 Neb. (Unof.) 388, 98 N. W. 872; Powers v. Bohuslav, 84 Neb. 179, 120 N. W. 942.

Mr. A. J. Morris for defendant in error.

Mathews, C., filed the following opinion:

In October, 1910, the defendant purchased from the Denver-Laramie Realty Company certain shares of stock in said company, and executed his note to said company in payment for same. On August 14, 1911, the note was renewed, and afterwards transferred to the plaintiff in error. A copy of the note with indorsements is as follows:

$1,000.00.

Denver, Colorado, August 14, 1911.

December 14, 1911, after date, I promise L.R.A.1917B.

to pay to the order of Denver-Laramie Realty Company one thousand & no /100 Dollars, for value received. Payable at First State Bank of Binger, Okl., with interest at 7 per cent, from maturity.

[Signed] W. T. Utterback.

Indorsed on back:

Payment Guaranteed. Protest waived.

The Denver-Laramie Realty Co.,

By A. J. Spengel, Treasurer.

Northwestern Land and Iron Co.,

By A. J. Spengel, Treasurer.

On October 10, 1912, suit was instituted on said note in the county court of Caddo county. The defendant answered by general denial, admitted the execution of the note, and alleged that the note was given for certain shares of stock in the Denver-Laramie Realty Company, but claimed that he was induced to sign the same through certain false and fraudulent representations upon the part of said company. Trial was had to a jury, verdict was returned for defendant, and plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

Its first specification of error is stated as follows: "The court erred in overruling motion of plaintiff for judgment, for the reason that, as plaintiff had alleged it was a purchaser in due course of business, for value, before maturity, and without notice, the defenses set up were not available to defendant."

The defendant advances the following argument against the foregoing contention of plaintiff: "While the note is negotiable in form, the indorsement is in no sense a commercial indorsement. It is a guaranty of payment pure and simple; that is, the words, 'Payment guaranteed. Protest waived,' followed by the signatures of the two companies, mean that the companies guarantee the payment of the note and waive the protest thereof. The indorsement, amounting to a guaranty of payment, gives the plaintiff in error no standing as a bona fide holder of the note, but it holds the same subject to all defenses which would be available as against the original payee."

If plaintiff's contention is correct that the said indorsement upon the note was a commercial indorsement, there being no allegations in the answer that plaintiff had notice of the alleged infirmity of the note, then plaintiff was entitled to judgment upon the pleadings.

In arriving at a decision on this point we are confronted with a chaotic conflict of opinions thereon, and, as far as our investigation has led us, we find that the courts of but few, if any, of the states, have been consistent in declaring on this proposition, and our own court is in conflict thereon. The case of McNary v. Farmers' Nat Bank, 33 Okla. 1, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1009, 124 Pac. 286, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 248, sustains plaintiff, and the case of Ireland v. Floyd, 42 Okla. 609, L.R.A.1915C, 661, 142 Pac. 401, sustains defendant. An instructive note to the case of Hendrix v. Bauhard, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 688, after giving a list of the states, including both Oklahoma and Kansas, which hold that a signed guaranty on the back of a note makes the guarantor liable as an indorser, states that the great weight of authority supports that view. In the case last cited there was written on the back of the note, "For value received we hereby warrant the makers of this note financially good on execution," which was followed by the signatures of the payees, and it was there held, if the note was negotiated before maturity to a bona fide purchaser for value, he would be protected from any defense the maker might have against the payees.

The leading case holding to this view is a North Dakota case, Dunham v. Peterson, 5 N. D. 414, 67 N. W. 293, 36 L.R.A. 232, 57 Am. St. Rep. 556, and there the subject is also treated with an extended note which declares that the numerical weight of authorities support the decision in Dunham v. Peterson. The indorsement on the note in the Dunham Case was as follows: "For value received, I hereby guarantee the within note, waiving notice of protest and demand." Beneath this guaranty the payee signed his name. The court held therein that, when the payee of a negotiable promissory note transfers it by indorsing thereon a guaranty of payment, the purchaser is an indorsee within the rule protecting an innocent purchaser of such paper for value, before maturity, against defenses good between the original parties.

The case of Markey v. Corey, 108 Mich. 184, 36 L.R.A. 117, 62 Am. St. Rep. 698, 66 N. W. 493, presents an instance where an assignment was written on the back of the note, followed by the signatures of the payee of the note, and the court held the payee liable as an indorser.

The case of Pattillo v. Alexander, 96 Ga. 60, 29 L.R.A. 616, 22 S. E. 646, is an exhaustive and well-considered one on the point under discussion, and, after reviewing the authorities thereon at great length, concludes that a guaranty written on the back of a negotiable promissory note, followed by the signature of the payee, ordinarily amounts to a commercial indorsement. Robinson v. Lair, 31 Iowa, 9; Kellogg v. Douglas County Bank, 58 Kan. 43, 62 Am. St. Rep. 596, 48 Pac. 587; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. 6th ed. § 1781; Judson v. Gookwin, 37 Ill. 286; Green v. Burrows, 47 Mich. 70, 10 N. L.R.A.1917B.

W. 111; Russell & Co. v. Klink, 53 Mich. 161, 18 N. W. 627; State Nat. Bank v. Haylen, 14 Neb. 480, 16 N. W. 754; Mulen v. Jones, 102 Minn. 72, 112 N. W. 1048; German American Sav. Bank v. Hanna, 124 Iowa, 374, 100 N. W. 57; Dunham v. Peterson, supra; Elgin City Bkg. Co. v. Zelch, 57 Minn. 487, 59 N. W. 544; Childs v. Davidson, 38 Ill. 437; Donnerberg v. Oppenheimer, 15 Wash. 290, 46 Pac. 254; Partridge v. Davis, 20 Vt. 499; 3 R. C. L. § 241, p. 1035; Heard v. Dubuque County Bank, 8 Neb. 10, 30 Am. Rep. 811; Helmer v. Commercial Bank, 28 Neb. 474, 44 N. W. 482.

We are not unmindful of the fact that the case of Ireland v. Floyd, supra, is supported by a respectable line of authorities headed by the Central Trust Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 68, 25 L. ed. 876. Other authorities to the same effect are found in Ann. Cas. 1913D, 695, 36 L.R.A. 232, and 67 N. W. 295. But we think the better reasoning and greater weight of authority is with the case of McNary v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, supra.

But, even if the case of Ireland v. Floyd, supra, was not opposed by the case of McNary v. Farmers' Nat Bank, supra, and by the weight of authority from other states, we are inclined to the view that it is in conflict with the negotiable instruments law of this state, adopted in 1909.

Section 4067, Rev. Laws 1910, so far as applicable, is as follows:

"Where the language of the instrument is ambiguous, or there are omissions therein, the following rules of construction apply. . . .

"Sixth. Where a signature is so placed upon the instrument that it is not clear in what capacity the person making the same intended to sign, he is to be deemed an indorser."

Section 4088: "Qualified indorsement constitutes the indorser a mere assignor of the title to the instrument. It may be made by adding to the indorser's signature the words 'without recourse' or any words of similar import. Such an indorsement does not impair the negotiable character of the instrument."

Section 4107: "A holder in due course holds the instrument free from any defect of title of prior parties and free from defenses available to prior parties among themselves, and may enforce payment of the instrument for the full amount thereof against all parties liable thereon."

Section 4109: "Every holder is deemed prima facie to be a holder in due course; but when it is shown that the title of any person who has negotiated the instrument was defective, the burden is on the holder to prove that he or some person under whom he claims acquired the title as a holder in due course. But the last-mentioned rule does not apply in favor of a party who became bound on the instrument prior to the acquisition of such defective title."

Section 4113: "A person placing his signature upon an instrument otherwise than as maker, drawer or acceptor is deemed to be an indorser, unless he clearly indicates by appropriate words his intention to be bound in some other capacity."

It will be observed from § 4113 that the tendency of the law, when the status of a party who places his name upon the back of a negotiable instrument is under consideration, is to resolve all doubtful cases towards holding the same to be a commercial indorsement in due course. This rule is founded upon commercial necessity. The unshackled circulation of negotiable notes is a matter of great importance. The different forms of commercial instruments take the place of money. To require each assignee, before accepting them, to inquire into and investigate every circumstance bearing upon the original execution, and to take cognizance of all the equities between the original parties, would utterly destroy their commercial value and seriously impede business transactions.

A simple indorsement by the payee of his name upon a note serves the double purpose both of transferring the title to the holder and of charging the payee with the obligation to pay it in event the maker upon presentation declines to honor it. But before the liability can be fixed against the indorser there must be: First, a demand made upon the maker of the note for payment; and, second, in case the same is not paid, notice must be given the indorser. The rule seems to be that a general guaranty is in law a general indorsement of the instrument, with a waiver of the condition precedent of a notice of nonpayment by the drawers. 3 R. C. L. § 371.

There is no contention but that in the case at bar the defendant is at least a guarantor. If he be a guarantor only, then he is not entitled to the legal rights of an indorser to be served with notice of nonpayment. Yet we find written upon the back of the instrument in controversy the very significant words "Protest waived." Why waive a right that the party did not have? It must be presumed that the parties did not intend to do a useless and unnecessary act when these words were written upon the back of the instrument, and the reasonable construction is that by the entire indorsement he became an indorser with the enlarged liability of being legally held to pay. L.R.A.1917B.

ment without notice of the dishonor of the note. Further, no one can fairly say that the intention of defendant not to be bound is clearly indicated from the words written upon the back of the instrument in controversy; in fact, the indication points the other way.

It will be admitted that, where the payee in a note makes a written assignment of the same on the back of the note, followed by his signature, he can with much better logic argue that such an act should be construed as an assignment only, and not a commercial indorsement, than can one who makes a guaranty in a similar way; yet in the recent case of Farnsworth v. Burdick, 94 Kan. 749, 147 Pac. 863, under the same negotiable instruments law as our own, the Kansas court held: "Under the negotiable instruments law (§§ 5247-5446, Gen. Stat. 1909), a writing in these words, 'I Here By assigne this note over to E. H. Farnsworth this the Nov. 1st, 1910,' signed by the payee, on the back of a negotiable promissory note, complete and regular on its face, accompanied by delivery to the person named in the writing, is an indorsement of the note; and one who takes the note in good faith, for value, before it is due, without notice that it had been previously dishonored, and who, at the time he takes it, has no notice of any infirmity in the note or defect in the title of the person negotiating it, becomes the holder thereof in due course, and holds it free from any defect of title of the payee, and free from defenses available to the maker against the payee, and may enforce payment of the note for the full amount thereof against the maker."

Therefore, holding, as we do, that the defendant was an indorser of the note in controversy, it appears that his answer was defective in two important particulars.

Section 4095, Rev. Laws 1910, reads as follows: "Except where an indorsement bears date after maturity of the instrument, every negotiation is deemed prima facie to have been effected before the instrument was overdue."

Not only was there a presumption of law that the plaintiff became a bona fide holder before maturity, but it so averred in its petition, and defendant has failed to plead that plaintiff took the note in bad faith or had notice of any infirmity of the note. Showalter v. Webb, 42 Okla. 297, 141 Pac. 439.

Section 4759, Rev. Laws 1910, provides: "In all actions, allegations of the execution of written instruments and indorsements thereon, . . . shall be taken as true unless the denial of the same be verified by the affidavit of the party, his agent or attorney."

The plaintiff having alleged that the note was indorsed to it before maturity, for a valuable consideration, in due course of business, and a copy of said note having been attached to its petition, showing the indorsement, and the indorsement having not been denied under oath, it follows that plaintiff was entitled to judgment on the pleadings. See the case of First Nat. Bank v. Vaughn, 96 Kan. 402, 151 Pac. 1118.

The judgment will be reversed and remanded, with instructions to the trial court that, if defendant does not elect to amend his answer, to enter judgment upon the pleadings in favor of plaintiff; if the answer is amended, then to proceed in conformity with this opinion.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

S. J. STRONG, Plff. in Err.,

v.

GEORGE W. DAY et al.

(— Okla. —, 160 Pac. 722.)

Officer — personal liability of county commissioner.

The individuals composing a board of county commissioners are personally liable to any person suffering damage thereby, and who is himself not guilty of contributory negligence, for their negligent failure to repair a county bridge under their care and supervision; there being sufficient public funds available for making such repairs. For other cases, see Officers, II. c, in Dig 1-52 N. S.

(October 24, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court for Custer County to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to a petition filed to recover damages for injury to plaintiff's property alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligent failure to repair a bridge. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. George T. Webster, for plaintiff in error:

Defendants were vested with an absolute, certain, and imperative duty.

Mott v. Hull, — Okla. —, L.R.A.1916B, 1184, 152 Pac. 92; Jordan v. Davis, 10 Okla. 329, 61 Pac. 1063; Harris v. Carson, 40 Ill. App. 147; Hover v. Barkhoof, 44 N. Y. 113; Adsit v. Brady, 4 Hill, 630, 44 Am. Dec. 305; McCord v. High, 24 Iowa, 336; McCarthy v. Syracuse, 46 N. Y. 194; Clark v. Miller, 64 N. Y. 628.

An administrative officer, though under a general duty to the public, is at the same time under a specific duty not to cause special damage to any members of the public by reason of his negligence.

Headnote by BURFORD, C.

Note. — The personal liability of highway officer for negligence is discussed in the note to Mott v. Hull, L.R.A.1916B, 1180. L.R.A.1917B.

Mott v. Hull, — Okla. —, L.R.A.1916B, 1184, 152 Pac. 92; Tholkes v. Decock, 125 Minn. 507, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 142, 147 N. W. 648; Hanson v. Clinton, 156 Wis. 147, 145 N. W. 646; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 337; 29 Cyc. 1442, and notes; Smith v. Zimmer, 45 Mont. 282, 125 Pac. 420; Hungerford v. Waverly, 56 Misc. 186, 107 N. Y. Supp. 291; Robinson v. Chamberlain, 90 Am. Dec. 713, note; Adsit v. Brady, 40 Am. Dec. 305, note; Anne Arundel County v. Duckett, 83 Am. Dec. 557, note.

Mr. George C. Darnell for defendants in error.

BURFORD, C., filed the following opinion:

Plaintiff alleged that the individual defendants constituted the board of county commissioners of Custer county; that, as such, they were charged by law with the duty of repairing the public bridges in the county over 20 feet in length; that among such bridges was one constructed over Deer creek at a point particularly described, said bridge having been built by the county in 1910; that said bridge was upon an improved public road upon a section line laid out and improved by the county; that said bridge was being used as a county bridge on June 2, 1915; that on said day, while crossing the same with a loaded wagon, the plaintiff's work animals were killed by reason of the bridge falling down and precipitating them and their driver into the creek below. Many defects in the original construction of the bridge were set out, and it was further alleged that the beams and supports thereof had become rotten and decayed, and had been in such condition for more than seventeen months prior to the accident. The petition then states: "Which condition was unknown to plaintiff, but was well known to said defendants, as plaintiff verily believes and so charges, but if such fact were not known to them, their ignorance and want of knowledge relative to the rotten condition of said tiebeams and struts was due to their wanton negligence and want of care in looking after and trying to ascertain the true condition of said bridge; and said plaintiff alleges that, if said defendants had given said bridges any attention, or had made the most casual examination of same with the end in view of ascertaining if the same was in good repair, they would have readily discovered that the same was in a dangerous condition and liable to collapse at any time, and this they wantonly and negligently failed to do. That the joints and ends of said beams where the struts entered against the shoulders became and were rotten and in a decayed and worthless condition, destroying the use and value of said bridge, and making it extremely dangerous to the traveling public, and liable to collapse at any time, and that the 8x8 beams extending over said piling at the ends thereof upon which rested the tiebeams became and were rotten and decayed and incapable of resisting the usual and ordinary weight of public travels; but these were so covered that their true condition was not capable of being readily discovered by the public, and could only be seen by making a careful inspection thereof; but these defects could have been readily ascertained by these defendants if they had attempted to inspect the same, or have caused the same to be inspected by any competent person by them employed, which duty rested upon them because of their official duties toward the public, and for the purpose of protecting the public from falling of said bridge."

It was further alleged: "That said defendants have at all times hereinafter mentioned had ample and sufficient money in their hands and under their control to repair the bridge hereinafter described."

The value of the animals killed was set out, together with a prayer for damages.

To the petition the individual defendants filed a general demurrer, which was by the court sustained. The Fidelity & Deposit Company, surety upon their official bonds, filed no pleading, and neither its rights nor liabilities are considered herein.

Considering this petition with all the reasonable intendments to be drawn therefrom, we are of the opinion that it states a cause of action. The American courts have widely divided upon the question of personal liability of road officers for negligent or wilful misfeasance or nonfeasance in the repair of the roads and bridges under their care. Some states have apparently taken different views upon the subject at different periods of their judicial history. The following cases will be found to be illustrative of the various holdings and reasons therefor: Sussex County v. Strader, 18 N. J. L. 108, 35 Am. Dec. 530; Livermore v. Camden County, 29 N. J. L. 245; Bartlett v. Crozier, 17 Johns. 439, 8 Am. Dec. 428; New York v. Furze, 3 Hill, 617; Adsit v. Brady, 4 L.R.A.1917B.

Hill, 632, 40 Am. Dec. 305; Robinson v. Chamberlain, 34 N. Y. 389, 90 Am. Dec. 713; Smith v. Wright, 24 Barb. 170; Hover v. Barkhoof, 44 N. Y. 113; Coleman v. Eaker, 111 Ky. 131, 63 S. W. 484; Lynn v. Adams, 2 Ind. 143; McConnell v. Dewey, 5 Neb. 385; Dunlap v. Knapp, 14 Ohio St. 64, 82 Am. Dec. 468; Tearney v. Smith, 86 Ill. 391; Allen v. Michel, 38 Ill. App. 313; Harris v. Carson, 40 Ill. App. 147; Skinner v. Morgan, 21 Ill. App. 209; Gould v. Schermer, 101 Iowa, 582, 70 N. W. 697, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 136; Sells v. Dermody, 114 Iowa, 344, 86 N. W. 325; Anne Arundel County v. Duckett, 20 Md. 468, 83 Am. Dec. 557; Calvert County v. Gibson, 36 Md. 229; Downes v. Hopkinton, 67 N. H. 456, 40 Atl. 433; Doeg v. Cook, 126 Cal. 213, 77 Am. St. Rep. 171, 58 Pac. 707; Worden v. Witt, 4 Idaho, 404, 95 Am. St. Rep. 70, 39 Pac. 1114; Hathaway v. Hinton, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 243; McKenzie v. Chovin, 1 McMull. L. 222. Upon the common law Brooke's Abr. title Action on Case, reviewing the Year Books, Russell v. Devon, 2 T. R. 698, 100 Eng. Reprint, 359, 1 Revised Rep. 585, 12 Eng. Rul. Cas. 694, and Henly v. Lyme, 5 Bing. 91, 130 Eng. Reprint, 995, 6 L. J. C. P. 222, 30 Revised Rep. 542, are often cited.

It appears to be not necessary to go into a discussion of these cases in view of the decision of this court in Mott v. Hull, — Okla. —, L.R.A.1916B, 1184, 152 Pac. 92. In that case certain township trustees were individually sued for damages arising from their negligently leaving an unguarded obstruction in a highway which they were repairing. It was there held that their duties in this regard were purely ministerial, and that for negligence in the performance thereof they might be held individually liable. This court said: "Where the duties of an officer are purely ministerial, he may be liable in damages to any one who can show he has suffered a special injury because of such officer's failure to perform or negligent performance of such duty."

Indeed, there is little conflict in the adjudicated cases upon the principle. It is in its application that diversity of opinion has arisen. The rule is tersely stated in Amy v. Supervisors (Amy v. Barkholder) 11 Wall. 136, 20 L. ed. 101: "The rule is well settled that, where the law requires absolutely a ministerial act to be done by a public officer, and he neglects or refuses to do such act, he may be compelled to respond in damages to the extent of the injury arising from his conduct. There is an unbroken current of authorities to this effect. A mistake as to his duty and honest intentions will not excuse the offender."

It must be taken as settled by Mott v.

Hull, supra, that the work of repairing roads—and bridges must rest in the same category—by public officers is ministerial in its nature, and likewise that the distinction between acts of misfeasance and nonfeasance in some of the cases does not exist in this state; for each is placed upon the same plane in the language above quoted. But one distinction is noted between the governing principles announced in Mott v. Hull, supra, and those to be applied in the instant case. In the Mott Case the officers sued were township officers, who pleaded that they “were charged by law with power and duty of repairing the highway.” Here the parties sued are county commissioners, and the point is made that the statutes of this state impose no absolute duty upon them to repair the bridges under their charge. We therefore pass to a consideration of the laws governing county commissioners in this regard. It is to be noted that there is no allegation that the bridge in question was upon a “state road,” and that therefore the provisions of the Act of 1915 peculiar to the duties of the various officers having supervision of such roads are not considered.

By § 7581, Rev. Laws 1910:

“All bridges more than 20 feet long shall be under the control and supervision of the board of county commissioners.”

By § 1600, Rev. Laws 1910: The county commissioners “shall have power . . . to construct and repair bridges and to open, lay out and vacate highways . . . [and] to do and perform such other duties and acts that the board of county commissioners may be required by law to do and perform.”

And it is provided in § 7609, contained within the general articles upon roads and bridges, that “the board of county commissioners shall provide all roads improved, under the provisions of this article, with suitable bridges of a permanent and substantial character and shall keep and maintain same in repair.”

Some question is raised that the latter section applies only to roads within the “improvement districts” provided for in said article. However that may be, we are of the opinion that the general grant of power to repair bridges above set out carries with it the duty so to do within the funds provided by law for such purpose. As early as Rex v. Derby, Skinner, 370, 90 Eng. Reprint, 164, 3 Barn. & Ad. 147, 1 L. J. M. C. N. S. 15, it was held that “may” in the case of a public officer is tantamount to “shall,” and in Rex v. Barlow, 2 Salk. 609, 91 Eng. Reprint, 516, it was said: “Where a statute directs the doing of a thing for the sake of justice or the public good, L.R.A.1917P.

the word ‘may’ is the same as the word ‘shall.’”

In Rock Island County v. United States, 4 Wall. 435, 18 L. ed. 419, the statute provided that the supervisors “may, if deemed advisable, levy a tax,” etc. Construing the statute, the Supreme Court of the United States said: “The conclusion to be deduced from the authorities is that where power is given to public officers, in the language of the act before us, or in equivalent language,—whenever the public interest or individual rights call for its exercise,—the language used, though permissive in form, is in fact peremptory.”

This language was adopted and followed in Jordon v. Davis, 10 Okla. 329, 61 P&c. 1063.

Almost the identical language of our statute was involved in Doeg v. Cook, 126 Cal. 213, 77 Am. St. Rep. 171, 58 Pac. 707, supra. The law there provided that “the trustees have power to provide for the opening, lighting, and keeping in good repair streets and alleys.”

Under the statute it was held that if the officers, in regard to repairs, negligently performed their duty or did not perform it at all, they were liable in damages to anyone specially injured as a result of such neglect.

We can scarcely conceive of a power whose exercise is more strongly called for by the “public interest” than that of keeping bridges in repair. The people use these bridges upon the supposition that they are capable of sustaining ordinary traffic. The county commissioners are public officers, paid for their services, who have the supervision of these bridges and the power to repair them. Under such conditions we hold that power to repair carries with it a duty to exercise that power within the lawful limitations regarding available funds and the like. With the duty to repair necessarily goes the duty to inspect, in person or by agent, in order to ascertain the necessity therefor. Whether or not repairs are necessary; upon what bridges, if more than one is in disrepair, the public funds should be expended; the amount to be devoted to each; the kind of repairs to be made,—all these may be matters of discretion, for a mistake in the exercise of which the officers would not be liable; but if this bridge, as alleged, funds being available to do this particular repairing, as alleged in the petition, were left for seventeen months so decayed that it constituted, in the language of the petition, “a veritable death trap,” and the commissioners knew these facts or could have ascertained them upon “a casual examination,” as alleged, and neglected to so inspect the bridge or cause it to be inspected, “wantonly and negligently,” then we think that, the necessity for repairs being apparent, and the funds being available therefor, the duty to repair the bridge becomes ministerial, and if they negligently failed to perform that duty they are liable to the plaintiff in the absence of contributory negligence upon his part. The word "negligently" is used herein advisedly, and we are not to be taken as holding that every failure to repair a bridge constitutes a negligent failure of duty or raises a presumption of negligence upon the part of the commissioners.

Defendants rely wholly upon James v. Wellston Twp. 18 Okla. 56, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1219, 90 Pac. 100, 11 Ann. Cas. 938, and Howard v. Rose Twp. 37 Okla. 153, 131 Pac. 683, holding the township not liable for damages arising from defects in the township highways. This contention is disposed of by the language of Mott v. Hull, supra: "An officer may be liable to an individual for negligence in the performance of a purely ministerial duty, although the state or political subdivision thereof which elects him may not, under the law, be liable for his negligence."

We have confined our remarks to a discussion of the duty to repair. So far as the petition alleges defects in the original construction, there being no allegation that these defendants were in office at the time the bridge was first built, we are of opinion that no liability can be fastened upon them in that regard. If any cause of action exists for negligence in the original construction, the right of action is against the persons in office at that time. It does not extend to their successors. Lament v. Haight, 44 How. Pr. 1.

The judgment of the trial court is reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the petition.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

ANDREW SEDLOCK

v.

CARR COAL MINING & MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Appt.

(98 Kan. 680, 159 Pac. 9.)

Master and servant — workmen's compensation — injury in leaving property — course of employment.

A miner, at the end of his day's work, changed his clothes, and, still carrying a miner's lamp, started towards the bottom of the shaft with the intention of ascending to the top of the mine. About 200 feet from the room where he had been at work, and about one-half mile from the bottom of the shaft, his face came in contact with a piece of slate which was hanging from the roof of the mine, and one of his eyes was destroyed. Held, that the injury arose out of and in the course of his employment within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, and that under its provision he is entitled to compensation for the injury. For other cases, see Master and Servant, II.

a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. 8.

(July 8, 1916.)

Headnote by JOHNSTON, Ch. J.

Note.—The annotation in L.R.A.1916A, 23, on the general subject of Workmen's Compensation Acts, treats, at pages 232 et seq., of the American cases as to what injuries are deemed to arise out of and in the course of the employment within such acts; and the English cases on the subject at pages 40 et seq. The specific question as to recovery of compensation for injuries re-

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Leavenworth County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover compensation for injuries sustained by him while employed in defendant's mine. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. E. Dempsey, for appellant:

The injury sustained did not "arise out of and in the course of employment," within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Parker v. Hambrook, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 4, note; Plumb v. Cobden Flour Mills Co. Ann. Cas. 1914B, 498, note; De Constantin v. Public Service Commission, L.R.A.1916A, 331, note.

Mr. W. W. McCanles, for appellee:

Plaintiff was injured while in the performance of his duties.

Pittsburg Vitrified Paving & Bldg. Brick Co. v. Fisher, 79 Kan. 577, 100 Pac. 507; Parkinson Sugar Co. v. Riley, 50 Kan. 401, 34 Am. St. Rep. 123, 31 Pac. 1090; Hobbs v. Rowland, L.R.A.1916B, 192, note; Marshall v. Stewart, 33 Eng. L. & Eq. Rep. 1; Hills v. Blair, 182 Mich. 20, 148 N. W. 243, 7 N. C. C. A. 409; Terlecki v. Straus, 86 N. J. L. 708, 92 Atl. 1087; Sundine's Case, 218 Mass. 1, L.R.A.1916A, 318, 105 N. E.

ceived while going to and from work is also treated in the annotation following De Constantin v. Public Service Commission, L.R.A.1916A, 331.

For later cases and annotation on questions arising under these acts, consult the L.R.A. Digest and Indexes to Notes covering volumes subsequent to L.R.A.1916A, under the title, "Workmen's Compensation."

433, 5 N. C. C. A. 616; Blovelt v. Sawyer [1904] 1 K. B. 271, 78 L. J. K. B. N. S. 155, 68 J. P. 110, 52 Week. Rep. 503, 89 L. T. N. S. 658, 20 Times L. R. 105, 6 W. C. C. 16; De Filippis v. Falkenberg, 170 App. Div. 153, 155 N. Y. Supp. 761; De Constantin v. Public Service Commission, L.R.A.1916A, 331, note; Putnam v. Pacific Monthly Co. 68 Or. 36, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 338, L.R.A.1916F, 782, 130 Pac. 990, 136 Pac. 835, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 256; Hobson v. Moorman, 115 Tenn. 73, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 749, 90 S. W. 158, 5 Ann. Cas. 601; Ewald v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 70 Wis. 420, 5 Am. St. Rep. 178, 36 N. W. 14, 591; Olsen v. Andrews, 168 Mass. 261, 47 N. E. 90, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 570; Chicago, R. I. & T. R. Co. v. Oldridge, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 436, 76 S. W. 581; Helmke v. Thilmann, 107 Wis. 216, 83 N. W. 360, 8 Am. Neg. Rep. 172; Muller v. Oakes Mfg. Co. 113 App. Div. 689, 99 N. Y. Supp. 923; Southern Coal & Coke Co. v. Swinney, 149 Ala. 405, 42 So. 810; Amys v. Barton [1912] 1 K. B. 40, 81 L. J. K. B. N. S. 65, 105 L. T. N. S. 619, 28 Times L. R. 29, 5 B. W. C. C. 117; Kitchenham v. The Johannesburg [1911] A. C. 417, 90 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1102, 105 L. T. N. S. 118, 27 Times L. R. 504, 56 Sol. Jo. 599, 4 B. W. C. C. 311.

Johnston, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In an action in the district court Andrew Sedlock recovered a judgment for $1,456 against the Carr Coal Mining & Manufacturing Company, as compensation for an injury sustained by him while employed in the defendant's mine. There is no controversy between the parties as to the employment, or the nature and extent of the injury suffered, nor yet as to the amount of the compensation allowed. The question which divides them is whether the accidental injury sustained by the plaintiff arose out of and in the course of his employment with the defendant within the meaning of the Compensation Act. It appears that plaintiff had been at work during the day in one of the rooms in the coal mine. About 4 o'clock he quit work, changed his mining clothes for street clothes in the room, then started to walk along the entry in the mine leading towards the shaft for the purpose of ascending to the top of the mine. He wore his miner's lamp, and it was necessary for him to do so in order to find his way to the bottom of the shaft. While he was walking along one of the straits of the mine leading to the shaft, and about 200 feet from his room and one-half mile from the bottom of the shaft, he struck his face against a piece of slate that was hanging from the roof of the mine, and the result was an injury, including the destruction of one of his eyes. At the time of the injury both parties were within the operation of the Workmen's Compensation Law.

The defendant contends that the plaintiff was not entitled to compensation under the act. To recover, it must appear that the plaintiff's injury arose out of and in the course of his employment. Laws 1911, chap. 218, § 1. In an amendment of § 9 of the act it is provided that "the words 'arising out of and in the course of employment' as used in this act, shall not be construed to include injuries to the employee occurring while he is on his way to assume the duties of his employment, or after leaving such duties, the proximate cause of which injury is not the employer's negligence." Laws 1913, chap. 216, § 4.

While the plaintiff had laid aside his pick and other tools, he was still in the mine and subject to the rules prescribed by the defendant when the accident occurred. The relationship of master and servant continued to exist while he was within the control and subject to the orders of the defendant. While the plaintiff was in the mine he was under obligation to observe the rules prescribed by the defendant, and it was incumbent on the defendant to provide him not only a safe place to work in the mine, but also a safe passageway out of it, as well as the means to carry him safely to the top of the mine. His duties to his employer had not ended until he left the mine, nor had the duties of the defendant towards him ended until that time. It cannot be said, therefore, that he was on his way to assume the duties of his employment, or had left such duties at the time of his injury. The statutory definition of the words, "arising out of and in the course of employment," is substantially the meaning applied to them by the courts which have had them under consideration.

In Milwaukee v. Althoff, 156 Wis. 68, L.R.A.1916A, 327, 145 N. W. 238, 4 N. C. C. A. 110, compensation was allowed to an employee who, after receiving instructions as to where he was to work during the day, proceeded along a street toward the place, and while on the way he fell and injured his knee. It was contended that, as he was not actually at work and had not in fact reached the place of work, the injury could not be said to have been received in the course of employment or to have arisen out of it. The decision was rested largely on the relationship that existed between the parties when the accident occurred, upon the theory that if the relationship of master and servant existed at the time of the injury, he was entitled to the benefits of the act. It was held that if the servant was under the master's control and subject to his direction, the accident is to be regarded as having arisen out of and in the course of the employment. Many American and English cases are cited to show that the relation may extend beyond the hours when the servant is carrying on his regular work, and in some instances, where he goes to places other than the mine, factory, or premises where the actual work was being done.

In De Constantin v. Public Service Commission, 75 W. Va. 32, L.R.A.1916A, 329, 83 S. E. 88, a workman employed by a contractor to do work upon a railroad was killed about five minutes before the actual work was to begin and also before his arrival at the place where the work was to be done. The accident was supposed to have occurred while the workman was proceeding on a way chosen by himself, and when he stepped in front of one train to escape another. As he was not upon the premises of the employer, nor upon a road or other way provided by the employer as the only means of access to the place where the work was to be done, compensation was not recoverable. The court held that a recovery may be had in some instances before the arrival at or retirement from the place of actual work. It was said: "A reasonable time after the termination of actual work is allowed. If a workman is injured on the premises of the employer and while leaving his place of actual work by the usual course of travel, the injury is deemed to have arisen out of the employment. Kinney v. Baltimore & O. Employees' Relief Assn. 35 W. Va. 385, 15 L.R.A. 142, 14 S. E. 8. Since injury after the termination of actual work, while on the premises of the employer and in pursuit of the usual way of leaving the same, is held to be within the course of employment, and to have arisen out of the same, it seems clear that an injury to a workman while coming to his place of work on the premises of the employer and by the only way of access, or the one contemplated by the contract of employment, must also be regarded as having been incurred in the course of the employment and to have arisen out of the same. If, in such case, injury does not occur on the premises, but in close proximity to the place of work and on a road or other way intended and contemplated by the contract as being the exclusive means of access to the place of work, the same principle would apply and govern."

It was held in a Michigan case that the fact that a workman is upon the premises of his employer when the injury occurs is L.R.A.1917B.

not a conclusive test that he is covered by the act, as he might be so far beyond the place of work at the time of the accident as to be beyond the control or direction of the employer, and therefore outside of the protection of the act. A section hand, instead of eating his dinner with others of the crew near the place of work as was customary, concluded to go to his own home for dinner, a considerable distance away. While walking on a railroad track towards his home he was struck by a train and killed. The court followed the rule that accidents which befall an employee while going to and from his work are not to be regarded as happening in the course of or arising out of his employment, and held that, as the workman had gone on a mission of his own, not connected with the employer's business nor in accordance with the usage of the crew, but for his own purposes and pleasure, he was not entitled to compensation. In deciding the case the court remarked: "In applying the general rule that the period of going to and returning from work is not covered by the act, it is held that the employment is not limited by the exact time when the workman reaches the scene of his labor and begins it, nor when he ceases, but includes a reasonable time, space, and opportunity before and after, while he is at or near his place of employment." Hills v. Blair, 182 Mich. 20, 27, 148 N. W. 243, 7 N. C. C. A. 409.

In Zabriskie v. Erie R. Co. 86 N. J. L. 266, L.R.A.1916A, 315, 92 Atl. 385, an employer failed to provide toilet facilities for employees in the building where they were at work, and they were obliged to, and did, habitually resort for such facilities to another building of the employer which lay across a public street. One of them, while crossing the street to reach the toilet during working hours, was struck by a vehicle, and the court held that the action arose out of and in the course of employment.

Parkinson Sugar Co. v. Riley, 50 Kan. 401, 34 Am. St. Rep. 123, 31 Pac. 1090, did not arise under the Compensation Act, but it is somewhat analogous. There an employee at work on the premises of the company asked and obtained permission to go into a certain part of the factory to warm himself, and while attempting to enter the place, fell into an uncovered cistern and was scalded. It was contended that the employee was pursuing his own comfort and pleasure at the time, and was not engaged in the business of his employer; but the court held that he was engaged in the line of his duty at the time of the injury.

In Pittsburg-Vitrified Paving & Bldg. Brick Co. v. Fisher, 79 Kan. 576, 100 Pac. 507, four men were employed to work at a certain machine in a brick plant, and under their plan each one took a turn at resting while the others were at work. One of them, while resting, went into another department of the establishment near his own machine, and was injured because of the failure of his employer to guard machinery near which he went. It was held that he was engaged in the performance of duty at the time, and that a recovery might be had under the provisions of the Factory Act.

An elaborate annotation of the Workmen's Compensation Act, covering every feature of it, may be found in L.R.A.1916A, in which the American and English cases are cited, and most of those applicable to the point in contention here are set forth at pages 40, 232, 327, and 329. In the note authorities are cited in support of the proposition that "the moment that the actual work stops cannot be considered in every case as the time of termination of the employment," and that a "recovery may be had for an accident occurring before the place of work has been reached, if, during the antecedent period within which it occurred, the servant was, as a matter of fact under the master's control." L.R.A. 1916A, 332.

Here, as we have seen, the workman was in the mine, under the direction and entitled to the protection of the defendant at the time of the accident. Each owed duties to the other, and the relation of master and servant still existed between them when the injury was sustained, although the workman was not actually using the pick and shovel at that time.

A motion to dismiss the case was filed, but the merits of the controversy were fully presented by both parties when the motion was submitted, and therefore final disposition of the case will be made at this time.

The judgment is affirmed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

WESTERN & SOUTHERN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
CARRIE WEBSTER.

(172 Ky. 444, 189 S. W. 429.)

Insurance — insurable interest — illegal wife.

1 A woman living with a man as his wife pursuant to a formal but illegal marriage has an insurable interest in his life. For other cases, see Insurance, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — destruction of insurable interest — effect.

2. The annulment of a formal but illegal marriage, during which the woman took insurance on the life of the man, destroys her insurable interest, and she can recover only the premiums which she has paid on the policy.

For other cases, see Insurance, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 28, 1916.)

Note. — Generally, as to insurance on life in favor of paramour, see note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Cummings, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 252.

The effect of divorce on rights of beneficiary under insurance policy or benefit certificate is treated in the notes to Wallace v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 478; Green v. Green, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 370; and Filley v. Illinois L. Ins. Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 130. L.R.A.1917B APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Campbell County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a life insurance policy. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. M. Caldwell, for appellant:

Plaintiff's petition does not state a cause of action.

Schauberger v. Moral, 168 Ky. 368, 182 S. W. 198; Sea v. Conrad, 155 Ky. 51, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1074, 159 S. W. 622, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 318.

Plaintiff, never having been lawfully married to the assured, had no insurable interest in his life.

Western & Southern L. Ins. Co. v. Grimes, 138 Ky. 338, 128 S. W. 65; Rupp v. Western Life Indemnity Co. 138 Ky. 18, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 675, 127 S. W. 490; Scott v. Scott, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1356, 77 S. W. 1122.

Messrs. Judson A. Shuey and L. J. Crawford, for appellee:

A person may take out insurance on his own life and designate whom he pleases as beneficiary; but in addition to this, under the facts, this innocent, dependent plaintiff, who supposed she was Weesner's wife, and for whom he insured his life and paid the first premium, had an insurable interest.

Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 L. ed. 924; Hess v. Segenfelder (Morgan v. Segenfelder) 127 Ky. 348, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1172, 128 Am. St. Rep. 343, 105 S. W. 476; Provident Sav. Life Assur. Co. v. Dees, 120 Ky. 285, 86 S. W. 522; Rupp v. Western Life Indemnity Co. 138 Ky. 21, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 675, 127 S. W. 490; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Martin, 108 Ky. 11, 55 S. W. 694; Scott v. Scott, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1365, 77 S. W. 1122; 25 Cyc. 705; Lampkin v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 11 Colo. App. 249, 52 Pac. 1040; Ruoff v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 86 App. Div. 447, 83 N. Y. Supp. 758; Joyce, Ins. § 1055; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Patterson, 41 Ga. 338, 5 Am. Rep. 535.

Clarke, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellee filed this action seeking to recover of appellant the sum of $1,000, the amount of a policy issued by appellant upon the life of James P. Weesner on the 29th day of June, 1907, in which she was designated as the beneficiary, alleging that she was married to Weesner on the 14th day of February, 1906, and that he had died on or before the 22d day of March, 1915. She further alleged that the policy was issued and delivered to her and Weesner, but that she had paid all the premiums that were paid upon it, and that she had been divorced from insured by judgment of the Campbell circuit court on the 7th day of January, 1909; that the company had refused to accept the offered proof of Weesner's death, or to pay her the amount of the policy. A demurrer was filed to the petition and overruled. Appellant answered in three paragraphs. In the first paragraph it denied that Weesner was dead. In the second it denied that appellee was the legal wife of the insured, or that she had any insurable interest in his life, and tendered and paid into court the sum of $287.75, alleged to be the total amount of premiums, with interest and costs then accrued, paid by appellee, which it asked that appellee be required to accept in full settlement of all demands. In the third paragraph appellant alleged that if appellee ever had any interest, insurable or otherwise, in the policy of insurance sued on, or in the life of James P. Weesner, such rights were terminated by the judgment of divorce. A demurrer was sustained to the second and third paragraphs of the answer, and appellee declined to accept the amount tendered and paid into court in full satisfaction of her claim. At the conclusion of the evidence, both appellee and appellant entered a motion for a peremptory instruction. The motion of appellant was overruled, to which it excepted, while the motion of appellee was sustained, to which appellant objected and excepted, and the jury, pursuant to the instructions of the court, returned a verdict in favor of appellee for the full amount of the policy, upon which L.R.A.1917B.

judgment was entered, and from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

Numerous errors are relied upon by appellant for reversal; but, as the questions involved depend upon the validity of the contract, it will only be necessary to construe the contract in the light of the facts of record.

Since appellee alleged in her petition that "the said contract of insurance was entered into by and between the James P. Weesner, plaintiff and defendant therein," but that she had paid all the premiums paid to appellant upon the policy, it was necessary to the validity of the contract that she should have, at the time the contract was made, an insurable interest in the life of Weesner; otherwise it would have been a wagering contract and against public policy. Western & Southern L. Ins. Co. v. Grimes, 138 Ky. 338, 128 S. W. 65, and Rupp v. Western Life Indemnity Co. 138 Ky. 18, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 675, 127 S. W. 490. That appellee and Weesner were not legally married is admitted, and appellant contends that appellee therefore did not have an insurable interest in his life. In Joyce on Insurance, § 1055, it is said: "Although it is held that by the term 'wife' is meant a lawful wife, yet a woman has an insurable interest in the life of a man with whom she has for years been living as his wife."

In Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Martin, 108 Ky. 11, 55 S. W. 694, this court said [25 Cyc. 705]: "Where a man and woman live together as husband and wife, either has an insurable interest in the life of the other, irrespective of whether there is a valid marriage."

It is true that, in all of the cases so holding which we have examined, the policy was procured by the insured and the premiums paid by him; but insurable interest is not dependent upon who pays the premiums, but solely upon the relationship the parties bear toward each other. As said in Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 L. ed. 924: "It is not easy to define with precision what will in all cases constitute an insurable interest, so as to take the contract out of the class of wager policies. It may be stated generally, however, to be such an interest, arising from the relations of the party obtaining the insurance, either as creditor of or surety for the assured, or from the ties of blood or marriage to him, as will justify a reasonable expectation of advantage or benefit from the continuance of his life."

As the policy was issued upon the life of Weesner while he and appellee were living together as husband and wife pursuant to a formal but illegal marriage, and they were recognized as such by friends and acquaintances, we conclude appellee had, when the policy was issued, an insurable interest in the life of Weesner, such as permitted her to pay the premiums thereon, and that the contract was not therefore void.

But one other question with reference to the policy remains, and that is: Did the judgment annulling the marriage of appellee and the insured, upon the ground that it was void ab initio because Weesner had a living wife from whom he had not been divorced, terminate her interest in the contract? Appellant contends that it does, and that she is only entitled to recover the amount she has paid to it as premiums, with interest, which amount it tendered in full settlement of the claim. In support of this contention, appellant cites Schauberger v. Morel, 168 Ky. 368, 182 S. W. 198, and Sea v. Conrad, 155 Ky. 51, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1074, 159 S. W. 622, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 318, in the former of which cases this court said: "It is now a settled rule of law in this jurisdiction that if a husband procures a life insurance policy on himself, naming his wife as beneficiary, but with the right reserved to himself to change the beneficiary, and the parties are thereafter divorced by a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, the wife is thereby divested of all interest in the policy of insurance, and cannot at the death of the husband claim the proceeds. In other words, the wife's interest in the policy on the husband's life is divested by the judgment of divorce, and this is true though the premiums thereon may have been paid by the wife; but in the latter case she will be entitled to be reimbursed out of the proceeds of the policy the amount of the premiums paid by her thereon. The judgment of divorce operates to restore to the divorced parties the title to such property as either may have obtained from or through the other during marriage, in consideration or by reason thereof; and this is true whether the return of the property is ordered by the judgment of divorce or in a subsequent proceeding. If the order of restoration be, as is often the case, merely formal, or none is made when the divorce is granted, any question thereafter arising as to what property shall be restored by either party to the other may be settled by subsequent proceedings."

Counsel for appellee contends that the above rule applies only where there has been a divorce from a legal marriage, and has no application where the judgment annuls a void marriage; that the above rule is dependent upon § 425 of the Civil Code and § 2121 of the Kentucky Statutes; that L.R.A.1917B.

neither of these statutory provisions has reference to any divorce except from the bonds of matrimony such as exist under a legal marriage, but which never existed between appellee and the insured. Appellee cites from the latter part of § 2121 of the Statutes the following: "Upon final judgment of divorce from the bond of matrimony the parties shall be restored such property, not disposed of at the commencement of the action, as either obtained from or through the other before or during the marriage in consideration thereof," in support of his argument that it is only a "judgment of divorce from the bond of matrimony" that restores property acquired by reason of the marriage.

The argument is ingenious, and, if sound, leaves a pseudo wife in a very much better position with reference to property acquired by her from the illegal husband during and by reason of an illegal marriage relationship when same is declared a nullity, than a legal wife, is left with reference to property acquired by her from her husband during and by reason of a legal marriage when same is dissolved. This anomalous condition can receive judicial sanction only if it necessarily results from statutory enactment, and we do not believe that any such necessity exists here, the quotation by counsel for appellee from § 2121, supra, when taken by itself, would seem to indicate that restoration of property might apply alone to a final judgment of divorce from the bonds of matrimony; but, when you read the entire section of the statutes, it is apparent that the only purpose of the legislature in restricting the language to a final judgment of divorce from the bonds of matrimony was to distinguish such a divorce from a judgment of divorce from bed and board, following which there is no restitution of property. The entire section deals with property rights of husband and wife, and it is clear that the legislature intended by its enactment that an absolute divorce, as distinguished from a separation from bed and board, should carry with it a restoration of property acquired by one spouse from the other during and by reason of the marriage relationship, and that this section was meant to apply to all absolute divorces, and applies with equal force to a judgment annulling a marriage that was void ab initio. But even if this were not true, for another reason appellee could not, under the facts here, be permitted to recover more than the amount that she had paid to the company with interest. Although she had an insurable interest such as authorized her to pay the premiums so long as she and the insured lived together as husband and wife, without contravening public policy against wagering contracts, when that relationship ceased, she no longer had any interest in his life, and could not then pay premiums to keep alive insurance upon his life without engaging in a wagering contract. There can be no doubt that after her marriage to the insured was annulled, she had no insurable interest in his life, since her insurable interest was based upon a mere cohabitation, which could not survive the existence of the relationship. This case is in no wise analogous to the cases where one of the two dies while the relationship exists, and the survivor is permitted to collect the policy. The policy here not only did not mature while the conditions creating an insurable interest existed, but in order to mature the policy it was necessary for appellee to pay the premiums for more than five years upon a policy insuring a life in which she had no insurable interest. In Sea v. Conrad and Schauberger v. Morel, supra, it was held that a life insurance policy containing a change of beneficiary clause was the property of the insured even if the premiums were paid by the beneficiary. The policy here, then, since it contains such a clause, was the property of Weesner, and appellee had no interest in same except as beneficiary subject to his right of change, and consequently no right to keep it alive by payment of the premiums in the absence of an insurable interest in the life of the assured. For her so to do, even with the consent of appellant, would be engaging in the maintenance of a wagering contract, which is against public policy. Western & Southern L. Ins. Co. v. Grimes, 138 Ky. 338, 128 S. W. 65. The only interest appellee had in the policy after the termination of her insurable interest in the life of the insured was the amount of the premiums that she had paid upon the policy.

It therefore results the court erred in sustaining a demurrer to that portion of appellant's answer confessing liability for the premiums paid by appellee and tendering the amount of same with interest.

Wherefore the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent herewith.

NEW MEXICO SUPREME COURT.

RE OWEN N. MARRON et al.

(— N. M. —, 160 Pac. 391.)

Attorney — concealment of evidence — reprimand.

1. An attorney at law, having in his possession a copy or duplicate of an original contract, the contents of which are material to the determination of the issues in a case, who conceals the same, and replies, when called upon by opposing counsel to produce it, that the contract is not in his possession or custody or under his control, when, as a matter of fact, the said contract is at that time where it has been concealed by him, is guilty of unprofessional conduct and subject to a reprimand therefor.

For other cases, see Attorneys, I. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — false evidence — suspension.

2. An attorney at law who offers in evidence on behalf of his client an alleged release as constituting valid and admissible evidence of payment and discharge of the cause of action against his client, and who moves to instruct the jury that said release constitutes a valid and sufficient defense on behalf of his client, when in truth and in fact the said release is not a valid and lawful release, discharge, or satisfaction of the claim, all of which is then well known to the attorney, is guilty of unprofessional conduct in the practice of intentional deceit of the trial court before whom the cause is then pending, and by reason of said conduct is subject to suspension from practice in the courts.

For other cases, see Attorneys, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — use of professional secrets.

3. Attorneys at law accepting employment from one client, and in the course of such relations gaining information adverse to the interests of such client, which, after the termination of such employment, is used to secure the employment of such attorneys by the person in such adverse relations to the former client, are guilty of unprofessional conduct, deserving of suspension from practice before the bar in the courts of this state.

For other cases, see Attorneys, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(September 23, 1916.)

ORIGINAL proceedings for the disbarment of respondents. Suspension from practice for one year.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frank W. Clancy, Attorney General, for the State.

Messrs. A. B. Renchan and E. R. Wright for respondents.

Hanna, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There are nine specifications in the ac-

Headnotes by HANNA, J.

Note. — Concealment or failure to produce document as ground for disbarment or suspension is the subject of the annotation following this case, post, 384. J.L.R.A.1917B.

cusation filed against the respondents. The first specification is to the effect that in a certain civil action pending in the district court of Bernalillo county said respondent Francis E. Wood, having then and there in his possession a certain copy or duplicate of an original contract, the contents and purport of which were material to the determination of the issues in said cause, concealed the same beneath a blotter in the office of the clerk of said court, and when, afterwards, he was requested by counsel for the opposite party to produce his said copy of said contract, he replied in substance that the contract was not in his possession or custody or under his control, when as a matter of fact the said contract was at that time remaining where it had been concealed beneath a blotter in the office of the clerk of the district court.

It is contended by the respondent Francis E. Wood that this copy of the contract was not material to the issues in said cause, and that therefore his conduct was not subject to criticism. It is urged by the attorney general, however, that regardless of the materiality of the said document in the trial of the issues in said cause, the conduct of the said respondent Francis E. Wood was reprehensible to the same degree as if the said document were material and necessary to the trial of the issues in said cause. With this contention we fully agree. The conduct of the said respondent in concealing the paper from and deceiving the court and opposite counsel by statements bordering upon, if not amounting actually to, falsehood, is certainly unbecoming a member of the legal profession.

The court therefore finds that said Francis E. Wood in the particulars hereinbefore mentioned has been guilty of unprofessional conduct requiring punishment at the hands of the court.

It is therefore considered, ordered, and adjudged by the court here that said Francis E. Wood, by reason of his said conduct, is deserving of the reprimand of this court.

The second specification of the accusation is to the effect that the respondent Francis E. Wood, while engaged as counsel for the defendant in the trial of a certain cause before the district court of Bernalillo county, in which Ernest Meyers was plaintiff and the Meyers Company, Incorporated, was defendant, offered in evidence on behalf of the defendant a certain alleged release, which was in words and figures as follows:

Albuquerque, New Mexico, Nov. 1st, 1913.

Whereas, by article 8 of the contract between the Meyers Company, Incorporated, of Albuquerque, New Mexico, and myself, dated January 1st, 1912, said company is L.R.A.1917B.

required to make a certain payment to me in the matter of Alex D. Shaw & Company, of New York, on the happening of certain events therein stated:

Now, therefore, in consideration of the sum of $1 and other valuable considerations to me in hand, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, I hereby release said Meyers Company from any payment to me of the sum of $501.88, or any part thereof, mentioned in said article 8 as a credit to said Alex D. Shaw & Company.

Ernest Meyers.

That said respondent Francis E. Wood then and there alleged and pretended to the court that the said release constituted valid and admissible evidence of the payment and discharge of the cause of action upon which the plaintiff had brought suit in said court. That said respondent Francis E. Wood moved and requested the court to instruct the jury that said release constituted a valid and sufficient defense on behalf of the defendant in said cause, and that he thereby caused the district judge then presiding in said cause to so instruct the jury, which jury, under the instructions of the court, returned a verdict finding the issues for the defendant. That in truth and in fact the said alleged release was not a valid and lawful release, discharge or satisfaction of the said defendant from liability to the said Ernest Meyers, and that the said respondent Francis E. Wood then and there well knew the same.

It appears from the evidence that the said release was procured from the plaintiff Ernest Meyers for the purpose of enabling the firm of Alex D. Shaw & Company, of New York city, to recover from the Meyers Company the sum of $501.88, which had been placed with the defendant, the Meyers Company, by the said Ernest Meyers as security against possible liability upon a merchandise account at that time unsettled and disputed. At the time the said release was introduced in evidence it appears from the proofs that the said respondent Francis E. Wood was thoroughly familiar with all of the facts and circumstances surrounding the execution and delivery of the said release, and knew that the same had never been delivered to the Meyers Company except for the purposes hereinbefore stated. He also knew at that time that a reassignment of the said claim had been executed by the said Alex D. Shaw & Company to the said Ernest Meyers, which was intended to supersede and cancel the said alleged release.

In consideration of all the facts and circumstances in regard to this specification, the court finds that the said Francis E. Wood, in so introducing in evidence the said release, was guilty of deliberate and intentional deceit of the district judge before whom the said cause was then being heard, and that his conduct requires punishment.

It is therefore considered, ordered, and adjudged by the court, that said Francis E. Wood be, and he is hereby, suspended from further practice in the courts of New Mexico as an attorney at law for and during the period of one year from the date hereof.

The third specification in the accusation is to the effect that in a certain cause in the district court of Bernalillo county wherein W. J. Johnson was plaintiff and the New Mexico Fire Brick Company was defendant, the district judge of said court entered a default judgment in favor of the plaintiff, upon the express understanding with the respondent Francis E. Wood, who was attorney for the said plaintiff, that upon application, without any showing of meritorious defense, the said district judge would open said default; that the said district judge shortly thereafter left the state for a vacation; that before leaving the jurisdiction, the said district judge left word with the clerk of the court that he did not desire any other district judge to be called in to hear and determine any application to open the said default which might be filed by the defendant; that thereafter there was filed in said cause a motion by the defendant to vacate the said default judgment; that in the absence of the said district judge, the said respondent Francis E. Wood attempted to call up the said motion before another district judge, who was unfamiliar with the facts and circumstances under which the said default was entered, thereby intending to secure an undue advantage over the defendant in said cause, and an advantage which he could not take had the presiding district judge been present and heard the said motion.

The proofs offered in regard to this charge entirely fail to establish the fact that the said respondent Francis E. Wood was informed or knew that the said district judge desired personally to hear the motion to vacate the said default. All that can be drawn from the proofs would be a mere inference or suspicion that the said respondent Francis E. Wood desired, in the absence of the presiding judge, who knew all of the facts in regard to such default judgment, to present the same to some other judge unfamiliar with the facts, and before whom he might be enabled to secure an undue advantage over the defendant. The court does not feel justified in drawing any such inference or in acting upon any such suspicion. There is no substantial evidence upon which the court could base any judgment against the said respondent Francis E. Wood.

E. Wood in the record, and said charge is therefore dismissed.

The fourth specification of the accusation is to the effect that the said respondents Owen N. Marron and Francis E. Wood were the attorneys of one Mrs. A. S. Averyt in a civil action against the Journal Publishing Company of Albuquerque, New Mexico, for libel, and that the plaintiff agreed with the respondents that they should receive one half of the amount of any recovery from the defendant; that with the consent of the plaintiff the said cause of action was compromised and settled for the sum of $1,750; that the said respondent Owen N. Marron retained out of the said sum $1,300 and paid the plaintiff the sum of $450; that said retention of the said amount was so unconscionable, and that said respondent Owen N. Marron in so doing was guilty of overreaching his client.

It appears from the proof in the case that the plaintiff, after having employed the respondents and having agreed with them to allow them one half of all sums recovered in the case, absolutely refused to go further with the trial, stating to them that she could not endure the notoriety of a public trial; that prior to the time when the question arose as to whether the trial should proceed, the respondents had successfully carried to judgment a companion case involving the same facts and questions of law: that there remained to be litigated the sole question of the amount of damages recoverable by the plaintiff against the defendant; that the labor expended by the respondents was large, they having successfully maintained the cause of action both in the district court and in this court upon appeal. The plaintiff testified before us and stated that she was entirely satisfied with the settlement which was made with the respondents; that she knew fully all of the facts when she made the settlement, and was not now complaining of the same.

Under all of the facts and circumstances, it seems perfectly clear that the respondents were guilty in this regard of no unprofessional conduct. We know of no reason why an attorney at law may not make a contract with his client which, under the circumstances, brings him the fair compensation for his services. While it is true there was uncertainty as to the amount which the plaintiff might have recovered in that case, it seems perfectly reasonable to assume that she would in all probability have recovered more than was recovered in the companion case, she being a woman and the plaintiff in the companion case being a man. We find no evidence in the record of overreaching or mistreatment of the plaintiff in that case, and we therefore dismiss the said charge.

The fifth specification under the charges presented is that Marron & Wood, a firm composed of Owen N. Marron and Francis E. Wood, were attorneys and counsel for Anna Machette Edgar in a certain civil action against William Edgar, which was No. 10,065 on the civil docket at the district court of the county of Bernalillo, being an action for divorce from the defendant and for the settlement of certain property rights between the parties. It is alleged that, in pursuance of an agreement between Owen N. Marron one of the attorneys for the plaintiff, and Thomas N. Wilkerson, the attorney for the defendant, and the defendant himself, the defendant paid to Owen N. Marron the sum of $500 in full settlement, discharge, and satisfaction for their services rendered and to be rendered to the plaintiff in said cause, but that, after receiving the said sum and after the decree of divorce had been entered in said cause, the said Owen N. Marron demanded of said plaintiff a further sum of $500 for services rendered by his firm, notwithstanding the fact, as alleged, that the said services had been fully paid for by the payment of the aforesaid sum of $500, previously paid to Mr. Marron by the defendant. It is asserted that the attempt to collect from his client the additional sum of $500 constituted unfaithful and unconscionable conduct towards his said client, and this is the essential feature of the charge under consideration.

The client in this case referred to, Mrs. Anna Machette Edgar, was not produced as a witness. The deposition of William Edgar was taken and introduced in evidence, but throws no light upon the essential element of the charge in question. The respondent Owen N. Marron as a witness fully covered the situation explaining that he had informed his client that he would expect her to pay the difference between the amount recovered from the defendant William Edgar and a fee of $1,000, which he considered his firm entitled to in view of the large property interests involved in this particular litigation. His testimony in this respect is not in any essential particular contradicted by the other evidence introduced before us, and we therefore conclude and find that this charge has not been supported by the evidence, which condition is admitted to be the fact by the attorney general, for which reason the charge is dismissed.

The sixth specification of the charges against the respondents has to do with the same divorce action of Edgar v. Edgar, in the district court of Bernalillo county, and particularly refers to alleged misconduct on the part of the respondent Owen N. Marron in demanding and securing from the said William Edgar a fee in the sum of $500, by threatening and intimidating the said William Edgar, and stating to him in substance that, in the event the said sum was not paid to the said Owen N. Marron, criminal proceedings would be taken against the said Edgar, which would tend to bring him in disrepute among the citizens of Albuquerque; the essential element of his charge therefore being that the fee in question was extorted by threats or intimidation.

The facts upon which the charge is based are testified to by Thomas N. Wilkerson, attorney for the defendant, and contradicted in all essentials by the testimony of the respondent Owen N. Marron. The deposition of William Edgar, introduced in evidence in this case, does not support the evidence of Mr. Wilkerson in the matter of the threats or intimidation, but tends to support the testimony of the respondent Owen N. Marron, for which reason it would seem clearly apparent that the charge is not supported by the evidence introduced with that clearness and certainty which should be required, and we therefore must find the respondent Owen N. Marron not guilty of the charge in question, which is therefore dismissed.

The seventh charge as incorporated in the specification of charges against the respondents is that some time in the month of July, 1910, the said Owen N. Marron and Francis E. Wood accepted employment from one Petra G. Garcia, of the city of Albuquerque, New Mexico, in connection with the administration of the estate of one Elias G. Garcia, deceased the son of the said Petra G. Garcia, and that in the course of said employment and during the continuance of their relations as attorneys and client, the said Marron and Wood were informed of the existence of a possible claim against the said estate of Elias G. Garcia, on the part of a woman then residing in Salt Lake City, Utah, which information it is alleged was divulged to the attorneys in question for the purpose of enabling them to meet such claim, should the same subsequently arise; that thereafter the employment of the said Marron & Wood was terminated by the said Petra G. Garcia, subsequent to which it is alleged that the said Owen N. Marron, on behalf of the firm of Marron & Wood, wrote a letter to an attorney in Salt Lake City, Utah, requesting him to put in a Salt Lake City paper an advertisement asking Mrs. Elias Garcia, the alleged common-law wife of said Elias Garcia, deceased, to call at the office of the said attorney, who had something of importance to communicate to her; that as a result of such advertisement the woman in question appeared at the attorney's office in Salt Lake City, and subsequently employed the said Marron & Wood to bring a suit in behalf of her child, which was alleged to be the child of said Elias G. Garcia.

The gist of this charge is that the said firm of Marron & Wood, on information imparted to them in connection with their employment by said Petra G. Garcia, failed to maintain inviolate the confidence and preserve the secrets of their client, and by their conduct in stirring up litigation, soliciting and accepting employment in the manner aforesaid, violated their duties as attorneys at law and members of the bar of this court.

The eighth specification of the charges against the respondents deals with the same case as the specification last referred to, and particularly charges the two respondents with wrongfully attempting to place the Federal district court before the public in the attitude of receding from a position previously taken by that court in said cause, concerning alleged acts of the said Owen N. Marron and Francis E. Wood in connection with certain letters which had been introduced in evidence in the Federal court and which were subsequently alleged to be altered or fabricated documents. The plaintiff and her attorneys had contended in the trial of the case in the Federal court that such letters were written by one Elias G. Garcia, and the court held in effect that said letters were spurious. The said attorneys subsequently presented to the Federal court a motion in which references were made to the effect that the opinion of the court referred to had been understood by the public and members of the bar as imputing to the firm of Marron & Wood responsibility for such altered or fabricated exhibits, or that they were in some manner privy to the alteration or fabrication thereof, and the court was asked to state more fully the facts found in this particular and pertaining to the exhibits in question. The Federal court thereupon did so and made a further finding, disclaiming an intention to impute improper conduct to the attorneys Marron & Wood. A copy of this opinion or finding of the Federal court was subsequently published in the Albuquerque Evening Herald at the instance of the said Owen N. Marron, with headlines and comments alleged to have been submitted to the said Owen N. Marron prior to publication, and by him approved. The substance and effect of the finding, as alleged by the charge numbered 8, did not justify the headlines and comment as the same appeared in the publication in question, which it is alleged was well known to the said Owen N. Marron at the time he gave his approval to said headlines and comment, and that the act and conduct of the said Owen N. Marron in this particular was done with an intent to deceive and mislead the public into believing that the court had exonerated him and the said Francis E. Wood in connection with all of the acts of alleged improper conduct ascribed to the said respondents in connection with the trial of the case in the Federal court, the main ground of this charge being more briefly stated as an attempt on the part of the said Owen N. Marron to betray the trust and confidence of the Federal district judge and wrongfully attempt to place the said judge before the public in the attitude of receding from the position previously taken in a former opinion in said cause, concerning the acts of the said Owen N. Marron and Francis E. Wood.

The evidence in support of this latter charge, in connection with the Garcia Case, does not disclose that the comments or heading of the article in question, as published in the Albuquerque Evening Herald, were shown or exhibited to the said Owen N. Marron and by him approved. The body of the article unquestionably was shown to him and by him read and approved, but the evidence fails in the essential particular that it does not bring home to him, the said Owen N. Marron, a knowledge of the objectionable matter contained in the heading of the article or the comments pertaining thereto which appeared as a portion of said heading. The failure of the evidence in this respect does away with charge No. 8 in connection with the publication referred to in the charge.

The Garcia Case resulted in proceedings for disbarment instituted in the Federal court for the district of New Mexico, upon a number of grounds, and this proceeding resulted in a finding by the judge of the Federal district court sustaining the charges upon three of the grounds and dismissing upon a fourth, the findings of the court being as follows:

"1. As to charge 1 the court finds the respondents and each of them guilty. It is clear that the firm of Marron & Wood were, as alleged, employed by Mrs. Petra G. Garcia in July, 1910, and within a few days after the death of Elias Garcia. This conclusion is reached solely upon what has emanated from the respondents, and without taking into consideration anything on this point proceeding from other sources. The answer of the respondents to the present proceeding in effect admits this employment. The complaint in a suit for fees filed in the district court of Bernalillo county October 18, 1910, by the firm of Marron & Wood against Petra G. Garcia alleges services. The testimony of respondent Wood in that case, introduced in evidence here, is unqualifiedly to the same effect, and the testimony of the same respondent before the court in the present case shows this relationship between the firm and Mrs. Garcia. The claim by respondent Wood that the above-mentioned suit of Marron & Wood v. Petra G. Garcia, although in form one for fees, was intended in reality as a slander suit against Mrs. Garcia, falls far short of mitigating the situation, especially in view of the fact that the complaint is verified as a suit for fees by respondent Wood. With this relationship of attorney and client existing between respondents and Mrs. Petra G. Garcia, in July, 1910, respondents received as a result of such employment and in the course of consultation thereunder certain information to the effect that a woman living in Salt Lake City, and claiming to be the wife of Elias Garcia, was likely to make a claim jeopardizing the whole estate. The representations of Mrs. Garcia by Marron and Wood terminated about August 1, 1910, but the confidential information which they possessed as a result of the brief employment, and especially upon the point above named, still necessarily remained with them. On August 10, 1910, the possession of this information led to their advertising in a newspaper at Salt Lake City, the place that had been named to them as the residence of this claimant, in which advertisement there was an invitation for 'Mrs. Elias Garcia, the wife of Elias Garcia, of Albuquerque, New Mexico, to call.' A person claiming to be within the description responded to the advertisement, and contracts were entered into by respondents to represent her and her infant child. This was followed by litigation on behalf of that child in the above-named case, No. 202. Thus it came about that confidential information received by respondents during one employment was used by them to secure a client adverse to that employment. This was clearly unethical. Information so received is sacred to the employment to which it pertains, and to permit it to be used in the interest of another, or worse still, in the interest of the adverse party, is to strike at the element of confidence which lies at the basis of, and affords the essential security in, the relation of attorney and client. Respondents seek to meet this view of the matter upon the ground, first, that they in 1912, and before the bringing of the case No. 202, asked the opinion of the attorney who had succeeded them in representing the Garcia estate in the probate court, as to whether that attorney objected to respondents bringing case No. 202, and whether the attorney thought it ethically permissible to bring the suit, and that such attorney stated he had no objection to the bringing of the suit by Marron & Wood, but that the matter of ethics was one for them to decide for themselves. But such an incident lacks value as an excuse. The utmost that is claimed is that the attorney said he had no objection. But even had there been an express consent, the power of an attorney employed by an estate for a restricted purpose did not include an agreement that a suit in another court might be brought against the estate. In addition, the conversation did not pretend to be an expression upon ethics, but that the matter was in terms remitted to the place where it belonged, to wit, the consciences of the respondents. As an evidence of good faith the incident likewise lacks importance for the reason that the gist of the present charge is not the bringing of the suit in 1912, but that respondents showed lack of professional integrity in using confidential information received in July, 1910, as a guide by which to seek for and locate a client in August, 1910. What may have been done in 1912 is a matter far subsequent to the relevant issue which arose in 1910. Equally unavailing is the further defense made by respondents that, as the Garcias never objected to respondents appearing in case No. 202 during the progress of that litigation in 1912-1914, they are to be deemed to have waived any objection thereto. But the question here is not one of the rights of the Garcias, but as to whether respondents have adhered to proper professional standards. The silence of the Garcias while being made the victims of unprofessional conduct by members of the bar cannot mitigate the law's prohibition upon such conduct, and cannot avail to render the respondents immune from the consequences of such misconduct.

"It is accordingly found as to the first charge that the respondents, Owen N. Marron and Francis E. Wood, and each of them, is guilty as charged, and that the conduct of each in the respect charged was contrary to the ethics of the profession of the law.

"2. Charge 2 concerns itself not with the manner in which respondents obtained the information as to the existence at Salt Lake City of a claimant against the Elias Garcia estate, but with the accusation that respondents having such information, however acquired, used it as a basis upon which to advertise for a client, and thus to stir up a protractive and extensive litigation against the Elias Garcia estate. The facts of this solicitation for business are not denied. That the conduct of respondents in this respect was unethical was frankly admitted on the stand in the present trial by the respondent Wood. The Code of Ethics of the American Bar Association and of the Bar Association of New Mexico are each to the same effect. Such conduct is equally denounced by the common law.

"Respondents are accordingly found guilty under charge 2.

"3. A careful consideration of charge 3, which it will be noted is against the respondent Marron alone, leads to the belief in its truth. An additional finding made upon respondents' request on August 6, 1915, in the case of Garcia v. Garcia, No. 202, upon the single question of whether Marron & Wood had been connected with the fabrication of four exhibits in the Garcia Case, and leaving undisturbed and untouched the expressions of the court as to the conduct of respondents upon all other features of the case, was within a day or two after the making of the findings represented to the public by a number of newspapers, including the Albuquerque Evening Herald, as exonerating the firm of Marron & Wood 'from all suspicion of wrongdoing in connection with the famous case of Garcia v. Garcia.' Of this intended misstatement of the court's action respondent Marron had knowledge before the publication, and in it he acquiesced. The conclusion is inevitable that he was more desirous of vindication, however unwarranted, in the public mind than that the action of the court should be correctly reported. This was to overlook the fact that as an officer of the court the duty rests upon an attorney to guard the court against misrepresentations before the public. That respondent Marron did not do this constitutes a failure in a professional duty, and he is found guilty.

"4. The prosecuting committee are unanimous in the position, and have so stated in open court, that the fourth charge, accusing respondents of complicity in the fabrications of exhibits 144b, 145, 146b, and 147, used in the case of Garcia v. Garcia, No. 202, and of using such letters knowing them to be spurious, should be dismissed. Upon a careful review of the extended testimony taken upon this trial, as to this issue, the court concurs in the view of the committee, and holds that this charge is not sustained by the proofs. In view of the additional proofs presented upon the present trial, the court reiterates as its conclusion the finding made on August 6, 1915, as follows: "The court finds no evidence in the case justifying the belief that Owen N. Marron and Francis E. Wood, or either of them, were either parties or privies to the fabrication of said letters. Indeed, the evidence found in the record upon this issue is to the contrary."

The record of the proceedings in the Federal district court has been introduced in evidence before us in this case upon the theory that the record constitutes a prima facie case against the respondents. We agree with the contention, and while we have examined the evidence offered by respondents in an attempt to justify their alleged acts of misconduct in connection with the Garcia Case, we are not disposed to agree with them that that evidence explained away the consequences of their alleged acts. It would not serve any useful purpose to discuss the facts further than they have been referred to in this opinion, and believing that the conduct of respondents in connection with this case is such as to deserve punishment, we find that the respondents and each of them should be suspended from further practice as attorneys at law in this and the district courts of the state of New Mexico for a period of one year from the date of this opinion, the suspension in this connection, so far as it applies to the respondent Francis E. Wood, to run concurrently with the suspension ordered in the Meyers Case as previously referred to in this opinion.

The ninth specification of the charges against Owen N. Marron and Francis E. Wood has been dismissed by the attorney general and require no consideration at our hands.

Wherefore, it is ordered and adjudged that respondents, Owen N. Marron and Francis E. Wood, and each of them, be suspended from practice in the courts of the state of New Mexico for a period of one year; and it is so ordered.

Parker, J., and Neblett, District Judge, concur.

Petition for rehearing denied October 16, 1916.

Annotation—Concealment or failure to produce document as ground for disbarment or suspension.

This note does not include suppression of papers by an attorney in securing admission to practice, nor cases of papers belonging to the court files, nor cases where an attorney refuses to deliver papers to his client.

For requiring attorney to produce papers, see L.R.A. 1917B.

pers or documents belonging to client as violation of privilege, see the note to earson v. Yoder, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 334.

Besides RE MARRON, ante, 378, but one case has been found within the scope of this note.

In Bar Asso. of Boston v. Greenhood

(1897) 168 Mass. 169, 46 N. E. 568, an attorney was removed from his office on several grounds, one being that he endeavored to suppress a paper. There the respondent, as attorney for contestants of a will, made a contract with a legatee providing in part that if the contestants succeeded in their contest by a decree against the last will, or by settlement, they would allow the legatee the amount of her legacy, she with certain other parties agreeing that they would, to the utmost of their power, aid the contestants in the preparation and conduct of the contest of the will. The attorney at the time did not know that said legatee would be a witness, but, finding later that her testimony would be material as to the mental condition of the testator, he put her on the stand, and on cross-examination she disclosed the fact of the agreement. The witness was then ordered to attend and produce the agreement, but after she left the stand, the respondent told her that when he wanted her again he would send for her. She did not appear on Monday; on Tuesday the judge called for her and said to the attorney: "I thought . . . I asked the question whether [the witness] would be here to-day, and you said she would." The respondent denied having said so, stating that he said, "If necessary," but the judge replied, "I understood you said she would." The same day the respondent said to the judge that he had a duplicate original with him in court; but upon searching among his papers he did not find it, and at no time after the disclosure of the fact of the agreement, and pending the order that the witness should come into court and produce the agreement, did he offer to show the judge the duplicate in his possession. The judge on that day ordered the agreement to be produced and that the witness should attend with it, which she did on Thursday. The supreme court in affirming the decision said: "We think the finding of the court that he tried to suppress this evidence was well warranted. Whatever may be thought of his conduct up to the time when the existence of the paper was disclosed in cross-examination and the paper was called for by the judge, it was clearly his duty then, if not to do what he could to obtain and present the evidence, at least to do nothing to conceal or suppress it. He had taken an official oath to 'do no falsehood, nor consent to the doing of any in court,' and to conduct himself 'with all good fidelity as well to the courts' as to his clients. Pub. Stat. chap. 159, § 36. Fidelity to the court required him, when he had in his possession an important paper which the court called for to be put in evidence, to produce it. Instead of producing it, he waited four days without disclosing that he had any connection with it, and it was two days more, after a formal order from the judge, before the paper was obtained from his witness, who, in the meantime, had been staying away under his direction. The question before us on this branch of the case is not whether these facts necessarily show deceit, malpractice, or other gross misconduct, but whether they furnish any evidence of it from which the court could find it by way of inference or otherwise."

B. B. B.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

THOMAS A. PERRY et al.

v.

FRANK YOUNG et al., Plffs. in Certiorari.

(133 Tenn. 522, 182 S. W. 577.)

Courts — settling interests in insurance policy — nonresidents.

A court of equity having before it the company which issued an insurance policy and its custodian may reform an assignment from which a condition was inad-

Note. — For service by publication to give jurisdiction of issues between nonresident and resident claimants to benefits under an insurance policy, see annotation following this case, post, 393.

L.R.A.1917B.

vertently omitted so as to revest title in the assignor as against nonresident distributees of the deceased assignee; at least where their interest in the policy has been attached and service of process upon them has been made by publication.

For other cases, see Courts, I. b, in Dig 1-52 N. S.

(Faneher and Buchanan, JJ., dissent.)

(February 1, 1916.)

CERTIORARI to the Court of Civil Appeals to review a judgment overruling an order of the Chancery Court for Davidson County sustaining a demurrer to a bill filed to reform a life insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. L. Granbery and H. E. Palmer, Jr., for plaintiffs in certiorari.

Messrs. Jeff McCarn and Pendleton & De Witt, for defendants in certiorari.

Neill, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill in this case was filed in the chancery court at Nashville on the 25th of September, 1913, by Thomas A. Perry, and his sister Minnie L. Perry, and his sister Betsie Bostick and her husband, W. E. Bostick, against Frank Young and his wife, Mattie Young, and the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company of New Jersey.

The bill alleged, in substance, that complainant Thomas A. Perry, some time before the occurrence complained of, had caused to be issued to him a policy of life insurance in the sum of $2,000 on his life, payable to himself; that he had assigned this policy to his mother; that the purpose and understanding between him and his mother was that this assignment should be so worded as that the policy should belong to him in case she died before his death; that by oversight this latter provision was left out; that he had sought recently to borrow money from the insurance company on this policy, but it declined to lend unless all of the distributees of his mother should consent to it; that he endeavored to get the defendants Frank Young and wife to agree, as required by the insurance company, but they declined to do so. The bill alleges, in effect, that the complainants and the defendants represent all of the distributees of the deceased mother. The purpose of the bill is to have the policy reformed so as to conform to the original agreement for the assignment made between the complainant Thomas and his mother. Complainants charged that the present interest of Mrs. Young, the granddaughter of complainant's deceased mother, would only be $100, and asked and obtained an attachment, and caused the same to be levied on that interest. A publication was ordered and made for the said Frank Young and wife which indicated the matter in controversy, that is, the policy of insurance, giving its number and the name of the company that issued it, so that the notice showed the matter about which the litigation was projected. The insurance company accepted service of the bill through its accredited agent, the insurance commissioner. This company then filed a demurrer making the point that the court had not acquired jurisdiction of Young and wife, and therefore its decree would not protect the insurance company; the point being this: that those parties could not be made defendants by L.R.A.1917B.

publication, but that personal service would be required to bind their interest. The bill shows that they are residents of Texas, and, of course, personal service is impossible. They have not entered their appearance, but as to them the bill stands on the order of publication and the publication thereof.

The chancellor sustained the demurrer filed by the insurance company. On appeal to the court of civil appeals that court overruled the chancellor. The case was then brought to this court on the writ of certiorari, and the ground of demurrer before mentioned urged in the chancery court and in the court of civil appeals is urged again here.

We think the court of civil appeals reached the right conclusion. No personal judgment is sought against Young and wife, and none could be rendered against them on publication. The court, however, has before it the insurance company that issued the policy, the complainants Thomas and his two sisters, who represent three of the four distributees of the deceased assignee, and Mrs. Young, the fourth distributee. The court also has within its control the policy of insurance which is the legal evidence of the claim against the insurance company, and the assignment on the back of it, and has the res itself, the claim against the insurance company, through having the latter company before it. The policy is not actually exhibited with the bill, but it appears from the allegations of the latter that the property is in the possession of the complainant Thomas A. Perry, and he has submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court, and it is within its power at any moment to order the actual filing of the policy in the cause.

The court, thus having control of the res, can settle the status and rights of the parties with respect to the insurance policy, although one of the persons interested therein, under the assignment as it now stands, is a nonresident, and made a defendant only by publication. Our statute (Shannon's Code, § 6115) provides that suit may be instituted wherever any material defendant is found, unless otherwise provided by law. The insurance company in the present case was a material defendant found in Davidson county. Section 6121, subsec. 4, as to bills against non-residents, provides that they may be filed in the district or county in which the cause of action arose, or the act on which the suit is predicated was to be performed, or in which the subject of the suit or any material part thereof is. Subsection 5 provides that, whenever attachment of property is allowed in lieu of personal service of process, the bill may be filed in the county or district in which the property, or any material part thereof sought to be attached, is found at the commencement of the suit. Section 6162 declares that personal service of process on a defendant in a court of chancery is dispensed with when such defendant is a nonresident of the state. The following sections direct how the fact of nonresidence is to be made known, and the order of publication made, and how long the order shall be published, what it shall contain, etc. No question is made on these technical matters.

The present case belongs to the class of quasi proceedings in rem. Such proceedings are sufficiently described in 23 Cyc. 1410, by the author of Black on Judgments, in the following language: "Judgments dealing with the status, ownership, or liability of particular property, but which are intended to operate on these questions only as between the particular parties to the proceeding, and not to ascertain or cut off the rights or interests of all possible claimants, are so far in rem that jurisdiction may be acquired by the seizure or control of the court over the res, together with reasonable constructive notice to parties defendant, but, unlike judgments strictly in rem, they are binding only upon the parties joined in the action and thus notified, and have no effect upon the rights or liabilities of strangers."

One case in our reports bearing a pretty close analogy to the present one is that of Wilcox v. Morrison, 9 Lea, 700. In that case it appeared that Wilcox had executed a trust deed in the state of Virginia conveying real and personal property in that state, and also including therein a judgment which he had in Hawkins county, Tennessee, on one Netherland. After litigation had progressed for considerable time in Virginia, Wilcox came to Tennessee and filed his bill against Netherland, a resident of Tennessee, who was the debtor in the judgment, and also certain of his creditors who resided in Virginia, and the trustee under the Virginia mortgage, who likewise resided there. The bill charged that the debts had been practically settled in Virginia, and that the Tennessee judgment belonged to the complainant Wilcox. The trustee and one of the creditors, residents of Virginia, demurred because the trustee and effects were in Virginia, and the cause was being administered in that state. The demurrer was overruled. Here the court had control of the res, the judgment, by having before it the plaintiff in the judgment, and also the defendant, and proceeded to settle the rights of the parties thereunder. It seems from the report of L.R.A.1917B.

the case that the parties subsequently answered the bill, and so submitted themselves to the jurisdiction, but the overruling of the demurrer indicated the view the court had as to its right to settle the status of the parties with respect to the judgment, even against nonresidents.

The case of Amparo Min. Co. v. Fidelity Trust Co. 74 N. J. Eq. 197, 71 Atl. 605, is nearer in point. There it appears that a bill was filed in the chancery court of New Jersey by the complainant corporation against the defendant corporation, the latter a resident of Pennsylvania, for the purpose of having declared the ownership of the complainant as against the defendant of certain treasury stock in the complainant company. It appears from the report of the case that some of the certificates were in Pennsylvania, but the complainant company, which had issued the shares, resided in New Jersey. The court held that, the res being thus situated in New Jersey, it had control thereof, and could settle the rights of the respective parties in respect thereto, although the defendant was a nonresident and had notice only by publication and other substitutionary process directed by the court. It was held that the court, having control of the complainant whose treasury stock was in controversy, had control of the stock or res, since it could order the same into actual custody at any time. The court said: "In the case at bar no receivership is prayed for, and no party having the custody of the res is brought in as a defendant in order to subject the res to the control of the court. The situation seems to be analogous to one where a complainant in New Jersey, holding the possession of chattels, files a bill in this court to obtain equitable relief against a defendant not resident in New Jersey in respect to such chattels. . . . The authorities which control this court indicate, I think, the following as the essential elements of an action quasi in rem: 1. A res located within the territorial limits of the state in such a way that the state can, if it sees fit to do so, exercise absolute power to control and dispose of it. 2. A course of judicial procedure, the object and result of which are to subject the res to the power of the state directly by the judgment or decree which is entered, as distinguished from a course of procedure which only affects or disposes of the res by compelling a party to the action to control or dispose of the res in accordance with the mandate of the judgment or decree. 3. A course of judicial procedure on its face directed specifically toward the res so as to disclose this res to the defendant when reasonably notified of the action."

Further the court said: "The origin of the jurisdiction of our courts in actions quasi in rem is to be found in the power of the sovereign state to exercise control over all objects to which that power can be directly applied. The state must control all property within its territorial limits. Parties interested in that property and residing within the state, or voluntarily coming into the state in order to have their rights in respect of the property in question enforced or protected, have a right to be heard in the courts of the state, and the utmost that can be demanded on the part of nonresident defendants is that they shall be fairly notified of the action so as to have an ample opportunity to appear and be heard therein. When these conditions exist, the rights of all parties interested in the res are determined by due process of law. . . . Of course, it must be conceded that in any action to recover stock, if the relief prayed for includes the surrender of a certificate, or the execution of an assignment or power of attorney, such relief can only be obtained by compelling the defendant to act, and, if such relief is the whole relief prayed for, the action, as we have seen, may be strictly in personam. In the present case, while the bill prays that the defendant may be decreed to assign and transfer the shares of stock in dispute, the main relief prayed for is the establishment of the complainant's equitable title. The jurisdiction of the court is sustained by the existence of a trust,—a trust in respect of a res situate within the jurisdiction of the court and in the custody of a party to the suit. If the complainant shall obtain a decree in this case establishing its right in respect of the res, and then shall desire to secure the surrender of the outstanding certificates representing the res, it may be obliged to bring a suit in the state of Pennsylvania in order to secure such surrender. . . . The last matter to be considered is whether it is necessary, where the res is personal property, to have the res actually placed within the custody of the court through the instrumentality of a receiver, in order to give to the action the quality of an action quasi in rem. I can find no warrant in reason, and none in the authorities, disregarding a few dicta, which makes the actual seizure of the res by an officer of the court essential to the status of the action as one quasi in rem. The fundamental essential, of course, must be that the personal property which is the res is so situated within the state that it may be seized; in other words, the res must be within the L.R.A.1917B.

control of the state. . . . It is not the actual seizure of the res which is the essential element of an action quasi in rem, but the power to seize the res and to seize it in the action. If the res is within the jurisdiction of the court, it may be entirely unnecessary to take possession of it through a receiver in order to secure its presence when the decree of the court is to be enforced. . . . So long as the res is situate within the jurisdiction of the court, and the custodian of the res is made a party to the suit, the requirements of an action quasi in rem under consideration seems to me to be complied with. . . . I think it follows from the principles enunciated in a number of recent Federal cases, and in the New Jersey cases above cited, that an action like the present one, brought by the complainant to establish a trust in shares of stock in a New Jersey corporation, is an action quasi in rem, provided the corporation the stock of which is in litigation is made a party to the suit, and is lawfully subjected to the jurisdiction of the court in which the suit is brought by service of process within the state or by voluntary appearance."—citing Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316, 33 L. ed. 918, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557; Jellenik v. Huron Copper Min. Co. 177 U. S. 1, 44 L. ed. 647, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 559; Roller v. Holly, 176 U. S. 398, 44 L. ed. 520, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410; Citizens' Sav. & T. Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 205 U. S. 46, 51 L. ed. 703, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 425. "All parties, whether resident in New Jersey or residing in other states, may be lawfully brought into the suit by serving process upon the New Jersey residents, and giving the reasonable notice provided by law to the defendants residing in other states. I discover no basis for the proposition that the whole fabric of the action quasi in rem falls to the ground unless the court of chancery, through a receiver, attempts in some way to take possession of the res and actually obtains such possession. The question remains whether, when the custodian of the res, the New Jersey corporation whose stock constitutes the res, comes into court as a party complainant, the case is essentially different from that which is presented where the custodian is made a party defendant. In each case the res is subjected to the power of the court, in the one case by the control over the res, which the court acquires when the custodian of the res is brought into court by service of process, and in the other by the voluntary action of complainant in coming into court and presenting to the court for adjudication his claims in respect of the res. No doubt, the court, at the instance of the de-defendant, may preserve the res to meet the decree of the court by an injunction or by a receiver."

This method of deciding rights has been often recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States. In Goodman v. Niblack, 102 U. S. 556, 563, 26 L. ed. 229, 232, the court said: "This is a proceeding in equity to enforce a lien on the fund which is within reach of the court, and, as the trustees and complainant have the requisite citizenship, § 738 of the Revised Statutes provides a remedy for inability to serve process by an order of publication. If they appear, the suit will proceed as usual. If they do not appear, the decree, so far as it affects the fund in the hands of Niblack, will bind them; and this is all that is necessary to give the court jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed for by the complainant."

In Bryan v. Kennett, 113 U. S. 179, 195, 199, 28 L. ed. 908, 913, 915, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 407, the Supreme Court recognized the right of the court to pass title to land within jurisdiction of the court as against minors, although the latter had been made defendants only by publication. So it has been held that the land of one made defendant by publication only may be subjected to condemnation proceedings for the benefit of a public improvement. Huling v. Kaw Valley R. & Improv. Co. 130 U. S. 559, 32 L. ed. 1045, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 603. It has also been held that a court having under its control a corporation for winding-up purposes may make an assessment on the stockholders pursuant to law for the payment of corporate debts, and that persons who are defendants only by publication will be bound by the assessment if they were, in fact, stockholders subject to the law under which the assessment was made, and that they would not be suffered in a collateral proceeding to question the propriety of the assessment itself, although such persons would be permitted to show in such collateral proceedings that they had transferred their stock, and might litigate any matter bearing upon the extent or duration of their stockholding. Selig v. Hamilton, 234 U. S. 652, 58 L. ed. 1518, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 926.

Under the foregoing authorities, and many others that might be cited, we are of the opinion that the defendants Young and wife are properly before the court under the publication ordered and made, and that they will be bound by whatever decree may be finally made in the cause.

It is proper to say that we do not consider important the attachment that was issued and served on the supposed interest of Mrs. Young in the policy, inasmuch as the complainant asserted no debt against Young and wife, nor any right by which they could subject such interest to sale. The jurisdiction of the court over the res depends on other principles which have been fully stated. The publication, however, made under the attachment, served the useful purpose of not only notifying Young and wife of the existence of the suit, and of their duty to appear and defend, but also that the controversy was over a policy of insurance in the defendant company, stating the number of that policy. Thus, on reading the notice they will be sufficiently informed of the necessity of appearing and defending any rights that they may wish to assert.

The result is that the decree of the Court of Civil Appeals is affirmed and the cause is remanded to the Chancery Court for further proceedings.

Fancher, J., dissenting:

I cannot give assent to the proposition that the Texas defendant can be brought before the court by publication in this case. The insurance company is a nonresident corporation. It is before the court by service of process upon its agent in this state by virtue of a statute on the subject. The nonresident defendant has such right in the policy of insurance, or in the subject of litigation, that it cannot be taken away from her unless the court can gain jurisdiction over her person.

The principle is well settled by all the courts in this country that no effective personal judgment can be rendered in one state against a nonresident defendant who is not personally served with process and does not appear. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 308, 19 L. ed. 931; St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 27 L. ed. 222, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 354; Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 185, 30 L. ed. 372, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165. All the authorities upon the subject of substituted process against a nonresident defendant recognize the right to affect his property, and in this manner bring him before the court, but only to the extent of his property situated within the jurisdiction of the court. The right to summon a party from his distant place of abode and compel him to submit to an adjudication of matters in another state lies only in the right to seize and affect his property located in the state. The law goes no further than this, and this far only upon the presumption that it is supposed a party will look after his property, and, when that is seized by the law, he is bound to take notice.

The case of Selig v. Hamilton, 234 U. S.

658, 58 L. ed. 1523, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 926, discussed in the opinion of the majority, does not violate the principle above stated. That was a case affecting the right of a stockholder in a corporation and subjecting him to assessment for payment of debts, and arose under the Minnesota statute upon that subject. The corporation was properly before the court, and, of course, all matters affecting the corporation as such, and its property, consequently its stockholders to the extent of their stock, could be adjudicated. It was held that the statute provided reasonable regulations for enforcing liability assumed by those who became stockholders under the laws of Minnesota. The assessment as to the amount thereof against the stockholders, including the propriety and necessity for same, might be made effective against nonresident stockholders as well as those who were resident, after proper notice by publication or otherwise, as directed by the court. And in fixing the amount of such pro rata liability of stockholders the court would consider the expenses of the receivership, the amount of corporate assets available, the parties liable as stockholders, the nature and extent of such liabilities, considering the probable solvency or insolvency of the stockholders, and expenses in levying the rate upon all the parties. It was expressly held that in determining these matters the judgment of the court was not in the nature of a personal judgment, but the stockholders were deemed to be represented by the corporation itself, which was before the court. This upon the principle of the obligation assumed by virtue of the relationship of the stockholders to it. However, in order to give the stockholder the right to make any personal defense, this course of procedure did not preclude him from showing he was not a stockholder, or not a holder of as many shares as was alleged, or that he had a claim against the corporation, or any other defense personal to himself. In bringing the corporation before the court, the stockholders were necessarily before the court, inasmuch as the several shares owned by the stockholders compose the corporate body. The right to bring the stockholder before the court in the first instance, however, is upon the logical basis that, being a mere shareholder in the corporation, he was presumed to be represented by the general corporate body, and he was before the court upon the same principle that a nonresident may be brought before the court in any other action to the extent that he has property subject to seizure within the jurisdiction of the court.

L.R.A.1917B.

The New Jersey case of Amparo Min. Co. v. Fidelity Trust Co. 74 N. J. Eq. 197, 71 Atl. 605, cited in the majority opinion, likewise falls within the same rule. The court had the corporation before it, the stock of which was owned in part by the nonresident corporation sought to be brought before the court as a defendant. It was held that the stock of the corporation before the court could be ordered before it at any time. Manifestly this was true, since the stock is but a share in the concern itself which was before the court. Having the corporation before the court, it had the several shares within its control. These shares had been issued in the state of New Jersey, and the principal corporation was a resident of that state, and was before the court of the state of its residence.

